

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

1926

LIBRARY
OF THE
SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
SAN ANSELMO
CALIFORNIA

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2025

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL CUMULATION

(MARCH 1926 TO FEBRUARY 1927 INCLUSIVE)

BOOKS OF 1926

EDITED BY
MARION A. KNIGHT
AND MERTICE M. JAMES

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES IN PART BY MATILDA L. BERG

Property of Graduate Theological Union
Return to San Francisco Theological Seminary

NEW YORK
THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY
1927

PRINTED IN U. S. A.

RECEIVED
JAN 10 1964
LIBRARY OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
BERKELEY

PREFACE

The twenty-second annual volume of the Book Review Digest contains 2755 books, each with a descriptive note and excerpts from reviews. These excerpts have been made from the reviews in seventy periodicals regularly indexed, with occasional quotations from other reviews not upon this list. The only loss to be recorded in the list of reviews drawn upon during the year is that of the Literary Digest International Book Review which ceased publication with the November number.

Users of the Book Review Digest are reminded that frequently the best reviews of a book appear during the year following its publication, or even later. Therefore in this volume will be found additional reviews for books which were entered in the 1925 annual, as in their turn the next August cumulation and the 1927 annual will gather up reviews which were too late to be represented in the present volume. The work of gathering these accumulating reviews goes on continuously but our columns must eventually be closed to them. This explains the absence of some late reviews, in specialized journals, of the more serious and weighty books.

Again grateful acknowledgment is made to Ellwood H. McClelland, Technology Librarian of the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh, for checking technical books to be included; to Mary E. Furbeck, editor of Public Affairs Information Service, for her monthly list of public documents for small libraries; and to Wilma Adams, Lillian Bender and Jean Sacchitiello, of the Digest staff, for their faithful and efficient service in the processes of publication.

M. A. K.

Publications from which Digests of Reviews are Made

- Am Anthropol—American Anthropologist. $4. George Banta Publishing Company, 450-454 Anhalt St., Menasha, Wis.
- Am Chem Soc J—Journal of the American Chemical Society. $7.50. Charles L. Parsons, Sec., Mills Building, 17th St and Pennsylvania Av., Washington, D.C.
- Am Econ R—American Economic Review. $5. American Econ. Assoc., Evanston, Ill.
- Am Hist R—American Historical Review. $5. Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Av., New York.
- Am J Psychol—American Journal of Psychology. $6.50. Morrill Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.
- Am J Pub Health—American Journal of Public Health. $5. American Public Health Association, 372 Broadway, Albany, N.Y.
- Am J Soc—American Journal of Sociology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Am Pol Sci R—American Political Science Review. Dues $4. American Political Science Association, Mt. Royal and Guilford Aves., Baltimore, Md.
- Ann Am Acad—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. $5. 39th St. and Woodland Av., Philadelphia, Pa.
- Atlantic's Bookshelf—In advertising pages of Atlantic Monthly, 8 Arlington St., Boston.
- Booklist—Booklist. $2. American Library Association, 86 East Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.
- Bookm—Bookman. $4. G. H. Doran Co., 244 Madison Av., New York.
- Books (N Y Herald Tribune). New York Herald Tribune Books. $2. 225 W. 40th St., New York.
- Boston Transcript—Boston Evening Transcript. $5.50 (Wednesday and Saturday). Boston Transcript Co., 324 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
- Canadian Hist R—Canadian Historical Review. $2. University of Toronto Lib., Toronto, Ont.
- Cath World—Catholic World. $4. 120 West 60th St., New York.
- Chem & Met Eng—Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering. $3. McGraw-Hill Co., Inc., 10th Av., at 36th St., New York.
- Class Philol—Classical Philology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Dial—Dial. $5. Dial Pub. Co., 152 West 13th St., New York.
- Econ J—Economic Journal. 1 Guinea. Royal Economic Society, 9, Adelphi Terrace, London, W. C. 2. (Macmillan & Co., 60 Fifth Ave., New York).
- Educ R—Educational Review. $3. Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N.Y.
- El School J—Elementary School Journal. $2.50. Dept. of Education, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Eng Hist R—English Historical Review. 32s. Longmans, Green & Co., (39 Paternoster Row, London), 55 Fifth Av., New York.
- Eng N—Engineering News-Record. $5. McGraw-Hill Co., 10th Av., at 36th St., New York.
- Geog R—Geographical Review. $5. American Geog. Soc., Broadway and 156th St., New York.
- Harvard Business R. Harvard Business Review. $5. A. W. Shaw Co., Cass, Huron & Erie Sts., Chicago, Ill.
- Hist Outlook. Historical Outlook. $2. McKinley Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
- Ind—Independent. $5. Independent Publications, Inc., 10 Arlington St., Boston.
- Ind & Eng Chem—Industrial and Engineering Chemistry. $7.50. American Chemical Society, Charles L. Parsons, Sec., Mills Building, 1709 G St., N.W., Washington, D.C.
- Int Bk R—Literary Digest International Book Review. $2.50. Funk & Wagnalls Co., 354-360 Fourth Av., New York.
- Int J Ethics—International Journal of Ethics. $3. University of Chicago press, Chicago, Ill.
- J Home Econ—Journal of Home Economics. $2.50. American Home Economics Assn., 1211 Cathedral St., Baltimore, Md.
- J Philos—Journal of Philosophy. $4. 515 W. 116th St., New York.
- J Phys Chem—The Journal of Physical Chemistry. $10. Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.
- J Pol Econ—Journal of Political Economy. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- J Religion—Journal of Religion. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Lit R—Literary Review of the New York Evening Post. $1. N.Y. Evening Post, Inc., 30 West St., New York.
- Living Age. Living Age. $5. Living Age Co., 8 Arlington St., Boston, Mass.
- Management and Adm—Management and Administration. $5. Management Pub. Corp., 15 E. 26th St., New York. (name now changed to Manufacturing Industries)
- Mod Philol—Modern Philology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Nation—Nation. $5. Nation Press, 20 Vesey St., New York.
- Nation and Ath—Nation and Athenæum. £1 10s. Nation Limited. 38 Great James st., Holburn, London, W. C. 1
- Nature—Nature. £2 17s. $14. Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Av., New York.
- New Repub—New Republic. $5. Republic Publishing Co., Inc., 421 West 21st St., New York.
- New Statesman—New Statesman. 30s. Statesman Pub. Co., 10 Great Queen St., Kingsway, London, W. C. 2.
- N Y Times—New York Times Book Review. $1. N.Y. Times Co., Times Square, New York.
- N Y World—The World. $4. Pulitzer Building, Park Row, New York.
- No Am—North American Review. $4. North American Rev. Corp., 9 East 37th St., New York.
- Outlook—Outlook. $5. Outlook Company, 120 E. 16th St., New York.
- Pol Sci Q—Political Science Quarterly. $5. (including Supplement). Academy of Political Science, Kent Hall, Columbia University, New York.
- R of Rs—American Review of Reviews. $4. Review of Reviews Co., 55 Fifth Av., New York.
- Sat R—Saturday Review. 30s. 9 King St., Covent Garden, London, W. C. 2.
- Sat R of Lit—Saturday Review of Literature. $3.50. Saturday Review, Inc. 25 W. 45th St., New York.
- School Arts M—School Arts Magazine. $3. Davis Press, Inc., 44 Portland St., Worcester, Mass.
- School R—School Review. $2.50. Dept. of Education, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Science. Science. $6. Science Press, Garrison, N.Y.
- Spec—Spectator. £1 30s. 13 York St., Covent Garden, London, W. C. 2.
- Springfd Republican—Springfield Republican. $10. The Republican Pub. Co., Springfield, Mass.
- Survey—Survey. $5. Survey Associates, Inc., 112 East 19th St., New York.
- Times [London] Lit Sup—The Times Literary Supplement. 17s 4d. $3.80. The Times, North American Office, 247 Park av., New York.
- Theatre Arts Mo—Theatre Arts Monthly. $4. Theatre Arts, Inc., 119 West 57th St., New York.
- World Tomorrow—World Tomorrow. $2. 52 Vanderbilt Av., Room 410, New York.
- Yale R n s—Yale Review. $4. Yale Publishing Assn., 120 High St., New Haven, Conn.

In addition to the above list the Book Review Digest sometimes quotes from the Cleveland Open Shelf; Pittsburgh Monthly Bulletin; Pratt Institute Quarterly Booklist; Pratt Institute Quarterly List of New Technical and Industry Books; St Louis Library Bulletin; Wisconsin Library Bulletin; and other bulletins.

EXPLANATIONS

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue.

Publisher's directory will be found at the end of this number.

The descriptive note is separated from critical notices of a book by a dash.

The plus and minus signs preceding the name of the magazine indicate the degree of favor or disfavor of the entire review.

In the reference to a magazine, the first number refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to the date and the last figures to the number of words in the review.

Book Review Digest

Devoted to the Valuation of Current Literature

Books of 1926

ABBOT, CHARLES GREELEY. Earth and the stars. (Lib. of modern sciences) 264p il $3 Van Nostrand [15s Chapman & Hall]

523 Astronomy 25-19101

"Written by the Director of the Smithsonian astrophysical observatory, but intended for the general reader rather than the astronomer."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:316 My '26

Reviewed by E. E. Slosson
Bookm 63:68 Mr '26 160w

"A volume as entertaining as it is informative."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 13 '25 120w

"To the reviewer the form is not particularly pleasing. Here and there the illustrative material is not well cared for; some of the diagrams are poorly drawn and not given adequate explanation. But on the whole the informal style of the author and the simplicity with which he achieves difficult explanations will make the book thoroughly acceptable to the intelligent layman." A. C. Swinnerton

+ — J Geol 34:382 My '26 500w

"Mr. Abbot's book makes no sacrifice of science to gain a note of popular appeal and yet maintains interest consistently." J: J. McLaughlin

+ Lit R p10 Ja 16 '26 200w

"A book of the type of Dr. Abbot's is anything but superfluous, and the reader will find in it information which even the publications of a year ago were too early to supply. It is regrettable, though necessary, to direct attention to so many blemishes in a book which has given us great pleasure. The faults are mostly of a trivial character, but taken together become of considerable importance. Fundamentally the book is excellent, both in matter and in form; what it suffers from is lack of a final revision. It is greatly to be hoped that this will be supplied in the next edition." H. D.

+ — Nature 117:819 Je 12 '26 1200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:75 F '26

"As director of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, Dr. Charles G. Abbot speaks with considerable authority, especially in connection with the astronomy of the sun, in which field his own work has been responsible for many important advances. But the other phases of the science are not neglected. . . . It is hard to imagine the book could be any more up to date, for the most recent discoveries are explained." Frank Thone and James Stokley

+ Sat R of Lit 2:372 D 5 '25 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p379 Je 3 '26 300w

ABBOTT, CHARLES D. Howard Pyle; a chronicle; with an introd. by N. C. Wyeth. 249p il $5 Harper

B or 92 Pyle, Howard 25-25284

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:205 F '26

Reviewed by Allan Nevins

Bookm 62:716 F '26 280w

"The chief fault with this book is that it fails to make alive for us the very human person that was Howard Pyle. It is in truth but a chronicle of events in the famous illustrator's life and in the succession of dates and names it is only when the words are from Pyle's own pen that there is that character about them which we feel is vital." K. S.

— + Boston Transcript p4 Mr 3 '26 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p38 Mr '26

"The merit of Howard Pyle, A Chronicle lies in the revelation which is accomplished simply by selections from Howard Pyle's lifelong and copious correspondence; for the self-effacing narrative is but the required frame for these letters. Indeed, in the quotation alone of his sincere, rational, and ardent words we have a series of portraits, almost an autobiography."

+ Dial 80:340 Ap '26 80w

"Admiring and conscientious as he has been, Mr. Abbott's work is in truth a chronicle rather than that illuminating thing it might be; and, therefore, well as he has accomplished the task proper, set for himself in his subtitle, his work is disappointing. For here is one of the central figures of a whole era of American art and publishing life through whose interpretation that period might have become vibrantly and articulately alive." Howard Devree

+ — N Y Times p2 Ja 31 '26 1200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:151 Mr '26

R of Rs 73:223 F '26 50w

"The chronicle, as it is modestly called, is loosely knit about material chosen without much sense of importance or proportion. It is rather a biography to read about in than to read consecutively. However the reading about is rewarding." F. J. Mather, Jr.

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:719 Ap 17 '26 1650w

"A definitive biography of Howard Pyle must some day be written. Meanwhile admirers of Pyle's work and personality (the charm of which emerges clearly in Mr Abbott's study) will welcome this friendly account of a materially uneventful but spiritually productive life."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 My 17 '26 450w

"Mr. Charles D. Abbott's book brings out all the charm of Howard Pyle's character as well as of his art; and the many reproductions are delightful to study."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p265 Ap 8 '26 100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:31 Ja '26

ABBOTT, EDITH. Historical aspects of the immigration problem; select documents. (Univ. of Chicago social service ser.) 881p $4.50 Univ. of Chicago press

325.7 Immigration 26-27485

A collection of documents and records which touch upon the historical, legal, and social aspects of the problem of immigration from Europe up to 1882. The documents are classified according to subject and are arranged in chronological order under that subject. The volume supplements an earlier work, and is intended as a text for students of social work.

ABBOTT, EDITH—Continued

"The present volume belongs fundamentally with popular political literature. It does not undertake to deal with fundamentals. There is no attempt to get at the factors controlling mobility, and there is no consideration of the effects of mobility on the stock or culture. The human meaning of the redistribution of peoples is not discussed. (Yet) it must not be inferred that the present book does not have great value. It makes more easily available a body of material that may be used for illustrative purpose with large undergraduate classes, or much of it may be incorporated into an ordered presentation." E. B. Reuter

— + Am J Soc 32:490 N '26 760w

Am Pol Sci R 20:927 N '26 60w

Booklist 23:63 N '26

Bookm 64:366 N '26 130w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 S 12 '26 1550w

"The book is utterly devoid of polemic, and Miss Abbott confines her material altogether to the field of European immigration."

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 18 '26 430w

"Presenting as it does a bird's-eye view throughout the years of American life previous to 1882, when the first federal immigration legislation was passed, it gives a sense of the richness of this much-neglected field. Miss Abbott allows reprints of material long inaccessible and little known to tell their own story, adding only introductory notes to each section." J. P. Clark

Nation 123:250 S 15 '26 980w

Reviewed by M. M. Willey

New Repub 49:171 D 29 '26 1250w

"The material is arranged and captioned in a way that facilitates easy access to any particular phase upon which information may be sought; and that information will be found to be, in every case, significant and, often, in terms of firsthand experience." B. L.

Survey 56:643 S 15 '26 160w

"The literature of American immigration is, as a rule, dull reading, but this volume is an exception."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p604 S 16 '26 950w

ABBOTT, EDWIN ABBOTT. Flatland; a romance of many dimensions, by A square; with introd. by William Garnett. [new] ed 155p il $1.50 Little [7s 6d Blackwell]

827

First published in 1884, this little book pictures a world of two dimensions the entire experience of whose inhabitants is confined to a plane. They have no consciousness of anything outside that space and no means of moving off the surface on which they live. The book purports to be written by A square who has been given a vision of three-dimensional space. It gives a really understandable idea of the meaning of dimensions and is at the same time an entertaining social satire. The description of the men and women of Flatland, their houses and methods of recognizing each others' configurations, afford the author opportunity for some amusing exercises in Flatland mathematics.

"We will never again accuse mathematicians of being lacking in imagination. 'Flatland' is imaginative to the nth degree, and is written in so vivid and sprightly a fashion, that for all the arrant nonsense contained in it, it proves highly interesting reading. One thing is true, its social satire is just as apropos today as it was forty years ago: it is that quality that makes 'Flatland' worthwhile."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 30 '26 260w

"The value of his book is its simplicity. It does not explain the fourth dimension, but it explains the dimensional idea probably as clearly as it is possible to explain it; and those who are interested in the subject, but have not yet succeeded in acquiring a workable conception of what all this talk of 'dimensions' is about, cannot possibly do better than read Flatland. The present writer having seen it only once before, yet having remembered it for more than thirty years, may safely assert that it is a book from which even a child of reasonable intelligence may gain ideas of permanent value."

+ New Statesman 27:364 J1 10 '26 460w

"When this romance of mathematics appeared forty years ago, it proved to be a test of a sense of humor. Some critics totally missed the underlying human satire; others compared it with Swift's 'Gulliver'; accordingly comments varied from 'arrant nonsense' to 'one of the cleverest satires of history.' In the end it achieved a wide reading."

Outlook 144:508 D 15 '26 70w

"Dr. Abbott was out for fun when he wrote his friendly little geometrical romance, and it is good to see that the old wine is no worse for its new bottle. It is still a pleasant tonic, and an excellent stimulant for boys. Hitherto, only a few have enjoyed Flatland. It is now a pleasure in store for many." F. V. Morley

+ Sat R of Lit 3:254 O 30 '26 420w

ABBOTT, MRS JANE LUDLOW (DRAKE). Juliet is twenty. 352p $2 Lippincott

26-12146

"Juliet unhappily on her way home from a shortened college career, is prevailed upon by a trained nurse to marry a strange man at the point of death in a hospital. Perhaps a shrewd reader will foresee that the man may recover, but ere this amazing eventuality is revealed to Juliet, she passes through a host of practical, broadening experiences in social life, courtings, and jobs."—Sat R of Lit

"Succeeds in being a diverting book. It is fresh, simple, pleasantly improbable without being impossible, its heroine is appealing, it moves with lightness and ease to a foregone conclusion—which has been just sufficiently blocked."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 J1 27 '26 400w

"Miss Abbott should know better. Beginning with a preposterous and utterly conventional scene from the fiction factory she writes a story that every daughter's mother from Cheyenne to Medina, Mo., wants to read and believe."

— Boston Transcript p2 Je 19 '26 280w

"A competent, level-headed young person, although not phenomenally brilliant, Juliet is utterly natural and honestly portrayed. The story is respectably written, scarcely touched by mawkishness, and should have a strong appeal for girls in general from twelve to ninety."

Sat R of Lit 3:12 J1 31 '26 160w

ABBOTT, LYMAN. Evolution of Christianity. 258p $2.50 Doubleday
201 Christianity

This book, first published in 1892, before the rise of the Modernist-Fundamentalist controversy, is reprinted in the present edition because of its pertinence to the discussion now raging in the churches.

"'The Evolution of Christianity,' displaying an open mind to the discoveries of science and scholarship, but still holding firmly to belief that 'God is in His world' and asserting that His existence is demonstrated by 'unity in the material universe' and in the immaterial or spiritual as well, continues to-day to outline a creed acceptable to the Christian liberal."

+ N Y World p6m Ap 4 '26 130w

Reviewed by Laurence Hayward

Outlook 143:110 My 19 '26 80w

ABDULLAH, ACHMED. Wild goose of Limerick. 322p $2 Brentano's [7s 6d Hutchinson] 26-16086

"A story of high life and love and intrigue in Constantinople. The title of Marquis de O'Malley Pasha is a queer one, but the gentleman in question is an Irishman of sorts in the service of the Sultan. Ellen, the young American who fascinates him, is likewise fascinated by him, but she is also favoured by the glances, oratory, gallantry, and more doubtful attention of his most redoubtable enemy—an imperturbable Circassian prince, who overcomes his philosophic repugnance for marriage on first beholding her. From the moment the two claimants to Ellen's hand and beauty feel the additional weight of their enmity, duels, murders, abductions, and plots of every conceivable kind are set in furious and agreeable motion."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"As a novel it will not add materially to the author's reputation. The actors in the surface plot, carefully manipulated by a skillful puller of strings, go through all the motions prescribed for the characters of adventure fiction—automatically perfect but humanly impossible. Obviously they have no part in the real story, which is camouflaged as background—and a vividly dramatic story it is, too!" Marguerite Harrison

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 D 5 '26 680w

"Though all this is mixed with the jealousies of a court favorite and smells of Stamboul byways unsavory, although there are intrigues of love and intrigues of politics and none of them is a pretty one, yet it is, when one finishes, a highly moral tale. It is no book to put into the hands of the young, but for those who like their adventure red hot, highly spiced, and gay colored, it is a gorgeous and dashing tale." I. W. L.

Boston Transcript p7 N 17 '26 480w

"He obviously knows his background thoroughly, though the people and incidents of his invention seem remote from the world with which the general novel reader is familiar. There are no tedious passages in the story, but many stirring scenes, those to be particularly commended being kaleidoscopic descriptions of Stamboul's native life and of the roystering foreign element of Pera." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p3 O 23 '26 200w

"Those who like intrigue, adventure, and romance expertly prepared and dished up with rare condiments in exotic vessels will welcome 'A Wild Goose of Limerick.'" Sat R of Lit 3:400 D 4 '26 250w

"A brisk and ingenious story, marred only by the author's attempts to provide his aristocratic degenerates with a fund of subtle, sophisticated, witty talk."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p397 Je 10 '26 150w

ABDULLAH, ACHMED. Year of the wood-dragon. 249p il $2 Brentano's 26-10690

"An Eastern tale of richly risky experiences in the boyhood of James Clinton Weatherby. His schooling was different, 'with no lessons but those of the crooked, crowded streets and bazars, and an occasional word of prosy wisdom, Moslem or Hindu or Buddhist, from some gray-beard among his father's former customers and friends.' He knew how to combat an insult 'in no uncertain fashion and he knew how to be useful on an expedition into Tibet and how to put fear into the heart of one who it seemed had him at a very perilous disadvantage.'"—Int Bk R

"The story is warm with color and rich with strangeness and adventure." D. L. Mann + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ag 8 '26 850w

"The plot abounds with intrigue and adventure and contains an authentic picture of the customs of the country. Any keen-minded boy ought to be kept enthralled by the story."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 19 '26 200w

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p579 Ag '26 100w

"Decidedly, take this book to the summer camp. It will thrill you with the comfortable afterglow of a cold shower, you will like Jimmie and his dauntless friend Rankin, and you will learn a lot about one of the world's most fascinating countries." L. G. Short

+ Lit R p3 J1 10 '26 360w

"The book is full of intimate details and gives a vivid picture of the strange land, still so little known, and from which all foreigners were so long excluded."

+ N Y Times p8 My 30 '26 600w

"The Year of the Wood-Dragon' is for whoever wishes to play, in unfamiliar surroundings, the pleasant game of make-believe."

Sat R of Lit 2:939 J1 17 '26 180w

ABERCROMBIE, LASCELLES. Theory of poetry. 338p $2.75 Harcourt 26-4012

808.1 Poetry

Professor Abercrombie's book is devoted to a study of the question, What constitutes greatness in poetry? He is not concerned with its outward qualities of rhythm and rime and metaphor but with inspiration and form, power of enchantment—the pleasure to be derived from it and the reasons for our enjoyment. He illustrates plentifully with instances of greatness in poetry, a quality which he assumes to be readily recognizable. A part of this book was published in England under the title The Idea of great poetry.

Booklist 22:320 My '26

"A book of critical essays on poetry too often fails to satisfy in the matter of quotation. Mr. Abercrombie's book shines here, as in the matter of scope and appreciation. Especially valuable is his excursion into the field of the idea of great poetry."

+ Bookm 63:495 Je '26 180w

"Thoughtful and cogent book." Newton Arvin + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 F 28 '26 760w

Boston Transcript p4 F 27 '26 760w

"The best analysis of the composition and enjoyment of poetry since Professor Lowes's Convention and Revolt in Poetry."

+ Dial 81:82 J1 '26 150w

Nation 122:652 Je 9 '26 50w

"Mr. Abercrombie's approach to his problem is largely a literary and logical one. It is well designed, extremely intelligent, and always, within limits, interesting. But is one, when one has put it down, much better off than one was before?" Conrad Aiken

+ — Nation and Ath 37:517 J1 25 '25 600w

"Mr. Abercrombie has found a criterion that permits him to discuss with ease, order and perspective the great poetry of the European traditions. He has not evolved his criterion, however, from within; it is acquired; and it is too remote to reach all the implications of his subject. He is a critic with an attitude, but he lacks sensibility and temperament. He is a serious theorist; but one should not expect him to be interested in the immediate, which are the only important problems of literature." Allen Tate

+ — New Repub 46:281 Ap 21 '26 800w

"The best part of this book is the digressions, including a very interesting one on The Wisdom of Solomon. . . Professor Abercrombie has a fatal fondness for superlatives, which shows itself in asserting that 'the loveliest world poetry has ever attained is the idyllic world of Theocritus.' Such comparisons are meaningless; one cannot establish orders of merit among incommensurables." F. L. Lucas

+ — New Statesman 25:575 S 5 '25 1650w

ABERCROMBIE, LASCELLES—Continued

"Mr. Abercrombie has a concise and vivid prose. The book is studded with brilliant phrases and telling recognitions." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p2 J1 4 '26 1500w
Sat R 140:17 J1 4 '25 260w

"A book which seriously attempts to discover the foundations of epic poetry. Mr. Abercrombie's effort is carried to success by a conscientiousness that indulges in no special pleading. He sees soberly and widely, coming slowly to truths that Wordsworth won to by sheer intensity of character; and Coleridge by an Eastern subtlety of mind. This essay is a valuable addition to the constructive criticism of the art of poetry."

+ Spec 135:273 Ag 15 '25 900w

"If Mr Abercrombie has not completely imprisoned the muse in a formula, he has conducted the pursuit with a subtlety, sobriety and sensitiveness of perception which will illumine the trail for readers and fellow searchers. His comments on words and forms and poetic quality of language are unfailing in insight and delicacy of taste and are illustrated by quotations which will aid the reader in forming a standard of appreciation at once catholic and discriminating."

+ Springf'd Republican p5a Mr 7 '26 750w

"Nobody who cares for great poetry should miss this book. The students who listened to these lectures, the readers who read the book; are from the first moment to the last in the presence of the greatest poetry of the world and engaged in the discussion of questions about it which are not merely always great, but always properly poetic."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p437 J1
2 '25 3100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:107 Mr '26

ABERDEEN and TEMAIR, JOHN CAMPBELL GORDON, 1st marquis of. Tell me another. 291p $2.50 Longmans [7s 6d E. Arnold]

827 Humor. Anecdotes [26-537]

The book contains a collection of anecdotes about the Scotch, the clergy, lawyers, Americans, etc., in which when possible the original circumstances of the story are given; also a group of personal reminiscences of the life and friendships of Lord Aberdeen.

"Pleasingly differentiated from the quantity output of the professional anthologists of jokes."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 7 '26 180w

"This is a collection of amiable and extremely flat stories which are obviously the fruit of Lord Aberdeen's many years of social life in England and in America."

— + Boston Transcript p3 F 6 '26 300w

"Here and there we find some stories given a later attribution than is just, but as time passes origins are forgotten and old tales are revived as new. The oldest jest in the world will always be news to someone. The stories are linked together by a racy commentary and entertaining personal experiences."

+ — New Statesman 26:252 D 5 '25 220w

"Take it as a whole, for American readers [it] hardly equals in humorous quality some recent volumes of funny stories that have been made by American collectors. But for English readers it is probably much more amusing than the American books would be. Nevertheless, American readers will find enough good stories in it and enough bits of richly humorous quality to make the volume an entertaining companion for an occasional idle moment."

+ — N Y Times p20 Ja 17 '26 400w

"The stock of anecdotes is varied in quality and by no means uniformly new, and the personal reminiscence, with which the book is extended beyond the supply of stories, is not of marked interest. But doubtless some fresh contribution has been made to the world's repertory of anecdotes. And in the miscellaneous glimpses of Scottish character and speech there is not a little savor."

— + Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 22 '26 800w

"He is especially scrupulous to write no word that could hurt the feelings of anyone living, and it results that novelty is not the distinctive feature of the anecdotes which gain admittance to his collection. Still, there must be several that will be new to any one reader; moreover, as Lord Aberdeen has associated with the eminent, he is in a position at times to provide an old story with a striking setting."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p785 N
26 '25 450w

ABRAHAM, ISRAEL. Glory of God. 88p $1.25 Oxford [3s 6d Milford]

231 God [26-13851]

"Three homiletic lectures upon the phrase 'the glory of God' delivered by the Reader in Theology in the University of Cambridge, England. They are enriched with a wealth of citations from rabbinical literature and a generous use of the best said upon this theme by Christian scholars."—J Religion

"Fine writing is in 'The Glory of God.' The reviewer bows before the master of style, student, clear thinker, and wise interpreter which I. Abrahams shows himself to be." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 62:lxvii D '25 70w

Reviewed by A. W. Vernon
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ap 18 '26 320w

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 9 '26 160w

"The whole product is expressive of a fine and reverent spirit."

+ J Religion 6:218 Mr '26 60w

"His volume is helpful and enjoyable and should be widely read by those of all faiths." G. A. Barton

+ Lit R p10 My 15 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p603 S 17 '25 300w

ADAMS, EVANGELINE SMITH. Bowl of heaven. 275p $3 Dodd

133.5 Astrology 26-19282

The book is in no sense biography. It is a compendium of "cases" in which the horoscopic forecasts made by Miss Adams for this and that famous person were fulfilled in whole or in part by subsequent events. There is no record of failure; on the contrary, Miss Adams' belief in the infallibility of the stars is repeatedly stressed. Her faith in astrology is complete; her book is therefore utterly sincere. And because of the combination of author, subject and persons talked about, it is unquestionably interesting.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p33 D 5 '26 100w

"Most readers will find many surprises, and the cynical no little amusement in her accounts of her clients."

N Y Times p5 N 21 '26 780w

"[The book is] thoroughly readable and marked by sincerity." E. P.

+ Outlook 144:572 D 29 '26 30w

"Anyone who reads her well-written and interesting book will admit that producing this work alone has gone a long way toward justifying her choice of profession."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:404 D 4 '26 540w

ADAMS, GEORGE BURTON. Council and courts in Anglo-Norman England. (Yale historical publications) 403p $4 Yale univ. press

342.42 Great Britain—Constitutional history. Courts—Great Britain. Great Britain. Curia regis. Common law. Magna charta 26-11072

A study of constitutional government in England during Anglo-Norman times, as founded on Anglo-Saxon institutions and modified under Norman influence after the conquest of 1066.

"These studies make an original and important interpretation of the beginnings of the judiciary—a book of great learning and a storehouse of references to sources and literature, Continental as well as English." A. B. White
+ Am Pol Sci R 20:911 N '26 460w

"Students of early English law and government will find excellent material in this volume, written after painstaking investigations by the late Prof. George Burton Adams, and now issued for the first time in book form."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 19 '26 380w

"Even the legal student and technician, for whom it is intended, will not find it light reading; but for those interested in constitutionalism it establishes the foundation of the limited monarchy in England, upon which the development of constitutional law in Great Britain and (by extension) in America is based." F. H. M.
Lit R p9 Je 12 '26 100w

"These essays are essentially sane, distinguished, and well balanced; they throw light in every direction and give a judicial review of the work that has been done since Professor Maitland's death."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p466 Jl 8 '26 400w

ADAMS, HERBERT. Crooked lip. 256p $2
Lippincott [7s 6d Methuen]

26-20138

The girl travelling with her father was visibly excited at being in England. Her frank eagerness drew the eyes of several fellow passengers, among them Jimmy Haswell who noted and resented the attention of the others. Conversation with Nonna and her father followed and a little later Nonna went to the dining car with Jimmy and his friend, leaving the other man behind. They returned to find him dead, brutally murdered in his seat. Jimmy's enthusiasm for the girl is augmented by horror at the tragedy and sympathy for her. He becomes her self-appointed champion and tracking down each of the fellow passengers who had shown unwonted interest in Nonna discovers in the girl with the crooked lip an unexpected ally in the solution of the crime.

"While wholly lacking literary style, the story is carefully written, with a laudable (if too apparent) effort to tangle motives and clues as much as possible that the surprise of the solution be the more thrilling. That is, for those readers who have not solved it for themselves long before!"

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Jl 3 '26 280w

"The criminal is very well concealed, and even the most clever solvers of mystery stories will be kept guessing, even though the suspects are eliminated early in the tale. It is a clever plot and a clever story, full of interest every moment." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p6 Je 26 '26 200w

"This is a likely yarn for those who care for the sort. The writing and development of the mystery have been competently set forth."

+ — N Y Times p3 Je 27 '26 600w

Times [London] Lit Sup p250 Ap 1 '26 80w

ADAMS, HERBERT. Sloane Square mystery. 255p $2 Dial press [3s 6d Methuen]

[26-16710]

"Bruce Graham and a friend find the body of the well-known philanthropist, Sir Nicholas Brannock, in the early hours of the morning in Sloane square. Heart disease is supposed to be the cause of death, but investigation establishes the fact that he was killed by poison. Of course, his nephew and heir, Rollo, is brought under suspicion and by a chain of circumstantial evidence certain of conviction. But his sweetheart, Joan, and his friend Bruce set their wits to work with such success that the real culprit confesses."—Lit R

"Behold a refreshingly well-bred murder story! In the pages of this tale of British ladies and gentlemen all out to solve a mystery, there is little that is sordid and much that is entertaining."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 10 '26 230w

Lit R p8 F 20 '26 100w

Nation and Ath 37:740 S 19 '25 200w

"Of course it has a murder, and that is always an exciting thing; but likewise it has a large baggage of cheery English slang and wronged wives and references to good people and nice young things who make love. Mr. Adams ought to be ashamed of his subordination of the real plot to a good deal of sentimental bleating."

— + N Y World p6m Mr 14 '26 80w

Spec 135:460 S 19 '25 120w

"A well-told, interesting story."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p585 S 10 '25 160w

ADAMS, JAMES TRUSLOW. New England in the republic, 1776-1850. 438p il $5 Little

974 New England—History 26-9006

The final volume in Mr Adams's history of New England closes with the year 1850, which marked the "accomplishment of its most distinctive work in the life of the American nation." From that time on, as Mr Adams shows, the swift current of nationalism into which New England was swept tended to diminish its extreme sectionalism, tho the distinct New England type and point of view remained.

"The volume is readable from beginning to end."

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:698 Ag '26 180w

Booklist 23:26 O '26

Reviewed by Moran Tudury

Bookm 63:603 Jl '26 420w

Reviewed by E. B. Greene

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 O 17 '26 990w

"He has done a very scholarly piece of work. A sane, cold estimate, a true balance, will never be struck on the historical deserts of New England without taking into account the deep researches, vigorous opinions and excellent writing of James Truslow Adams." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 24 '26 3350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 S '26

"The author has rounded out his task with the same careful scholarship, the same clarity and distinction which characterized 'The Founding of New England' and 'Revolutionary New England.' It is a fine piece of work, honest, well documented, with no purple patches or fine writing, but a deal of sanity, justice, and vision."

+ Ind 116:463 Ap 17 '26 450w

"This is sound history, and full of the stuff of life. The volume is eminently professional, a masterpiece of skilled workmanship, and provides for the amateur in history a finished and absorbing story." Herbert Solow

+ Lit R p5 N 27 '26 1350w

Reviewed by C. W. Alvord

Nation 123:379 O 13 '26 750w

"There are very few factual criticisms that even the most meticulous scholar would make in this careful and well documented work." D: S. Muzzev

+ New Repub 47:204 Jl 7 '26 2200w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald

N Y Times p3 My 30 '26 2800w

Outlook 143:222 Je 9 '26 240w

R of Rs 73:668 Je '26 200w

"Mr. Adams has used a wide variety of contemporary material, especially newspapers and pamphlets. In addition he has made effective use of monographs and other studies which are usually of interest only to the specialist and often more or less unavailable to the general reader. His criticism of authorities furnishes a valuable bibliography of the whole subject, but at no time does it detract from the interest of the topic under discussion or interfere with the easy flow of the narrative."

ADAMS, JAMES TRUSLOW—Continued
W: A. Robinson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:883 Je 26 '26 1000w

"Like the two other works of the series, a fine example of historical writing that makes accessible the results of the newer research yet preserves an individual tone and a certain sprightliness of personal attack."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f Ap 18 '26 1650w

Wis Lib Bul 22:223 Jl '26

ADAMS, KATHARINE (MRS PERCY ALEXANDER WALKER). Toto and the gift. 235p $2 Macmillan

26-11316

Toto, whose real name was Rose Mathilde, was a charming golden-haired French girl of fifteen, who lived in post-war Rheims with her young cousins Berthe and Tartuffe. Toto had a gift for acting and her dream was to become an actress, educate her cousins and help her people to rebuild Rheims. Money was very scarce so when Uncle Beaumanne, who lived in America and had a delicatessen shop on Sixth avenue, sent Toto passage money, she bravely left the home she loved and went to America. The shop was anything but congenial, but her relatives were kindly and Toto was doing her best to be happy when a discovery was made. The names Toto and Rose Mathilde and some scraps of yellowed papers proved that Toto belonged to the de Villiers family. And so Toto was to realize her dream.

Booklist 23:86 N '26

"'Toto and the Gift' is a book for the girl who likes to read, or the girl who is different, who has genius and who is interesting. The story is not for those who enjoy such reading as the Elsie Dinsmore series, the Marjorie books and the Girl Scout series. It is a book that one can read twice over (or even more times), getting as much enjoyment the second time as from the first." Margaret Warren

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Je 20 '26 680w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 31 '26 400w

"An excellent story for older girls."

+ Cleveland Open Shelf p14 N '26

Outlook 144:60 S 8 '26 40w

Wis Lib Bul 22:276 O '26

ADAMS, KATHLEEN, and ATCHINSON, FRANCES ELIZABETH, comps. Book of giant stories. 205p il $2 Dodd

26-18095

This compilation is a response to the frequent demand of children for "a book of giant stories." There are old favorites among the big fellows here—Billy Beg and his bull, David and Goliath, and Jack and the beanstalk—and others that will prove perhaps, quite new acquaintances, as in the tales of Mollie Whuppie, Lady Featherflight, and The giant of Bang Beggar's hall.

Booklist 23:136 D '26

"A rousing selection full of spice, [that] blends the unfamiliar with the familiar in a delightful way."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:282 N 6 '26 90w

ADAMS, SAMUEL HOPKINS. Piper's fee. 302p $2 Boni & Liveright

26-4584

In "Piper's fee" Mr Adams uses some of the figures and scenes of his earlier novel "Siege." An accident brings Dorothea Selover, child of the gully in the mill-town where the Ruyland dynasty reigned, to the attention of Aunt Augusta, matriarch of all the Ruylands, who makes Dorothea her protégée. In New York where she is sent to an art school, Dorothea rapidly ripens into beauty and worldly wisdom while remaining true to the code of ethics taught her by her grandfather. A young and inexperienced Ruyland finds her way to New York and is inducted by Dorothea into some of its mysteries. Evelyn's ignorance of life leads to disastrous consequences for which Dorothea, as her mentor, assumes the responsibility and pays the piper. But the cloud of shame which for a time rests upon Dorothea is finally lifted and she becomes the favorite of Aunt Augusta and the wife of her grand-nephew Laurens.

"The story is Mr. Adams's great achievement. There is swing in the narrative, wise selection of incidents, firm and lively dialogue, and a competent dexterity in handling all the elements of his tale that make us enjoy it and respect the ability of the writer. It is a first-rate story." W. K. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 13 '26 560w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 N '26

Reviewed by A. P. Terhune

Lit R p3 Mr 13 '26 600w

"It never actually disappoints, but something of the careful charm, hung midway between the real and the fantastic, diminishes as we go on." M. H.

+ New Repub 46:414 My 19 '26 130w

"Possibly it is significant of the book's poor identification with life that all its characters, including old Augusta, are likable and essentially noble-hearted. And yet, as a story, 'The Piper's Fee' is excellent because all these people have force and intelligence; they possess too many virtues, but they are neither wishy-washy nor colorless."

+ N Y Times p8 F 14 '26 500w

N Y World p7m F 28 '26 300w

Outlook 143:449 Jl 28 '26 180w

Pratt p33 summer '26

"We are conscious that in 'The Piper's Fee,' Mr. Adams makes a manful effort to be modern and even daring. But somehow it fails to come off. What was intended to be the powerful and dramatic part of the action is simply make-believe; we don't really accept it for a moment. It is early Victorian melodrama with a modern accent, nothing more."

— Sat R of Lit 2:726 Ap 17 '26 330w

ADAMS, SAMUEL HOPKINS. Revelry. 318p $2 Boni & Liveright

26-21303

"Revelry" is a departure from the customary historical novel in that it uses contemporary rather than past events. It is a narrative of what went on in Washington during the Harding administration, sparing none of its scandals and adding some incidents which are matters of gossip or pure invention. The oil deals and the graft of the Veteran's bureau are described in detail and the meetings of the "Ohio gang" in the Crow's Nest—the real cabinet—"Secretary of Deals, Secretary of Pardons, Bootlegger General, Secretary of Office Sales, Receiver General of Graft, Secretary of Purchasable Contracts," and the rest. Harding himself is treated more gently.

"Written apparently from inside knowledge of the political game, the novel holds one's interest, if it does not enhance one's respect for the powers that be in these United States." L. M. Field

Bookm 64:633 Ja '27 230w

"There are elements of genuine pathos, of tragedy, in the situation. It is a big theme. But whatever there is of either was implanted by fate in the reality as it happened. Mr. Adams has added no line of interpretation, no insight of a nobler majesty, to lift the rather sordid tale out of journalism and into the world of art. Indeed, 'Revelry' is one more glittering example of the impossibility of mingling actual fact and creative imagination without producing confusion and distress. In style it is as commonplace as the boorish dialogue of many of the characters themselves." Anne Hard

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p26 N 21 '26 950w

"'Revelry' will make a sensation, but the tabloid newspapers do that daily. If it succeeds, with Mr. Daugherty's involuntary help, in reminding us all of the Ohio gang, I admit its sensationalism will be justified." H. E. D. Lit R p4 N 13 '26 450w

"The theory that you shall not write about famous or infamous people until they are in their coffins is a meaningless bit of traditionalism, which grew out of the statesman's habit of publishing diaries and memoirs containing indiscreet references to associates. But if one is to be restrained from criticizing a public figure, or castigating a scoundrel, until he has passed away, the net result is immunity for the period which statesmen and scoundrels care most about—that of their own lives. More novels like Revelry would mean more honesty in office." Bruce Bliven

New Repub 49:118 D 15 '26 1000w

"As a novel, 'Revelry' demands no serious consideration. It is a melodramatic patchwork which ends on a moralizing note. But it was hardly necessary, in order to point that moral and adorn this tale, to subject the characters of men still living—to say nothing of the dead—to the unfair confusion of damning fact with damning fiction."

— N Y Times p27 N 28 '26 320w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p10m Ja 9 '27 900w

Reviewed by Ernest Dimmet

Sat R 142:759 D 18 '26 720w

"The picture of the President who was too small for his job is done with genuine sympathy, and even his grafting friends are treated with detachment. Leaving moral reprobation to the future (the present being obviously uninterested) there is a good story here, and if it fails of absorbing interest the reason is only that to newspaper readers it is already familiar. And at any rate Mr. Adams deserves the Pulitzer prize for Modesty; he is that rarest of feathered creatures, the angel who fears to tread." Elmer Davis

+ Sat R of Lit 3:335 N 27 '26 1100w

"The people of the United States need to be instructed on the personal lives and corrupt devices of some of their governors, and aroused to correct both. But will a shadowy fiction arouse them when they are unmoved by the real name and dates set down in Congressional investigation and court records? It is fair to Mr. Adams to presume his pen was inspired by indignation, but it brought forth only a melange of innuendo and dismal pictures of our masters. Here is neither white rage nor judicial prosecution. Plain folk will get nothing but the mild snigger at backstairs gossip, and a reinforcement of their cynicism with respect both to dishonesty in government and indifference in the governed."

— Survey 57:464 Ja 1 '27 320w

ADCOCK, ALMEY ST JOHN. Winter wheat. 320p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Faber & Gwyer]

26-12290

"The scene is laid in Buckinghamshire, in a poverty-stricken hamlet, and nobody seems to be very healthy or very happy in the cottages about. But youth and gaiety flourish even in Tawny Ridge, and Nancy and the magnificent Jason Unthank have their glorious hour. Miss Adcock departs deliberately from the usual village idyll, jumps seven years with the briefest of indications of what took place in that time, and then brings Jason and Nancy—who have not married—into contact again. Into conflict too; their trade rivalry, and the emotional battle that rages between them, is complicated by the presence of Nancy's son, called Kit Pilgrim, and hated by Jason. The working out of the story is done with imagination and delicacy."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"This is a most honest novel, even in its shortcomings; and if it wants charm, so does the life it depicts. Perhaps it is too convincing in some respects, but to the same extent it is memorable, and not unworthy of its obvious inspiration and model." Isabel Paterson

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 J1 4 '26 720w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p4 Je 26 '26 1800w

"A new novelist who writes with considerable grace and insight, although the tragic force of her narrative is arbitrary rather than inevitable."

+ — Dial 81:443 N '26 100w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith

Lit R p2 J1 3 '26 580w

"The book is, on the whole, a promising, if not a powerful, piece of work. One must withhold from it the latter praise, because the author seems sometimes to grope for rather than to realize effects." M. E. J.

+ — New Repub 47:316 Ag 4 '26 130w

Reviewed by Isabel Boyd

N Y Times p9 Je 27 '26 700w

"It is not a great novel but, considering the age of its author, it is a token of potential greatness. It has moments of fine characterization, of persons and of countryside, and of psychological conflict."

+ — N Y World p4m Je 20 '26 180w

"As an exercise in unilluminated realism it is competent enough and certain scenes are not without vividness and power. But the truth is that a grim and meaningless tale concerned with individuals belonging to the lowest stratum of an English rural community must vindicate its existence by something more than photographic verisimilitude if it is to get itself read."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:939 J1 17 '26 200w

"The whole note is sombre and inevitably the book ends in tragedy. It is, however, powerfully written, and Nancy stands out as a figure full of vitality."

+ — Spec 136:432 Mr 6 '26 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p116 F 18 '26 400w

ADKINS, HOMER BURTON, and MCELVAIN, SAMUEL MARION. Introduction to the practice of organic chemistry in the laboratory. (International chemical ser.) 288p il $2.25 McGraw

547 Chemistry, Organic 25-12373

"Presents directions for more than one hundred preparations, and considerable discussion of the more important classes of organic reactions, and of the laboratory technique involved."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"While numerous laboratory manuals of organic chemistry are available, this new one justifies itself. The authors have been unusually successful. The directions for the 115 preparations and the theoretical subject matter, which is considerable, are grouped in 16 chapters. Helpful questions, requiring of the student an appreciation of the subject, are appended to the laboratory directions. A unique section in a book of this size and character presents a good survey of organic chemical literature." G. A. Hill

+ Am Chem Soc J 47:2622 O '25 460w

"The authors of this book have produced something more than a mere laboratory manual. In addition to outlining more than 100 organic preparations, nearly one-half of the ADAMS, H. B., and MCELVAIN, S. M.—Cont. total space is devoted to a lucid discussion of the important reactions of organic chemistry, and to the principles of laboratory technique."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:878 N '25 80w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:31 J1 '25
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:78 F '26

ADVENTURE. Adventure's best stories—1926; ed. by Arthur Sullivan Hoffman. 300p $2 Doran

Short stories—Collections 26-9113

Eighteen stories selected as representative of the best printed in the magazine Adventure during the last fifteen years. Contents: Foreword, by A. S. Hoffman; The song of Madame, by Crosbie Garstin; The soul of a regiment, by Talbot Mundy; Habit, by F. R. Buckley; Strange fellers, by Alan Lemay; A gulp of water, by Lynn Montross; Home from the wars, by J. P. Long; The knell of the horn, by Captain Dingle; Breeches, by L. H. Nason; Corn, by Fiswoode Tarleton; Antonio, by F. St Mars; Marea's fancy man, by Bill Adams; A pair of mules, by N. G. Henshaw; The gap in the fence, by John Eyton; Alias Whispering White, by W. C. Tuttle; One night and the morning, by Aaron Wyn; King's bounty, by Wilkeson O'Connell; John Jock Todd, by Robert Simpson; The victor, by Dale Collins.

"A book that may without exaggeration be called good reading, especially in spots."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 My 23 '26 180w

"Of the eighteen yarns here presented, at least a dozen are of the sort to stir men's blood." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 29 '26 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p109 S '26

"Altho interesting, they are certainly no more worthy of inclusion between cloth covers than are numberless 'action stories' which appear every month between paper covers." W. K. Bradley

Int Bk R p487 J1 '26 300w

"There is not a poor yarn in the lot and there are a few well worth the price of the whole book several times over." C. M. M.

+ Lit R p8 My 1 '26 120w

"We venture to think that this volume only confirms a just attitude toward this type of fiction. It has its uses as well as its readers. It bears the same relationship to the art of fiction that the daily illustrated newspapers bear to serious journalism."

N Y Times p24 Je 20 '26 350w

"There are some remarkably good stories among the eighteen here gathered. What the collection lacks in an even balance of quality, is made up for by the fine and abundant variety of the stories' plots, incidents, settings, people and by their general excellence of structure."

+ N Y World p4m Je 20 '26 180w

"Examination has not yet shown any blood circulating in these tales, despite all that is spilled on the ground. The figures are cut out of tin according to standard patterns, and coated with a bright-colored and factitious sheen of adventure."

— Sat R of Lit 2:892 Je 26 '26 180w

"'Adventure' is a magazine that has deliberately limited its public by reason of a policy that minimizes love interest in its stories, but it aims to keep above the level of cheap action. There are 18 stories here, and while some of them are average trade goods stuff, there are half a dozen of first-rate quality."

+ Spring'd Republican p7f Je 6 '26 220w

AESCHYLUS. Prometheus: I, Prometheus bound of Aeschylus, a metrical version; II, Prometheus unbound, by Clarence W. Mendell. 112p $2 Yale univ. press

882 Mendell, Clarence Whittlesey 26-13538

A translation of Prometheus bound is followed by Prometheus unbound, an original work in the same mood and meter as the Aeschylean tragedy which is its model.

Booklist 23:122 D '26

"The second part of the book passes with no word of explanation to the 'Prometheus Unbound.' Into this play have been woven the few extant fragments of the play of that name by Aeschylus, but it is only by referring to the Greek original that the reader can be quite sure just where Aeschylus ends and Mendell begins—a distinct compliment to the author of the modern version! . . . One questions, however, whether the imitation is not too complete. In short, Aeschylus imitated himself much less slavishly than either Shelley or Professor Mendell has copied him." A. S. Pease

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 29 '26 470w

"Mr. Mendell has, very evidently, done a living, exuberant translation which is strong in its very terseness, and which reflects throughout the spirit of the original tragedy."

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 7 '26 320w

"Neither in conception nor in diction is it really original, but in both it harmonizes with the translation which precedes it, and in unbinding Prometheus Mr. Mendell releases his heroic character in more than fact from the static attitude of antiquity and makes him one with the adventuring spirits of mankind."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p702 O 14 '26 180w

AFFABLE HAWK, pseud. See Glover, J. M.

AGNEW, HUGH ELMER. Cooperative advertising by competitors. 246p il $4 Harper

659 Advertising 26-11425

"Treats of the principle of promoting a whole industry through combined efforts in advertising. Has a chapter on church advertising and several on community advertising."—Wis Lib Bul

Booklist 23:65 N '26

"I wish that Hugh E. Agnew would climb over the top of his subject and, seeing its social and economic implications, write another book about it. But he has a great subject, and maybe he will write another book, including in it the place of co-operative advertising in the progress from competition to community effort and, at the other end of the scale, include in it more details of the actual campaigns." Helen Woodward

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 J1 18 '26 420w

"The author who has had wide experience in working out co-operative advertising campaigns, seems to have succeeded admirably in his endeavor to make this volume a sort of helpful manual for those wishing to build up a greater volume of business."

+ Boston Transcript p3 J1 17 '26 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 D '26

"His work has a fine scholastic flavor."

+ N Y Times p10 Ag 1 '26 180w

Pratt p20 autumn '26

Wis Lib Bul 22:225 J1 '26

AIKMAN, DUNCAN. Home town mind. 295p $2.50 Minton, Balch & co.

917.3 United States—Social conditions 26-8081

"Eleven salty essays on various aspects of the American scene and on the various compulsions forced on American life by the home-town mind."—Ind

Booklist 23:74 N '26

"Duncan Aikman has an astute observer's flair for defining the several phenomena of the home town mind, combined with humor and a perfectly astonishing flow of shock dealing phrases that spurt from his pages like fish from a kettle." L. B. Gilkes

+ Bookm 63:716 Ag '26 180w

"It is a good volume to have on your shelf. A soothing volume, for even the most ribald of thinkers is made glad to be reminded that he is not alone in his mental peccadilloes and that a competent spokesman has given for him his thoughts and sentiments to the wide world. It is a book for the little band that chuckles at the stupidity, hypocrisy and ineffectualness which are, if not the complete backbone, at least some of the vertebræ of this greatest country on earth. Now and again Mr. Aikman grows grim, but mostly he seems to enjoy himself with the other chucklers." Leonard Hess
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 My 30 '26 450w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 19 '26 180w

"To my taste, Mr. Aikman is a better commentator on life in these United States than is the pyrotechnic Mr. H. L. Mencken. He shares many of Mr. Mencken's prejudices and opinions, but his exposition never lapses into the folie furieuse of Mr. Mencken riding one of his nightmare stable of hobbyhorses. Mr. Aikman writes with humor, vision and discrimination."

+ Ind 116:617 My 22 '26 180w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan
New Repub 47:13 Je 23 '26 200w

Reviewed by P. A. Hutchison
N Y Times p2 Ap 11 '26 1250w

"Mr. Aikman's book is one deeply to interest the thoughtful and catch the attention of the thoughtless—a book of fiery sincerity and of forceful and brilliant execution." Ethel Parton
+ Outlook 142:655 Ap 23 '26 280w

"Mr. Aikman's best satire is on the regions he seems to know most intimately, the Middle West of his youth and the Mexican border of his present scornful habitation. He is less effective in lancing the bubbles of a Santa Barbara 'art' movement, but even here, and certainly through most of the book, he exercises his admirable wit in behalf of truth, and on the theory that a hiding is good for a boy—whether he deserves it or not nothing is wasted." Lyman Bryson

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:804 My 22 '26 380w

ALDANOV, MARK ALEKSANDROVICH LANDAU-. See Landau-Aldanov, M. A.

ALDINGTON, HILDA (DOOLITTLE) (MRS RICHARD ALDINGTON) (H. D., pseud.). Palimpsest. 338p $3.50 Houghton

Mrs Aldington tells three stories in imagist prose. The first is of Hipparchia, Roman hetaira, about 75 B.C. This writing is removed from the novelist's palimpsest to make room for a story of post-war London, and this again gives way to a tale of Egypt at the time of the Tutankhamen excavations. Contents: Hipparchia; Murex; Secret name.

"The book as a whole is one for poets and patient intellectuals, though to dismiss it as caviar would be to emphasize its delicacy at the expense of its indubitable strength. It has the vitality to live in the memory in what is almost its pristine vividness after one has laid it by and the unique quality of being not justly comparable to any other writing of this generation." Babette Deutsch

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 N 28 '26 860w

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 8 '27 230w

"The effect is precisely similar to that of reading an engrossing narrative in a language not yet mastered: one is carried along; he hopes that he is following; he gets lost for pages; he grows dazed; he longs for rest. The bitter truth is, this book has a certain reader groggy. I have not understood 'one consecutive' sentence. In fact, there does not appear to be one consecutive sentence there!" Marian Storm
— Lit R p3 N 27 '26 670w

"It is not only a most remarkable and beautiful book; it is as well an explanation and an amplification of our most reserved poet." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 123:668 D 22 '26 520w

N Y Times p6 N 21 '26 950w

"It sounds like the style of the later Henry James fallen into complete deliquescence, and it leaves me with a faint impression that the author has failed to convey something not worth the conveying. The earlier pages of this book are on the whole rather more intelligible than most of those that follow." E. Shanks

— + Sat R 142:204 Ag 21 '26 580w

"This book will probably obtain but few readers who can dispose of sufficient time to read it through to the conclusion. The number of those who admire it will perhaps be even smaller. For H. D. as the prose writer is not the same as H. D. the poet. The hand that guides the stream of words and images may be that of H. D.; but the voice is the voice of James Joyce. And the poet is clear just where the prose-writer is thick, muddy, and unsubtle." J. G. Fletcher

— Sat R of Lit 3:482 Ja 1 '27 700w

ALDINGTON, RICHARD. French studies and reviews. 246p $2.50 Dial press [7s 6d Allen & U.]

840.4 French literature—History and criticism [26-15424]

"Mr. Aldington's book reviews, reprinted from 'The Times' Literary Supplement and 'The Criterion' are for the most part summaries of the volumes under review or brief informative articles derived from the work in question. One could hardly look for anything else in a reviewer who in a little over a year covers French literature from the thirteenth century to the twentieth. His subjects are generally those that lie on the less frequented byways of the specialist, the exceptions being the papers devoted to François Villon, Prosper Mérimée and Alfred de Vigny. The only two substantial essays are on French Satirists and on Characters and Portraits."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"The present volume lacks the distinction of his earlier gathering of 'Studies and Reviews.' As reviews they are well informed, discerning and tastefully written, but they do not reveal the independent study of his authors, nor bring into play the range of reading which were notable features of the other book. The purely critical observations are casual and meager." Jacob Zeitlin

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Je 13 '26 420w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 17 '26 620w

Dial 81:518 D '26 100w

Reviewed by J. T. Shipley
Lit R p16 D 18 '26 650w

Reviewed by Edwin Muir
Nation and Ath 39:253 Je 5 '26 400w

Reviewed by L. S. Morris
New Repub 48:200 O 6 '26 850w

"It is, to apply to Mr. Aldington the Baconian phrase which he himself applies to M. de Navenne, 'drenched in matter'; and the manner is, as a rule, worthy of the substance. We have learnt much from it, and we have learnt it without tears. With all his erudition, Mr. Aldington is merciful to those less richly endowed."

+ New Statesman 27:200 Je 5 '26 950w

Reviewed by T. C. Chubb
N Y Times p19 Je 20 '26 1100w
St Louis 24:319 N '26

"It is, apparently, less as a critic in the strict sense than as an informed and sympathetic writer of summaries that Mr. Richard Aldington has produced 'French Studies and Reviews.' Here, for example, would seem to be what the average intelligent reader wishes to know about Villon, Scarron and other older and more modern French writers."

+ Sat R 141:573 My 1 '26 80w

ALDINGTON, RICHARD—Continued

"Though these pieces were written for periodicals, and most of them were designed as review-articles, they make a pleasant volume of explorations and their occasions have never unduly limited them."

+ Spec 136:955 Je 5 '26 380w

ALDINGTON, RICHARD. Voltaire. (Republic of letters) 278p $2.50 Dutton [6s Routledge] B or 92 Voltaire, Francois Marie Arouet de 26-26267

Mr Aldington divides his book into two equal parts. The first part is devoted to the life, personality and influence of Voltaire, the second to his works and their significance as it appears to a twentieth-century reader. The Appendix contains a chronological list of his works, a selection of the best English and French books concerned with Voltaire, and a list of English translations.

Booklist 22:321 My '26

Bookm 63:607 Jl '26 180w

"We learn nothing that is new about Voltaire, but we get a vivid portrayal of his personal traits, of the chief events of his life, and of the thought bequest which he left to France and to mankind." E. N.

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 6 '26 950w

"A brilliant and entertaining biography." Alyse Gregory

+ Dial 81:437 N '26 780w

"The book is an admirable introduction to Voltaire. It is simple and it is stimulating. . . But the achievement has its limitations. . . The fact is that Voltaire's life cries out for detail. In treating of another man, Mr. Aldington, with his fine gift for compression, might have done a wholly satisfying thing. But Voltaire's life is intensely fascinating and complex . . . and the judicious selection may indicate fine workmanship, it can not escape biographical inadequacy. . . Yet if Mr. Aldington's biography will not prove filling for many of his readers, it is safe to say that his criticism, in pointing out how much of Voltaire is worth reading, will give them something to catch up with; and if the book stimulates a wider reading of Voltaire it will be doubly worth while." L. Kronenberger

+ Int Bk R p326 Ap '26 520w

"If Voltaire did his best, through eighty-four years of an incessantly active life, to make any book about himself a matter of interest, his latest biographer has not failed to do his part in rendering this particular volume scholarly, keen, luminous and characterful." Babette Deutsch

+ Lit R p7 Mr 6 '26 650w

Nation 123:135 Ag 11 '26 50w

"Mr Aldington is occasionally dull, sometimes tells us too much and sometimes too little, and reminds us too often that Voltaire was witty. But if the new series in which he is writing demands both a biography and a critical examination in so small a compass, it is difficult to see how he could have written a much better book." Kingsley Martin

+ Nation and Ath 38:780 Mr 6 '26 1350w

"Rarely does a volume achieve its purpose more completely than this volume. Mr. Aldington knows his Voltaire through and through. His acquaintance with him has mellowed his own style, but has not captured it. His own style is a perfect bridge between the somewhat cynical lucidity of Voltaire and the forthright optimism of ourselves." A. W. Vernon

+ New Repub 47:120 Je 16 '26 700w

"Mr Aldington is not a rhetorical writer. He indulges very little in praise or blame. He is sane, unheated, well informed and above all really curious. He sees Voltaire's life more as a difficult problem than an occasion for a panegyric. He has neither the moralist's indignation nor the moralist's glee, but only the humanist's interest. And as that is vivid and intelligent, Mr Aldington has written a book which, without being in any way a great biography should displace Morley's Life, and is likely to remain the standard English short biography for many years."

+ New Statesman 26:520 F 6 '26 950w

"A most excellently succinct survey of the Frenchman and his work." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p7 F 21 '26 2200w

"Voltaire was perhaps as doughty a champion as the cause of tolerance has ever had, as Mr. Aldington admirably sets forth. It is to be hoped that his book will have the very widest circulation in this country, where the spirit of Voltaire is so sadly needed."

Outlook 143:418 Jl 21 '26 250w

"Skillful little book. His detail is well selected and accurate. If anything, he is almost too impartial and aloof. It is as if he resisted the fascination of his subject."

+ Sat R 141:233 F 20 '26 450w

"In the mass of detail which he manages to cram into these pages, the author usually succeeds in keeping clear and obvious the major tendencies of Voltaire's life. The author lays no claim to originality either of material or of point of view. His aim, as he says, is to provide 'a guide book to the continent of Voltaire.' His success is admirable. He presents a clear-cut and sympathetic portrait of his complex and often misunderstood character." C. E. Chase

+ Sat R of Lit 2:662 Mr 27 '26 850w

"Mr. Richard Aldington's book is an extremely fair and sober guide to the study of a fascinating character, and includes a valuable bibliography." J. S. B.

+ Spec 136:956 Je 5 '26 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p260 Ap 8 '26 520w

ALDRICH, MRS BESS (STREETER). The Cutters. 276p $2 Appleton

26-14221

The Cutters, Ed and Nell, their four children and Gramma Cutter, are just folks—the kind everybody knows and likes. Their annals are the annals of any nice American family of moderate means, and are related with humor and affection.

Booklist 23:132 D '26

Boston Transcript p6 S 1 '26 550w

"Miss Aldrich fills her pages with the daily round of more or less trivial activities, throwing all pretense of plot to the winds and relying on amusing situations to keep her readers interested. For the 'Home, Sweet Home' sort of novel 'The Cutters' is well conceived and written. It is pitched in a light, pleasant key and in the list of summer fiction comes as a welcome relief from adventure yarns and tales of mooncalf love."

+ Lit R p6 Ag 14 '26 100w

"Anyone who has dwelt with a degree of permanence in the woods knows that they are peopled by yokels exactly like these, but it seems to us time to cease writing third-rate, falsely optimistic novels in praise of them."

— Sat R of Lit 3:91 S 4 '26 130w

Springf'd Republican p7f D 19 '26 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p890 D 2 '26 70w

Wis Lib Bul 22:297 N '26

ALDRICH, MRS BESS (STREETER). Rim of the prairie. 352p $2 Appleton

25-19624

"A wholesome western story set in a small town in Nebraska on 'the rim of the prairie.' The characters include a gay, tantalizing heroine made more attractive by a hint of mystery, a steadfast hero, and two delightful pioneers."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 22:210 F '26

"We believe that here is a novel which is exciting in part and realistic without being too greatly so. It is a wholesome story without being sentimental and cloying."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 26 '25 330w
Cleveland Open Shelf p24 F '26

"Very well written story. Mrs. Aldrich realizes real living figures." A. C. B.
+ Lit R p17 D 5 '25 150w

"A well-balanced and simple story."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p144 F 25 '26 150w

"A wholesome, understanding presentation of small town life with a pioneer background. Excellent small library book. Good for any library."
+ Wis Lib Bul 21:309 D '25

ALEXANDER, CHARLES. Bobbie: a great collie. 114p il $1.50 Dodd
Dogs—Legends and stories

Embroidered only in detail, this is the true story of a heroic dog who, lost in Indiana, crossed in winter the three thousand miles to his home in Oregon.

Booklist 23:78 N '26

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 30 '26 100w

"The book will move the hearts of all dog lovers. It will also interest the reader in its study of the working of the dog's instincts in the matters of direction and choice of people he begged help of. Mr. Alexander has told the story of Bobbie's feat with great sympathy and great clarity, and has paid a tribute to all dogdom in the tribute he pays to the dog who traveled three thousand miles through December blizzards to find the master he had lost."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 16 '26 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p117 N '26

N Y Times p14 Jl 18 '26 350w

Spring'd Republican p7f O 3 '26 100w

ALEXANDER, CHARLES. Splendid summits. 289p $2 Dodd

25-23366

Among the snow-capped summits of the Cascade mountains lies Crystal lake. It has no known outlet, but if one can be found the waters of the lake may be led to the parched plains of Oregon, below. Jasper Galt, altruistic engineer, his young brother and Ella Porteus are searching for the outlet. Jeopard, their powerful, unscrupulous antagonist, who is backed by capitalists, hopes to find it first. Ella discovers the hidden tunnel. She joins the brothers in camp with their assistant and is followed by Jeopard. A terrific storm imprisons the five in the lonely cabin. Jeopard, who alone knows the way out over the trackless hills, offers their safety for Ella's knowledge. The price is refused. Thru Jeopard's treachery Jasper is lost. Esper, the younger brother, thrust suddenly into manhood, is left to protect the girl he loves and to fight the ruthless enemy of his brother's ideals.

"The author has done good work in character analysis, gives some pretty pictures of the mountain winter and has given literature a hero by the name of Esper. The book is the author's second, and does not come up to what should be expected of him, judging from his first novel, 'The Fang in the Forest.'"

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 13 '26 150w

"Although written in a rather jerky, loose-jointed style, is a powerful tale, breathing of the clean out-of-doors and the joy of combat against human obstacles and ruthless, crushing elements."

+ N Y Times p11 N 29 '25 460w

"Read before a crackling fire, at one sitting, this book makes an exciting and shivery adventure story. A fascinating background of forest lore adds zest to the story."

+ N Y World p7m F 28 '26 120w

ALEXANDER, JEROME, comp. and ed. Colloid chemistry, theoretical and applied; by selected international contributors. v 1 974p il $14.50 Chemical catalog co.

541.345 Colloids

(26-13461)

"The sixty chapters were written by as many students of colloidal phenomena, many of them internationally famous in the world of science. Each chapter gives a review and bibliography of the subject covered, usually, of course, with the author's own views greatly predominating."—Ind & Eng Chem

"Frankly, the quantity of material which is crammed into it is amazing, and one cannot be sufficiently grateful to the Editor for undertaking the drudgery attending such a compilation. While it is true that some of the contributions are no more than re-hashed versions of material that was already in existence in re-hashed form, yet there are others in which new data are actually presented and so are valuable from that point of view." Brian Mead

+ Chem & Met Eng 33:691 N '26 300w

"In turning over the pages of this book, one is struck by its almost encyclopedic character and the vast amount of valuable information contained in a single volume. The book is extremely valuable as a collection of reviews of many phases of colloid chemistry written by able contributors to the science. It is hardly suitable as a textbook, but it will be welcomed as a valuable reference work and one whose chapters, which may be read separately, as time affords, will furnish many hours of interesting and instructive reading." J. A. Wilson

+ Ind & Eng Chem 18:988 S '26 220w

"The book contains an enormous amount of very interesting material and a painfully large number of almost worthless articles. It will be of value to the advanced student. It is of interest to everybody as a literary document, as showing, for instance, that there still are people who consider colloidal solutions as one-phase systems. The editor has appended a number of foot-notes of his own. These are not helpful and should be omitted in the volumes to come." W. D. Bancroft

+ J Phys Chem 30:1287 S '26 3200w

"The ingenuity with which this mosaic of essays covers the field of theory and method is remarkable, but it is curious to find that the fundamental process of dialysis receives only a casual mention in two places. Recent developments in the use of electrodialysis are also neglected. No pains have been spared to provide adequate bibliographies, diagrams, and indexes, and with some patience in use this volume will form a valuable addition to the shelves of the colloid chemist." P. C. L. Thorne

+ Nature 118:585 O 23 '26 260w

N Y New Tech Bks 11:35 Jl '26

ALEXANDER, R. W. Black pearls. 293p $2 Appleton [3s 6d Unwin]

26-14218

A wild tale of the Solomon islands. In spite of corrupt surroundings the heroine remains exceptionally pure and good. She is discovered in an evil resort by the good man of the piece, who, tho skeptical of her innocence, rescues her from the bad man and recovers the black pearls left by her father. There is the usual battle with the natives, the usual kidnaping and rescue, and the usual romance.

"The story is well put together, for a blood and thunder romance, which is all it pretends to be. It will furnish satisfactory reading for one who wants only a thrill out of what he reads, and cares nothing about characterization and plot development."

Boston Transcript p4 S 8 '26 450w

"An astounding tale which we have seldom seen surpassed on the motion-picture screen and never duplicated between the covers of a book."

N Y Times p9 Ag 15 '26 600w

ALEXANDER, R. W.—Continued

Sat R of Lit 3:91 S 4 '26 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p238 Mr 25 '26
170w

ALEXANIAN, MANOOG DER. When I was a boy in Armenia. (Children of other lands bks.) 170p il $1.25 Lothrop

915.66 Armenia—Social life and customs.
Children in Armenia 26-8333

This simple story of the author's boyhood in his Armenian home is illustrated from photographs of typical country scenes.

Booklist 22:425 J1 '26

"The author makes of this book not the least interesting of the many already well known in the Children of Other Lands series, a group of books most useful in broadening the knowledge of boys and girls, and others as well."

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 8 '26 320w
Wis Lib Bul 22:231 J1 '26

ALLAIN, MARCEL. Juve in the dock; tr. and ed. by A. R. Allinson. (Fantômas detective novels) 337p $2 McKay [7s 6d S. Paul]

26-6644

Second in a series of detective thrillers translated from the French featuring Fantômas, father of all criminals, who in all his rash exploits keeps just one jump ahead of the astute detective, Juve, and his journalistic friend.

Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '26 200w

Lit R p8 My 29 '26 80w

"This book is not, of course, intended to be taken seriously. Nor does it, like so many of the detective novels of the day, take itself seriously. It is nothing more nor less than a real old-fashioned thriller concerning itself not with character analysis or love interest, but with a series of blood-and-thunder incidents that are intended to shatter the nerves of the reader."

N Y Times p19 Je 27 '26 400w

"With plenty of action, such as it is, but little plot to hang on to, it is a more never-ending series of incidents than a well-constructed entity."

Springf'd Republican p6a Ap 11 '26

200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p30 Ja 14 '26
120w

ALLAIN, MARCEL. Lord of Terror; [tr. and ed. by A. R. Allinson]. (Fantômas detective novels) 352p $2 McKay [7s 6d S. Paul]

25-19903

Another story of villainous Fantômas and the chase he leads his indefatigable pursuers, Inspector Juve and the journalist Fandor. A jewel robbery, supernatural appearances and disappearances, countless hairbreadth escapes, these are only a few of the thrills with which the book is replete.

Boston Transcript p6 Je 12 '26 240w

"Too wildly improbable to appeal to any one not endowed with that degree of credulity which can swallow even the before-election promises of political candidates." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p362 My '26 40w

Times [London] Lit Sup p417 Je 18
'25 130w

ALLEN, ALICE MAUDE. One Tree. 418p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

26-6261

One Tree tabernacle stood on a hilltop in Lancashire commanding Blackdip valley, its position the outward symbol of its influence over the community. During the old minister's absence a missionary came to hold services there. A dark man, he swayed the valley people by his rhetoric. Lizzie Ingham, wife of a deacon, fell under his spell. The missionary's power over Lizzie was not the spiritual one he pretended. Half conscious of her danger, with her husband's help, the woman fought off the evil influence.

"Miss Allen knows and loves her North Country folk—hard, just and powerful; she can make them live as individuals in a community so tied into one another that to cut one thread unravels the whole tapestry. Although written partly in the dialect and color of an English mill town, 'One Tree' carries a universal note which readers from a remote environment will recognize and understand." M. D. Blankenhorn

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ag 15
'26 750w

Boston Transcript p6 My 5 '26 460w

"This is a well-wrought story of detached community life invaded by new and disturbing influences; the theme is carefully developed and the characters are without exception real people."

+ Nation 122:731 Je 30 '26 50w

New Repub 47:209 J1 7 '26 120w

"It is a long story, and it has no plot, but its people live and hold our attention to the end, an end which, after all, is, we feel, but another beginning."

+ New Statesman 26:656 Mr 6 '26 200w

"'One Tree' will not enter the lists as a 'best seller,' but this really fine book, whose art is so skillfully concealed, and whose sincerity is inherently a part of the pattern, deserves a much larger audience than it is likely to have."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 25 '26 650w

"Miss Allen has allowed modernism to colour her pages with the result that the story seems like an old tune played with new harmonies. One finds oneself continually measuring the effect the book makes by the effect which, if it had fulfilled the intentions of the author, it would have made, and there is always a discrepancy. The roots of the story are so impressive that, working our way round them, we are disappointed to see them crowned by a tree of ordinary stature." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 141:234 F 20 '26 500w

Springf'd Republican p7f Je 6 '26 400w

"A considered and careful book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p78 F 4 '26
680w

ALLEN, GLOVER MORRILL. Birds and their attributes. 338p il $3.50 Marshall Jones

598.2 Birds

25-21099

"The author, who is Lecturer on Zoölogy at Harvard, holds high rank as a special student of birds. Two years ago he was selected to prepare a series of lectures on ornithology given under the auspices of the New England Bird Banding Association, and these have supplied the basis of the present work. The first chapter of Dr. Allen's book, which deals with 'Some Human Relations with Birds,' contains matter of universal interest which has never before been treated so succinctly or so well. The bird in literature, legend, and decoration, the history of domestication, the beginnings of observation and experiment, the earliest collections of ornithological specimens, are reviewed from the dawn of written records to the time of Audubon."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:195 F '26

"A thoroughly readable book presenting an amazing amount of accurate information concerning almost every phase of avian anatomy and activity."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 29
'25 130w

"A valuable and readable book covering a large field."

+ Ind 115:685 D 12 '25 70w

"Whether you regard feathered creatures as your remote cousins or merely as creatures of beauty, charm and grace, Mr. Allen's non-technical book will have its interest. It is a book that should prove helpful to the amateur ornithologist and stimulate greater interest in bird study, certainly one of the most fascinating branches of natural history." H. B.

+ Lit R p9 Ja 2 '26 130w

"The strength of Dr. Allen's book lies in its intimate presentation of the bird as a living organism reacting to a medium which may be thought of as including its own heredity and physiological make-up as well as its external environment. With a wealth of examples drawn from his own sentient observation out-of-doors, and enriched by equally apt evidence available only to one having his extraordinary familiarity with the ornithological literature of many lands and languages, he has drawn a more comprehensive picture of the bird's place in nature than is to be found anywhere else within so small a compass." R. C. Murphy

+ Sat R of Lit 2:557 F 13 '26 420w

Springf'd Republican p8 Je 7 '26 750w

Times [London] Lit Sup p335 My 20 '26 700w

Wis Lib Bul 21:306 D '25

ALLEN, HERVEY. Israfil; the life and times of Edgar Allan Poe. 2v 960p $10 Doran

B or 92 Poe, Edgar Allan 26-24523

"Mr. Allen had at his command much new matter in the shape of documents and letters, material that had been locked away from previous writers. . . . He has apparently approached his subject in the most impartial frame of mind, letting the contemporary documents and memoirs speak for themselves, analyzing them with no preconceived theory of the 'Poe mystery' to be bulwarked, and so fashioning a work that is practically authoritative at every turn. It is possible that new material will continue to turn up and so readjust and shift various episodes in Poe's short life, but on the whole it seems impossible to displace Mr. Allen's book so far as the running tale of the poet's days are concerned."—N Y Times

"Hervey Allen has handled all this unpleasant story with sympathy and insight, and he has thus made a great contribution to our knowledge of Poe." T: O. Mabbott

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 D 5 '26 950w

"Mr. Allen is always a gentle critic, sometimes the candid friend, inevitably the sympathetic biographer. It is undeniable that he has here made a valuable contribution to the literature of Poe." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 18 '26 1400w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

Nation 124:17 Ja 5 '27 350w

"'Israfil' is a profound and impressive addition to national biography. Mr. Allen's work makes all other stories of Poe's life seem like archaic and tentative ventures. He has displayed a wise sensitivity and restraint in the marshaling of a vast bulk of matter, and has pictured forth the whole in a supple and varicolored prose that is never fine writing in the vulgar sense of the word." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p1 D 6 '26 2800w

"Mr. Allen's two volumes are absolutely fascinating. One reads them with the conviction that at last one is reading about the real Poe. Every possible consideration is given attention. One is not conscious of any gaps. Neither does one feel that any of the interpretations are strained." C. H. Grattan

+ N Y World p1m D 5 '26 620w

ALLEN, HERVEY. Toward the flame. 250p $2 Doran

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 26-6846

"Toward the flame" is the simple, moving narrative of an infantry lieutenant with the

A. E. F. in France during the great war. Set down from memory as a picture of war, with no comment and very little by way of explanation every word of this account of trial by battle rings true. It is no story of trench life but a stirring narrative of an army on the march and under battle fire during some of the fiercest days of the war, including the drive from the Marne to the Vesle in July and August, 1918, and the fighting about Château Thierry and Fismes.

"'Toward the Flame' ranks with Masefield's 'Gallipoli'. It is a stupendous piece of emotional reporting. His simple narrative is filled with drama and humor. His comrades live in his pages. He shows restraint, courage, intense observational powers in this narrative. It is unforgettable and beautiful. It has the marks of a classic, and will be read as long as the World War is remembered." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:222 Ap '26 300w

"If any one still has the idea that war is romantic this book is recommended to him. Although the writing is often careless to a degree, it still has a sort of breezy style about it reminiscent of the soldiers themselves. It will make those who were in the army and those who were not wonder again how men could do and dare the incredible things that were accomplished, without food, without water, bent by fatigue and numbed with exposure." Larry Barretto

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ap 26 '26 1150w

"He tells us nothing that is new or startling about the war, but he gives us with genuine fidelity a narrative of life and death in 1918. Mr. Allen belongs to the small group of honest realists. He does not keep shouting at us, 'War is horrible, War is funny, War is Hell, War is the outcome of capitalism.' He tells us simply his own experience, and we do the rest. The result is the best 'war stuff' yet written by an American author."

+ Ind 116:426 Ap 10 '26 250w

"In a way his narrative is hardly different from so many books about the war. He gives you the facts in a pleasant and lucid style, with occasional moments of moving eloquence. He has vividness and probity, and he can make scenes appear as in a mirror. It may be argued whether his record adds another document to masterpieces called forth by the war." Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p590 Ag '26 350w

"Splendid writing, colored with emotion and free from conscious propaganda." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p6 My 1 '26 580w

Reviewed by L. S. Morris

New Repub 47:147 Je 23 '26 350w

Reviewed by H: L. Stuart

N Y Times p6 Ap 11 '26 1400w

Outlook 143:149 My 26 '26 30w

St Louis 24:255 S '26

"'Toward the Flame' is written in admirable and simple prose throughout. . . . The whole constitutes an important record of a type of American which is scarcer than it should be." T: Boyd

+ Sat R of Lit 2:700 Ap 10 '26 450w

Springf'd Republican p28 Ap 16 '26 430w

ALLEN, IDA COGSWELL (BAILEY) (MRS WILLIAM BREWSTER CHAPMAN). Your foods and you; or, The rôle of diet. 209p il $1.50 Doubleday

613.2 Diet. Diet in disease. Cookery for the sick 26-8710

A dietitian of wide experience recommends the diet appropriate to the treatment of various diseases and what to eat in all sorts of circumstances and states of mind.

Booklist 22:403 J1 '26

ALLEN, IDA COGSWELL—Continued

"The material is given a kind of closet-drama presentation and, to me, the theme seems dark and obscure at times. . . . Excepting a considerable portion of the book dealing with the rôle of diet in sickness, Mrs. Bailey offers very good advice on selection and preparation of foods. And, since the book is humorously illustrated, it will, no doubt, find appreciative readers." Lettie Gay

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Je 6 '26 500w

"Mrs. Allen's book, although attractively written, does not seem to have the background of scientific learning such as is to be found in the writing which emanates from all of our many good schools of home economics in this country." Graham Lusk

+ — J Home Econ 18:325 Je '26 550w

"The method of treatment and the arrangement of the contents are spiced with a touch of whimsicality now and then, giving to the work as a whole a different aspect and feeling from the usual straightaway presentation."

+ N Y Times p3 Mr 14 '26 350w

ALLEN, LUCY GRACE. Book of hors d'oeuvres. 119p il $1.50 Little

641.5 Cookery 26-23107

In seven well illustrated chapters the author tells how to prepare and serve various kinds of savory appetizers.

Booklist 22:195 F '26

"The book is well illustrated with pictures of the hors d'oeuvres described. With these photographs and the clearly written recipes, this book should insure the success of at least one part of your next dinner party." Lettie Gay

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ag 15 '26 260w

"A fanciful, rather than a practical book, as hors d'oeuvres do not feature largely in the general American diet. The recipes call for expensive and imported food novelties and much time is required for preparation."

Cleveland Open Shelf p118 N '26

ALLEN, PAUL WILLIAM. Industrial fermentations. 424p il $5 Chemical catalog co.

663.1 Fermentation. Micro-organisms 26-2154

"Discusses the rôle of the microorganism in the following industries: Industrial alcohol, leather and tanning, retting of hemp and flax, legume culture, disinfectants, wood preservation, textiles, tobacco, silage, organic acid production, acetone, glycerin, sewage disposal, soybean sauce, bread-making, corn products, food preservation, canning, cane and beet sugar, meat products, marine products, vinegar, yeast, tomato products, fruit juices and beverages, coffee and cocoa, drinking water, egg industry, maple sugar and maple syrup, dairy products, and the cultivation of the soil. Reviews history and uses of each product, and describes processes of manufacture and microbiology involved." —N Y New Tech Bks

"The need for a book of this type has long been recognized and Dr. Allen has succeeded admirably in filling portions of this need. From a great mass of literature he has selected the most important data and methods and he has presented them in a very clear and readable manner. In spite of the cursory treatment in places, the book will be of great value to any reader." E. R. Pickett

+ Chem & Met Eng 33:238 Ap '26 230w

"The book has the strength of quoting the author's exact words and the weakness involved in the impossibility of piecing together extracts from a series of authors in such a way as to give the reader a well-balanced grasp of the subject. Fairly extensive bibliographies are appended to each chapter, although much recent literature has been omitted and not infrequently the citation of a particular author largely quoted in the text is lacking." C. Thom

+ — Ind & Eng Chem 18:326 Mr '26 230w
N Y New Tech Bks 10:47 O '25

ALLINSON, FRANCIS GREENLEAF. Lucian, satirist and artist. (Our debt to Greece and Rome) 204p il $1.50 Longmans

888.7 Lucianus Samosatensis 26-12385

"A brief life of this 'self-made Greek' is followed by a criticism of his works and a chapter on his literary creditors and debtors. There are notes and a brief bibliography."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Boston Transcript p2 My 22 '26 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p104 S '26

"To compress within so small a volume a satisfying account of the career and achievements of a genius so versatile and so prolific is no small achievement in itself." H. L. Crosby

+ Lit R p5 My 29 '26 520w

ALLIOTT, EUSTACE ALEXANDER. Centrifugal dryers and separators. (Chemical engineering lib., 2nd ser.) 151p il $2 Van Nostrand [6s Benn]

Drying apparatus. Separators (machines) [26-8891]

"This small but complete book gives for the first time in English a complete treatment of equipment utilizing centrifugal force for the separation of liquids from solids or immiscible liquids of different densities, and at the same time presents the theory and basic data pertaining to this type of equipment. The remarkably diverse field of usefulness of such machinery is emphasized. One finds mention of centrifugal application to laundries and textile mills, dairies, sugar mills, heavy chemical plants, sewage disposal and other industries and processes."—Chem & Met Eng

"The book is very well balanced. Theory, constructional details, empirical data, and explicit operating information are all well covered." W. L. McCabe

+ Chem & Met Eng 33:429 Jl '26 120w

"Mr. Alliot is the first to collect the scanty information scattered through transactions and periodicals and make it available and useful to the designer and operator of centrifugal apparatus. It is, therefore, doubly welcome and in the tiny compass of 150 small pages a great deal of ground is covered. This is doubtless the reason for many omissions and for the scanty treatment of important subjects." A. E. Flowers

+ Ind & Eng Chem 18:655 Je '26 430w

N Y New Tech Bks 11:35 Jl '26

ALLISON, JOHN MAUDGRIDGE SNOWDEN. Thiers and the French monarchy, 1797-1848. 379p il $5 Houghton [18s Constable]

B or 92 Thiers, Adolph

"An account of the first half of the great statesman-historian's career. Born under the Directory, an active critic of the restored Bourbons, a Minister of Louis Philippe, Thiers lived on to be President of the Third Republic, so that his biography is in effect a history of modern France. Professor Allison's discussion of Thiers' foreign policy, which in his view was distinctively French rather than anti-English, as our forefathers thought in 1836 and later, is especially interesting."—Spec

"We have seldom come across a scholarly book that displayed a loftier indifference to mere details. The pages bristle with French quotations, and these quotations are almost invariably wrong. The book has the one great merit which faultless productions may lack:

it is alive. Professor Allison believes in his subject." Albert Guerard

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ja 2 '27 1400w

Boston Transcript p4 N 27 '26 460w

"It is a badly written book and almost wholly barren of interest for the general reader." H. S.

— Lit R p5 D 18 '26 150w

"With all respect to Professor Allison, Thiers was emphatically not one of the greatest men France has produced, and the pretence that he was makes the book ill-proportioned and unilluminating. It is, however, graced by some particularly good illustrations of M. Thiers, his mother and mother-in-law, and some excellent caricatures by Daumier." Francis Birrell

— + Nation and Ath 40:115 O 23 '26 950w

"It is, perhaps, a good thing that Mr. Allison, though he shows himself a reasonably competent historical craftsman, gives no strong indications of a sense of humour. If he did, his picture of the first half of Thier's career might gain in point but would hardly carry out what he specifies as his intention, namely, to explain to the friends of France the nature of 'one of the greatest men that France has produced.'"

New Statesman 28:113 N 6 '26 960w

"A scholarly and readable account of the first half of the great statesman-historian's career. We recommend the book most cordially and express a hope that the second part will soon appear."

+ Spec 137:648 O 16 '26 80w

"Mr. Allison's work is in many respects so excellent that it is a pity that it should be marred by unpleasant tricks and faults of style. . . These are blemishes of form rather than matter; they will not prevent the student of a difficult and complicated period of French history from finding the book of considerable value."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p707 O 21 '26 860w

ALMACK, JOHN CONRAD, and BURSCH, JAMES F. Administration of consolidated and village schools. (Riverside textbooks in education) 466p $2.40 Houghton

379.175 Schools—Centralization. Rural schools 26-1073

Drawing material from a combined experience of twenty years in the smaller schools the authors have prepared a practical manual covering the problems of administration and organization in consolidated and village schools. In its general plan the book takes up Organization duties, General administrative duties, Special administrative duties, and Community duties.

"The tone of the book is constructive. It reflects sound common sense coupled with quantitative thinking. . . Administrative officers in the smaller school units will find the book readable, stimulating, and practical. Students of education and those preparing for the principalship will do well to give it careful study. It is well supplied with cross-references, bibliographies, and exercises for further study. It has a definite place in our educational literature and should be given the welcome due its timely appearance." F. D. McClusky

+ Ei School J 26:793 Je '26 380w

"The book is a definite contribution in its field, and it should find a place in colleges and normal schools offering courses in administration for those who plan to work in consolidated and village schools. The organization of the book is good, and it is written in a style that permits easy reading." D. M. Wiggins

+ School R 34:474 Je '26 520w

ALPHA OF THE PLOUGH, pseud. See Gardiner, A. G.

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION. A.L.A. catalog, 1926; an annotated basic list of 10,000 books; ed. by Isabella M. Cooper. 1295p $6 A.L.A.

016 Bibliography—Best books. Catalogs, classified (Dewey decimal). Books and reading 26-27484

The present edition of the American Library Association catalog is an annotated basic list of 10,000 books, a selection covering the entire range of literature in English. In addition to the usual bibliographical information, subject headings and Decimal classification number are given for each book and a descriptive note. A children's section is included. Books are arranged in the order of the Decimal classification, with an author, title and subject index.

"For the reference worker the full author, title and subject index is an excellent tool. It is invaluable for all libraries, schools, book stores, and to anyone wanting an authoritative survey."

+ Booklist 23:60 N '26

Reviewed by E. L. Bascom

Lib J p1081 D 1 '26 2700w

"Is well indexed with references to author, title, and subject. Well printed and bound. Will be the standard of selection for many years to come."

Wis Lib Bul 22:329 D '26

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION. Survey of libraries in the United States. 4v v 1-2 316;370p ea $2 A.L.A.

025 Libraries—United States. Library administration 26-27508

The object of this survey by the American library association is "to give an honest, fair, unbiased statement of facts based on actual conditions in library work in America, concerning every phase of library maintenance, administration, and service." The first volume is devoted to the administrative work of public libraries and of college and university libraries; the second deals with service to readers in public libraries and in college and university libraries.

Booklist 23:61 N '26

Wis Lib Bul 22:327 D '26

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION. COMMISSION ON THE LIBRARY AND ADULT EDUCATION. Libraries and adult education; report of a study. 284p $2.50 Macmillan; same pa priv ptd A.L.A.

021.2 Libraries—United States. Education of adults. Books and reading 26-27506

In July, 1924, the American library association appointed a commission to study the adult education movement and the work of libraries for adults and for older boys and girls out of school. This volume, which contains the results of the studies of the commission, is divided into two parts. Part one reports the general findings and recommendations of the commission. Part two treats in some detail such topics as library service for industrial workers, library cooperation with agencies like the Y.M.C.A. and Cooper Union, service to clubs and study groups, work in the fine arts and with museums and the service of special libraries.

Booklist 23:60 N '26

Spring'fd Republican p7f N 14 '26 160w

Wis Lib Bul 22:327 D '26

AMERICAN mercury (periodical). Readings from the American mercury; ed. by Grant Cochran Knight. 328p $2.50 Knopf

814

26-26407

"Twenty-three articles, on timely or perennially interesting topics and illustrating various styles of writing selected from the American

AMERICAN mercury (periodical)—Continued
Mercury. They include editorials, literary criticism, reminiscence, social and philological discussion, etc."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 22:364 Je '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p72 Je '26

"This book of selections contains specimens of many diverse styles and varieties of mind, from a discussion on education, by Richard Burton, to a really clever and amusing parody of a conversation with George Moore by Samuel C. Chew. Altogether an entertaining book, full of vitality and enthusiasm."

+ — New Statesman 27:682 S 25 '26 460w

N Y Times p23 Mr '26 320w

AMERICAN WATER WORKS ASSOCIATION.

Water works practice; a manual; [ed. by Abel Wolman]. 790p $5 The association, 170 Broadway, N.Y.; Williams & Wilkins

628.1 Water supply 25-18969

"Presents valuable information on modern waterworks practice. Deals with collection, quality, treatment, and distribution of water, financing and management, fire protection, and standard forms, procedures, specifications, and contracts. Includes also historical and statistical matter."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 10:47 O '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:241 My '26

AMES, JOSEPH BUSHNELL. Lone hand. 368p $2 Century

26-2451

Brand Larrigan's fastidious taste in dress amused his cowboy friends, but it did not lessen their respect for him. His way with a gun and a horse was no matter for laughter. Yet Brand's clothes got him into trouble. A gang headed by someone wearing the famous outfit had held up the stage, made a killing, and escaped with a goodly loot. The leader's black horse and clothes being recognized, a warrant was issued for Brand's arrest. The cowboy had plenty of friends, but it pleased his whim to play a lone hand against the gang and by his own sleuthing to find out and capture the leader. No easy game to play. But armed with luck and a gun and encouraged by a plucky girl he sweeps thru the story on his thoroughbred black to triumph and a meet reward.

Booklist 22:375 Je '26

Boston Transcript p2 Je 26 '26 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 N '26

"It's an interesting yarn." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p8 F 13 '26 130w

"Mr. Ames has contrived to write a consistently entertaining and readable novel, even if the plot is fashioned after the usual formula of its kind."

+ N Y Times p22 F 14 '26 450w

Sat R of Lit 2:548 F 6 '26 160w

Wis Lib Bul 22:110 Mr '26

AMINOFF, CONSTANCE LEONIE CAROLINE (BORGSTRÖM) friherrinna. Triumph. 394p $2 Dutton

26-3118

The sixth in the series of Napoleonic romances covers the period of Napoleon's consulate and leaves him on the eve of his coronation as emperor.

"Aside from industry and zest, there is not much that one can praise in the book. It is more history-and-water than a novel, for it has no form and no story outside of recorded events." Mary Willcox

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 20 '26 450w

"Mme. Aminoff writes a clear and flowing English which drips off her pen like water from a melting icicle. Probably the most delightful bit is the prologue, in which her sense of humor becomes her."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Mr 20 '26 300w

"Unless one knows much of what has gone before, 'Triumph' is partly hodge-podge. From the standpoint of the series as a whole it is of course important to have a great revolutionary figure like Tallien properly disposed of, but what is good for the series is bad for 'Triumph.' For the rest, 'Triumph' is written with keen gusto for epigram and dramatics."

+ — Ind 116:285 Mr 6 '25 300w

Int Bk R p388 My '26 500w

"The atmosphere of historic accuracy in both trivial and major details is strongly sustained, though too liberal a share of the whole is given to irrelevances which have but remote bearing upon characters and events of prime importance. The too exacting reader may object to the author's occasional reproduction of Napoleon's unspoken thoughts in moments of solitude and a leaning toward pert, gossiping digressions. But there is a plenitude of worthy recompenses for these trifles in the judicial temperateness and all-embracing scope of her Napoleonic conception. The blackest pages in this period of his amazing life are here written once more, but with a fairness and poignancy unsurpassed by any of the myriad earlier versions of that tragedy." E. C. Beckwith

+ — Lit R p7 Mr 27 '26 450w

"Like its predecessors, the present volume suffers from its author's besetting sins of wordiness, trite moralizing and lack of that dramatic sense which gives full appreciation of the value of light and shade. But 'Triumph' is a little less wordy, a little less overweighted with the author's personal comments and reflections, than were several of the earlier books."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 14 '26 900w

Outlook 143:256 Je 16 '26 50w

"Mme Aminoff has the enviable faculty of writing with her light sketchy touch a lively narrative which does not deviate in the least detail from the established facts of history of the period."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Mr 15 '26 650w

ANDERSON, MRS ISABEL WELD (PERKINS).

Under the Black horse flag; annals of the Weld family and some of its branches. 291p il $4 Houghton

929.2 Weld family. Perkins, George Hamilton. Merchant marine—United States 26-7553

"Mrs. Anderson's ancestors were lovers of the sea, and among them was a famous Boston merchant, her grandfather, William Fletcher Weld, whose fleet of barks and brigs and clipper, half a hundred of them, and a fleet of steamships which came later, flew the Black Horse flag. That flag still floats from the masthead of several yachts which belong to his descendants. And so it provides a fitting title and emblem for a book that tells the story of the entire family. Mrs. Anderson goes back to the migration to New England in 1632 of the founders of the American Welds and narrates interesting bits of their lives."—N Y Times

Am Hist R 31:841 Jl '26 100w

Reviewed by H: Boston

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ap 18 '26 70w

"The story is dramatic and entertaining because of the wealth of anecdote it contains." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 1 '26 620w

Reviewed by F: H. Martens

Lit R p7 Ap 17 '26 120w

"Mrs. Anderson writes always with quick appreciation of the dramatic, the humanly interesting, the picturesque."

+ N Y Times p5 Ap 11 '26 450w

"Though her book can hardly be said to be a distinct contribution to our naval history, yet it does throw many interesting side-lights on some of the activities of the Navy during the Rebellion. Her historical allusions are not entirely accurate. But in the main, her work has been well done, and shows a considerable amount of painstaking research."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:791 My 15 '26 300w

"It is a delightfully written informal account, drawn from the family records and portrayed with the skill and charm which Mrs Anderson's writings display."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 My 31 '26 380w

ANDERSON, MAXWELL, and STALLINGS, LAURENCE. Three American plays. 263p $2.50 Harcourt

812

26-17652

The first of these three plays is "What price glory?" the famous war play which had a long run in New York and has recently been made into a moving picture. The second is "First flight," a play based on an incident in the life of Andrew Jackson, while the third, "The buccaneer," has for its hero Morgan, the seventeenth century pirate.

Booklist 23:122 D '26

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 D 26 '26 900w

"They all disclose the vigor and the excitement of life. While not plays of unusual dramatic power, or indeed of unusual theatric power (and we except, of course, 'What Price Glory?') they make for extremely entertaining reading."

+ Lit R p7 O 30 '26 100w

"'What Price Glory?' according to the rules, is a bad play. There is little dramatic progression; the situation remains about the same throughout. A bad play; but who cares, when it was absorbing to witness, and is scarcely less interesting to read? No new or profound depths in human nature are revealed; but it is fresh, living, and real throughout; it illustrates a point of view—and it has style! 'First Flight' is better constructed, and was less successful." Hulbert Footner

+ Sat R of Lit 3:417 D 11 '26 920w

"We have already received much from Mr Anderson and Mr Stallings and may well hope for greater gifts. Whether they are predestined to be the Beaumont and Fletcher of American drama, it is profitless to inquire. It is perhaps as good a kind of fame to have shaken some thousands of romantic Americans out of their criminal complaisance over the imbecility of war." W. T.

Spring'd Republican p6 N 1 '26 450w

"Entertainingly enough, all three of these plays of fighting men in an entirely masculine world obtain their effects entirely through their talk. The action often flounders, where the dialogue goes straight to the point, creating, especially in What Price Glory, the whole quality and body of the play. In the two historic plays this weakness in movement gives a sense of thinness—of frustration. The plays disintegrate at the very point where vigorous handling is needed. The war play, on the other hand, does not suffer from this sagging of interest after the first presentation of character and milieu." Rosamond Gilder

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 10:868 D '26 580w

Wis Lib Bul 22:295 N '26

ANDERSON, ROMOLA, and ANDERSON, R. C. ² Sailing ship; six thousand years of history. 211p il $5 McBride [10s 6d Harrah]

623.8 Ships

"The most concise book on the history of sail that has been published; and within its 200-odd pages it has more than 150 illustrations. These, reproduced from prints and drawings of the various periods, show details of ship construction as well as fully rigged vessels. They demonstrate almost at a glance the development of sail from the days when sails were merely an accessory to the oars to the time when,

in so far as large vessels were concerned, they became an accessory to steam. The book deals entirely with the ships of Europe (including the Mediterranean basin), and with the United States in the latter part of the nineteenth century."—Lit R

"As a reference book or as a story of conquest the volume is first-class and heartily recommended to the reader." J. R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 4 '26 490w

"'The Sailing Ship' is not as large nor as detailed a work as Chatterton's 'Sailing Ships and Their Story'; but for a short treatment of the subject it is excellent; and to one interested in ships, highly readable." W: H. Wells

+ Lit R p6 N 27 '26 320w

"To compress into little over 200 pages a really effective survey of sailing ship history from its dawn to the modern German multi-masters is a considerable achievement. So admirably is it done, that at the conclusion of the book the reader feels he has tackled and absorbed a weighty work."

+ Sat R 142:779 D 18 '26 320w

"There has not hitherto been easily available in English a concise summary of the latest knowledge [of sailing ships] written with an understanding of evidence and a minimum of speculation. This lack is now supplied, and it could hardly have been done better. The authors of 'The Sailing Ship' use the simplest English and avoid technical terms with a restraint rare in nautical writers."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p834 N 25 '26 800w

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD. Modern writer. 1td ed 44p $2 Lantern press

814 Authorship. American literature 26-15256

This essay which was evidently first given as a lecture, discusses the hopeful and the discouraging tendencies in modern American writing. Mr Anderson decries standardization—the factory method of writing to formula which fills the bulk of our periodicals, but applauds the encouraging reception increasingly given to individual creative effort.

"For the aspiring young writer who is honestly seeking to learn his craft, we can think of no better bible than 'The Modern Writer.'"

+ Bookm 63:361 My '26 180w

Reviewed by N. B. Fagin

Int Bk R p593 Ag '26 550w

N Y Times p14 Ja 10 '26 160w

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD. Sherwood Anderson's notebook; containing articles written during the author's life as a story teller, and notes of his impressions from life scattered through the book. 230p $2.50 Boni & Liveright

814

26-13876

Mr Anderson thus describes his own book: "A book of notes that sometimes expands into tales . . . of impressions gathered from looking at many American cities, streets and houses . . . impressions of life—as an author—but most of all as an American man going about and looking at the show."

Booklist 23:68 N '26

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Bookm 63:599 Jl '26 300w

"In spite of some unnecessary matter and some doubtful intellection this is in sum a good book. It is an important book. It is a kind of testament, a bequest to American writers of Anderson's literary ethics, a witness to the fact that even now, in the dark night of our imperialism, through the smoke of our industrial civilization, a banner still waves o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave." Babette Deutsch

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Je 20 '26 800w

Boston Transcript p5 My 29 '26 1250w

Dial 82:74 Ja '27 170w

Ind 116:751 Je 26 '26 200w

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD—Continued

Reviewed by J. L. Ford
Int Bk R p654 S '26 630w

"A delightful book from first page to last, as different from any book of essays we have ever read as night is from day. And invariably refreshing." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 My 22 '26 550w
Nation 123:155 Ag 18 '26 50w

Reviewed by H. I. Brock
N Y Times p2 My 9 '26 1200w

"These articles bear many diverse titles, but a single thread runs through them all and provides the essential unity. They have filtered through one man's mind and bear the imprint of his deliberate thinking. They are spoken forth in those simple and well-placed words that are part of the strength of Sherwood Anderson. All of this is set down so simply that any high school lad can read the book and call the rest of the day spoiled for any further non-essential industry." Harry Hansen

N Y World p6m My 9 '26 1100w
Outlook 143:420 Jl 21 '26 180w

Reviewed by Arthur Colton
Sat R of Lit 2:933 Jl 17 '26 580w
Springf'd Republican p12 Je 16 '26 450w

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD. Tar; a midwest childhood. 346p $3 Boni & Liveright

26-22222

Mr Anderson was so sure that his story-telling gift would run away with him from the literal truth that he decided to write this account of his early years around the figure of Tar Moorehead. Tar is one of the many children born to Dick and Mary Moorehead. Dick is a garrulous, idle, affable fellow, and his wife a darkly beautiful woman, silent but not taciturn. Tar has something of both parents. The story begins when Tar is about four and continues up to early adolescence, describing the incidents in the small town life about him that brought his consciousness to a new focus and marked a new stage in his development.

"The small boy Tar is painted in pale sepia tints to square with the common ideal of the mediocrity of the young; and the representation is still further weakened by indulgences of Mr. Anderson's curious tendency to drag the tempo of life, by breaking up movements that in normal humanity are easy and sweeping into delayed, puttering motions, by inserting inarticulateness like a plum in the mouths of his characters. This is an irritating trick of his, because it does not belong to his artistic vision of life. It is an intrusion on his work, of his attempt to settle a moral problem of his own. Certainly Mr. Sherwood Anderson is an unequal writer and 'Tar' is disfigured with flatness and sham naivete, but that does not, of course, affect my conviction that he has genius." Rebecca West

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 N 21 '26 2800w

"Unforgettable, and so tenderly told! A childhood well remembered—and yet, one feels, the book is not remembrance, but imagination." K: Schriftgiesser

Boston Transcript p4 D 11 '26 1200w

"There is a naïveté in 'Tar,' the naïveté of a man who is overpowered by the dream of childhood, but this naïveté is richly triumphant, for it communicates itself to the harassed mind of the reader. There have been a thousand boys like this in the novels of the past decade and a half, and yet, in essence, they have not been like this. They have not been seen through this limpid and simple flow of language or through this charmed and wistful mist of a past woven of tears and desires." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p2 N 21 '26 1600w

"He is still the only writer who regards the soil lovingly, who gets the tang of it into his writing. Where Ruth Suckow stands aloof from these plain people and regards them with the practiced eye of the research worker, Anderson understands them and sympathizes with their limitations. He is, of course, tremendously interested in the sex life of his characters and always will be. But in this instance he has come closer to actuality, to the manner in which sex engages the attention of a boy. 'Tar' is a sort of supplement to 'A Story Teller's Story.'"

+ N Y World p11m D 5 '26 320w
Sat R of Lit 3:451 D 18 '26 130w
Springf'd Republican p6 D 20 '26 350w

ANDREWS, CLARENCE EDWARD, and PERCIVAL, MILTON OSWIN, eds. Poetry of the nineties; with an introd. essay. 297p $2 Harcourt

821.03 English poetry—Collections 26-11655

An anthology of the romantic decade which includes the work of Kipling, Henley, Hardy, Symonds, Ernest Dowson, Yeats, Francis Thompson, A. E., and others.

Ind 117:365 S 25 '26 100w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p4m S 12 '26 140w

ANDREWS, ROY CHAPMAN. On the trail of ancient man; with an introd. and a chapter by Henry Fairfield Osborn. 375p il $6 Putnam

508.5 Central Asiatic expeditions of the American museum of natural history. Mongolia—Description and travel. Natural history—Mongolia. Paleontology—Mongolia 26-16076

"The Central Asiatic Expedition of the American Museum of Natural History in Co-operation with Asia Magazine (to give it its full title) has been in Mongolia every summer since 1921, and by the fall of 1928 they expect their field work to be ended. 'On the Trail of Ancient Man,' large and imposing though it is, is by no means a comprehensive account of their explorations. Fourteen volumes of material have been projected and are being written; Dr. Andrews expects to write a condensed version himself; and in the meantime this large green tome is put forward as a sort of tabloid extra, that the public may know a little of what has been going on in the Gobi Desert."—Outlook

Booklist 23:115 D '26

"Mr. Andrews has written one of the outstanding books of recent exploration. It is not the sort of book to which the critic should come in full regalia of literary acumen. It would be absurd to expect, in this popularization of scientific news from the front, that quality which is born only of the creative mind in reflective mood. The test which should be applied to such a record of exploration, written, as it were, in the heat of battle, is: Does it achieve its purpose? And unquestionably Mr. Andrews has sent back an eager, vivid, spontaneous account of one of the most important scientific expeditions of modern times." Blair Niles

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 12 '26 1750w

Boston Transcript p7 O 2 '26 1400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 D '26

"Dr. Andrews, leaving for future years, when his work of exploration is finished, the preparation of a complete summing up of the scientific value of his expeditions, has written here a popular, vitally interesting record of the highlights spread over three years of exploration on the plains and mountains of Mongolia—weeks and months of tireless digging have added chapters of inestimable value to the book of life." Stewart Beach

+ Ind 117:302 S 11 '26 1100w

Reviewed by S. A. Coblentz
Int Bk R p750 N '26 720w

Reviewed by F. H. Martens
Lit R p2 S 11 '26 500w

Reviewed by L. S. Gannett
Nation 123:484 N 10 '26 530w

"Mr. Andrews, though in this book he aims deliberately at popularity, is unimpeachably accurate in his facts."

+ New Statesman 28:22 O 16 '26 620w

"It does not seem that Mr. Andrews has struck quite the golden mean between journalism and science in presenting his popular account of his researches. Many who read 'On the Trail of Ancient Man,' with its accounts of literally stumbling upon archaeological treasures, will get the impression that paleontology is a sort of hit-or-miss affair, when the true basis of such work is in knowing where to look. Mr. Andrews's discoveries show that he knows where to look, and how to look, but his popular account of them conveys the impression that he is a sort of gifted amateur who stumbled across prehistoric skeletons in a forest of exclamation marks."

— + N Y Times p3 Ag 15 '26 1600w

"The book contains interesting and perhaps somewhat unconscious sidelights on history. In an era when history is becoming less a recital of captains and kings and more the tale of customs, economic forces and spiritual movements, this book will be found to be valuable."

A. P. Sachs

+ N Y World p4m S 12 '26 600w

"Dr. Andrews does not claim to be a novelist or an essayist, I believe. He is a zoölogist and for ninety-eight per cent of the book he tells his story in a simple, direct manner that is highly praiseworthy. But occasionally the craving for literary fixin's descends upon him."

F. de N. Schroeder

+ — Outlook 144:120 S 22 '26 1550w

R of Rs 74:445 O '26 250w

"Much of the book was written on the spot, and the well-told story has the charm of the open air and something of the glamour of the wilderness."

+ Spec 137:492 S 25 '26 400w

"A fascinating tale of adventure." C. S. L.

+ Springfield Republican p7f O 3 '26 760w

Times [London] Lit Sup p624 S 23 '26 900w

ANKER-LARSEN, JOHANNES. Martha and Mary; tr. from the Danish by Arthur G. Chater. 310p $2.50 Knopf

26-14672

In this grave story of Danish life two sisters, singularly united during their childhood and then for many years lost to each other, come together again when life is almost done. Martha typifies the worker, Mary the dreamer and mystic. Both are deeply religious. During their long years of separation and thru widely differing experiences their characters have developed consistently and serenely and when Martha and Mary find each other again it is as if they had never known separation.

"We may find here a vivid portrayal of life,—life that in its essence is the same whether in Denmark or America. Everywhere the spiritual problem is the same. This is a book to read if one is interested in these deeper problems, and to be read with pencil in hand, for it contains much to challenge thought. The reader cannot entirely forget it when he turns the last page. He will wish to turn again to certain pregnant passages not easily found without a penciled clue." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 18 '26 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 N '26

"Though far too serious to become a best-seller, this novel will be much discussed by thoughtful readers."

Ind 117:276 S 4 '26 120w

"Martha and Mary affords a wealth of entertainment, to be sure, but, more than that, it is replete with splendid philosophical passages and flashes of genuine beauty. It is the work of an author who not only knows something about the soul but writes about it in a way that delights the intellect." W. K. Bradley

+ Int Bk R p707 O '26 700w

"After the monumental 'Philosopher's Stone' by the same author, 'Martha and Mary' is something of a disappointment. The trouble is that some of the detail which goes to build up the author's elaborate structure, which is splendid in the main, is, I think, unconvincing. And that is a real fault. . . Larsen has drawn [a superb portrait] of Martha, from her birth to her death. If the companion portrait of her sister, Mary, is not so good, yet it has its perfect touches which are there with the effect of simplicity, which cannot be praised too highly." J. Cournois

— + Lit R p3 Ag 14 '26 550w

"This book, unlike its predecessor, becomes a sermon, at times so heavy with—not first-rate— theology, that the reader, too, becomes heavy and longs for the freshness that characterized the earlier book. Martha and Mary are two sisters, and as little girls living in poor circumstances upon a Danish farm they present a fresh and charming picture. The characters of their elders and neighbors—these Mr. Larsen in the earlier portion of the book is able to set forth with a sure touch." H. J. Forman

— + N Y Times p6 Ag 8 '26 660w

"The mysticism of childhood, the divergence of two virtuous sisters was never so charmingly expressed. There are moments when one indeed gets a glimpse into the fathomless purity of a child's heart. But this is only one of the triumphs of Anker Larsen. The story is extraordinarily flexible in its style and mechanism. With effortless ease the characters appear, complete and recognizable when they are wanted, and vanish from sight, while remaining in the memory when no longer pertinent to the tale."

W: McFee

+ N Y World p4m Ag 15 '26 850w

"A tale of grave beauty, with enough variety in the other characters to make up for the cut-and-dried development of Martha and Mary, who remain true throughout to their Biblical prototypes." E. F. Walbridge

+ Outlook 144:57 S 8 '26 180w

"Mr. Larsen, the author of this unusual and extremely beautiful novel, is a novelist of the first order, and a writer of European importance."

+ Spec 137:350 S 4 '26 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p884 D 2 '26 480w

ANSKY, S., pseud. See Rappoport, S.

ARCHIBALD, GEORGE HAMILTON. Modern Sunday-school; its theory and practice. 208p $2 Century [7s 6d Pilgrim press]

268 Sunday schools

26-9710

"This volume concerns itself chiefly with the problems of childhood and adolescence, and particularly with methods of effective religious education of youth. The aim of the author has been to produce a book that is more practical than theoretical, and this has been done. There are chapters and ample discussion on the graded Sunday school, on the atmosphere of learning, on play and expression, week-day activities, officers and management."—Lit R

Booklist 23:5 O '26

"This is an exceedingly practical book for superintendents in its discussion of solutions for the many actual difficulties met with in conducting a Sunday School." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 63:xviii Je '26 150w

"No better book for the purpose exists. It is full of suggestions and inspiration, as well as being extremely practical."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 5 '26 230w

"A stimulating book of organization and methods for the modern Sunday school by a

ARCHIBALD, G. HAMILTON—Continued
schoolman who is at the same time the administrator of a local church school."

+ J Religion 6:554 S '26 50w

Reviewed by R. O. Kevin

Lit R p13 S 4 '26 130w

Wis Lib Bul 22:224 J1 '26

ARDEN, CLIVE, pseud. (LILY CLIVE NUTT).
Veil of glamour. 343p $2 Bobbs [7s 6d Parsons]

26-14492

As a child Meg was a skeptic, never quite sure that the thing she had, or the thing that she was offered was just what she wanted. This characteristic followed her into young womanhood and considerably complicated her relations with Frank. She loved him, but wasn't sure that she wanted him, and influenced by the unhappiness of her married friends was positive that she did not want marriage. After prolonged discussion of their problem she and Frank decided on a year of trial marriage and retired to an English village to make their experiment in untrammelled domesticity. The outcome was the customary one—in novels.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 7 '26 150w

"It is an excellent story, but it violently needs a blue pencil." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 1 '26 520w

"Rather well-written, but soporifically uninteresting minor novel."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:217 O 16 '26 250w

"This novel suffers from being based upon an unacceptable hypothesis. The author has a certain gift of dialogue, particularly of that domestic order which is known as 'bickering,' and she has a lively touch with comic characters of her own sex. But these merits of detail will not carry off the fundamental situation."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p285 Ap 15 '26 230w

ARMFIELD, CONSTANCE (SMEDLEY) (MRS MAXWELL ARMFIELD). Justice walk. 320p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Allen & U.]

[24-30778]

"For business reasons a man with Puritanical ideas and a small-town view-point is compelled to leave the village where he has always lived and move to London. He finds himself in Chelsea, the famous artist quarter. 'Justice Walk' is the street and also the allegory for he learns to see good in many people and things he had formerly despised. The story is told in his letters to the woman he loves. Besides writing to her of his own life he writes of a brave woman whom nobody understood and of how she dies and leaves a will which alters the lives of all who knew her."—Ind

"In a consistent scheme of reflected narrative the story passes before the eye of the reader like a pageant in a looking-glass. Flattened shapes mime their parts effectively, but the performance, postured upon a chilly surface, is remote from life." Janet Ramsey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 30 '26 560w

"Here is a most unusual and beautifully written novel. It is unusual not only in thought but in form. . . It has strange, fluent ideas behind it; it is something odd, appealing in its half-mystery, half-fantasy."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 26 '26 230w

"An unusual plot and excellent character portrayal."

+ Ind 116:426 Ap 10 '26 120w

N Y Times p19 Mr 21 '26 560w

"The book, like everything that Miss Smedley writes, is well-written; but it certainly appears to lack her usual subtlety." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 138:527 N 22 '24 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p760 N 20 '24 220w

ARMSTRONG, HAMILTON FISH. New Balkans; with an introd. by Archibald Cary Coolidge. 179p il $3 Harper

949.6 Balkan states

26-20988

This discussion of the new Balkans is clear, interesting, and easy to follow, and will give the reader an intelligent grasp of the contending claims and disputes which form obstacles in the way of peace among the Balkan states. The Professor of history at Harvard university writes the introduction. The book is illustrated with a full-page map of the Balkan peninsula, and with smaller maps of the areas under dispute.

"He tells enough of the older problems of this section of Europe to make clear why it has represented so large a danger to the peace of the world, and he relates the new and the old questions in such a manner that the reader finds himself understanding more fully than ever before the perplexing Balkan problem."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 18 '26 190w

Lit R p4 D 18 '26 760w

ARMSTRONG, MARTIN DONISTHORPE. Desert; a legend. 275p il $2.50 Harper [7s 6d J. Cape]

26-16087

Sick with disgust at the decadence of life in Alexandria, Malchus follows a Christian hermit to his cell in the Egyptian desert. There he endures the awful loneliness of desert life, subduing mind and body to rigorous self-denial. A recurrent obsession for the mistress he has forsworn is his greatest trial. Conquered at last, Malchus is driven back to Alexandria, only to find himself freed. He returns with joy to the desert.

Reviewed by Harrison Smith

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 O 3 '26 1400w

"As a novel the book fails; theologically it fails also; as a legend it can just about stand upright, simply because its substance is made of the sturdy stuff of the author's pen. Psychologically—well, there the book has a firmer hold, for the author has a keen understanding of the workings of the human mind." L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 23 '26 430w

"Mr. Armstrong has a theme with great possibilities, and he has not made enough of it. His very pleasant, somewhat too decorative, style tends to tone everything down, smooth away the rough edges, and leave behind a conventionally unexceptionable picture. Some of his descriptions are pleasing, but there are too many of them." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 39:421 J1 10 '26 230w

New Repub 48:254 O 20 '26 140w

"Mr. Armstrong has given this simple human tale a very great beauty in the telling."

+ N Y Times p8 O 3 '26 1000w

"The book is written, as Mr. Armstrong always writes, with the best of literary good manners; polished but not precious, severe but not heavy, restrained but not devitalized." L. P. Hartley

Sat R 141:722 Je 12 '26 460w

"Martin Armstrong is master of a firm, dignified, yet sensitive prose style. What he writes is literature—a statement which could be made of how many living writers of English prose?"

+ Sat R of Lit 3:337 N 27 '26 180w

"Mr. Armstrong lacks the biting pen; he is too good-natured to his poor hermit, and there is at once more horror and more voluptuousness in the woodcuts by B. Ravilins, which handsomely decorate the novel, than in the letterpress."

+ Spec 137:66 J1 10 '26 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p433 Je 24 '26 350w

ARNIM, MARY ANNETTE (BEAUCHAMP)
gräfin von (COUNTESS RUSSELL) (ELIZABETH, pseud.). Introduction to Sally. 325p
$2.50 Doubleday

26-27598

Sally was the most beautiful girl in the world and her poor but upright grocer father had his hands full trying to keep the crowds from swarming about her. Finally he moved to Woodlee, a tiny town inhabited almost entirely by women, and by keeping Sally much in the background he managed fairly well. But when Jocelyn Luke, a young Cambridge student, accidentally saw Sally, fell madly in love with her and married her almost immediately, little Mr Pinner was overjoyed. Now it was Jocelyn's turn to keep the crowds away from Sally. When Cockney Sally ran away from the too intellectual Lukes the trouble began, but it all ended well, with Sally the protégée of an elderly duke, and Jocelyn happy with his Sally.

Booklist 23:134 D '26

"A sex extravaganza written with speed, gusto, vulgarity, and even ribaldry. It is very, very funny, but much of it belongs to the smoking room rather than to the boudoir." Stephen Graham

— + Bookm 64:357 N '26 270w

"Old-fashioned simplicity is especially noticeable in her new book. It is so simple that some people perhaps will declare it impossible. But 'Elizabeth' in this book more than in any other she has ever written makes her own world and convinces us of that truth." Hugh Walpole

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 O 24 '26 2700w

"A pleasantly vulgar book with some wit, a fair amount of character drawing and about one hundred and fifty pages of entertainment. As the book contains more than three hundred and fifteen pages, however, we are not able to sustain our enthusiasm much beyond the first half of the narrative." D. F. G.

— + Boston Transcript p4 O 16 '26 580w

"If once her readers believed Sally to be anything less or more than she is, namely, beautiful but dumb, 'Elizabeth's' newest novel would seem impertinent, disagreeable and, what is worse, untrue. It is a good book, however, an extensive and very successful excursion in humor—a bright, irresistibly entertaining comedy of manners. It isn't farce; nothing outrageously improbable happens, once you accept Sally, and the characterizations are careful and just." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 O 9 '26 450w

"The book is frequently witty, occasionally observant, but rarely real. As for the heroine—well—as the author herself says—'Sally was necessarily dumb.'"

+ — Nation 124:20 Ja 5 '27 70w

"Introduction to Sally' has the qualities one always expects in the author of 'Elizabeth and her German Garden': wit, breadth of mind, and knowledge of life, combined with an unobtrusive but unmistakable vein of sentimentality which spoils them all." Edwin Muir

— + Nation and Ath 40:89 O 16 '26 40w

"The irony, while swift and keen as ever, is less scarring than in times past, and occasional delicious indelicacies skim over very thin ice with breath-taking audacity and grace." D. B. W.

New Repub 49:146 D 22 '26 180w

"A rather vulgar and rather amusing book." P. C. Kennedy

— + New Statesman 28:48 O 23 '26 300w

"The numerous addicts of Elizabeth, Countess Russell, need not be told that she couldn't write an unsatisfactory novel if she tried; but in the first half of the 'Introduction to Sally' she has done her best to achieve this impossibility. There is the familiar reckless perverse humor that can wring a laugh out of anything and everything, but the subject matter is not exactly meat for merriment."

— + N Y Times p6 O 17 '26 560w

"'Elizabeth' displays abundant humor in constructing episodes. But she exchanges her witty, probing irony, which is at its best in Mrs. Luke's scenes, too readily for hasty foolery and the easy, superficial, dully imperceptive laughter arising from incongruity." Eva Goldbeck

+ — N Y World p1m O 31 '26 350w

"Introduction to Sally' gets nowhere, but takes us through some delicious country." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 142:415 O 9 '26 680w

"The story is extremely diverting, though readers who appreciated the delicate irony of 'Elizabeth's' early books will regret that she has succumbed to the temptation of employing more obvious methods."

+ — Spec 137:651 O 16 '26 200w

"Cheerful and deft, but not so sparkling with fun and observation as some of its predecessors."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p650 S 30 '26 420w

ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER BENSON, as seen by some friends. 169p il $2.50 Putnam [8s 6d Bell]

B or 92 Benson, Arthur Christopher

26-27487

"A symposium of recollections of Mr. Benson by his friends. Dr. M. R. James contributes an article of general reminiscences, and those who were with him at Eton or Cambridge, either as colleagues or pupils, have written about him as they knew him."—Spec

Booklist 23:76 N '26

Reviewed by H. S. V. Jones

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Je 6 '26 280w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 3 '26 750w

"Those who care for his thoughtful writings—and perhaps many, also, who do not know them—will find pleasure in this record of a tranquil, useful life. If there were nothing more than the picture of the man's years as house master among his Eton boys, the book would be well worth while."

+ Ind 116:340 Mr 20 '26 130w

"To those who, like myself, have stood outside the circle of Benson worshippers the volume will come as a revelation of an extremely pleasant sort. For it proves beyond question that the man was greater and more interesting than his books; and that we who knew him only through the printed page knew the real man not at all and perforce misjudged him." W. N. C. Carlton

+ Lit R p2 Je 12 '26 450w

Living Age 328:479 F 27 '26 250w

Nation and Ath 38:473 D 26 '25 580w

New Statesman 26:144 N 14 '25 1150w

N Y Times p12 Mr 14 '26 300w

Pratt p35 autumn '26

Sat R of Lit 3:139 S 25 '26 560w

Spec 135:882 N 14 '25 40w

"The public whose patronage caused A. C. Benson to die rich was perhaps a simple public, but with the clear sight of simple people it saw something which eluded the literary critics—a strong man whose gifted pen could give direct expression to everything in him but his strength."

Spec 135:1100 D 12 '25 520w

Spring'd Republican p12 Mr 6 '26 1200w

"For all those who, from his writings, judged Arthur Benson too highly or too meanly, this book will be an entertaining corrective. It shows a man, cherished by discerning friends, for an irresistible charm which he could not immortalize."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p787 N 26 '25 780w

ASBURY, HERBERT. Up from Methodism. 174p
$2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

B or 92 Methodist Episcopal church
26-17134

"Here is another cry of protest, vigorously uttered, and resonant enough to reverberate throughout the farthest corners of the democracy. It comes from one in lineal descent to the bishop who brought official Methodism to these shores, and it is raised against the absurdities and repressions of what he imported. The contemporary Mr. Asbury, never very kindly disposed toward the saints of Farmington, Missouri, has at last given articulateness to a long-accumulated disgust. . . In the main the book is the epic of an apostate pilgrim's progress through the stultifying valley of Farmington Methodism and the final triumph of his sinfulness in the end."—Nation

"'Up From Methodism' is primarily an autobiography, but it is also a sociological document of some significance. As a picture of Fundamentalist mores in full flower it has probably never been surpassed. Whoever wishes to understand the sources of such phenomena as Ku-Kluxery, Comstockery, Blue Sunday laws and evolution bills will find considerable illumination in Mr. Asbury's pages." C. L. Snider
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 O, 24
26 980w

"If he were not so convinced, he would be more convincing. If he tempered his raileries with a little kindness or human sympathy, he would be more attractive."
—Ind 117:596 N 20 '26 160w

"A book cogently written, Menckenesque in tone, and calculated to even for all time to come his score with the emotion-mongers of the Middle West. The literary value of the workmanship is marred by the ill humor of many passages and the animus which frequently leers through the pages." C. W. Ferguson
+ — Nation 123:458 N 3 '26 500w

ASHLEY, PERCY WALTER LLEWELLYN.
Europe from Waterloo to Sarajevo; with a supplementary chapter by Harry Elmer Barnes (Eng title Twice fifty years of Europe). 312p $3 Knopf

940.2 Europe—History. Europe—Politics
26-7069

A sketch of the political development of Europe from the downfall of Napoleon in 1815 to the outbreak of 1914. "The author traces during this century the growth of nationalism and democracy, showing at the same time the increasing economic interdependence of nations. He attempts to indicate how the forces of national ambitions and racialism, which in the first half of the century had been under control of statesmen, in the latter half of the century had outgrown their swaddling clothes and refused all direction or restraint." (Sat R of Lit)

"To a reader familiar with the salient features of nineteenth century European history the work will seem fragmentary and incomplete. The problem of war guilt is being warmly debated, and Mr. Ashley's point of view about it is interesting. Yet its implications give not even a faint hope for the future. It is therefore a relief to turn to the supplementary chapter on the causes of the World War which Harry Elmer Barnes contributes to the book. His chapter has a judicious quality and a stamp of sober conviction which Mr. Ashley's work lacks." C. E. Young.

— + Nation 123:17 J1 7 '26 340w

"Mr. Ashley has written a concise and interesting sketch of the political development of Europe from the Congress of Vienna in 1814 to the outbreak of war in 1914, that is, a period of exactly 100 years. The additional chapter by Professor Barnes is a controversial appendix which some people, like Mr. Ashley himself, may think in need of surgical excision." W. S. Hayward

Sat R of Lit 2:921 J1 10 '26 490w

ASHMUN, MARGARET ELIZA. No school tomorrow. 215p il $1.75 Macmillan

25-19109

Louise was only nine and she was sometimes known as Louella-Puella, sometimes as just Little Girl. The story tells about a long summer vacation which she spent in the country with her mother, who understood just what little girls like, and her father, who made up delightful rhymes on any and all occasions.

Booklist 22:213 F '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p117 S '26

"The chief charm of the book is its utter simplicity and naturalness and that quality of excitement and joy in the smallest happening. All books written for children from a child's point of view should possess this particular quality, but so often they are marred by a note of sophistication or self-consciousness. Their absence is refreshing in this juvenile."
+ Sat R of Lit 2:352 N 28 '25 160w

ASHMUN, MARGARET ELIZA. School keeps to-day. 235p il $1.75 Macmillan

26-9916

"'School Keeps Today' is a book for little girls, being a companion story to 'No School Tomorrow' by the same author. It is a simple narrative of the happy adventures of Louise Martin, who lives in a little western village. She enjoys the fortunate comradeship of a somewhat literary father, who makes up funny rhymes for any occasion, and a clever mother, who devises many surprises in the way of home-made presents and parties."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 23:86 N '26

"A very lovely little story, full of the homeliness and joy in small things which is the essential spirit of the real child's book." M. W. Bianco

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 J1 27
26 280w

"Girls of eight or ten years of age will be glad to welcome this sequel to 'No School Tomorrow.' Parents will be glad to know that here is another book by a writer who knows just how to write real books about real children in the simple, straightforward manner which children like."

+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 24 '26 180w

"It is well designed, through idealized accounts of everyday events, without any real plot complications."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f J1 25 '26 150w
Wis Lib Bul 22:231 J1 '26

ASHTON, WINIFRED. See Dane, C., pseud.

ASIN PALACIOS, MIGUEL. Islam and the Divine comedy; tr. and abr. by Harold Sunderland. 295p $5 Dutton [12s Murray]

851 Dante Alighieri. Mohammedanism
[26-9417]

A Spanish scholar who has devoted many years of his life to the study of the philosophic and religious thought of medieval Islam and its influence on the culture of Christian Europe traces the Moslem elements in the Divine comedy and in some of the pre-Dante Christian legends. This element is also shown as a key to many of the obscurities in the Divine comedy.

Reviewed by S. Udny

Am Hist R 32:93 O '26 1950w

"By his own admission, the author has placed his entire reliance on analogy. His mind moves too readily by the method of comparison, and he has the extremely practiced faculty of putting all evidence into symmetry without the least trouble. . . However versed in theology, and in the theology of Islam Father Asin may be, he sets no perceptible value on a rigorous method of historical proof." G. M. Y.

— Boston Transcript p4 N 3 '26 580w

"The translation appears to have been carefully and faithfully done by Mr. Sunderland. His work retains the dialectic vigour and literary charm of an original which had the honour of starting one of the most memorable debates in the history of universal literature."

+ New Statesman 27:242 Je 12 '26 220w

"Unusual interest attaches to this work, offspring of the union of Arabic and Romance scholarship. Persuasive and delightful in translation, the chapters proceed from argument to argument with an effect cumulative and convincing."

+ Spec 137:288 Ag 21 '26 120w

ASQUITH, LADY CYNTHIA MARY EVELYN (CHARTERIS), ed. Treasure ship; a book of prose and verse. 193p il $2.50 Scribner [6s Partridge]

26-19156

Like its predecessor, "The flying carpet," in form and size as well as in content, "The treasure ship" carries a goodly cargo of stories and verse for children, written by well-known English authors, and delightfully illustrated in color and black and white.

"It is an interesting and significant fact that such collections of children's stories as Lady Cynthia Asquith has made should be able to show so brilliant a list of authors (more of them men than women) whose work has been primarily for grown-ups. Apparently the writing of books for children is about to become a serious art. 'The Treasure ship,' which is an acceptable successor to 'The flying carpet' introduces us at once to an agreeable company, one of whose pleasant characteristics is a proper feeling for animals in captivity." E. M. Eaton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 O 24 '26 450w

Cath World 124:428 D '26 50w

"It is a most attractive volume in every way, easily equal to its precursor. It has a brilliant jacket, a fine large type page, plentiful illustrations of an amusing character, and the contributions are all clever."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:130 O 9 '26 170w

"As in 'The flying Carpet,' the result of Lady Asquith's effort is a rich mixture of fairy tales, poetry, limericks and fantasy with even a charming little five-act play with a fairy theme by A. P. Herbert. A fine thing, indeed, is accomplished by Lady Cynthia in introducing the best of English writers to children during the early years when tastes are being formed."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f D 12 '26 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p852 N 25 '26 130w

ASSOCIATED ADVERTISING CLUBS OF THE WORLD. Advertising year book for 1925; ed. by Noble T. Fraigg. 397p $2 Doubleday 659 Advertising

A symposium of expert opinion on developments in every phase of the advertising field during 1925.

Booklist 22:236 Mr '26

"In this mass of trite and jejune suggestions there is an excellent article on South American trade by George E. Roberts, of the National City Bank. Unfortunately no one will read far enough into the book to reach that article. Yet much of the matter in these pages is written by men whose records show them much abler than anything they say here would indicate." Helen Woodward

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ja 17 '26 500w

"The Year Book teems with shrewd philosophical expressions born of highly trained minds specializing on the subject of advertising. Every contributor is an expert, and he is never bore-some or offensive as experts often are."

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 10 '26 180w

ATHEARN, CLARENCE ROYALTY. Boston in seven days. 155p $1.50 McBride

917.44 Boston—Description

26-14562

"This useful little book for the tourist to Boston presents its information in faintly fictional narrative, the author adopting the expedient of showing two friends, a man from the West and his fiancée from the South, the most important and most interesting things to be seen in Boston in the course of seven days of rather assiduous sight-seeing. The little party of three start out on Monday with a very inclusive trip to Bunker Hill and North Boston. On Tuesday they cover Central Boston and on Wednesday Beacon Hill and the Back Bay, including many pages devoted to the Public Library, Trinity Church and The Fens. On Thursday they go to Harvard and Cambridge and on the three remaining days, successively to Lexington and Concord, Salem and Plymouth."—N Y Times

Booklist 23:74 N '26

"The author has succeeded admirably in compressing, with good taste and a well considered humor, into the space of a small volume the historical facts and the intellectual traditions which abound in the vicinity of Beacon Hill."

+ Bookm 64:xiii S '26 170w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 S 19 '26 220w

"The book is of definite practical value, but its facetiousness after a time grows wearisome."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ag 11 '26 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 D '26

"The narrative is notably full and is recounted as interestingly and with as much variety, doubtless as possible, considering the amount of information that had to be packed into the volume. There is even, occasionally, a little sparkle of humor."

+ N Y Times p10 Ag 8 '26 260w

"Physically speaking, this is the most unattractive volume we have perused in many a day, but once lost in the thread of the author's narrative it is an easy matter to forget it. Mr. Athearn is to be congratulated on his original conception of what might almost have been 'another guide book.'" Dale Warren

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:156 O 2 '26 210w

"One is far from sure that such a guidebook has any advantages over the stereotyped model. But the author has an amusing freshness and candor, and if the aim of making reading easy is to be applied to guidebooks he clearly establishes his right to employ the new medium."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 S 8 '26 700w

ATWOOD, ALBERT WILLIAM. Mind of the millionaire. 263p $2.50 (7s 6d) Harper

174 Millionaires. Wealth, Ethics of 26-12984

"Mr. Atwood finds that millionaires, except for their superior talent in amassing wealth, are much like other folk. Among them are the modest and the vain, the simple and the ostentatious, the generous and the stingy, the upright and the base... His work is less an inquiry than an apology. He is concerned, in the main, not with studying the effects of great wealth on character and on society, but with justifying the ways of millionaires to other men."—Outlook

Reviewed by G: Soule

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 24 '26 900w

"Could a book be written which would actually show how the American millionaire is affected by his fortune and how he uses his fortune to affect the millions of other Americans, it would be a vital contribution to the understanding of our age. Mr. Atwood's efforts fall far short of such an endeavor, and the nature of the relationship between wealth and the possessor of wealth and between plutocrats and a democracy is still a dimly explored realm which awaits the pen of a true social psychologist."

ATWOOD, A. W.—Continued
J: Carter

— N Y Times p3 J1 25 '26 1750w

"As a sociological study it is of small importance; but as a collection of facts, views, and incidents regarding the opulent it is something that may be read with interest." W. J. Ghent

Outlook 143:578 Ag 25 '26 250w

St Louis 24:304 N '26

"Whatever degree of curiosity is aroused by Mr. Atwood's alluring title is sure to end in disappointment once his book is read. The author fulfills none of the promises of his theme and never comes within sight of its main implications." E. C. Lindeman

— + Sat R of Lit 3:452 D 18 '26 520w

Times [London] Lit Sup p891 D 2 '26 300w

AUGUR, pseud. See Poliakov, V.

AURNER, NELLIE SLAYTON. Caxton; mirror of fifteenth-century letters; a study of the literature of the first English press. 304p il $6 Houghton [21s P. Allan]

655.1 Caxton, William. English literature—Middle English (1100-1500) [26-17910]

Written by the assistant professor of English at the University of Iowa, this book is a study of Caxton as author and editor and of the works of this little understood period of English literature which he selected to print. The book is not only a study of the nature and content of the works printed and translated by Caxton but an account of the circle in which he lived, his patrons and helpers, and the ideals and beliefs of the times as revealed in its literature. The Appendices provide a bibliography of Caxton, a list of his publications in chronological order and of their various editions and reprints, also a reprint of Caxton's prologues, epilogues and interpolations. Many interesting illustrations are included.

"The volume is a scholarly piece of work, well illustrated by quaint old cuts from the Caxton prints. Miss Aurner has given us Caxton as a real person, a human being very much alive." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 8 '26 430w

Reviewed by Vincent Starrett

N Y World p11m Ja 9 '27 300w

"In one respect Miss Aurner's book will be especially useful. She has gathered together in an appendix the prologues, epilogues and interpolations, which are not easy to come by, and which throw light on the conditions under which the printer worked and his outlook upon life. The main part of the book contains a good deal of careless writing and some expressions which are not readily understood in this country. There is also an irritating tendency to use Caxton's own words and spelling in and out of season."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p684 O 14 '26 450w

AUSLANDER, JOSEPH. Cyclops' eye. 130p $2 Harper

811

26-10694

Since Sunrise trumpets, "Auslander has grown more serious, more stark at times in his language, perhaps more virile. Not that he has lost or abandoned even the lyrical touch and the ability to strike a tender chord—but he ventures out into themes and manners more characteristically modern." (Spring'd Republican) The first poem in the volume is Steel, a drama of the steel mill and its victim.

Booklist 23:23 O '26

"Contains some exceedingly lovely verse. It contains some that is not so lovely; but it is all mature, considered, carefully finished, expert." J. F.

+ — Bookm 63:597 J1 '26 240w

"In 'Cyclops' Eye' there are too many poems that seem made out of pretty and unresisting material, and if some of these are as good as Miss Millay's 'Rather Than Let You Know How Near You Were,' it is but expressing one's final disappointment to say they are no better. Mr. Auslander deserves more at his own hands than to invite comparison even with his most gifted contemporaries." Newton Arvin

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Je 20 '26 450w

"There is a deep significance to be found in even the briefer of Mr. Auslander's lyrics. He feels beauty—gray and white and black beauty, rather than the flash of colors,—and he renders it again in lovely words and phrases and singing cadences." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 30 '26 700w

"The merit of Cyclops' Eye is that while its expressive accomplishment somewhat exceeds its emotional depth, it yet dips toward fundamental levels, prophesying perhaps, some future long plunge, from which, when the poet returns, he will have made poetry of considerable stature."

+ — Dial 81:81 J1 '26 100w

"This poet, while responding to the sensuous and the emotional as the pool to the wind, does not stop at the decorative surface value, nor at the thrill of the rose-mesh of the flesh; but reaches on toward things more elusive, reaches into the realm of the spiritual realities. He is the outstanding poet of intensity." Edwin Markham

Lit R p2 J1 10 '26 1600w

"Mr. Auslander can convey color and the nuances of sound with a sure and skillful hand. He is intensely aware of the sensible manifold that presents itself to eye and ear and touch. The impression given by this, his second book of verse, is that a poet of nature is discontentedly seeking to be the poet of man."

Babette Deutsch

Nation 123:179 Ag 25 '26 460w

"Cyclops' Eye may be considered the second stage in Mr. Auslander's development as a poet. It represents his escape from the misty world of dreams into the world of human experience. His next step must be to that hill of vision from which the artist looks down sympathetically, but whimsically, as a half-god, upon the earthly scene."

New Repub 47:315 Ag 4 '26 450w

"He has been deservedly praised for his strength. 'Steel' and 'Knockout,' in the modern style, and many another poem in more traditional manners prove it. But his poetry would seem stronger if he were not so fond of displaying his muscles. Even the beauty of his verse has often a sort of bullying quality, and if he should care to compare his own excellent 'Two That Unlatched Heaven' with Miss Stuart's 'Fools,' it is not improbable that he might learn a lesson in that strength which comes of an economy rather than an extravagance of means." R: Le Gallienne

+ — N Y Times p5 S 5 '26 470w

"Mr. Auslander, in his poems, is apparently a dual personality. In one he is a lyricist of charm, grace and finesse, a little (but not too much) echoing strains of Edna Millay, Elinor Wylie and Housman. In the other personality he has strength, straightforwardness, and a poignant brutality." J: V. A. Weaver

N Y World p4m My 16 '26 600w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman

Outlook 143:384 J1 14 '26 200w

Reviewed by L. W. Jennings

Sat R of Lit 2:920 J1 10 '26 500w

"He sings of the prize ring and the mill worker and does so with vivid effect. And he sings, too, of emotions and abstractions and shows himself capable of weaving words rhythmically and with fine shadings."

+ Spring'd Republican p7f Je 6 '26 300w

AUSTEN, JANE. Letters; ed. by R. Brimley Johnson. 198p $2.50 Dial press [6s Lane]

B or 92 [26-8452]

"Mr Johnson's book is a selection from the larger editions of Jane Austen's correspondence. They are 'Letters of Jane Austen,' first issued in 1884 by Lord Brabourne; 'Jane Austen's Sailor Brothers,' by J. H. Hubback and Edith Hubback, and 'Jane Austen: Her Life and Letters,' by William and R. A. Austen Leigh."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:431 J1 '26

"These gay, clever, tender, cynical letters will surely find new readers. And some of the new readers will surely feel that they all share a quality which not many other literary letters have—they leave a reader with precisely the same impression of their writer that he had deduced from her most carefully finished fiction, and with precisely the same kind of admiration and the same degree of admiration." Frances Newman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 14 '26 900w

"To be sure there are in letters to her nieces wise words, witty words, and words of tender, reflective insight, but one lays the book finally aside with a feeling of sadness and disappointment which it is difficult to analyse. Is it because one senses in these pages the very quality of fugacious time, the small, thin, ephemeral tensions of the moments breaking and dispersing like bubbles, and leaving nothing in their wake?" Alyse Gregory

Dial 81:251 S '26 670w

Ind 117:303 S 11 '26 150w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 49:141 D 22 '26 650w

"It would be absurd to claim that these letters are literature; but they contain evidence of the mind and eye which could make literature out of this or almost anything else within the range of her imagination or experience. The ordered gravity, the sensible realism, the restrained sympathy are all here. They are in nearly all the letters, and also in them is evidence of the humour which makes Miss Austen's novels among the most agreeable in the language."

+ New Statesman 26:618 F 27 '26 1250w

"After the fully revealed lightness and charm of her early years as evinced in these letters, perhaps the most interesting part of Mr. Johnson's book is the series of epistles written by Jane to her favorite niece, Fanny."

+ N Y Times p12 Mr 7 '26 1100w

St Louis 24:321 N '26

"Here is a good selection of Jane Austen's Letters, which are not for everybody, but should please the expert who knows her life. She is full of humour, sometimes discreet sometimes wild. She is keenly interested in her home circle, and doses of domestic detail, which do honour to the writer and the recipient, are often of little interest to the reader."

+ Sat R 140:741 D 19 '25 700w

AUSTIN, BERTRAM HERBERT, and LLOYD WILLIAM FRANCIS. Secret of high wages; with a foreword by Walter T. Layton. 124p $1.25 Dodd [3s 6d Unwin]

331 Wages. Labor and laboring classes—United States. Industrial management

26-10006

In the fall of 1925 at a time of great industrial depression in England, the authors, two British engineers, came to America to study the secret of her unprecedented prosperity. They visited twenty-four manufacturing plants and consulted a great many authorities. Their inquiry was mainly concerned with the causes of high wages in industry combined with low cost of production. The statement of their findings is interesting alike to Great Britain and America.

Booklist 23:7 O '26

"As a study in descriptive economics the book is not of much value. Statistics are carelessly flung together. The authors do not seem to be conscious of the ultimate assumptions of their sweeping generalisations. They fail to distinguish between rates of wages and weekly earnings; between real and nominal wages, and between particular wages and the general wage level. But Messrs. Austin and Lloyd scored a journalistic triumph by preaching a simple gospel with the fervor of missionaries . . . They have compelled many business men to read, for the first time, some of the elementary facts upon which economic science is based." J. H. Jones

+ Econ J 36:464 S '26 920w

Eng N 96:994 Je 17 '26 650w

"A keen and careful study of American industrial progress and prosperity." Katherine Woods

+ Int Bk R p639 S '26 850w

Reviewed by Paul Blanshard

Nation 122:729 Je 30 '26 700w

"Not everything in this little book will be accepted by all who read it. But when every allowance and every deduction are made, there remains a residue of truth which we should do well to take to heart. This slender volume in which Messrs. Austin and Lloyd record the lessons America has taught them can at least be read with some profit by every responsible person connected with industry in this country."

+ Nation and Ath 39:78 Ap 17 '26 900w

"The book is written like an engineer's report, without the slightest artistic decoration, plainly and serviceably. It makes no pretense at literary style. It goes right to the point and says what it has to say with the fewest possible words." Evans Clark

+ N Y Times p1 My 16 '26 1500w

Reviewed by G. H. Miles

Pol Sci Q 41:654 D '26 350w

"Messrs. Austin and Lloyd write with a straightforward crispness and impartiality. They have diagnosed correctly the leading principles of American business organization, and they arraign British employers and British workers, the former more than the latter, for their failure to absorb and reproduce them over here."

+ Sat R 141:439 Ap 3 '26 1400w

"To American business men and students of economics the book cannot fail to be of interest. It is, in a sense, more interesting to the historian, particularly to the one who sees the parallel between British history of the nineteenth century and possible developments in the United States in the twentieth. A chiel among us takin' notes' always sees things we vaguely feel and by which, perhaps, we are only unconsciously controlled. It is salutary discipline and a convenience as well to be able to study the note-book." Bartlet Brehner

+ Sat R of Lit 3:21 Ag 7 '26 1150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p219 Mr 18 '26 200w

AUSTIN, FREDERICK BRITTEN. War god walks again. 274p $2 Doubleday [3s 6d Williams & N.]

26-16887

Six striking stories of what war may become if the destructive capabilities of scientific discoveries today be turned loose on the world tomorrow. Contents: When the war god walks again; In the China sea; A battlepiece; old style; Goliath; They who laughed.

"The War God Walks Again is not a classic and is never going to be. It is certain not to be called an important book, and I am not sure that it is even a good book. But it is extraordinarily interesting." J. Bakeless

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 S 19 '26 480w

Boston Transcript p8 O 23 '26 210w

Lit R p12 S 18 '26 180w

AUSTIN, F. B.—Continued

"Mr. Austin's book is not to be taken too seriously as a contribution to the modern science of war. As a collection of war stories it is excellent entertainment."

N Y Times p31 S 26 '26 560w

Sat R of Lit 3:123 S 18 '26 250w

"Captain Britten Austin has great powers of description and narrative. But he has written more than a volume of good stories; these tales should excite serious thought for the future."

+ Spec 136:490 Mr 13 '26 40w

"Mr. Britten Austin makes a very complete and artistic tragedy out of each of his sketches, and if they do not promise enjoyment to the average reader, they will certainly furnish him with plenty of excitement."

Spec 137:27 Jl 3 '26 170w

"It is a book of some ability, but it is terribly verbose and sometimes you cannot see the meaning of a paragraph for the words which compose it."

Times [London] Lit Sup p238 Mr 25 '26 180w

AUTOLYCUS, pseud. See Bacon, L.

AYRES, RUBY MILDRED (MRS REGINALD WILLIAM POCKOCK). Man the women loved. 291p $2 Doran

26-4704

Patrick Heffron was the man the women loved. Dorothy Graham, the village coquette, and Mollie Dawe, the vicar's daughter, were the women who loved him best. After a six year's absence from England Pat came home just in time for the wedding of Dorothy and his best friend, John Morland. As best man Pat claimed the bride's first kiss, and with that unfortunate caress their old affair was swiftly rekindled. Mollie, already in love with Pat, was forced to stand by and watch its tragic progress, powerless to help or hinder until the painful dénouement which gave Pat to her.

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 13 '26 350w

"The tale runs smoothly, but is wholly external and journalistic in its account of the characters and situations which move over well defined routes to a predetermined ending. The characters lack the power to stimulate emotion, and because the reader is not made to feel what they feel, they lack reality, sincerity and appeal. It is a novel that is easily read and like all books of its type, equally as easily forgotten."

— N Y Times p22 F 28 '26 460w

Times [London] Lit Sup p910 D 31 '25 160w

AYRES, RUBY MILDRED (MRS REGINALD WILLIAM POCKOCK). Overheard. 240p $2 Doran

26-7438

A week before their wedding day Diana overhears her fiancé admit that he is giving up the girl he really loves to marry for money. Diana breaks the engagement and Rolf returns to his first love only to find that his heart still clings to the heiress. The other girl is ill and while Rolf is too noble to throw her over the second time he does tell Diana he loves her. Diana can be noble too. She decides to marry another man. But while the author permits the lovers to suffer sadly thru several chapters she means all the time to bring them together on the last page.

"People say there are no new plots in fiction, but I have never struck anything quite like this before." Alan Rinehart

Bookm 63:xiii Ag '26 80w

"It will serve nicely for light reading during whatever weather for the many who have admired her other works."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 19 '26 120w

"This is another example of a passable short story padded with conversation and much white space into an unsatisfactory novel."

— Boston Transcript p6 Ag 4 '26 350w

AYRES, RUBY MILDRED (MRS REGINALD WILLIAM POCKOCK). Spoilt music. 308p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

26-12593

The romance that began when Nicholas Gaunt saved Jennifer Fry from drowning received a severe setback when Nicholas married the girl of his mother's choice. Jennifer found work in London and was managing fairly well when she met Nick again. She still loved him, but steadily refused to run off with him. After a series of passionate quarrels and reconciliations their meetings ended. A run of hard luck, however, brought Jennifer to Nicholas on his own terms. But there the author's demands on her heroine cease; she sees to it that Jennifer in coming to her lover sacrifices nothing but her pride.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 19 '26 100w

"We seem to have heard it all before very recently. It is so familiar the phrases seem to leap out of the page at one. But perhaps there lies the charm for Miss Ayres's public . . . they know they will not be disappointed."

Boston Transcript p3 N 13 '26 270w

Times [London] Lit Sup p65 Ja 28 '26 130w

AYSCOUGH, MRS FLORENCE. Autobiography of a Chinese dog. 105p il $2 Houghton

China—Social life and customs. Dogs—Legends and stories 26-20543

Thru the story of her little dog Yo-Fei who by his own confession has had an unusual life, travelled far and had the advantage of association with cultivated people, Mrs Ayscough gives a delightfully intimate picture of Chinese life in city and country with bits of dog philosophy and humor thrown in.

Reviewed by L: S. Gannett

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ja 9 '27 330w

"Yo Fei tells the story of his life with an enviable charm of manner. He tells not alone the story of his own life, but of the life of China as well."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 22 '26 200w

"As was to be expected, Mrs. Ayscough here delivers a great deal of information concerning China; the vehicle she has chosen, however, is her dog—and one is never quite sure of the pertinence of this medium."

Nation 124:20 Ja 5 '27 40w

"Read this delicious book, as an antidote to anything that tends to make existence troublesome. It is cheerful, it is wise, with the two-fold wisdom of intelligence and humor; and in spite of its canine viewpoint it is human. The illustrations by Lucille Douglass (who made the drawings of 'A Chinese Mirror') are exquisite, and bring China to the eye as closely as the author brings it to the mind." Isidor Schneider

+ Sat R of Lit 3:365 D 4 '26 410w

"Mrs. Ayscough has written a charming little book in a rather unusual form."

+ Springfield Republican p6f D 12 '26 300w

AYSCOUGH, MRS FLORENCE. Chinese mirror, being reflections of the reality behind appearance. 464p il $5 Houghton [21s J. Cape]

915.1 China—Description and travel. China—Social life and customs 26-26222

"A Chinese mirror" is a learned book of interpretation by a Chinese scholar long a resident of China, and translator, with Amy Lowell, of "Fir flower tablets." Her first chapter tells the story of the building of her own house in Shanghai, about which she gathers much detailed information concerning Chinese life today. Then follows a long chapter describing a journey along the Yangtze Kiang river from Shanghai to Chinkiang, bringing out the historical and literary associations along the way. The next chapter is an interesting study of the Chinese idea of a garden. Three chapters are devoted to an exposition of Chinese religious philosophy and in conclusion a brief synopsis is given of Chinese history from legendary times to the founding of the republic.

Booklist 22:289 Ap '26

"It is one of the few books about the Orient I have read which leave one with a sense of deeper understanding. Not only does Mrs. Ayscough interpret, but she paints so deftly that her pen portraits at times read like poems." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:712 F '26 120w

"It is to be hoped that Mrs. Ayscough will continue to write books that give the realities behind appearances. China has had too few interpreters who have as she has, 'intelligence keen as a two-edged sword, and a heart sympathetic as the strings of a table-lute.'" Florence Waterbury

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ja 17 '26 1350w

Boston Transcript p2 D 26 '25 750w

"Long residence in China could not alone make possible a book such as this. Neither could long residence plus an intimate acquaintance with the Chinese classics. Added to these must be an appreciation of beauty, a balanced perspective, the ability to think through to the essence back of the objective reality. Which is a roundabout way of saying that it is a task for a poet with the persistence of a savant. The present reader believes this wordy description fits Mrs. Ayscough." J. J. McLaughlin

+ Lit R p2 Ap 3 '26 350w

"We feel that Mrs. Ayscough sometimes takes too much for granted in the reader, especially in the latter part of her book, which contains serious contributions to Chinese folklore. She has the gift of sympathy, and works in a good cause—the better understanding of our fellow creatures."

+ Living Age 328:604 Mr 13 '26 280w (Reprinted from Manchester Guardian)

"A book which will not be easy to read, for it is learned and detailed. Mrs. Ayscough has spent a quarter of a century in the country she writes about, and for the purposes of her present study she has plundered not only the Chinese classics but the researches of many Sinologues in Europe and America. But it may be well to have a book on China which cannot be read by one who runs. China has not run—at least till now—for something like four thousand years, and during that time, since she is a brilliantly gifted nation, she has accumulated an immeasurable stock of stories, beliefs, and arts. It is at this stock that Mrs. Ayscough's fascinating book teaches us to look with a more or less expert eye." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 122:89 Ja 27 '26 600w

"Delightful book. It is in appearance a Chinese mirror; one is not disappointed either with the outside or the inside. For necessary as a good carving on the back and a bright gloss on the front may be, it is in the depths of the inside of a Chinese mirror that the virtue lies. The book is written throughout in a style full of sympathy and charm."

+ Nation and Ath 38:526 Ja 9 '26 520w

"There are many books to tell us that the common people of China are buried deep in superstitions, but very few students have had the sensitiveness and the wit to dig up from erudition the elements of sympathy which these superstitions contain. Mrs. Ayscough has written a book of beauty and her publishers have given it a beautiful embodiment." Lyman Bryson

+ New Repub 46:311 Ap 28 '26 350w

"Her book, which is both scholarly and readable, opens up a lot of new ground. . . A charming present for anyone interested in things Chinese!"

+ New Statesman 26:588 F 20 '26 900w

"'A Chinese Mirror' is very much more than a travel book; it is a fine and sensitive reflection of the soul of an Oriental people in so far as an Occidental may comprehend and circumscribe that soul." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p7 Ja 17 '26 2000w

N Y World p6m D 27 '25 70w

"For me one of the chief pleasures the book affords is its exposition of Nature as felt by the Chinese. 'A Chinese Mirror' is one of the best books in English on China that one can get. It is written out of a long and full experience, by a mind sensitive, graceful, patient, intelligent, and enthusiastic. It is a book that succeeds, as few books do, in making a transfer of experience from writer to reader." Isador Schneider

Sat R of Lit 2:718 Ap 17 '26 720w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 24 '26 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p783 N 26 '25 420w

Reviewed by F. W. Williams

Yale R n s 15:826 Jl '26 200w

AZEVEDO, ALUIZIO. Brazilian tenement; tr. from the Portuguese by Harry W. Brown. 320p $3 McBride

26-10318

Joao Ramao dreamed a dream of avarice. Out of his dream grew mushroom-wise a tenement district in Rio de Janeiro, a district of squatting hovels where lived, loved and fought a mixed brood of Portuguese immigrants, negroes and half-breeds. The noisome area spread till it touched a rich neighbor's wall causing a feud between Ramao and his neighbor that rivalled in fierceness the passionate quarrels of the tenement dwellers. With stark fidelity the book evokes the semi-tropical atmosphere of the tenement—its bravado and lust, its lazy humor and fierce anger—and with devastating exactness portrays the character of Ramao, its creator and evil genius.

"Its translation is a remarkable piece of work, and its publication is a literary event; another step toward mutual understanding on the part of the Americans." Muna Lee

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Je 13 '26 750w

"'A Brazilian Tenement' is not in the slightest degree 'immoral'; it has not, except for the prurient, the least suggestion of obscenity. The author has set down implacably the slice of life that he has seen, that he knows as he knows himself. He does not interpret. Neither does he write with the conscious artistry of the author who would rather frame a neat sentence than create a real character. These are things that he has seen as only creative vision sees them." I. G.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 22 '26 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p94 Jl '26

"It is a genre picture of great vividness and reality. Azevedo writes as a modern realist, but with a strong sense of irony which reaches its fullest expression in the last page of the book."

+ Ind 116:611 My 22 '26 70w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

Lit R p4 Jl 3 '26 500w

Living Age 329:648 Je 19 '26 200w

N Y Times p17 My 23 '26 700w

B

BABLIK, HEINZ. Galvanizing; a theoretical and practical treatise on the subject for the use of works managers, students and others; tr. by C. T. C. Salter. 168p il $5 (12s 6d) Spon

669.5 Galvanizing 26-12912

"Purpose is to explain current practice in the light of modern scientific conceptions. Records the results of the author's own investigations. Considers also electro-galvanizing, sherardizing, and the Schoop process."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 11:3 Ja '26
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:566 N '26

BACHELLER, IRVING ADDISON. Opinions of a cheerful Yankee. 225p $2.50 Bobbs
814 26-16726

The fifteen occasional articles here reprinted from the magazines are an expression of Mr Bacher's cheerful philosophy, and an offering of goodwill and kindly advice to his fellowmen.

"When Mr. Bacher is in a mood to indulge in reminiscence, which he does here all too infrequently, of his association with eminent writing men of a bygone day, his book is entertaining; otherwise it suggests the fallacious preaching of an 'inspiration' tract."

+ — Bookm 64:637 Ja '27 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 D '26

N Y Times p2 N 28 '26 130w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p8m O 3 '26 100w

"Good natured advice, interspersed freely with wit and anecdote or reminiscence of both ordinary and unusual experiences pervades the book. Amusing and often pertinent is the comment on today's generation."

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 13 '26 200w

BACON, BENJAMIN WISNER. Apostolic message; a historical inquiry. 423p $3.50 Century
232.3 Atonement 25-23597

"In 'The Apostolic Message' Professor Bacon, who for thirty years has occupied the chair of New Testament Criticism and Interpretation at Yale University, has continued the elaboration of a theory begun in his earlier books, 'Beginnings of Gospel Story,' 'Is Mark a Roman Gospel?' and 'The Gospel of Mark.' In this work he is concerned with the various forms and phases of primitive Christianity and has traced them to their New Testament origins. He holds the witness of Peter to the self-dedication of Jesus to the task of reconciling Jehovah and His people to be the foundation stone of authentic Christianity. Dr. Bacon has unhesitatingly championed the New Testament beginning of the Christian doctrine of the 'Blood-atonement.'"—Lit R

Reviewed by A. W. Vernon

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 O 24 '26 700w

"Professor Bacon has given us an extremely suggestive and stimulating book, one which not only evinces the wealth of his scholarship in the field of New Testament criticism but reveals his keen interest in the underlying problems of religion. His volume should be read by all who are interested alike in historical interpretation and present-day formulation of Christianity." H. F. Rall

+ J Religion 6:432 Jl '26 760w

Lit R p9 Ap 17 '26 130w

"The value of Dr. Bacon's books does not consist so much in their larger theories as in the wealth of suggestion which is to be found on every page. . . It is Dr. Bacon's peculiar merit that he startles us at every turn out of our conventional opinions. The views which he advances, however surprising, are always the outcome of mature reflection and are supported by a fulness of learning which is never in doubt." E. F. Scott

+ — Yale R n s 15:611 Ap '26 600w

BACON, BENJAMIN WISNER. Gospel of Mark: its composition and date. (Samuel B. Sneath memorial publication fund) 340p $5 Yale univ. press

226.3 Bible. New Testament—Gospels—St Mark 25-9891

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

J Religion 6:104 Ja '26 30w

"Bacon's volume is rich in illuminating detail, and this together with its main contention will make it of considerable value. In comparison with Streeter's Four Gospels, its scope is distinctly limited. It is no book for beginners. It makes no claims of novelty. But it supplements Streeter admirably, for Streeter said little of the origin of Mark and still less of the pre-literary history of the Gospel material. Like the author's Fourth Gospel, it is likely to acquire influence slowly but ever more widely." H. J. Cadbury

+ J Religion 6:328 My '26 1100w

"A fascinating book." A. J. Edmunds

+ Sat R of Lit 2:512 Ja 23 '26 1100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p20 Ja 14 '26 1900w

Reviewed by E. F. Scott

Yale R n s 15:610 Ap '26 450w

BACON, MRS JOSEPHINE DODGE (DASKAM) (INGRAHAM LOVELL, pseud.). Medusa's head. 121p $1.50 Appleton

26-14123

A mystery story of novelette length concerning the strange disappearance of a beautiful New York society woman and its stranger cause.

Booklist 23:174 Ja '27

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 O 24 '26 150w

"In spite of a decided lack of humor, due to the fact that the characters are altogether too well bred to permit of any facetiousness, a thinly veiled plot, hardly enough of the tragedy flavor, a downright absence of any literary value, it is safe to wager that once this book is begun, it will not be put aside until finished."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 1 '26 230w

"It's a cleverly managed idea held up in rapidity of development by a conscious style and deliberate playing for neat effect—literary flourishes out of place, to our way of thinking, in an old fashion mystery yarn."

+ — Lit R p6 Ag 21 '26 200w

"If its second half were as good as its first, would be an excellent story of its kind. Unfortunately, about midway through the narrative it falls down in interest, credibility and tension, and never recovers itself."

+ — N Y Times p7 S 5 '26 380w

"'Medusa's Head' is built around a rather clever idea, somewhat preposterous. The tale is neatly joined and fitted. The sentimental climax is managed well enough. The story is good light reading for an idle evening; there is the ancient thrill of a mystery in it, with an unexpected and ingenious explanation. There are even good movie possibilities in the tale, except for the matter of pigmentation, which might necessitate kinemacolor."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:76 Ag 28 '26 150w

"Mrs. Bacon takes the theme very seriously; as a tragi-comedy it might have been effective."

Times [London] Lit Sup p937 D 16 '26
160w

Wis Lib Bul 22:275 O '26

BACON, LEONARD (AUTOLYCUS, pseud.).
Animula vagula. 37p $1.50 Harper

811 26-14609

A series of poems in which a sensitive poetic mind has recorded the various moods which accompanied a deep emotional experience—descent into darkness and a return to light.

Reviewed by M. S. Mansfield

Bookm 64:232 O '26 200w

"This is a strange, disturbing, imperfect, beautiful book." Babette Deutsch

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 O 31
'26 600w

Ind 117:220 Ag 21 '26 30w

"These epic narratives are told in that brilliant and too long-neglected medium, the ottava rima, which Byron, Keats and Shelley had used for such different purposes, without in any way exhausting its possibilities. Mr. Bacon has studied those possibilities with the most thoughtful care and he shows infinite resource in employing them to reflect all the subtle, complicated phases and aspects of the material world." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Lit R p4 Ag 28 '26 680w

Reviewed by P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p12 N 14 '26 200w

"The keen edge of Mr. Bacon's verse has never cut so deeply as in this new book. In a mere thirty-seven pages, embodying a rather loosely connected sequence of sonnets and lyrics, he contrives to say more than in all the three hundred pages of that startling and entertaining satire 'Ulug Beg.' Something of the old satirical attitude persists in the new book. The verse still bites. But its primary purpose is not satirical. Mr. Bacon has turned, somewhat suddenly, upon himself." E. Davison

Sat R of Lit 3:233 O 23 '26 960w

Times [London] Lit Sup p679 O 7 '26
220w

BADER, CLARISSE. Women in ancient India; moral and literary studies; [tr. by Mary E. R. Martin]. (Trubner's oriental ser.) 338p $4
Dutton [10s 6d K. Paul]

891.2 Women in India. Sanskrit literature

Published in France in 1867 and crowned by the French Academy this book is now for the first time translated into English. The author begins with a short study of women in the earliest literature, the Vedas and the Laws of Manu, but the greater part of the book is taken up with the women of the heroic age as they appear in the two great epics, the Ramayana and the Mahabharata.

"The book is written in simple language and will interest not only advanced students of philosophy, but also the general reader."

Boston Transcript p5 Je 19 '26 400w

Reviewed by Harendranath Maitra

Lit R p4 Je 19 '26 550w

"Whatever the faults of the translations and the many re-translations, who seeks here may find, through the gorgeous imagery and glamor of the bejeweling words, the austere and undeviating outlines of Indian thought." Lola Ridge

+ New Repub 48:100 S 15 '26 980w

"The book is written, as one would expect of a young Frenchwoman, with vivacity and freshness of interest. The sanity and clarity of its thinking is not interfered with by the picturesqueness of its style, which, however, is not marked enough to offend good taste. The book should prove useful and interesting to those who desire easily gained information on the status of women in ancient India and on the ethical ideals and literary achievements of the old Indian civilization."

+ N Y Times p26 My 30 '26 330w

Sat R of Lit 3:75 Ag 28 '26 300w

"Many books on India and Indian thought yearly see the light, it is but rarely that one with such fidelity and understanding makes its appearance. Readers of either sex can be assured, not merely of interest, but of fascination in the pages of this book."

+ Spec 136:643 Ap 3 '26 260w

Times [London] Lit Sup p216 Mr 18 '26
1150w

BADER, LOUIS. World developments in the cotton industry; with special reference to the cotton piece goods industry in the United States. 1td ed 187p $3 N.Y. univ. press

677 Cotton trade 26-3978

The author fulfills the promise of the title of his book by surveying the cotton industry in all countries, and by dwelling in detail on the production and marketing of cotton goods in the United States.

"The author takes a comprehensive view of the entire cotton piece goods situation. He offers some pertinent suggestions for its rehabilitation, and the proper correction of the present pernicious influences."

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 20 '26 260w

Times [London] Lit Sup p885 D 17 '25
30w

BADGER, WALTER LUCIUS. Heat transfer and evaporation. (Modern lib. of chemical engineering) 306p il $5 Chemical catalog co.

536.44 Evaporation. Heat 26-1880

"Begins with the theory of heat transfer in general but fails to cover the subject fully, and a large part of the volume is devoted to evaporators considered from the standpoint of engineering theory rather than practical operation."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"An unusually valuable book. . . It is a good thing to have original books of this high standard appear in the English language, and it is felt that Professor Badger's efforts should be appreciated as being a notable contribution to chemical engineering literature."

+ Chem & Met Eng 33:238 Ap '26 250w

"This book should be of value to all engineers interested in the operation or design of evaporators, but is not intended as a manual for unskilled operators. Certain minor errors have crept in, but the number of these is no larger than normally appears in the first printing of any technical treatise having the scope of this book." W. H. McAdams

+ Ind & Eng Chem 18:875 Ag '26 300w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:47 O '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:546 N '26

BAGLEY, WILLIAM CHANDLER. Determinism in education; a series of papers on the relative influence of inherited and acquired traits in determining intelligence, achievement, and character. 194p $2.20 Warwick & York

370.1 Education. Mental tests. Ability 26-669

In these papers Mr Bagley questions the hypotheses of the educational determinists and shows the extent to which some of the alleged facts and interpretations in the field of intelligence testing have been generalized and carried to fatalistic conclusions. Contents: Preface; Democracy and the I. Q.; Further fallacies of determinism; The critical period following the war as a test of universal education; Do good schools pay? On the possibility of securing "moral ratings" for the several states; The army tests and the pro-Nordic propaganda; To what extent is education a creative and an equalizing force? Some hypotheses and provisional conclusions; Appendix; Index.

BAGLEY, W. C.—Continued

"Despite the fact that the author appears much more effective in destructive than in constructive argument the book leaves a wholesome impression. Like all of Bagley's books it is thoroughly readable, and in style far above the level of most compositions in the field of education. It reveals continually the quick insight and apt striking power, as well as the faith in democracy and the common man, for which the author is so well and so favorably known." T. H. Eaton

+ Am J Psychol 37:445 Jl '26 500w

Reviewed by Franklin Bobbitt

Am J Soc 32:134 Jl '26 400w

Booklist 22:277 Ap '26

Boston Transcript p8 F 20 '26 620w

Cleveland Open Shelf p62 My '26

"A remarkable book. It is the most comforting exposition of the reality of educational service that I have seen in many a day."

+ Educ R 71:169 Mr '26 620w

Reviewed by F. D. McClusky

EI School J 27:236 N '26 400w

Reviewed by O. F. Myers

Int J Ethics 36:328 Ap '26 380w

"As a critical survey of tendencies which no doubt are present, the book, with its concise yet simple and animated style, is at once interesting and enlightening. But it is doubtful whether very many of the educators whom he criticises would recognize the extreme position which he attacks."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:515 Ja 23 '26 350w

Springf'd Republican p8 Jl 29 '26 350w

BAIKIE, JAMES. Amarna age; a study of the crisis of the ancient world; with a preface by Stanley A. Cook. 464p il $3.50 Macmillan [12s 6d Black]

932 Egypt—History, Ancient

The brilliant period which Mr Baikie describes was coeval with the age of Mosaism and the traditional beginning of Israel as a people. The Amarna age has, therefore, beyond its rich significance in Egyptian history—the subtitle proclaims it "the crisis of the ancient world"—a further value for students of Biblical history. There are numerous illustrations of the works of art of the period, several maps, and an index.

"It is worth the trouble of plodding through three or four chapters, which might easily have been condensed into one, to come at length to the story of Akhenaten's reign. It is neither as intense as that of the war-like earlier rulers of the dynasty, nor as garish as the story told by Tutankhamen's tomb. In Dr. Baikie's hand, however, it has become a much more significant and more human story than any of mere battle and brazen ornament." H. S.

+ Lit R p5 D 11 '26 670w

Reviewed by A. J. Toynbee

Nation and Ath 40:390 D 11 '26 860w

"The book, though perhaps its most direct appeal is to Biblical students, should prove a useful popular introduction to the history of the period."

New Statesman 28:286 D 11 '26 320w

"Admirably illustrated, and written with full detail, Mr. Baikie's book provides a vivid picture of the dramatic story of these 300 years. His memory of the history of other lands allows him to bring in apt little touches of detail in parallelism, and one can realize that here is a widely read scholar, who has done his subject justice."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p787 N 11 '26 390w

BAIKIE, JAMES. Egyptian papyri and papyrus hunting. 324p il $3.75 Revell [10s 6d R. T. S.]

091 Egyptian language—Papyri [26-26270]

"In this latest work Mr. Baikie describes the making of papyrus, its use in Egypt, papyrus hunting in ancient and modern times, how the chief papyri of the old Egyptian times happened to be preserved, where they were found, together with a summary of the contents of the most important of them. About a hundred pages at the end of the book are devoted to the Græco-Roman papyri found in Egypt."—Lit R

Booklist 22:312 My '26

"The production of a popular and readable book of this kind is highly commendable and in the interest of the progress of science." E. G. H. Kraeling

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Mr 14 '26 480w

"A volume as racy and readable as a novel." Eugene Thwing

+ Int Bk R p293 Ap '26 40w

J Religion 6:336 My '26 150w

"Mr. Baikie, though not a professional archaeologist, has in his latest work given us another useful compendium worthy of standing beside his 'Century of Excavation' and his 'Life of the Ancient East.'" G. A. Barton

+ Lit R p10 Ap 24 '26 180w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p10 Ja 24 '26 200w

R of Rs 73:335 Mr '26 30w

Spec 136:223 F 6 '26 280w

"Altogether a most interesting book on a subject which deserves more attention than it obtains."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p847 D 10 '26 280w

BAILEY, CYRIL, ed. Mind of Rome. 516p il 2 $3.50 (8s 6d) Oxford

870.8 Latin literature—Collections

"The 'Mind of Rome' is an anthology culled from the writings, in poetry and prose, of Roman authors down to Apuleius, arranged according to subject and strung together by brief outlines of the history of each branch of literature, in the composition of which a group of scholars of the younger generation have had a hand. As it is intended for those who have no Latin, the extracts are given in English versions, generally taken from well-known translations; and where several passages from a single author are included, the compilers have wisely not limited themselves to one source; Philemon Holland, Adlington, Dryden and Saltonstall are laid under contribution as well as Conington and the moderns." (Times [London] Lit Sup) "This book is a companion to R. W. Livingstone's 'Pageant of Greece.'" (Boston Transcript)

"The translations are excellently selected, the critical and biographical sketches are admirably written, and from cover to cover the book deserves unqualified praise."

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 18 '26

"The book is attractively illustrated and if read in conjunction with an ordinary short history of Roman literature should prove not only an outline of but a real introduction to the subject." H. S.

+ Lit R p5 D 18 '26 160w

"A compact and serviceable library of excerpts from all that is most permanent in Roman literature, which many will no doubt be glad to place on their shelves beside 'The Legacy of Rome.'"

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p834 N 25 '26 400w

BAILEY, HENRY CHRISTOPHER. Mr Fortune's trials. 248p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen] 26-1059

Six detective stories continuing the adventures of Mr. Reggie Fortune, the humorous and quick-witted surgeon and scientific adviser to Scotland Yard.

Reviewed by Carty Ranck

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 My 30 '26 80w

"In any detective story it seems well nigh impossible to make the hero other than a prig, and Mr. Bailey has not avoided it. Mr. Fortune bored and blasé, with a penchant for peace and quiet, is hardly a superhero, nor in these tales are his methods those of the 'super-mensch.'"

— Boston Transcript p3 F 6 '26 350w

Reviewed by L. M. Field

Int Bk R p362 My '26 50w

"There are half a dozen very interesting tales in this volume, all of them well told." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p8 Ja 30 '26 120w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Nation 122:236 Mr 3 '26 400w

N Y World p7m Ja 10 '26 30w

"In four of the six short detective stories which compose this collection there is evident a general excellence of workmanship that should rank them with the best of their kind being written to-day. The opening tale is not up to the mark of its successful fellows."

+ — N Y World p6m Ja 24 '26 150w

BAILEY, HENRY TURNER. Tree folk. 31p il $2 Washburn & Thomas, Cambridge 38, Mass. 582 Trees 26-764

"The author has put into print his popular lecture on 'The Tree Folk.' He interprets trees by their shape, color, dress; he interprets their souls, if they have souls, and after reading the book one is inclined to think they have, by sincerity, character, co-operation; he interprets people by their friendship for trees."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 22:280 Ap '26

"We cannot agree with him that those who have heard the lecture may be disappointed in the book, because 'cold type cannot carry the mood evoked by the living voice.' It seems to us that the book must surpass the lecture, delightful as that must be, in that we can read it at our leisure and repeat that agreeable process as often as we desire."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 16 '26 460w

"Mr Bailey is an artist with voice or pen as well as with pencil. The grace of his thought is illustrated with sketches of tree forms and of several individual trees, many of them on his home estate at North Scituate."

+ Springf'd Republican p20 My 7 '26 160w

BAILEY, JOHN CANN. Walt Whitman. (English men of letters; new series) 220p $1.25 Macmillan

B or 92 Whitman, Walt 26-11705

"Anyone who reads this book will be in a position to form his own opinion of Whitman. I have quoted very freely indeed of his best and have not been very sparing in illustrations of his worst." This opening statement of the last chapter is justified by what has gone before. The author's own verdict is that while Whitman's lack of education was the chief cause of his failures and of his inability to learn from them, nevertheless his genius was great enough to overcome his handicap and in spite of it to render Whitman the great man of American letters.

Booklist 22:415 Jl '26

"Mr. Bailey's point of view in literature is uncompromisingly English, and this, of course, is what will make it impressive in our academic world. He is, I infer, an Oxford graduate of the best late Victorian traditions. He approaches Whitman in the austere critical manner of Matthew Arnold. . . Mr. Bailey's ignorance of American sentiment and civilization is fathomless." Stuart Sherman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Je 13 '26 3050w

"It will profit the study of English literature to read Mr. Bailey's sound and compact biography." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 9 '26 550w

"It is by no means unappreciative, and should prove a reasonably satisfactory guide to Whitman and his life."

+ Dial 81:518 D '26 50w

Reviewed by R. Le Gallienne

Int Bk R p681 O '26 1100w

Reviewed by Landon Robinson

Lit R p7 S 11 '26 750w

"Practically the whole of the book is concerned with literary values, and though, to be just to Mr. Bailey, we must recognize that he does not belong to the merely sensational school of critics, yet he is so preoccupied with the question: Is this or that poetry? that he simply fails to give us a definite answer to the question: What is the value of the man Whitman and his message?" Herbert Read

Nation and Ath 39:447 Jl 17 '26 1300w

"My antagonism to Mr. Bailey's point of view is based upon his open preference for the regularity of O pioneers, for example, to the sonorous sweep of the longer poems which achieve their effect partly through repetition and length, an effect which would be tedious in more regular measures. Mr. Bailey tries to be honest, just, receptive; and, faced with his effort, I can not help thinking that the quality of Whitman's verse is spoiled for him partly through the Oxford and upper-class habit of swallowing vowels, and partly because the English ear is used to a more regular beat."

— + New Repub 47:287 Jl 28 '26 550w

New Statesman 27:445 Jl 31 '26 1350w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

N Y Times p4 Ag 1 '26 2200w

N Y World p4m Jl 18 '26 160w

"It seems to us the best of the books about Whitman, with the single exception of the life by Bliss Perry."

+ Outlook 143:548 Ag 18 '26 180w

Reviewed by E. Shanks

Sat R 141:782 Je 26 '26 500w

"I hope every lover of poetry, wherever the English language is revered, will read this luciferous book. It is one of the best pieces of literary criticism of recent years. It is not headlong appreciation, nor enthusiasm, but a well-considered verdict. When I say that it adopts and carries on Matthew Arnold's tradition of high seriousness in approaching a literary problem, I say it after full deliberation."

J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 137:95 Jl 17 '26 1850w

"Mr Bailey's 'Walt Whitman' is a sensitive, appreciative and sanely discriminating work, written by a man who seems to a few zealots 'too English,' yet who understands that American writers, after all, must be permanently judged not as Americans, but as writers of the English language. . . He writes more as an expounder than as a critic, and no other volume serves equally well as a general introduction to Whitman's achievement."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f Je 6 '26 1150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p411 Je 17 '26 1400w

BAILEY, TEMPLE. Blue window. 328p $2 Penn [7s 6d Hurst & B.] 26-7352

"Hildegard goes, after her mother's death, to visit her father, who before Hildegard's birth, had divorced her mother to marry another woman; yet all his life he had loved his first wife. The young girl, fresh from the Middle Western farm, is swept up into the gay social whirl near Baltimore. She is fascinated by the glitter and surface of life lived urbanely and sophisticatedly, and it seems probable that she will be false to her poor but honest sweet-heart waiting for her in the Middle West. In the end she does the right thing."—Springf'd Republican

BAILEY, TEMPLE—Continued

Booklist 22:420 J1 '26

"The tale is told with Miss Bailey's accustomed facility."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 My 9 '26 230w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 31 '26 320w
Cleveland Open Shelf p108 S '26

"The story moves smoothly and entertainingly, as all Temple Bailey's stories do. And this one, to my thinking, makes a distinct advance for Miss Bailey. She has chosen a setting which she knows thoroughly, her characters are credible, and, let it be recorded with gratitude, she can write light romance without once growing over-sentimental." R. M. Barker

+ Lit R p7 Ap 7 '26 320w

"It is impossible to imagine anything more vapid. It smacks too much of theatricalism. The incidents are deliberately planned to produce a definite effect and the characters are shallow, mere outlines that soon fade from one's memory."

— N Y Times p41 D 12 '26 230w

"The essential childishness of Temple Bailey's characters and plots renders them uncongenial to more advanced readers, but endears her stories profoundly to the hearts of the gulleless. There are worse books published for the feminine masses, notably those of Elinor Glyn and Ruby Ayres, but not much worse."

N Y World p7m Ap 11 '26 100w

"Tolerably well written and not devoid of evidence that the author means to apply the brakes when sweetness threatens to engulf her, but the fairy tale motive is far too apparent throughout for the book to entertain readers who have passed their mental majority."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:727 Ap 17 '26 150w

"Has the elements to appeal to those who want a light fiction."

Springf'd Republican p6a Ap 11 '26 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p514 J1 29 '26 150w

BAILLIE, JOHN. Roots of religion in the human soul. 255p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

248 Religion [26-18025]

The book consists of five lectures delivered at a summer conference of ministers and religious workers at Union theological seminary, New York city, in 1925. The author inquires what religion really is and where in the human soul are the roots from which it springs. The first lecture is based upon a study of the considerable literature written during or immediately after the Great war about the religion of the men who were engaged in it.

J Religion 6:546 S '26 60w

"The book presents clear and persuasive apologetic, which will commend itself to many men who recognize their failure to respond to the realities of the Spirit."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p267 Ap 8 '26 200w

BAINVILLE, JACQUES. History of France; tr. by Alice and Christian Gauss. 483p il $3.50 (12s 6d) Appleton

944 France—History 26-6392

Written by a conservative and traditionalist this history has enjoyed a tremendous popularity in France where within a year it has passed thru 125 editions. M. Bainville tells the history of France from Cæsar's conquest of Gaul to the present day, placing his independent interpretation on the facts presented, and sometimes omitting facts which are at variance with his conclusions. His history is predominantly political and the greatness of France is mainly attributed to two forces—the monarchy and the church.

"In France, as everywhere else, everybody has been predicting that when at length somebody should come who could write the history of the country in a small volume that was clear, vigorous, interesting, and reasonably sound, he would gain instant recognition and large reward. M. Bainville has actually done it. The translation by Dean and Mrs. Christian Gauss is in the main admirable." F. M. Anderson

+ — Am Hist R 31:819 J1 '26 450w

Booklist 22:411 J1 '26

Bookm 63:609 J1 '26 200w

"There are books which are epoch-making, and books which are epoch-made. Without question, Jacques Bainville's History of France belongs to the latter category. Bainville is a bourgeois, who respects tradition in a purely traditional manner. . . . He is not satisfied with a mere string of facts. He attempts to 'explain' them. Explaining consists mostly in selecting facts of amenable temper; those which refuse to be marshaled are left out. Bainville represents the dead level of bourgeois orthodoxy." Albert Guerard

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ap 11 '26 1150w

"M. Bainville has made an always intriguing study conspicuously valuable as well, through his analyses of that political philosophy which it is possible may become the chief motive power of the great country whose chequered life-story he tells."

+ Boston Transcript p10 Ap 17 '26 650w

"This is a book of absorbing interest, at once scholarly and readable. Omitting burdensome details, the author has interpreted the salient facts of French history in a manner to show with convincing plausibility the influences that were at work and the motives underlying movements, political, spiritual, and economic." W. H. S.

+ Cath World 123:712 Ag '26 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p65 My '26

"In general, it can be said to be fair and remarkably comprehensive. The author is too French and too near the war to be able to resist occasional flings at German 'barbarism,' whether it be in the early Christian era or in the twentieth century, but, as has been said, he neither insists on his personal views nor really surreptitiously insinuates them. For any dispassionate person who knows French history, reading this volume will be a pleasure. Those who do not and who read it can enjoy it and profit by it if they remember the animus of the author." Bartlett Brebner

+ Hist Outlook 17:393 D '26 250w

"This History of France wins the reader by its nonacademic appearance alone. But let no one impugn its substantial historical scholarship for that season. The author records French history with proper emphasis on financial and political aspects. Anyone seeking highly colored paragraphs on the glittering celebrities of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries—Richelieu, Mazarin, Montespan, Pompadour, Robespierre—will be disappointed."

+ — Living Age 330:478 Ag 28 '26 380w

"The book has no doubted intrinsic merit as a narrative. The volume is illustrated with a number of well-chosen portraits of the greater personalities in French history."

+ New Statesman 27:92 My 1 '26 260w

"M. Bainville tells the story of France with an ease and beauty that transforms it into reality. Dead characters become alive. To accomplish this, Bainville uses a simple and lucid prose. The events are so precisely told that the dates hardly matter. The reader who is ignorant of the story of France will become fascinated by Bainville's treatment of events. He does not praise or glorify the stories of war and heroism, nor is he romantic about them."

+ N Y World p6m My 2 '26 420w

Outlook 143:114 My 19 '26 120w

Pratt p32 autumn '26

St Louis 24:174 Je '26

"Viewed in the light of contemporary French thought, this work of Monsieur Bainville is of real value to those who are interested in understanding modern France. Viewed simply as a history of France, it is a narrative interesting, exciting, Michelet-like, but one that must be taken with a considerable number of grains of salt." J: M. S. Allison

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:915 Jl 10 '26 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 22:296 N '26

BAKELESS, JOHN EDWIN. Origin of the next war; a study in the tensions of the modern world. 318p $2.50 Viking press [9s J. Cape] 940.5 War. European war, 1914-1918. World politics 26-7598

The author of "The economic causes of modern war" traces the ominous parallel between world conditions prior to 1914 and world conditions today, focussing attention on the present sources of tension.

Reviewed by H. D. Lasswell

Am J Soc 32:147 Jl '26 280w

Am Pol Sci R 20:706 Ag '26 70w

Booklist 22:396 Jl '26

"Temperate and scholarly volume."

Bookm 63:490 Je '26 200w

"His book is carefully considered, and shows that a tremendous amount of study has been put upon his subject. So unbiased is Mr. Bakeless, so able and willing to see his subject from all sides, that he is called by pacifists a militarist, eager to set the nations at one another's throats, and by the Conservatives a pacifist, who would preach peace at the expense of his country's safety and honor." J. W. Maury

+ Boston Transcript p10 Mr 27 '26 1850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 S '26

"It deals with its facts, its historical episodes, its arguments by enumeration rather than by analysis. One receives clearly the impression of a rehearsal of reasons rather than the process of reason itself. There has been an imperfect maturing and mellowing of the materials before they were put forth on the printed page. Despite these defects, the choice of subject is so striking and so important, and portions of it are so vivid in the telling, that it is bound to incite a healthy skepticism of our international security." C: R. Walker

+ — Ind 116:497 Ap 24 '26 1200w

Living Age 329:124 Ap 10 '26 150w

Reviewed by J: H. Holmes

Nation 122:646 Je 9 '26 600w

Reviewed by Lyman Bryson

New Repub 46:338 My 5 '26 600w

"The Origin of the Next War" is a well-planned, well-executed volume." J: Carter

+ N Y Times p1 Mr 28 '26 2600w

Outlook 143:513 Ag 11 '26 480w

R of Rs 73:558 My '26 80w

St Louis 24:161 Je '26

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby

Sat R of Lit 2:947 Jl 24 '26 300w

Spring'd Republican p7f My 2 '26 1150w

Survey 56:269 My 15 '26 40w

Times [London] Lit Sup p829 N 25 '26 450w

Wis Lib Bul 22:197 Je '26

BAKER, ALBERT EDWARD. How to understand philosophy; from Socrates to Bergson. (Doran's modern readers' bookshelf) 231p $1.25 Doran

109 Philosophy—History 26-5495

A brief and simple history of Western philosophic thought from its beginnings in Greece in the sixth century before Christ. The speculations of the great philosophers from Aristotle to Bergson and their influence on the world of thought are outlined and explained.

Booklist 22:394 Jl '26

"A valuable and instructive guide to those unacquainted with philosophic history and thought."

+ Bookm 63:365 My '26 130w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ap 26 '26 380w

Cleveland Open Shelf p99 S '26

Dial 81:176 Ag '26 40w

"It is a good book to put into the hands of thoughtful young people, who are too prone to deny any debt to the past. It would be good for them to discover in one small book how vastly great is their debt to a long ago as well as to a more recent past."

+ N Y Times p20 Mr 28 '26 350w

"Mr. Baker has such remarkable ability in presenting abstract and recondite doctrines in plain non-technical language that he succeeds in giving, without distortion, the gist of the great speculative systems in a manner which almost anyone could follow. It would be hard to find a better book for beginners in philosophy."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:653 Mr 20 '26 80w

BAKER, PHILIP JOHN NOEL. Disarmament. 366p $4 Harcourt [12s 6d Hogarth press]

341.6 Disarmament [26-17827]

"This book is an attempt to estimate the importance of disarmament in national and international policy at the present day, and to face the difficulties, both technical and political, with which the Preparatory Disarmament Committee of the League of nations will be faced. The book is intended for the general reader who wishes to explore these difficult problems and their possible solution. Incidentally, many concrete proposals for a scheme of practical disarmament are made."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Comprehensiveness is Professor Baker's object, and he has undoubtedly achieved his end. Treaties, plans, opinions, aims—all are set forth and discussed, with helpful suggestions by the author. No difficulty or phase of the subject has been avoided. The result is a splendid book for reference or study, with some chapters which should prove interesting to the general reader." G: H. Copeland

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 21 '26 480w

Boston Transcript p7 S 18 '26 980w

"Through the whole intricate subject of disarmament—encrusted as it is with technical difficulty and a thick growth of nationalist prejudice—he takes the reader with a sure hand. He has performed the miracle of treating a subject, technically very dull, in a manner both accurate and interesting." C: R. Walker

+ Ind 117:395 O 2 '26 1300w

"For a complete and masterly discussion of the concrete problems of disarmament there is no book in English comparable to Mr. Baker's, though Mr. Wheeler Bennett's collection of documents entitled, The Reduction of Armaments, forms a valuable companion to it. And his treatment is as vigorous as it is complete. He shirks no difficulty and preaches no nostrum." Gilbert Murray

+ Living Age 330:76 Jl 3 '26 900w (Reprinted from Manchester Guardian)

"This is by far the most comprehensive and clearly argued book that we have seen on the problem of disarmament. It discusses, with admirable clearness, what has been attempted, what is being, and what ought to be, attempted."

+ New Statesman 27:503 Ag 14 '26 820w

"There is a strain of idealism, but Professor Noel Baker's book is an honest attempt to treat the problem of disarmament in a practical way.

BAKER, P. J. N.—Continued

It should be in the hands of everybody who is interested in the subject and what intelligent man or woman is not?" H: E. Armstrong
+ N Y Times p1 S 12 '26 2200w

"Disarmament,' though it is so written as to be intelligible to anybody, is a serious book for serious students. It is to be regretted that there is no index, the lack of which cuts its value in half, and it is to be hoped that Professor Baker will presently write a shorter and more popular book for that wider audience which needs it so badly." J: Bakeless
+ — Sat R of Lit 3:167 O 9 '26 860w

"A temperate and a balanced presentation of the subject. It will not be found easy to upset the positions which he advances in his chapter on Reasons for disarmament."

+ Spec 136:843 My 15 '26 60w

Times [London] Lit Sup p343 My 20 '26 80w

Reviewed by W: I. Hull

World Tomorrow 9:171 O '26 620w

BALDWIN, FAITH. See Cuthrell, F.

BALDWIN, FRANCES ELIZABETH. Sumptuary legislation and personal regulation in England. (Johns Hopkins univ. studies in historical and political science) 282p $3 pa $2.50 Johns Hopkins

177.4 Sumptuary laws 26-5817

"An account of sumptuary legislation in England from the accession of Edward III to the death of Elizabeth, together with extended descriptions of English costume in that period. It is primarily a collection of facts drawn from the printed sources of information, often at second hand."—Nation

"Dr. Baldwin's greatest contribution to knowledge lies in a careful compilation of all statutes and proclamations of sumptuary nature with a full digest of their provisions. . . . Before Dr. Baldwin's final conclusions can be accepted as definitive, it will be necessary to augment her excellent analysis of the statutes with a study of the success and failure of their enforcement, based upon an investigation of the judicial manuscript materials preserved in England, rather than upon conjectures derived from preambles to acts of Parliament and from the lack of evidence in the printed sources." F. C. Dietz

— + Am Hist R 31:820 J1 '26 300w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p28 D 5 '26 170w

"This study by the professor of history in Hood College contains much of interest in the way of background as to legal control of standards of living, particularly of clothing." B: R. Andrews

J Home Econ 18:463 Ag '26 270w

"A rather pedestrian account, twice too long."

— Nation 123:199 S 1 '26 50w

Spring'd Republican p8 J1 31 '26 230w

BALDWIN, STANLEY. On England; and other addresses. 275p $3 Stokes [12s 6d P. Allan] 824 [26-15588]

In a book consisting mainly of non-political addresses, the prime minister of England discusses themes as varied as peace in industry, the classics, literature and art, education, religion and politics, Christian ideals, disarmament, and Anglo-American friendship.

Am Pol Sci R 20:916 N '26 170w

"Prime Minister Baldwin's addresses On England show a force and sturdiness of character, a breadth and liberality of view, an optimism and resolution, that have taken England through many a crisis and will take her through many more." Allan Nevins

+ Bookm 64:226 O '26 200w

"All this speechmaking is of a very transitory character. There is neither the rhetoric of Demosthenes nor the brilliance of thought of Disraeli, nor the emotional depth of Lincoln. But there is a certain indisputable cultivation of phrase and gentility of thought which will startle the American reader." H. S. Solow

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 S 19 '26 600w

Boston Transcript p1 Ag 14 '26 450w

Cath World 124:136 O '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 D '26

"It is a self-revealing book, and the self revealing is good. We see a man of honesty, simplicity, good will, practicality and humor; a man of business who is also wise in statecraft; a man who can turn from a labor dispute and discuss from experience the mental effect of studying the classics; and an Englishman who believes right royally in his England." T. S. Knowlson

+ Lit R p5 S 4 '26 520w

N Y Times p14 N 21 '26 530w

Reviewed by W: McFee

N Y World p4m Ag 22 '26 450w

St Louis 24:316 N '26

"There is nothing new in the book. Nevertheless, we welcome it warmly and hope that it will be widely read, first, because it is good matter, high-minded and broad-minded and informing; secondly, because it reveals the man to whose power and influence the country is largely committed."

+ Spec 136:806 My 1 '26 750w

Spring'd Republican p7f Ag 1 '26 1050w

Times [London] Lit Sup p318 Ap 29 '26 1050w

BALMFORTH, RAMSDEN (LAON RAMSEY, pseud.). Ethical and religious value of the drama. 250p $2.50 Greenberg [7s 6d Allen & U.]

809.2 Drama [26-14429]

"Mr. Balforth traces the development of the idea of 'the ways of God to men' through the drama of various ages, from Job down to the works of Galsworthy, Shaw and Hardy."—N Y World

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 16 '26 80w

"One does not need to agree with the interpretation that this author has put upon every play to realize and acknowledge the good piece of work that Dr. Balforth has done. The preacher, the student of literature and the lover of the drama alike have been laid under obligation by the keen analysis, the literary insight, the high moral and religious sense which he has brought to his task. And his own literary style and sympathetic sensibility are no small factor in making these dramatists living prophets to the world of today." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 12 '26 460w

"This is a futile book, though sound enough in some respects and informed by the right sort of spirit." J. R. Towse

— Lit R p18 Ap 10 '26 600w

"Mr. Balforth is careful to lose no opportunity for a moral reflection. . . . culling great thoughts from his selected dramatists and recording those they have inspired in him. The world has obviously got to be saved, as Mr. Balforth perceives, and he thinks the stage may be of great assistance."

— Nation and Ath 38:752 F 27 '26 750w

New Statesman 27:476 Ag 7 '26 420w

N Y World p6m Ap 4 '26 50w

Sat R 141:166 F 6 '26 230w

"Mr. Balforth's chapters have the qualities and defects—one had almost said the vices—of the lecture, the address. It may be granted that he does not mislead. And how should one quarrel with what, very possibly, may serve the youthful and thoughtful as introduction to the abiding problems of humanity? But in the study these short cuts to knowledge, these forced simplifications, give pause and almost distress."

Springf'd Republican p10 S 17 '26 400w
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p176 Mr 11 '26 1750w

BANKS, POLAN. Black ivory. 305p $2 Harper 26-4583

An early tragedy made of Jean Lafitte a woman hater and the enemy of one man. He became a pirate, the most daring of his kind, met his enemy and sent him to the bottom of the sea. Retiring from the sea with an almost legendary fame, he set himself up as czar of the slave runners, undisputed master of the cruel trade in black ivory, a hard too always gallant figure whose sole weakness was his love for Pierre, his brother. Then came the two greatest conflicts of his life: flattered by the enemy, whether to side with or against his adopted country in the War of 1812; and loving the same woman, whether to help or hinder his brother's suit. A dashing story in which the history and romance of the New Orleans of those days are skilfully blended.

"Just how naïve, one wonders, is the great public? If it is very much so—more, even, than one's cynicism would believe—it will accept 'Black Ivory.' There is here a devastatingly ruthless hero, but one who is childishly simple withal. There is a heroine so beautiful that she ought to be on a magazine cover, and a villain of the good old 'I'll-get-you-yet-my-beauty' school." Elizabeth Todd

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Mr 7 '26 360w

Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '26 500w

"This is a skilfully handled historical romance with excellent characterization. A very promising first novel, Mr. Sabatini may well look to his laurels!"

+ Ind 116:362 Mr 27 '26 70w

Reviewed by A. C. Bierce

Lit R p6 Ap 3 '26 200w

"Polan Banks deserves cordial congratulations upon the sparkling novel that is the first product of his pen. For it is a spirited, colorful, interesting romance that is sure to entertain and delight those who enjoy romantic fiction in a faithful historical setting."

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 14 '26 460w

"Mr. Banks has written a story so entertaining and yet so historically accurate that it should attain sufficient circulation to acquaint his readers with some incidents in the history of their country that heretofore have had little attention." H: F. Pringle

+ N Y World p7m Mr 21 '26 400w

"As a first novel, 'Black Ivory' is both a colorful and an engaging attempt. Mr. Banks has excellent hold of his background and attacks both plot and characters with spirit and fire, painting a real portrait of the reckless Frenchman and pirate, Jean Lafitte."

+ Outlook 142:534 Ap 7 '26 160w

Sat R of Lit 2:669 Mr 27 '26 200w

"'Black Ivory,' on the whole is a good story, though as a literary apple not sun-ripened to maturity."

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 4 '26 450w
Times [London] Lit Sup p772 N 4 '26 150w

Wis Lib Bul 22:230 Jl '26

BANNING, MRS MARGARET (CULKIN). Women of the family. 309p $2 Harper

26-15472

In three successive generations one of the beautiful Romer women had loved, married, and lost her reason. Mental weakness linked with startling beauty had become a tradition in the family. The young Romers aired the tradition frankly, Graham interested in the pathological side of it, Phoebe in the practical, and Sylvia, loveliest of them all, in the romantic aspect of the successive tragedies. Like her radiant predecessors Sylvia gave her whole self to love. Her young husband took her to the Middle West to live and there, out of her environment, far from those who loved and understood her, the fatal tradition seemed about to assert itself again. A courageous relative searched the history of those earlier marriages, and comparing them with Sylvia's own, found evidence that restored the young wife to life and hope.

Booklist 23:174 Ja '27

"This is a provocative and skilfully presented argument for the mentally open door in marriage." Isabel Paterson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 S 26 '26 820w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p2 O 9 '26 1550w

"The book is charmingly written—so much so that one forgives the author for stretching into a novel what could have been done adequately in a short story." M. E. U.

+ New Repub 48:306 N 3 '26 120w

"'The Women of the Family' is a fine and sincere novel. It handles a complex subject, which is usually considered 'unpleasant' and outside the range of fiction, with unflinching tact and a heartening, common sense, and not a little penetration."

+ N Y Times p8 S 12 '26 520w

"An absorbing psychological study of the part played by insanity in a family history."

+ N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 50w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

N Y World p9m O 17 '26 220w

"This is Mrs. Banning's most significant and accomplished book thus far. Her style still lacks distinction; a few of her characters might have been etched more firmly; the beginning of the book would have been better for a somewhat lighter touch, especially in the dialogues; but these are minor blemishes in a novel that achieves so much, a sincere, courageous tale, ably and entertainingly fashioned, fine-grained and sensitive in its attitude toward the subtlest of human relations."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:126 O 16 '26 380w

Wis Lib Bul 22:297 N '26

BARBOUR, RALPH HENRY (RICHARD STILLMAN POWELL, pseud.). Let's go to Florida! Information for those who haven't been but are going, those who have been and are going back, and those who don't expect to go but will. 288p il $2 Dodd

917.59 Florida—Description and travel

26-1141

Having followed the suggestion of his title, Mr Barbour writes glowingly of the reasons why others should do the same. In an early chapter he tells how to get to Florida, and in the following chapters what to expect on arrival, in the matter of climate, topography, natural resources, work, and recreation. He thus covers the whole peninsula and even goes beyond it to the Florida Keys.

Booklist 22:289 Ap '26

Bockm 63:xxvi Ap '26 100w

"Contains an interesting, though necessarily, sketchy account of the early romantic history of the state, but it is for the most part a chatty travelogue." Lorenzo Baldwin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 Ja 31 '26 300w

"He discusses it from every point of view, gives us a combination Baedeker and real estate prospectus, colored by a sense of humor, so that if there is anything you want to know about Florida you will find it cheaper to buy this book than take the trip."

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 10 '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p44 Ap '26

BARBOUR, R. H.:—Continued

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus

New Repub 46:177 Mr 31 '26 420w

"His book is entertaining as well as informing. He knows his subject thoroughly, for he is an 'old-timer' in Florida, his acquaintance by visits and residence covering forty years."

+ N Y Times p23 Mr 7 '26 200w

N Y World p6m F 7 '26 80w

Pratt p28 summer '26

R of Rs 73:335 Mr '26 40w

St Louis 24:61 Mr '26

"The state's attractions are informingly dwelt upon, and the reader recognizes that this book is neither a guide-book nor a gazeteer, but an attempt to show what Florida is really like. Home building and housekeeping, agriculture and industries, are all dwelt upon, and one feels that he is getting information from one who knows."

+ Springf'd Republican p20 Mr 26 '26 220w

BARBOUR, THOMAS. Reptiles and amphibians: their habits and adaptations. 125p il $3.50

Houghton [10s 6d Harrap]

598.1 Reptiles

26-8084

Assuming that the reader has a previous acquaintance with reptilia, amphibia, and their principal subdivisions, the author tells as simply as possible the story of their evolution and attendant adaptations to environment. There are numerous excellent photographs, and an annotated bibliography.

Booklist 23:13 O '26

Boston Transcript p5 My 1 '26 750w

"The general reader who cannot appreciate a natural history book such as this one, as colorful as its many excellent illustrations, will have only himself to blame." F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p9 My 29 '26 200w

Reviewed by Frances Pitt

Nation and Ath 40:sup364 D 4 '26 50w

Sat R of Lit 2:876 Je 19 '26 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p890 D 2 '26 200w

BARDWELL, FRANCIS. Adventure of old age; with preface by Richard C. Cabot. 298p $2

Houghton

818 Old age

26-4819

"Mr. Bardwell is an official in the Public Welfare Department of the State of Massachusetts, and in an extended introduction discusses old age as a sociological problem. The body of the book is composed of a series of very human essays and character sketches which have grown out of many years' acquaintance with the aged persons in the almshouses of the State, from Cape Cod to the Berkshires."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:353 Je '26

"All old folks who, for one reason or another, have to be 'took care of' have a loving comrade and fighting champion in Francis Bardwell. And his stories in prose and verse will be as useful to the social worker as they must be interesting and thought-provoking to any reader with a heart in his body."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Mr 28 '26 200w

"A refreshing and significant New England product. It consists of a set of human documents, brimming with truth, beauty and humor." Lucy Wright

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 8 '26 1800w

Ind 116:369 Mr 27 '26 100w

"It is a first-hand study of old people made with keen insight into character and motive, compassion that never becomes sentimental, warm understanding, and is pungent with a sense of humor."

+ N Y Times p16 F 28 '26 480w

Pratt p28 autumn '26

"One does not have to be upwards of three score and ten to appreciate the sketches drawn together under this paradoxical title. So universal are the author's sympathies and so true his perspective that youth and age both seem to be a part of the same adventure. The author's New England background strongly characterizes his work, and the book could have emanated from no other environment than that of the Bay State. It is significant in that it is the outgrowth of emotional interest as well as scientific field-work."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:617 Mr 6 '26 230w

Survey 56:550 Ag 15 '26 120w

Wis Lib Bul 22:195 Je '26

BARFIELD, OWEN. History in English words; introd. by George Philip Krapp. 223p $1.50

Doran [6s Methuen]

420 English language—Semantics [26-13004]

"Mr. Barfield's title does not quite describe the scope of his book. The first and shorter part outlines, in a somewhat elementary manner, what we can discern of the history of the English race, from its remotest Aryan origins, in the English language as we now have it. The second part is a more ambitious though sketchily executed piece of work. Here Mr. Barfield traces the history of Western thought and feeling as reflected in the changes of language, in the introduction of new words and, what is perhaps more important, the gradual introduction of new meanings for old words."—Sat R

Booklist 23:64 N '26

"Reading his book, 'History in English Words,' one feels that Owen Barfield has an intimate personal acquaintance with every word in the English language, at least with every word in common usage. He writes of them as one writes of old and loved friends, and uses them always with sympathy and understanding." T. B. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 4 '26 1000w

"He has written a volume which actually can be read with enjoyment. No reader who enjoys the volume can help but make useful addition to the word store which already is his." F. H. M.

+ Lit R p13 S 11 '26 130w

"More elementary than Mr. Pearsall Smith's Words and Idioms, it is, like that admirable work, accurate without pedantry and light without tenuity. It is, further, informed throughout by a love not merely of words but of literature, and reveals a man of no narrow cast of mind. We have indeed seen few works of the class so unpretentious and yet so exact. For a beginner of the right mental turn, we can unhesitatingly recommend it. There are a few actual errors."

+ New Statesman 26:450 Ja 23 '26 1150w

Sat R 141:95 Ja 23 '26 1150w

BARING, MAURICE. Cat's cradle. 720p il $4

Doubleday [15s Heinemann]

26-26530

"'Cat's Cradle' is exclusively concerned with the goings and comings, the loves and lives of pre-war European high society. The narrative flits from England to Rome, from Paris to Heidelberg and Odessa. The thirty-odd major characters who play vital parts in the development of his theme are of all nationalities, but only one class—the titled, the wealthy, the well-bred—and almost entirely of one faith, the Roman Catholic. . . The real narrative begins in 1850 and ends in 1914. It is concerned with an English girl, Blanche Clifford, who was married at 18 to the Roman Prince Roccapalumba. It details the life of Blanche year after year, tells of her friends, the men who fell in love with her, the women who interfered with her and of her own emotional adventures."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:420 Jl '26

"The restraint imposed by the historical basis has one advantage. There are no forced highlights or unnatural moments. Blanche is a real person."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 F 28 '26 400w

"He has lived intimately over a large area, and lived with eyes open to impressions. Over these impressions he has thought seriously and sets it all forth in a charming manner. It is a book that one reads with something of the same degree of seriousness and so thinks much about what he reads. Novels of this character are not markedly the vogue in these days of quick impressions and it is especially delightful to come across one of this dignified character." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 17 '26 850w
Cath World 123:705 Ag '26 180w

"The narrative is a mass of minutiae, of the trivial, precise details which make up daily life and are, hence, unescapable, enormously important, which crystallize into drama. In all this the reader will find fascination—it creeps slowly into the veins like a subtle drug—granted that he is rich enough to possess vast estates of leisure and that in his nature also is perseverance. 'Skippers' are warned away." Grace Willard

+ Lit R p3 Ap 17 '26 880w

"The story is long; the scenes, whether important or trifling, are described with a uniform sobriety; the writing is competent and except for a carelessness here and there, in good taste." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:186 O 31 '25 150w

"The quality which pleases me most in Mr. Baring's writing is a limpid subtlety. His pages, like very clear water, belie their depth. The respect in which I find fault is his lavishness in small circumstantial detail."

New Statesman 26:48 O 24 '25 300w

"Good memoirs, admirable memoirs; but, as a novel, something of a failure." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 26:113 N 7 '25 1100w

"Had 'Cat's Cradle' been published fifty years ago it would have appeared in three volumes, and no reader of that time would, barring anachronisms, have found anything shocking or unusual in its style or in its morality. Its style is that of Trollope, steady, sustained, wholesome and unexhilarating. Its morality is that inherent in the discipline of the Roman Catholic Church." J. Carter

N Y Times p9 F 28 '26 950w

Sat R 140:372 O 3 '25 80w

"Mr. Baring's method may have its defects, but no living writer can focus his characters, can make them as large as life and refrain from making them twice as natural, as he can." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 140:666 D 5 '25 1000w

"'Cat's Cradle' is exceptional in one thing at least. It is a book to be pondered and digested, something wherein the right kind of reader can fasten his intellectual teeth. Because it makes little or no claim upon superficial attention we cannot prophesy its popularity."

Sat R of Lit 2:58 Ag 21 '26 330w

"Long gracious novel. It is full of acute observations, and sound if not immensely penetrating psychology."

+ Spec 135:843 N 7 '25 450w

Spring'd Republican p7f My 23 '26 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p654 O 8 '25 600w

BARKER, EUGENE CAMPBELL. Life of Stephen F. Austin. 550p $5 Cokesbury press
B or 92 Austin, Stephen Fuller 26-9002

"The first account of the personality and performance of 'The Father of Texas.' Austin emerges as a gentleman cultured, sensitive, patient, tolerant, the very opposite of the burly, damn-your-eyes backwoodsman typified in Sam Houston, who came to Texas barely in time to reap what Austin had sowed and who yet has popularly been regarded as summing up in himself Texan pioneer character."—Nation

"His book is the culmination of prolonged and scholarly effort as editor and author and is the most important contribution to the history of the Southwest in recent years." E. M. Violette

+ Am Hist R 32:348 Ja '27 560w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 My 30 '26 200w

"Professor Barker has not only written of an interesting man, but he has told the story interestingly. He has quoted liberally from unpublished documents and letters, the Austin Papers having happily been preserved and being now accessible in the University of Texas and the author having consulted hundreds of other authorities. The use of the historical method of biography has given us a connected and truthful picture of a great State-builder." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 24 '26 1100w

"A remarkably clear portrait of the founder of Texas and an unimpeachably accurate history of the colonization of that State. . . This book is not a biography of a mere local hero. Stephen F. Austin belongs to the nation at large as surely as does William Penn, or George Oglethorpe, or Lord Baltimore, or Brigham Young. The larger problems of the book are national and international in scope and significance." L. W. Payne, Jr.

+ Int Bk R p570 Ag '26 1400w

"On the whole, the book is worth reading and the tedious work of the author in collecting and publishing the data should be appreciated by all who know how to value the sincere efforts of an honest historian." C. M. Talliaferro

+ Lit R p8 Jl 31 '26 550w

"A remarkable book, moving with the economy and firmness of a Cromwellian summons."

+ Nation 123:200 S 1 '26 90w

"Professor Barker has written a factual biography, complete and thoroughly well documented from several great collections of manuscripts. His narrative is graphic, easy, flowing and is made still more colorful by ample quotations from letters and other documents."

+ N Y Times p5 My 30 '26 500w

"This monographic biography is a most useful contribution to the literature concerning American expansion. It furnishes an interesting and reliable life of one who was foremost among those frontiersmen who with ax and plow and rifle won the Hispanic Southwest for the United States."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:212 O 16 '26 640w

BARMAN, CHRISTIAN AUGUSTAN. The bridge; a chapter in the history of building; il. in colour and black and white by Frank Brangwyn. 249p il $10 Dodd [31s 6d Lane]
624.1 Bridges

Christian Barman's text dealing with the structure and esthetics of bridges and written in a style which will attract both the professional reader and the layman is a fitting accompaniment to Brangwyn's paintings of European bridges, supplemented by small black-and-white drawings.

St Louis 24:245 S '26

"Mr. Barman's work should appeal to many kinds of readers, lay and professional alike. The technicalities are simply set down. Lovers of our cities and countryside, architects and engineers, borough surveyors and town councilors, motorists and pedestrians have much to learn from it, for it is not a book that merely deals with the activities of a remote past; it deals with the Principles of Bridge Building, which, like all principles, are simple in themselves but infinitely difficult in application. The subject opens up a vast field." Hubert Worthington

BARMAN, C. A.—Continued

+ Spec 137:916 N 20 '26 520w

BARNES, ALBERT C. Art in painting. 530p il $6 Harcourt

750 Painting. Painting—History 26-10056

"This is a 'monumental' attempt to render painting intelligible from the dawn of the Italian Renaissance to the present day. It contains a scientific analysis of plastic forms, and concise summaries of individual artists, with illustrations and comparisons."—Ind

Booklist 22:406 JI '26

Reviewed by R. C. Holliday

Bookm 64:97 S '26 340w

"Mr. Barnes's book is built on the observation of facts, reflection upon these facts and the testing of the conclusions by their success in application. It offers something scholarly, sound and real to replace the sentimentalism, the antiquarianism, which make futile the present courses in universities and colleges generally. 'The Art in Painting' is an original and impressive book. And what is more, it is interesting and clear." Raymond Weaver

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 31 '26 750w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 5 '26 300w

"In his conscious effort to maintain a purely objective attitude and to be unbiased by academic rules or emotional irrelevancies, the author has sacrificed artistic to scientific values—an experiment that may sorely test his reader's love of art."

— Ind 116:617 My 22 '26 80w

Reviewed by C. De Kay

Int Bk R p759 N '26 520w

"Mr. Barnes's method has the enormous advantage of being almost exclusively the result of induction, and his treatment of the development of tradition is particularly illuminating, especially in so far as it deals with the relationship existing between modern and old masters. . . Mr. Barnes's book seems to me, as one interested in the methods of criticism in general, a distinct and important contribution." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 122:259 Mr 10 '26 1100w

Nation 123:180 Ag 25 '26 20w

Reviewed by H. I. Brock

N Y Times p16 Je 20 '26 1450w

Outlook 143:223 Je 9 '26 200w

Pratt p22 summer '26

"This is an important book because it presents a systematic and confident statement of what is central in the 'modern' attitude toward painting. Its five hundred pages are the expression of an energetic critic, of an experimenter in the edification of art-appreciation, and of the owner of the finest collection of modern paintings in America." A. H. Barr, jr.

Sat R of Lit 2:948 JI 24 '26 1200w

Wis Lib Bul 22:226 JI '26

BARNES, HARRY ELMER. Genesis of the World war; an introd. to the problem of war guilt. 750p $4 (21s) Knopf

940.311 European war, 1914-1918—Causes 26-12563

"The reader must open Harry Elmer Barnes's new book, 'The Genesis of the World War,' prepared to abandon a good half of his most cherished illusions. Were France and Russia really more eager for war than Germany? Is it true that the Serbian government connived at the Serajevo murder in 1914? Has M. Poincaré, single-handed, changed the face of Europe more than Napoleon? Are he and Izvol'ski—the one-time Russian Foreign Minister who later became Ambassador in Paris—the true architects of the World War? Was the German submarine campaign justified? Were the British worse offenders against international law than their foes? Were the American people dupes of an efficient propaganda service? These are only a few of the questions raised by Mr. Barnes."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"The Genesis of the World War is no judge's verdict but the brief of a rather emotional advocate." Preston Slosson

— Am Hist R 32:319 Ja '27 1000w

Booklist 23:70 N '26

"Grim and uncompromising study of war origins. It is a breath-taking volume, though, after all, it does no more than sum up the new evidence as to the origin of the war, a good deal of which has already seen the light in various magazines in this country and abroad." J. Bakeless

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 JI 4 '26 1200w

Boston Transcript p7 Je 12 '26 1100w

"Hardly a book worth buying unless you like an intolerant plea for tolerance." Arthur Pound

— Ind 117:163 Ag 7 '26 1300w

"The book is written in this author's characteristic style—short, crisp and to the point—the kind of style that never bores. Whether we accept all its conclusions—and no careful reader will—it is nevertheless worth reading if for no other purpose than to foster intelligent Americanism." A. E. Meyer

+ Int Bk R p576 Ag '26 420w

"Mr. Barnes's book should be read by all scholars and historians. Incidentally, it is one more proof of the lively argumentative powers of its author." F. Bausman

Nation 123:198 S 1 '26 550w

Reviewed by G. L. Dickinson

New Repub 47:284 JI 28 '26 1500w

"His book cannot be dismissed with an epithet or a sneer. He has attempted, in utter sincerity and with the zeal of a prophet calling in the wilderness, to perform a necessary task. The question which his treatise raises is not whether he should have made the attempt, but whether he has been successful. And in 'The Genesis of the World War' he fails precisely in the degree that he tries to prove too much. The outcome is not altogether happy. Professor Barnes's facts are encumbered by too much emotion and too many interferences." R. L. Duffus

— N Y Times p5 Je 27 '26 2200w

"The public may reject the book and still be the gainer by its appearance. It will be read and discussed; it is sure to awaken indignation and resentment; and perhaps one happy outcome will be the arousing of the timid or somnolent historians who have left this subject almost wholly in the hands of the 'revisionists.'" W. J. Ghent

Outlook 143:286 Je 23 '26 2800w

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby

Sat R of Lit 2:947 JI 24 '26 720w

"In this large and carefully written book, Professor Barnes sets himself out to prove that of all the Great Powers engaged in the war, Germany was in fact the least to blame. The main guilt—almost the sole guilt—he attributes to France and Russia as nations, and to M. Poincaré in France and Sazanov in Russia as the men chiefly implicated. Call it a piece of special pleading if you will, the book remains a powerful instance of advocacy, fully documented and supplied with accurate references to a vast body of evidence."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:309 N 20 '26 2650w

Spec 137:440 S 18 '26 70w

"It is impossible to read this book without a feeling of exasperation, and almost despair. There is no work on this subject, including even those written during the height of the propaganda fever during the war, which is so completely unreliable, in which elementary facts are so constantly misstated, and in which every fact incompatible with this theory is so consistently ignored."

— Spring'd Republican p7f O 24 '26 1100w
Survey 56:590 S 1 '26 900w

"In writing the book Professor Barnes does not appear to have made an independent study of the original material; the method he seems to have adopted is that he has read many of the secondary works and a few also of the primary works, such as Grey's Memoirs, abstracted from them every statement or opinion which can in any way be used in support of his theses and simply ignored everything else. Again and again, when he makes some particularly outrageous statement, we find that the reference he gives in support of it is not to an original telegram or dispatch or other authoritative document, but to some book such as Ewart or Morel, not to speak of even less reliable writers such as Dupin or Morhardt."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p639 S 30 '26 1900w

World Tomorrow 9:172 O '26 150w

BARNES, HARRY ELMER. Repression of crime; studies in historical penology. 382p $2.50 Doran [10s 6d Allen & U.]

364 Crime and criminals. Prisons—United States. Punishment. Criminal law 26-11225

"The present work is not intended as a general textbook on criminology and penology. There are already admirable manuals on this subject. Rather, the aim is here to present those historical facts which will constitute the only intelligent background against which to begin the systematic study of criminal science in its present stage of development."—Preface

Reviewed by E. W. Burgess

Am J Soc 32:316 S '26 360w

Booklist 23:63 N '26

"The work is a masterly and exhaustive treatment which may be unreservedly commended to the student of sociology, the criminologist, the lawyer, and the general follower of serious books."

+ Bookm 63:718 Ag '26 100w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Ag 15 '26 550w

"Sound and entertaining." G. D. Eaton

+ Int BK R p683 O '26 1400w

Reviewed by Lorine Pruette

Nation 123:133 Ag 11 '26 850w

Reviewed by W. D. Lane

New Repub 47:370 Ag 18 '26 850w

"The historical chapters offer original material, carefully digested and ordered, which is not available elsewhere. . . The one technical criticism of the organization of the book is the fact that it is unnecessarily repetitious." C. H. Gratton

+ — N Y World p4m Je 13 '26 750w

R of Rs 73:670 Je '26 220w

"The author is over-pontifical in his general articles, and probably states the case for the psychiatrist more sweepingly than a well-balanced psychiatrist would state it for himself. But for all that, buried in the middle of the book, is a chapter on the Evolution of Modern Penology which sums up so firmly and clearly the background and promise of current ideas on the cure of crime that it deserves the widest reading." G. S.

— + Survey 56:469 Jl 15 '26 350w

BARNES, HARRY ELMER, ed. History and prospects of the social sciences; with an introd. by H. E. Barnes. 534p $5 Knopf

309 Social sciences 25-18364

"The volume is a series of chapters, each summarizing the history, the contributions, and the literature of the various fields [included]. The editor deals with history; Jean Brunhes, with human geography; H. M. Parshley, with biology; K. Young, with social psychology; A. Goldenweiser, with cultural anthropology; F. H.

Hankins, with sociology; K. W. Bigelow, with economics; W. J. Shepard, with political science; Roscoe Pound, with jurisprudence; and R. C. Givler, with ethics."—Am Hist R

"This is undoubtedly a most significant contribution to social science, viewed as a whole." N. E. Himes

+ Am Econ R 16:280 Je '26 420w

"Because of the method there is a certain unevenness in treatment and a considerable amount of repetition. Because of the wide scope of the fields covered, so much condensation is necessary that in some cases the chapters are little more than topical outlines and bibliographical lists. Nevertheless, the cumulative effect of the volume is to emphasize the complexity of the social sciences, the main contributions of the specialized fields, and the large number of scholars who have contributed to their recent development. The interrelation of the various fields is, however, left mainly to the intelligence of the reader." R. G. Gettell

— + Am Hist R 31:496 Ap '26 700w

"Not the least valuable aspect of this volume is the guidance it can give to the serious student of any phase of social science in appreciating and understanding the logical and historical interdependence of the various specialized divisions of the general field." F. N. House

+ Am J Soc 31:387 N '25 700w

Booklist 22:191 F '26

Reviewed by Paul Radin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 15 '26 950w

Boston Transcript p4 N 21 '25 1150w

"As is sure to be the case with any such collection, the papers are uneven both in conception and performance. Few could read the book without acquiring much valuable information and rounding out points of view. Yet as a whole it must be disappointing to anyone who has approached the subject with high expectation." G. Soule

+ — New Repub 46:380 My 12 '26 1000w

"A summary view of the achievements and problems of scholarship the like of which has rarely been presented in a single book." W. MacDonald

+ N Y Times p10 Ja 31 '26 2400w

Pratt p10 summer '26

Reviewed by R. G. Tugwell

Sat R of Lit 2:821 My 29 '26 1850w

"Many striking differences of outlook appear from chapter to chapter. It may be said, in general, that the more mature the writer, the less weary of the world is he and, therefore, the more fundamentally scientific is his contribution. The chapters by Goldenweiser, on Cultural Anthropology, and Pound, on Jurisprudence, are brilliant contributions to the understanding of their own fields and to the understanding of the common field."

+ — Survey 55:507 Ja 15 '26 1650w

BARNES, NELLIE, comp. American Indian love lyrics, and other verse; from the songs of the North American Indians; foreword by Mary Austin. 190p $1.75 Macmillan

897 Indians of North America—Poetry 25-24985

This little volume contains songs of love and friendship, of nature, of holy places and of prayer. A brief essay on the poetic forms used by the Amerindians is included.

Booklist 22:285 Ap '26

"The book in its matter is wholly charming, and in its learned comments tentative and illuminating." E. S. Sergeant

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ap 4 '26 400w

"Many of these have a special interest, outside the poetic, for the ethnologist and the student of religion, the rain invocations having a direct relation to the universal cults of fertility. The songs of rain and sun and planting comprise some of the most valuable and immediately pleasurable in the collection." H. B. A.

BARNES, NELLIE, comp.—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 16 '26 420w
Cleveland Open Shelf p88 Jl '26

"Perhaps to the casual reader in pursuit merely of new expression in poetry the continual repetition of certain lines in these lyrics may appear somewhat monotonous; but any one genuinely interested in the evolution of lyric forms among primitive peoples will be grateful to Miss Barnes for the authenticity of her selections."

+ Dial 80:428 My '26 100w

"I am convinced that every contemporary American poet who takes his profession seriously would do well to read Miss Barnes's collection. But I am sorry that it comes with so much apparatus." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 122:183 F 17 '26 480w

"Miss Barnes's valuable book is a compilation made from standard sources. The author's essay on Poetic Forms in American Indian Lyrics, which forms the second part of the volumes, lends it the paraphernalia of scholarship, but does little to enhance the reader's pleasure in these songs." Babette Deutsch

+ New Repub 46:373 My 12 '26 360w

Reviewed by Muna Lee

N Y Times p5 Ap 25 '26 170w

Reviewed by Hervey Allen

No Am 223:365 Je '26 700w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman

Outlook 142:182 F 3 '26 180w

"For most, it will be a strange form of beauty that Miss Barnes reveals for us, and, knowing this, I have no heart to quote even those passages that seem to me most beautiful. One must dream his way into this book; and any fragment that might be presented could easily seem no more than merely odd. In these songs, the source of poetic power is where it should be—in the dominant mood, the spiritual state of the singer, though there is no lack of beauty in symbol and rhythm." J. G. Neihardt

+ Sat R of Lit 2:680 Ap 3 '26 850w

Times [London] Lit Sup p122 F 18 '26 280w

BARNETT, GEORGE ERNEST. Chapters on machinery and labor. 161p $2 Harvard univ. press

338.4 Machinery in industry. Linotype. Stone-cutting. Glass manufacture 26-16130

"The Professor of Statistics in Johns Hopkins University writes here on the problem of the displacement of skill by machinery, studying in particular four machines, the linotype, the stoneplaner, the semi-automatic bottle machine, and the automatic bottle machine, and drawing certain conclusions about the factors involved and trade union policy."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 23:111 D '26

"The picture left in one's mind after browsing through 'industrial books' is quite likely to be a shifting, uncertain sea of words, where a few dimly visible facts bob, small and uncertain, against a darkening horizon. Professor Barnett has written another kind of a book, and, in the reviewer's opinion, a more useful type, though it frankly concerns itself only with a small and arbitrarily limited section of modern American industry." B. A.

+ Survey 57:107 O 15 '26 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p949 D 23 '26 50w

BAROJA Y NESSI, PIO. Lord of Labraz; tr. from the Spanish by Aubrey F. G. Bell. 251p $2.50 Knopf

26-15398

The background for the story is a decaying hillside town of medieval Spain where lives the Lord of Labraz in the faded grandeur of a once noble house. Don Juan de Labraz is a blind man. His exceptional nobility of character is in contrast to the wicked selfishness of his brother Ramiro whose wrongs Don Juan forgives and whose evil deeds he tries to expiate. Penniless at last, the one-time Lord of Labraz becomes a wandering mendicant, his exile cheered by the unselfish devotion of an innkeeper's daughter.

Booklist 23:174 Ja '27

"A romantic tragedy; it has pages of veritable beauty, its story is carried on with an impressive logic, and yet in its ensemble presents an appearance of weakness and strength, a mixture of motives which serve to explain the moderate enthusiasm with which he has been received outside of his own country." Matthew Josephson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 5 '26 950w

"A fine story well told."

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 4 '26 300w

"In tracing the development of the Lord of Labraz, the author contrives to paint a picture of provincial Spain; in fact, the background is almost more important than the actors. A worthwhile document by a writer of genuine significance."

+ Ind 117:253 Ag 28 '26 50w

"If not precisely a great book, 'The Lord of Labraz' is an eminently readable story, charged with drama and full of fine passages. The translation, too, is on the whole well done." J. Cournos

+ Lit R p3 Ag 21 '26 350w

"It is as true and as fantastic as a Shaw play or a Dickens melodrama. One feels a master craftsman, disdainful of his craft, throwing his treasures at us in mad profusion." A. B. Parsons

Nation 123:328 O 6 '26 860w

New Repub 48:201 O 6 '26 230w

New Statesman 28:347 D 25 '26 120w

"The Lord of Labraz' is one of the most powerful novels that Spain has sent us, with something of the spectral quality of a Goya or El Greco painting. Its translation by Mr. Aubrey F. G. Bell, perhaps the leading English Hispanophile since the death of Fitz Maurice Kelly, leaves little to be desired."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 29 '26 700w

Reviewed by G. D. Eaton

N Y World p11m O 31 '26 260w

"After an excellent opening, 'The Lord of Labraz' winds its way to a disappointing close." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 142:480 O 23 '26 80w

BARRETT, EDWARD JOHN BOYD. Man; his making and unmaking. 269p $2.50 Seltzer
131 Psychology, Pathological. Psychoanalysis 25-22473

The purpose of the book, written by a Catholic educator, professor of psychology at Georgetown university, is to give man a clearer understanding of his own nature and to help him rid his mind of fears and manias and abnormal impulses.

Reviewed by E. E. Slosson

Bookm 63:72 Mr '26 150w

"The book is alive. It deals with concrete things instead of abstract terms. It is interesting and stimulating and very readable. It will meet with criticism from some of the author's fellow psychologists. Some religious authorities may question both methods and conclusions. The man on the street, for whom it is written, will welcome the thing which he can understand and is interested in."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 2 '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p90 Jl '26

Nation 122:586 My 26 '26 120w

"It would be a mistake to assume that the book is solely of interest to the Catholic reader. It is in general a very simple and understandable summary of much present-day investigation in the field of human behavior, together with a moderate amount of preaching." H. E. Gaston

N Y World p6m Ja 10 '26 680w

"As a simple and popular exposition of some of the essential facts of mental therapy drawn from the fields of general and abnormal psychology the book contains wholesome information for the average reader."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:516 Ja 23 '26 180w

Spring'd Republican p14 Jl 16 '26 200w

BARRETT, RICHMOND BROOKS. Enemy's gates. 351p $2 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d J. Cape]

26-4779

Mark Morgenthau was an immensely wealthy Jew. Each of his three children sensed the power of the Morgenthau name, tho Morton and Jessica denied their heritage and passed when they could for Gentiles. The book tells the story of the three, but centers chiefly on the proud, sensitive figure of George, the eldest, and his marriage to Ann who tho stronger than he, is yet unable to save him from himself. His character is his destiny; stark, unrelieved catastrophe is his end.

"Mr. Barrett's Jewish atmosphere would seem equally thin beside Miss Hurst's, or say, that which G. B. Stern evokes in 'The Matriarch,' which affords a more exact comparison. Consequently, it is increasingly apparent, as the tale unfolds, that the three younger Morgenthals would have come to the same end if their name had been Smith or Jones. . . This is Mr. Barrett's second novel. It is an advance over the first, a larger canvas giving play to broader sympathies. He is cool-headed, liberal-minded, curious and in the last analysis kindly; and these qualities are among the most valuable a novelist can possess. His work ranks among the novels that demand serious consideration, not only as promise but as performance." Isabel Paterson

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 F 21 '26 1250w

"The idiom of the Morgenthals is the English of Mayfair and the French of Paris and the Riviera. Mr. Barrett has had to work skillfully beneath that scrupulous veneer; and he has given us Jews that are so true that one recognizes his Morgenthals at once when one sees them on Fifth Avenue." Horace Liveright

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 F 28 '26 580w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 13 '26 1300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p67 My '26

"'The Enemy's Gates' has in it some of the stuff that made 'Of Human Bondage' so fine a human document. It is the feel for life and its infinite pathos that makes Richmond Barrett a novelist worth watching." Marjorie Worthington

+ Int Bk R p331 Ap '26 300w

"Mr. Barrett starts off splendidly. . . The writing is still fine and often inspired, but the motives become increasingly obscure. Mr. Brooks shows immaturity in explaining rather than suggesting. And the character of George becomes a combination of terrific intensity, muddiness and contradiction that savors of the autobiographical. George is too near his maker's heart to stand alone and clear." M. M.

+ New Repub 46:81 Mr 10 '26 220w

"'The Enemy's Gates' leaves the reader profoundly shaken. Mr. Barrett has certain irritating mannerisms but his fundamentals are true and right and authentic. It is a temperate and unsentimental treatment of the prickly racial issue, but it is much more than a race-novel. 'The Enemy's Gates' illumines a dark tract of experience with the clear, bold light of truth."

+ N Y Times p8 F 28 '26 560w

"'The Enemy's Gates' has a compelling personality; it is a mature book, the outcome of a fastidious but free development of natural powers, strong and poised. Its excellence results from the fact that, in treating a vital theme, all the principles of good novel writing have been observed; character, plot and style work in conscious unity." Eva Goldbeck

+ N Y World p7m Mr 21 '26 850w

Outlook 143:256 Je 16 '26 200w

Sat R of Lit 2:687 Ap 3 '26 380w

"A sombre but extremely interesting novel, written without violence or exaggeration."

Times [London] Lit Sup p392 Je 10 '26 400w

BARRETT, SIR WILLIAM FLETCHER, and BARRETT, ROSA M. Christian science; an examination of the religion of health; completed by Rosa M. Barrett. 149p $1.75 Holt [3s 6d Dent]

289.5 Christian science

26-12576

Written by one of the founders of the Society for psychical research, the book is an unprejudiced examination of the claims of Christian science under its three aspects, philosophical, religious and therapeutic, with a brief outline of Mrs Eddy's life, an account of the literature and growth of Christian science and an explanation of its cures.

"The book is readable and is evidently sincere, but in view of the well known facts on the one hand and the authors' conclusions on the other, we are forced to believe that at least one mission of Christian Science is 'to test, in the most impressive possible way, the elasticity of human credulity.'" M. P. Ravenel

Am J Pub Health 16:833 Ag '26 500w

Booklist 23:61 N '26

"So many books dealing with this subject are one-sided, either hotly for or against the cult, that one written in a non-partisan spirit will be useful. The present work is not for disciples or antagonists but for inquirers."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 25 '26 160w

"As a scientist Sir William is logical, but he has not all the evidence at hand. He deplores the lack of an index to Mrs. Eddy's writings, although a complete concordance has been out for a decade. He speaks of the excellences of the Christian Science Monitor, evidently unaware that those qualities were originally due to the English journalist Mr. Dixon, who was finally deposed from his editorship because of his independent spirit. Despite these errors the book is valuable for its showing up of the true Mrs. Eddy." Woodbridge Riley

Nation 123:153 Ag 18 '26 500w

"Here at last is a good book on Christian Science. It is written with the same objectivity and lack of prejudice to which we are accustomed in discussions of Egyptian or Babylonian religions. Sir William Barrett and his sister are predisposed to be sympathetic. On the other hand, they have realized the necessity of a thorough investigation of their subject, and after making it give their report without fear or favor." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:853 Je 12 '26 900w

BARRETTO, LARRY. Walls of glass. 319p $2 Little

26-14385

A runaway accident left Sophy Deming a widow without resources, with a small son to bring up. Courageously she tried to make ends meet, but one after another her ventures failed. The crisis came when little Joel fell ill necessitating an expensive operation. Desperate, Sophy turned to Martin Greer, and for her son's sake accepted the equivocal position which was all he could offer her. This is a record of difficult years in a house of glass, and of their effect on those within and without its walls.

"His characterization is brilliant, his narrative technique amazing for swiftness and economy—only very occasionally does his dialogue flag a trifle. It seems to me that this novel places him well ahead of current story tellers of our generation." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:93 S '26 220w

BARRETTO, LARRY—Continued.

"Mr. Barretto's sense of character and capacity for clear thinking are rare and valuable. If he can develop a style, learn to express himself with the distinction his material deserves, he should easily become one of our foremost novelists. As it is, he is certainly among the limited number of those worth while." Isabel Paterson

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ag 8 '26 850w

"'Walls of Glass' is as different as possible from Mr. Barretto's two earlier novels. Something rather lovely seems to have disappeared from Mr. Barretto's work. In its place is the deliberate sophistication which tackles a well worn but not hackneyed subject and gives it a memorable touch by the fidelity with which he pictures all the life which centers about the race tracks." D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 14 '26 1750w

"Mr. Barretto has told this story without a superfluous word or comment. His mind is concentrated upon the telling of his story, not on airing theories or displaying his ability to give photographic reproductions of uninteresting lives. He describes the little old-fashioned world of a small New England town without a condescending smile or a superior sneer; and when the book is laid aside one realizes that a real human problem has been studied, an unusual situation has been presented, with never a protestation of the superiority of the author and his age over other people and other times. To do this and to have been born in 1890 is an unusual achievement."

+ Ind 117:162 Ag 7 '26 1200w

"While the whole story demands a fuller, richer pen it is carefully and sincerely worked out. There is nothing slipshod about Mr. Barretto's work. But how much better if his stiffening of normality were dissolved, so that his characters moved more easily, swept us up in enjoyment of a renewed vitality and into full sympathy with their tragic lives." L. G. Short

+ — Lit R p3 Ag 7 '26 550w

N Y Times p9 Ag 8 '26 600w

"In 'A Conqueror Passes' Mr. Barretto had something to say, and he has said it well. In 'Walls of Glass' he has less to say, and he says it less well. It is the work of a storyteller who gives you something to read. It is not the work of an uncompromising analyst of motive and action and character. Whatever else Mr. Barretto has done in this novel, and one can say at once that he has written it with skill and compactness, he has not translated into literature the values of life." L. Kronenberger

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:37 Ag 14 '26 550w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 22 '26 240w

"The theme is handled with rare skill."

+ Wis Lib Bul 22:274 O '26

BARREYRE, JEAN. Blind ship; tr. by Beckles Willson. 285p $2.50 Dial press [7s 6d Unwin] 26-21491

"The story is that of a ship which, setting out into lonely seas, finds in the hold a stowaway dead of a mysterious disease. Shortly afterwards first one, then another, member of the crew suffers from agonizing pains in the head and finally loses his sight, until at last the whole ship's company gropes and stumbles about like the characters in Maeterlinck's Les Aveugles. The culminating moment is when the last man is going blind and the crew are merciless in their endeavours to keep him awake, for should he sleep, how would it be possible for them to hail a passing ship for rescue? The end is pure tragedy."—Spec

"The author has tried to spin too lengthy a yarn. He had adequate material for a short story which, if, told with ever heightened intensity, might easily have been a masterpiece of its kind.

It is unfortunate Mr. Barreyre should not have perceived this."

+ — N Y Times p12 D 12 '26 610w

"Loaded with absurdities as it is, the book has imagination, and a quality of grimness that turns a laugh into a shudder." L. P. Hartley

Sat R 142:692 D 4 '26 60w

"A work which for sheer cumulative horror it would be difficult to beat. We have read nothing more powerful or moving for many years."

+ Spec 137:870 N 13 '26 120w

BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, bart. Representative plays. 439p $1.60 Scribner

822

26-10126

William Lyon Phelps writes the introductory tribute to the unique genius of the author of these plays. Contents: Quality street; The admirable Crichton; What every woman knows; Dear Brutus; The twelve-pound look; The old lady shows her medals.

Booklist 22:408 J1 '26

"As is inevitable with 'selections,' there will be some disappointment among enthusiasts for particular plays who find their favorites omitted; but in general, the collection seems a good one. For the introduction by William Lyon Phelps, this reviewer can find little praise."

+ — Ind 116:335 Mr 20 '26 230w

Lit R p8 Mr 20 '26 70w

"It is never difficult to quarrel with a collection. Every one has his best friends and when they are not asked to the party he is depressed. Why 'Mary Rose' was omitted we cannot imagine. The program notes are good in all of them. In fact, these program notes alone are just cause for any one to rush straight to the nearest bookshop and buy the volume. We have seen actors who brought far less life to their lines in Barrie plays than do the sly and understanding stage directions of the playwright." Wells Root

+ — N Y World p6m Mr 14 '26 280w

Pratt p24 summer '26

St Louis 24:248 S '26

"Certainly there will be no questioning the selection. If there is anything to dim the critical reader's pleasure, it will be the introduction by Prof Phelps. Although pleasant traces of thought and appreciation appear at random, the whole bears evidence of slap-dash dictation. Of a Yale professor and a writer of critical introductions more workmanlike expression can properly be expected."

+ — Springf'd Republican p14 Ap 9 '26 280w

Wis Lib Bul 22:139 Ap '26

BARRINGTON, E., pseud. See Beck, L. A.

BARROWS, WILLIAM EDWARD. Light, photometry and illuminating engineering, embodying a thorough revision of Light, photometry and illumination. 412p il $4 McGraw

535 Light. Photometry. Electric lighting 25-16590

"Considers both exterior and interior illumination, with considerable attention to types of installation representing modern practice. Has a chapter on 'searchlights, headlights, and floodlights.'"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 10:31 J1 '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:20 Ja '26

BARRUS, CLARA. Life and letters of John Burroughs. 2v 397:486p $12.50 Houghton

B or 92 Burroughs, John 25-23503

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:206 F '26

"It is a very apprehensible Burroughs—hospitable, wise, simple, cantankerous, stubborn, passionate, grumbling—who emerges from these two overcrowded volumes with our affection as well as respect. . . . Yet the fulness of the book responds to a certain fulness in the man. Only a powerful artist could delineate him briefly, and Miss Barrus perhaps did well to pour out her materials lavishly." Allan Nevins
+ — Bookm 62:715 F '26 950w

"Dr. Barrus had ample and excellent materials for a life of Burroughs. She has put an enormous quantity of interesting and valuable stuff between her four covers. Her book is opulent but unshapely, garrulous, flabby and a little paralytic in the organs of locomotion. . . . Criticism is not one of the merits of this work. Its total effect is indecisive." Stuart Sherman
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ja 24 '26 3700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p66 My '26

"Dr. Barrus spreads out in great abundance the materials of understanding, but has not attempted any very synthetic understanding, such as would inform the whole of her writing on Burroughs. This would have been well; the biography would thus have gained relief." C. K. Trueblood

+ — Dial 80:327 Ap '26 1400w

"In compiling these records Dr. Clara Barrus has skilfully drawn into the net of her own narrative everything that will help to portray him aright—letters, talks, excerpts from his multitudinous journals, the comments of those who knew him, his own emotional reactions to life, everything pertinent, alive, indicative. The result is amazingly harmonious, complete in outline and yet full of detail." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ Int Bk R p241 Mr '26 2250w

"A book that thoroughly and delightfully fulfills its purpose." Drake de Kay

+ Outlook 142:114 Ja 20 '26 1100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:151 Mr '26

St Louis 24:84 Ap '26

"The first volume, which carries the leisurely story to his sixty-fifth year, reads well enough; but it is to be feared that only those who believe Burroughs 'worthy of immortal regard' will survive the second volume, which begins with his sixty-fifth year and tends to oscillate monotonously between small events and large honors." Norman Foerster

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:524 Ja 30 '26 1100w

BARRY, CHARLES. Detective's holiday. 286p
$2 Dutton [3s 6d Methuen]

26-15431

An English detective on holiday in a village on the coast of France hears of the murder of a British sailor on a nearby beach. His interest is at first perfunctory—this is a matter for the French police—until discovering that an international crook well-known to him is a principal in the case he takes a hand. A ring of cocaine smugglers is involved and the crook's charming fiancée also figures largely in the story. She helps to clear up the plot, tho the dénouement comes from an unexpected quarter.

Reviewed by Carty Ranck

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 D 12 '26 130w

Boston Transcript p4 O 13 '26 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 N '26

"The tale is an average entertaining specimen of the detective story."

Lit R p12 S 4 '26 150w

"The Detective's Holiday" has the usual characteristic of detective yarns in that it stimulates the reader's mind to set up successive theories as the narrative proceeds. The author succeeds in entertaining, but he does not dramatize, to their full possibilities, the motives disclosed."

N Y Times p24 S 12 '26 250w

"In that it is well written this tale differs from the ordinary detective story, but it is hopelessly dull. It is a pity that the elements of an interesting yarn, which are certainly here, should not have fused."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:218 O 16 '26 70w

Spring'd Republican p7f O 10 '26 150w

"It is an able story of its kind, if a little wearisome in detail."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p325 Ap 29 '26 120w

BARRY, PHILIP. In a garden; a comedy in three acts; with an introd. by Arthur Hopkins. 159p $1.50 Doran

812

26-27540

"Mr. Barry deals in this play with the eternal disharmony between the instinctive and the intellectual interpretation of life. He presents the difficulty of uniting two people representing those divergent types of being in what he calls 'the faultiest of all human relations'—marriage. Lissa is the instinctive, objective, mystical soul. For her it is the thing itself that matters—not 'talk about the thing.' Terry, her husband, on the contrary, is wholly rational, analytical—the thinking animal. His profession of playwright feeds his passion for seeing the elusive myth called life in terms of motivation, of cause and effect, of predictable reflexes and inevitable reactions. The play is the story of Terry's utter failure to realize that there is a world not dreamt of in his philosophy, and that his wife has her true being in that other world, and not at all among his formulae."—Theatre Arts Mo

"Clever in construction, it has the essentials of a good play for reading or acting, although it infrequently lapses into a broad farce uncongenial with the theme."

+ — Booklist 23:123 D '26

"I was surprised to find it one of the few plays which are readable. Even the printed page seems to catch much of the whimsical quality which I felt on that winter night when I saw it for the first time. And the dialogue has all the sparkling freshness, the quiet penetration which we have come to associate with Philip Barry's work." Alan Rinehart

+ Bookm 63:xiii Ag '26 180w

"Seldom in one season will you find a better illustration of how little connection there need be between literature and the stage, or how little literary distinction can help a play if it lacks the element of the theater. Not that I would seem to imply Mr. Barry cannot write for the theater, because he can, but in this particular comedy, in addition to choosing a subtle theme, he has further removed it from the basic realities of average life by keeping half his action as the imagined plot of a novelist. But when you read it, with plenty of time to pause over it, to get yourself adjusted to the subtle planes of the action, you are captivated by its charm and revealing point."

W. P. Eaton

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 22 '26 200w

"The comedy has its gaucheries in construction and is not quite as deep as it sets out to be. But it has its honest distinctions, too. It is innocent of those sickening grimaces at the balcony which blight so much of our play-writing, and it is unflinching in its pursuit of the main idea. It is neat in its dialogue and tender and intelligent in its treatment."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:57 Ag 21 '26 380w

"In working out the conflict and ultimate catastrophe that are inherent in this situation, Mr. Barry's stage machinery becomes so elaborate that it overwhelms the plot. The final scene is halting and the curtain ineffectual. On the whole, however, the play is exceptional, especially in its fresh, if romantic, presentation of a charming woman." Helen Redlig

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 10:873 D '26 250w

BARRYMORE, JOHN. Confessions of an actor.
il $2.50 Bobbs

B or 92

26-8641

A rather slight autobiography written wittily and with a frankness that does not hesitate to turn the laugh on the author's self. It begins with some amusing reminiscences of Barrymore's impecunious youth and early performances and closes with a long and candid letter from Bernard Shaw about the Hamlet production in London. The book contains 134 unnumbered pages and many excellent illustrations.

Booklist 23:34 O '26

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My
23 '26 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p84 Jl '26

"Genial, unconventional, and interesting, Mr. Barrymore's random recollections make pleasant hot-weather reading."

Ind 117:136 Jl 31 '26 140w

"This is a volume which, escaping by a wide margin the feeble mediocrity of most of its kind, affords the reader a vigorous and sprightly life-story, told with great charm." Philo Higley

+ Int Bk R p427 Je '26 1350w

"You mustn't take it too seriously. He didn't, obviously. It is amusing, bright and quite witty. Won't take you long to read, and if you are an admirer of his to the extent of $2.50 for the privilege of having him confess to you—well, you'll get your money's worth and enjoy the experience." W. O. Tewson

Lit R p1 Ap 17 '26 120w

"The book sets out to express no more than the personality of John Barrymore, and this it does to perfection. Unquestionably, by the evidence, it is a fascinating and an arresting personality."

+ N Y Times p12 My 30 '26 1300w

Pratt p35 autumn '26

Sat R 142:810 D 25 '26 230w

"Mr Barrymore writes with an engaging care-free tone; his humor is for the most part spontaneous; he is glib, objective and anecdotal, but with pleasing, if spasmodic traces of intuitive reflection."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 My 13 '26 600w

BARTLETT, ALICE (HUNT) (MRS WILLIAM ALLEN BARTLETT), ed. Sea anthology, including one hundred original sonnets on the sea; foreword by Mark Kerr, and Bradley A. Fiske; end papers by William A. Bartlett. 160p $2 Brentano's [6s E. Macdonald]

821.08 Sea poetry

[25-828]

"Alice Hunt Bartlett, American editor of 'Poetry Review,' offered a prize for the best sonnet on the sea. First place honors were divided between Miss V. Sackville-West, in England, and Robert Hillyer, an American. [Their poems] with ninety-eight [others] go to make up the 'one hundred original sonnets' of the anthology. The remainder of the book consists in the reprinting of more or less familiar poems on the sea."—N Y Times

Bookm 63:367 My '26 100w

"Amid these addresses to the sea, the reader searches in vain for even one really fine image, one distinguished phrase, one fine thought."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 21 '25 400w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 2 '26 680w

Cleveland Open Shelf p88 Jl '26

— Dial 80:428 My '26 130w

"Many [poems] are marred by sentimentality, but the collection as a whole merits a place on the bookshelf of any poetry lover."

+ — Ind 115:743 D 26 '25 120w

Reviewed by Kenneth Campbell

Lit R p7 Mr 28 '25 500w

N Y Times p20 F 15 '25 300w

"The chief value of 'The Sea Anthology' is that of warning. While many are competent in the sonnet form, and many have a genuine feeling for the sea, not one person in ten million would be found to combine both capacities."

— N Y Times p16 F 21 '26 200w

N Y World p7m D 13 '25 120w

"Most of Mrs. Bartlett's flotsam and jetsam, will soon be submerged full fathom again until the sea gives up her dead. It is to be hoped, even then, that the majority of the poems in this book will be withheld. Some twenty pages at the close of the anthology contain a thoroughly inadequate and incompetent selection of 'sea-poems' from what is called earlier English poetry."

— Sat R of Lit 2:580 F 20 '26 270w

BARTLEY, NALBRO ISADORA (MRS HORACE LERCH). Her mother's daughter. 307p $2 Doran

26-15400

"Min Beaumont and her daughter Gloria were alike in their tendency to domineer over men and to rise in the world. As Min had managed her husband, Jules, so Gloria forced Tag Grant to abandon his profession as scientist and become vice-president of the Beaumont Baking Corporation. Gloria varied her mother's formula by getting a divorce and mingling (on Min's money) with the nobility of Europe, only to face stern realities when the family fortune disappeared."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 S 19
'26 120w

Reviewed by D. F. Gilman

Boston Transcript p3 O 2 '26 1350w

"The author has kept a stern hold on herself; she has not allowed the story to degenerate, as it easily might have done, into a sentimental novel. She has perceived where salvation lay; she has insisted throughout that every result must follow logically from causes within the character. Thus she has been able to convince in the fullest degree, and from the beginning to the end. In point of artistry Miss Bartley does not fare so well. Her narrative moves, but it moves somewhat falteringly."

+ — N Y Times p9 S 19 '26 500w

BARTON, BRUCE. Book nobody knows. 306p $2.50 Bobbs [3s 6d Constable]

220 Bible. Whole—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 26-13594

In the easy familiar style which characterized "The Man nobody knows" the author writes about the Bible, what it is, and how it came to be written. He describes the men who wrote it and discusses the people and events portrayed, concluding with a striking story of the influence of the Book.

Booklist 23:61 N '26

"Mr. Barton gives a continuity, clearness and comprehensiveness to Bible history by eliminating the things that seem to him irrelevant, by interpreting obscurities and by remembering the virtues of brevity." R. H. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 31 '26 420w

"In spite of ferocious attacks of cheapness, Mr. Barton has a deep respect for the Book's spirit and its legends. He seems thoroughly sincere, too, in his desire to be a good guide, to present something which deserves to be looked into as intelligently and sympathetically as possible. Though every one of the quotations with which his swift journey is punctuated sings out aloud and confounds his journealese, his flip skimmings, his agile compressions, one realizes that he has done a job which had to be done." R. L.

New Repub 48:251 O 20 '26 820w

"The two volumes, 'The Man Nobody Knows' and 'The Book Nobody Knows,' form a highly interesting contribution at the present time, when much has been said of the general irreligion of the world. The welcome accorded Mr.

Barton's interesting presentations lends color to the often-expressed conviction that an intense revival of religious feeling only waits the appearance of the man who can apply the Bible to modern conditions. Mr. Barton has done something in preparing the way of clarifying the biblical material on which such a revival would, of necessity, depend."

+ N Y Times p12 S 5 '26 600w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p8s J1 4 '26 1000w

Outlook 144:26 S 1 '26 100w

R of Rs 74:334 S '26 140w

"Such a book will doubtless occasionally accomplish its ultimate purpose, but it will leave most readers on its own plane of familiar quotations and Bible conundrums. It can hardly be preferred to the equally simple books on the Bible published by men of more thorough knowledge, who at least avoid some of the most obvious errors of the serial writer and columnist." H: J. Cadbury

Sat R of Lit 3:39 Ag 14 '26 180w

"It is no easy task which Mr. Barton has set himself, but he has carried it out with a brevity, a humour, and grasp of general principles that are admirable." E. S. Hicks

+ Spec 137:973 N 27 '26 400w

Springf'd Republican p6 S 7 '26 170w

BARTON, GEORGE. Little Journeys around old Philadelphia. 325p il $1.75 Reilly, P.

917.48 Philadelphia—Description 26-7888

Anecdotes and quotations from historic documents illuminate this description of Philadelphia's interesting old landmarks. There are several illustrations by Frank H. Taylor.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ap 26 '26 80w

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 30 '26 1000w

"His narrative sense happily runs away with his interest in description of places and so saves his account from being just another guide-book."

+ N Y Times p20 Ap 25 '26 330w

"The book is pleasantly gossipy and informing—hardly a guide book, but well designed to whet popular interest in the one-time Quaker city in this sesquicentennial year."

+ Springf'd Republican p20 Ap 30 '26 350w

BARTON, LARRY J. Refining metals electrically. 414p $6 (30s) Penton pub.

669.1 Electrometallurgy. Electric furnaces. Steel metallurgy 26-5462

"The first book devoted to electric furnace practice in the foundry. Based partly on experience of the author and to a great extent on material compiled from many sources. The numerous references in the text and the accompanying bibliography enhance the value of the work, even though not always cited with strict accuracy."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 11:35 J1 '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:566 N '26

BARTON, WILLIAM ELEAZAR. A beautiful blunder; the true story of Lincoln's letter to Mrs Lydia A. Bixby. ltd autographed ed 136p $5 Bobbs

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham. Bixby, Mrs Lydia (Parker) 26-9720

The biographer of Lincoln has made a painstaking study of the facts concerning the president's beautiful letter to Mrs Lydia Bixby, of Boston, the original of which has strangely enough disappeared. After stating all the facts he has uncovered about the letter, he gives a brief account of its recipient, and of the war record of her sons. Mr Barton's study forces him to the conclusion that of Mrs Bixby's five sons only two were killed in action and that Lincoln's noble letter, being thus based on misinformation, was in truth a beautiful blunder.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 30 '26 300w

Reviewed by E. L. Shuman

Int Bk R p372 My '26 900w

"Dr Barton has done a careful and highly interesting piece of historical research."

+ Outlook 143:257 Je 16 '26 180w

Sat R of Lit 2:875 Je 19 '26 220w

BARTON, WILLIAM ELEAZAR. My faith in immortality. 282p $2.50 Bobbs

237 Immortality 26-8557

A reasoned and persuasive setting forth of the author's belief in life after death, with chapters that discuss science and immortality, communication, prayers for the dead, and heaven.

Booklist 23:5 O '26

"Read this book and add it to your library for others to read. It brightens life." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 63:xv Je '26 160w

"He discusses faith in a life beyond the grave as well as other central points of religious belief and experience in fifteen chapters distinguished by much charm of manner."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 My 30 '26 120w

Boston Transcript p4 My 8 '26 250w

J Religion 6:336 My '26 30w

Reviewed by H: J. Cadbury

Sat R of Lit 3:39 Ag 14 '26 240w

BASHFORD, HENRY HOWARTH. Happy ghost, and other stories. 280p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Heinemann]

26-26271

These twenty stories gathered from many periodicals are of wide variety and interest. Now and then there occurs the trick ending familiar to readers of O. Henry. Contents: The happy ghost; Father Prescott's creed; Mr Parchester and the gods; Back to the trees; The escape; Before dinner; Maud; Crossing the bridge; The brink; The last of the aristocrats; Farquarson; The bishop's move; God and the bud openers; The human factor; Mr Curgenvven-Curgenvven; The gentleman upstairs; The waiter whose hand shook; Good beds for gentlemen; The miracle; The gardener of Eden.

Booklist 22:329 My '26

Reviewed by L. F. Hellman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 9 '26 260w

"These stories deserve attention from American readers. They are never commonplace, not for an instant; and like all writers blessed with true originality, Dr. Bashford prefaces his work with no explanations. He imitates no one; he is far too intent upon rounding out by fine workmanship a collection of brilliants. Precious gems these, nothing semi-precious about them." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 20 '26 430w

Dial 81:172 Ag '26 120w

Ind 116:588 My 15 '26 50w

Reviewed by Edwin Muir

Nation and Ath 38:326 N 28 '26 30w

"Some twenty pleasant, readable tales—lightly imaginative, humorous, somewhat but very well mannered, three or four stand out as really vigorous bits of narrative art. The greater part are only a little better than mediocre, and one hopes comparatively insignificant as prophecies of Mr. Bashford's capacity."

+ — New Repub 47:263 J1 21 '26 80w

"As is inevitable in the case of fugitive stories selected from various sources Mr. Bashford's present collection is of uneven merit. But while none of the stories is of great importance, the average is fairly high and all are more or less entertaining."

New Statesman 26:368 Ja 2 '26 160w

BASHFORD, H. H.—Continued.

"It is unfortunate that not all of Mr. Bashford's stories reach the same high level. But on the whole his work displays the impress of a nimble and versatile mind; it is the product of one who knows how to write and moreover has something to write about; and as such it will appeal to that considerable audience which finds that distinguished short stories are becoming increasingly rare."

+ N Y Times p17 Mr 28 '26 630w

"Naturally, in all collections of short stories the quality is uneven, but there are three here good enough for any story anthology—'God and the Bud-Openers,' 'The Miracle,' and 'Maud.'"

Outlook 142:498 Mr 31 '26 80w

"These are very competent short stories of the lighter sort, and perhaps even the trick-ending must be forgiven them. Debonair of mood, ingenious in design, and neatly put together, they may confidently be placed by the bedside of even an exigent guest."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:651 Mr 20 '26 100w

"Mr. Bashford, happily, is as skilful as he is various, and out of twenty stories there is but one, 'The Bud Openers,' which does not justify its reappearance."

+ — Spec 136:499 Mr 13 '26 80w

"This author pays his readers the compliment of being able to follow the thread of a story without tiresome explanation of the perfectly obvious, and he never clutters up a story with useless characters. Mention should be made of an almost perfect war story, 'The Human Factor,' wherein the greater tragedy took place far from any battlefield."

+ Springfield Republican p7f D 12 '26 160w

"This is a book to which one can return; there is laughter in its pages; and Mr. Bashford's terse, rather dry, style is very enjoyable."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p757 N 12 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 22:141 Ap '25

BASSETT, JOHN SPENCER, ed. Southern plantation overseer; as revealed in his letters. (Fiftieth anniversary publications) 280p il $3.50 Smith college

326 Plantation life. Slavery in the United States. Polk, James Knox 25-25971

These letters present in a new light the much misrepresented figure of the plantation overseer, who was often a man of intelligence and native ability, but possessing little or no education. The letters are taken from the correspondence of James K. Polk, and describe the administration of Polk's plantation in Tennessee.

"No student of the plantation epoch, whatever may be the leading of his interest, can afford to neglect Professor Bassett's work." F. P. Gaines

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Mr 21 '26 680w

"To the reader not professionally interested in the social history of plantation life, the great abundance of petty details begins to pall after the first interest in bygone customs and amusement at quaint spelling and phraseology has faded. The book is primarily source material. In it there is much of interest to the casual reader, but there is more of value to the historian." E. B. S.

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 13 '26 550w

"No student of the plantation epoch can neglect this comprehensive and lucid study."

+ Nation 123:227 S 8 '26 320w

BASYE, ARTHUR HERBERT. Lords commissioners of trade and plantations; commonly known as the Board of trade, 1748-1782. (Yale historical publications. Miscellany) 240p $2.50 Yale univ. press

325.3 Great Britain.Board of trade 25-25963

"Dr. Basye has added another to the growing list of modern studies dealing with the history of the administrative relations between the British Government and the American colonies. The history of the Board of Trade shows a curious mixture of commercial and political interests. Created in response to a demand of British merchants for more effective control of colonial trade, it appears to have been regarded by William III, who established it, as a useful device for preventing the encroachment of Parliament upon the royal prerogative. It never possessed real power, yet it succeeded in keeping closely in touch with colonial affairs and making itself a factor of importance in the development of colonial policy."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 2 '26 300w

"We have nothing but praise for this painstaking study of an English Department, whose history, as a sidelight upon Anglo-American relations during the eighteenth century, American scholars have made their own. Dr. Basye has the advantage of following many careful bibliographers and writers (amongst whom Andrewes is not least), and is thus enabled to summarize concisely and judiciously the results of their work, as well as to add to all this his own researches, which have by no means been slight."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p640 S 30 '26 480w

BATE, STANLEY C. Synthesis of benzene derivatives. 229p $6 Van Nostrand [21s Benn]

547.26 Benzene [Agr26-798]

"This volume was designed to fill the gap which exists between the textbooks of organic chemistry and the laboratory manuals of organic preparations. The author gives a general discussion of the more important methods employed in the synthesis of derivatives of benzene. No attempt is made to discuss theories or to give specific laboratory directions."—Ind & Eng Chem

"'The synthesis of Benzene Derivatives' has made available in short and concise form the various methods of preparing aromatic compounds. Its use as a guide and reference book will be appreciated by all chemists interested in synthetic organic chemistry. The volume is very readable and is logically arranged." P. H. Groggins

+ Chem & Met Eng 33:428 Jl '26 550w

"The work is not intended to be exhaustive, but it could very profitably have been more complete. Many of the discussions are so brief as to leave the significance and possibilities of a reaction much in doubt. . . . However, this volume does fill a real need, and would be a valuable addition to any chemical library. A study of this book would be advantageous to every student of organic preparations and also a useful auxiliary text in preparation courses." Lyman Chalkley, Jr.

+ — Ind & Eng Chem 18:765 Jl '26 270w

BATES, HERBERT ERNEST. Two sisters; with a foreword by Edward Garnett. 320p $2 Viking press [7s 6d J. Cape]

26-19720

The first novel of a young Englishman of twenty unfolds a tragic drama of youth in a Midlands village, with a turbulent river in the background of the picture. The two sisters, Jenny and Tessie, live in a gloomy house with an eccentric, mad father and two brothers between whom a feud exists. The real drama begins when Michael, the river-man, strangely enters their lives. Both sisters love him, and he loves Jenny. Michael's drowning in the perilous river waters brings the sisters near to each other and the closing chapter is a tender scene picturing the two sisters many years later, still beautiful and having about them a strange radiance springing from the inner light of their common love and its memories.

"The essentials of 'The Two Sisters' are not the essentials distilled out of life lived to the full or the wise and humorous folktales of a grown people; but the essentials of defeated youth, turned in on itself and content to die if death is the price of feeling. The beauty and the sureness of Mr. Bates's telling is the proof of the clearness with which he recalls that bitter-sweet torment."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 12 '26 480w

Boston Transcript p4 N 13 '26 230w
Dial 82:72 Ja '27 100w

"The poetic quality of Mr. Bates' prose, his sensitiveness to his characters, and his flash of beauty herald a writer of charm and distinction. Here is a first novel which has the definite flavor of a new individual, one who, if he chooses the difficult path of art, is destined to go far." Madeleine Thayer

+ Lit R p7 O 16 '26 720w

"There are many poetical passages in a book which seeks the truth of the world within faithfully and is beyond doubt a work of genius."

+ Living Age 330:431 Ag 21 '26 300w (Reprinted from Morning Post)

"The plot is scanty and the action slow, but there is not a dull page in the book. It is one of the few novels of which the publishers' remarks on the jacket are true description."

+ Living Age 331:470 D 1 '26 120w

"Mr. Bates has certainly created an atmosphere of tensely and disturbance, but only by the short-cut way of omission; which shows us the sisters on the crests of their emotional waves, and shirks the intermediate troughs of daily life. Mr. Garnett, in his laudatory preface to 'The Two Sisters,' commends this exclusive method by the name of 'artistic economy,' but it is carried dangerously near the point of niggardly evasion; and, unfortunately, Mr. Bates does not extend his economy to style. With all its crudities and sins of omission, 'The Two Sisters' stands by itself, a surprising achievement of the imagination."

+ — Nation and Ath 39:476 J1 24 '26 240w

"Mr. Bates is a young writer, who has not yet got control of his medium, but he shows remarkable promise. He has written a fantasy rather than a novel—and that not without the introduction of such painfully prosaic affairs as family squabbles and stuffy bedrooms! But he is not really at home with the prosaic." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 27:613 S 11 '26 100w

"In its writing, the book, though often lacking in sure mastery, shows a very definite talent. It lacks, no doubt, a certain guiding power as it lacks insight into character, strict narrative unity, and a continuously compelling interest. But these are compensated for by less usual merits, and even many of its shortcomings are justified by the aims of the book." L. Kronenberger

+ — N Y Times p11 S 26 '26 900w

N Y World p11m N 28 '26 300w

"Mr. Bates's group of external facts is extremely feeble; the outside world scarcely exists for him, and his references to it, when not simply impressionistic, are puerile. But his presentation of the passion felt by the two sisters for the stranger Michael is most remarkable; and, so long as one can turn a blind eye to its ludicrous side, it sweeps one along like a flood. The frequent uncouthness of Mr. Bates's style is no obstacle here; it is the awkwardness of someone sure of his aim but uncertain of himself, purposeful and clumsy as a puppy waddling towards a bone." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 142:47 J1 10 '26 450w

"An element of poetic beauty, due to the elimination of non-essentials, pervades 'The Two Sisters' the first novel of a young man of twenty."

+ Spec 137:66 J1 10 '26 100w

"No novelist wants to write only for critics; and when a book is sent out overweighted with praise, the ordinary reader may feel as if he had been warned off. It will be a pity if this is so because, whatever its weaknesses 'The Two Sisters' has freshness and great descriptive beauty, and something of the touching inexpressiveness of youth as well."

Times [London] Lit Sup p524 Ag 5 '26 350w

BAUER, MARION, and PEYSER, ETHEL ROSE. How music grew, from prehistoric times to the present day; with an introd. by William J. Henderson. 602p il $4.50 Putnam 780.9 Music—History and criticism. Musicians 25-25112

"The theme is concerned with the actual creators of music and their methods and instruments, so that the singers are left out of the scheme. The purpose is to show music constantly as a living, growing, developing art, vital to man's life, and this aim is admirably realized. The immense amount of material is so well organized and arranged that the reader sees, quite vividly, the growth of music as a continuous evolution."—N Y Times

"This history of music is comprehensive and accurate, and is told in a simple, straightforward style suitable for older children as well as adults."

+ Booklist 22:283 Ap '26

"We cannot but regret such infelicities of style and treatment as appear on page 457 marking America's entrance into the story. But where so much is excellent, we do not propose to be captious in criticism. 'How Music Grew' is a distinct contribution to musical literature and the building of America's musical life." Dorothy Lawton

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 F 7 '26 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p111 S '26

"There are some instances of carelessness and error, and the style is unfortunately gushing; but its many good points outbalance its defects." M. G. Bonner

+ — Int Bk R p450 Je '26 60w

Nation 122:560 My 19 '26 100w

"This is in many ways an excellent book. It contains an immense amount of information about music and its development, about instruments, composers, and musicians. The style in which the authors sometimes write is a little irritating, but that is a very small point where there are so many things to praise."

+ — Nation and Ath 39:22 Ap 3 '26 100w

"The work is so comprehensive and most of it is so interestingly and picturesquely written that it is like a vast procession of the makers of music."

+ N Y Times p18 Ja 17 '26 380w

"Superficial though such a survey must be, it brings together a vast amount of information, and is written in a pleasant, anecdotal, although rather exclamatory style."

+ — Outlook 142:298 F 24 '26 230w

St Louis 24:79 Ap '26

"Familiar facts and hackneyed legends are transcribed for the benefit of the 'dear young reader from nine to ninety,' but with so much inaccuracy and such a gushing confusion of thought and words as to make the benefit dubious."

— Sat R of Lit 2:468 Ja 2 '26 250w

"A huge number of facts of all kinds have been stitched into the fabric of the story, some of them having only a casual connexion with the main theme, which is not so much developed as built up by a process of accretion. This discursive method has its attractions, though the style sometimes becomes jerky, owing to the necessity of being concise."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p236 Ap 15 '26 300w

BAUSMAN, FREDERICK. Facing Europe. 330p $3 Century

940.5 Great Britain—Foreign relations. United States—Foreign relations. Europe—Politics. European war, 1914-1918—Causes. Debts, Public 26-19643

Judge Bausman describes the European nations of today as a disorderly, envious and quarrelsome family intensely bitter in their attitude toward the United States and resentful of our claims upon them in the way of war debts. He maintains that the Allies beguiled us into this war by fake propaganda, concealing both the origins of the war and their secret profits, while we got no share in the conquests. He believes that Europe, including Britain, will ultimately decline to pay its debts to this country, and that the inevitable trade rivalry between the British Empire and the United States will lead Great Britain to deal with us as she has dealt with her great trade rivals of the past, Spain, France, Holland and Germany.

"The book seems unduly depressing and holds out no ray of hope save the arming of our people to the utmost degree and the assertion of our every right." R. M. Field

— Lit R p9 D 4 '26 420w

"Judge Bausman's book will be welcomed by those who are opposed to the cancellation of America's European debts, and it will convert some of the undecided. The book has failings and errors, but the contentions are sound and the case is not overstated. . . The chapters that deal with Wilson, Page, and House are the best. Here the author has found his stride. The evidence is well marshaled and there is keen analysis. Less good are the chapters dealing with war origins and propaganda." E. R. Henderson

+ — Nation 123:564 D 1 '26 800w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 49:21 N 24 '26 1300w

BAXTER, RICHARD. Autobiography of Richard Baxter; being the Reliquiae Baxterianae abridged from the folio (1696), with introd., appendices and notes, by J. M. Lloyd Thomas. 312p il $3 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

B or 92

26-5713

Following Powicke's "Life of the Reverend Richard Baxter" (Book Review Digest, 1925) comes an abridgment of the autobiography of this great Puritan divine. It shows an austere, yet human and lovable figure and one not without appeal to the sympathetic modern mind.

"J. M. Lloyd Thomas has retained the piquancy of Baxter's own words, and contributed a fascinating study of Baxter's character and genius." W. J. C.

Bookm 63:xxxiii Mr '26 70w

"The volume is enthralling from cover to cover, and is a great mine of treasure unearthed." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 20 '26 1900w

Reviewed by Llewelyn Powys

Dial 81:155 Ag '26 1300w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

Lit R p10 Ja 30 '26 650w

"Many, perhaps, know his fine character and beautiful unselfishness. Those who do not should read this record, full of shrewd and homely touches, and devoid of that canting use of texts which was the common practice of his day."

+ Sat R 140:668 D 5 '25 230w

"Mr. Thomas has wisely gone back to Baxter's own Narrative with its freshness and vividness of style, and has given it to the modern reader in somewhat reduced form, the less interesting and valuable sections being omitted. We have a convenient and comfortable-sized volume of three hundred pages together with a carefully written and penetrating Introduction of thirty-seven pages." R. M. Jones

+ Sat R of Lit 2:750 My 1 '26 620w

Spec 135:889 N 14 '25 800w

"The reader has in hand the best possible account of one of the outstanding personages of English history, not only ecclesiastical; his greatness, his foibles, his unflinching truthfulness, and his shrewd comments on contemporaries."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p887 D 17 '25 200w

BAYNES, NORMAN HEPBURN. Byzantine empire. (Home univ. lib. of modern knowledge) 256p $1 Holt [2s 6d Williams & N.] 949.5 Byzantine empire 26-6916

"This little book is an attempt to sketch in brief outline some aspects of the East Roman civilisation, to recall the names of some of those famous men who were honoured in their generations and were the glory of their times. . . Broadly our survey extends from the founding of New Rome in the fourth century to its capture by the Crusaders in 1204."—Introd.

Booklist 23:26 O '26

"This little book is one of the very best in a series that always maintained a very high standard."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 S 5 '26 280w

"Compact in content and concise in expression. The author makes no pretense of an attempt to do more than touch upon the pivotal points of Byzantine history. But he does it so well he makes interesting reading for a quiet hour."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 17 '26 250w

"The little volume's readable expositions of what today owes the dead Byzantine past is not the least factor in its interest." F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p8 My 8 '26 120w

"Mr. Baynes's book is a welcome counterpart in English, by a leading English Byzantinist, to Professor Charles Diehl's 'Byzance: Grandeur et Décadence' and 'Histoire de l'Empire Byzantin.' The writer gives a comprehensive and straightforward picture of a vanished world." A. J. Toynbee

+ Nation and Ath 38:812 Mr 13 '26 620w

Pratt p33 autumn '26

"Mr. Baynes's book is seen at once to have two advantages. It has a most excellent bibliography, which adds very greatly to its value. All the best books on the city itself, as well as on history, law, art and economics, are referred to. Indeed, the only points we have noticed for criticism in these lists are the strange omission of all the books of Rivoira, as well as that of Kraus. The other advantage of Mr. Baynes's book is that, being in the Home University Library, it is small and light."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p109 F 18 '26 700w

Wis Lib Bul 22:171 My '26

BEACH, JOSEPH WARREN. Outlook for American prose. 285p $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press [12s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

810.4 American literature—History and criticism. Style, Literary 26-19094

In these essays reprinted from various periodicals Mr Beach attempts a candid evaluation of American prose today as represented by such writers as Sherwood Anderson, Joseph Hergesheimer, Theodore Dreiser, James Branch Cabell, Alfred Kreymborg, Carl Sandburg, Henry Mencken, Stuart Sherman, and Frederick O'Brien. Most of the essays are concerned with matters of style and diction.

Booklist 23:123 D '26

"It is so well written, so well founded on a definite viewpoint, that it cannot be lightly disregarded. Mr. Beach's estimates of various of our own authors and of English men of letters are startling, yet shrewd." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:224 O '26 350w

Reviewed by G: F. Whicher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 D 26 '26 950w

"What we like best about Mr. Beach's essays is that they are explicit. He has a fine sense of balance, but he does not use it to teeter on the fence. He takes his stand very firmly on one side or the other, though he frequently changes his position to gain different viewpoints." M. S. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 31 '26 1100w

"Like most volumes made up of magazine essays, it leaves a scattered and unsatisfactory impression. Two of the best essays are 'Proud Words' and 'Sawing the Air.'"

— + Ind 117:367 S 25 '26 100w

"Mr. Beach finds the most hopeful signs of a distinguished prose art in America, and whether or not you agree with him, you will have to reckon with his arresting dicta on the luminaries of the day."

+ J Geol 34:adv O '26 320w

"You will want to read this book for the vigor of its outlook upon American prose and for its timely comment on some of the most interesting figures in modern literature."

+ Mod Philol 24:adv N '26 580w

"Call this book Papers on Contemporary Style and one can credit it with more than usual discernment and good sense. The shortcomings of such a book would be less grave than those of a book called The Outlook for American Prose, though one important shortcoming would still exist. Style in this book—whatever its title—is not considered in the one sense where it has real meaning, in the sense of organic creation. Style is art and personality, not grammar and definitions, and too often Professor Beach stops with the grammar and definitions... This book is easy and pleasant to read, but to borrow a phrase, it consecrates the flicker, not the flame." L: Kronenberger

— + New Repub 49:22 N 24 '26 600w

"In view of his lucid and picturesque expression and his penetrating thought, we might wish for a book not fashioned of separate essays but molded as an entity, with the form and shapeliness so much admired in good prose composition. Professor Beach has so many essential things to say that deserve superlative statement! Despite this exiguous reservation, the present reviewer cannot express too highly his enthusiasm for Professor Beach's critical labors." J. B. Atkinson

+ N Y Times p2 S 12 '26 1950w

"He writes a clear, unaffected prose, driving home his points, and adding a leaven of humor for good measure. What is it, then, that takes away from this sound criticism all its critical value? Frankly, it is the incredible lack of standards which Mr. Beach reveals through his enthusiasms." Ernest Boyd

— + Sat R of Lit 3:336 N 27 '26 1150w

"The most brilliant book of American criticism produced this year is also the most precise and, in the best sense, academic. It suffers only from excess of scheme and of 'style.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p8 N 27 '26 950w

"The book contains not only a great deal of valuable criticism of the present in America but some good criticism of the present in England. And this book is interesting, beyond the interest of its subject matter, in its critical method. Mr. Beach will be a useful critic in America, he would be a useful critic here; for he is a critic with an equipment which is rare: that is, an understanding of the principles of grammar and language."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p577 S 2 '26 750w

BEACH, REX ELLINGWOOD. Padlocked. 336p $2 Harper

26-13794

Henry Gilbert was one of the ultra prudish to whom all things are suspect. His insinuations about his young daughter's probable mode of life drove his wife to suicide and Edith herself out of the house. For all her surface sophistication Edith was an innocent soul. She went to New York and wanting to be a singer accepted the backing of a wealthy promoter. She made the wrong kind of friends and misunderstood the attentions of the one man who really wanted to help her. One dreadful thing after another happened to her with the culminating horror caused by her father. Retribution came to him at the hands of his second wife, while Edith's vindication was complete, and her nobility of character justly rewarded.

"Mr. Beach being a master of technique, handles his situations well. But they are crude, hopelessly cheap, arranged for the speculative bids of moving picture magnates."

— + Boston Transcript p4 J1 31 '26 360w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 D '26

"Like all of Rex Beach's previous books, it is a rattling good yarn. He modestly likes it a little himself, but he would not go so far as to say it was his best book." H. C. Burr

+ Int Bk R p565 Ag '26 950w

Reviewed by Landon Robinson

Lit R p3 J1 24 '26 460w

"'Padlocked' should lead the field as a best seller until the melancholy days are come. It is not caviare, it is not white bread; but it is a harmless candy confection."

N Y Times p9 Ag 1 '26 450w

"It is wildly improbable. An analysis of 'Padlocked' as a story (not, of course, a literary effort) can bring only the verdict that it is not convincing, in many respects hackneyed, and certainly completely lacking in subtlety." H. P.

— N Y World p4m J1 25 '26 260w

"The book is flecked with clever epigrams and some thoroughly modern repartee, which provides a literary sauce for a conventionally patterned story."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7f S 12 '26 200w

BEARD, PATTEN. Complete playcraft book. 2 364p il $2.50 Stokes

790 Handicraft. Paper work. Games

26-20518

The title is scarcely an overstatement of the contents for here is a compilation of the best ideas from Miss Beard's three earlier books (Jolly book of boxcraft, Jolly book of playcraft, Jolly book of funcraft) together with eight new chapters full of things to make from spoons, nuts, fruits, and paper. There are illustrations from photographs of someone's successful attempts to follow instructions, and diagrams show how it was done.

"A child will surely cry to stay home from school and work with such a book! Verily, there are a few things under the sun, and the author of this ingenious volume has discovered some of them for the amusement of the children."

+ N Y Times p26 D 19 '26 180w

"It contains enough suggestions, fortified with drawings, pictures and diagrams, to keep a household of boys and girls occupied on stormy days for the rest of the season."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 D 21 '26 150w

BEAUCLERK, HELEN. Green lacquer pavilion. 319p il $2.50 Doran [8s 6d Collins]

26-16533

"A sumptuously bound and printed book with illustrations by Mr. Edmond Dulac, which tells in graciously ornate style of what befell the members of an eighteenth century country house party. The witty and the robust gentlemen, the gay or demure ladies, all in exquisite

BEAUCLERK, HELEN—Continued
costume, are suddenly wafted away to China, where they meet with all sorts of adventures and quarrel or woo according to taste."—Spec

"If you like fantasy, then, be sure you will feel drawn toward 'The Green Lacquer Pavilion.' Even if you do not like fantasy you, Gentle Reader, with your 'discernment, wit, and understanding,' will appreciate a style which is mannered, sometimes precious, but always vivid and endearing in its charm." M. L. White
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 26 '26 650w

"Not for a long time have we read so cleverly enticing a novel." F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p6 O 16 '26 950w

"Related in a calm and leisurely style which frequently achieves passages of thoughtful beauty and expresses shrewd observation. The author has made a happy choice in uniting to ideal wanderings the mortal characteristics of the most misjudged of all periods."
+ Nation and Ath 39:394 J1 3 '26 220w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy
New Statesman 27:499 Ag 14 '26 250w

"All the grace of Miss Beauclerk's style 'can not prevent this book from being for the most part dull. It is neither lively burlesque on the one hand nor charming romance on the other; it is neither a delicious portrait of manners nor a lightly blown piece of naughtiness. Here and there are touches of poetry and humor, but more often there is nothing but a detailed story that does not quite hold one's attention. The book, in a word, is too tame."
— + N Y Times p8 S 12 '26 980w

"We may say at once that much of the book is, to use its own idiom, 'vastly agreeable.' It is always carefully and often beautifully written; ornate and precious, it yet survives both ornament and preciosity. It has an unflinching sense of period." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 141:782 Je 26 '26 380w

"This is country already pretty well homesteaded by Mr. Cabell, and any author who adventures in it must be prepared for comparison with him. Miss Beauclerk's story lacks the inveterate nastiness that disfigures his works, but it also lacks the incessant play of humor that makes them entertaining in every paragraph. Miss Beauclerk's style, however, is suave and polished, agreeable and easy to read."
+ — Sat R of Lit 3:218 O 16 '26 250w

"An air of easy artifice suffuses the book, which provides much gently agreeable reading, and would make a most acceptable gift out of season, or birthday present."
+ Spec 136:1012 Je 12 '26 100w

"There are not a few, we will wager, who will be monstrously entertained by the grace of the descriptions, the propriety of the speeches and the morality of the episodes. As for the loves of Lady Taveridge and Safr, and of Clare and the princess—these are renderings of the tender passion, which will touch the heart, edify the mind and delight the imagination."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p338 My 20 '26 500w

BECK, MRS L. ADAMS (E. BARRINGTON, pseud.). Dreams and delights. 317p $2.50 Dodd
26-17630

The occult wisdom of the Orient is the fabric of these stories, many of which describe the excursion of a westerner into the psychic experiences of the East. A number of the tales have appeared in Asia and the Atlantic. Contents: "V: Lydiat"; The sea of lilies; The bride of a god; The beloved of the gods; The hidden one; The marriage of the princess; The wisdom of the Orient; Stately Julia; The Island of pearls; The wonderful pilgrimage to Amarnath; The man without a sword.

"China, India, Japan, Ceylon, England, Canada and the Garden of Eden all enter into this latest and in many ways, best collection of the short stories of L. Adams Beck."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 4 '26 380w

Reviewed by A. W. Colton
Sat R of Lit 3:273 N 6 '26 560w

BECK, MRS L. ADAMS (E. BARRINGTON, pseud.). The exquisite Perdita. 377p $2.50 Dodd

Robinson, Mrs Mary (Darby)—Fiction
26-13798

"This historical novel is founded on the life of Perdita Robinson, a famous beauty of the late Eighteenth Century. She had the misfortune to possess brains, a conscience, and a worthless husband, which made life extremely difficult for such a pretty lady. This sympathetic study of Mrs. Robinson starts at the time Richard Brinsley Sheridan and David Garrick became interested in her stage career and continues through the years when she was mistress to George IV, and then to Charles Fox."
—Ind

Reviewed by Frances Newman
Bookm 64:227 O '26 180w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 J1 18 '26 1450w

"Many there are, no doubt, who will be so pleased with this story that they will read it to the very end. Others there will be for whom one chapter, or two chapters at the most, will be sufficient. For it is all written in a familiar pseudo later eighteenth century English language which contains as many frills and furbelows as did the clothes of that period. The conversation is stagey, stilted, factitious, a twentieth century hybrid version of the sort of speech only to be read in veracious chronicles of its own period. Yet since E. Barrington has charmed multitudes of readers in 'The Divine Lady,' she will doubtless charm the same multitudes in 'The Exquisite Perdita.'" E. F. Edgett

— + Boston Transcript p4 J1 17 '26 1450w
Cleveland Open Shelf p106 S '26

Reviewed by L. M. Field
Int Bk R p618 S '26 900w
Ind 117:85 J1 17 '26 120w

"The 'Exquisite Perdita' will please many. . . But really—, it is too long and there are too many tears, and too many clothes, and too many graces, and too many words." Walter Yust

+ — Lit R p3 J1 17 '26 680w

"For all its intricate intrigue, the novel lacks dramatic movement after the middle. The sparkle and charm evaporates and nothing seems to remain but the dreary business of winding up the ends of the plot. And it does seem that E. Barrington has blanketed her end in too gloomy a close even for that brilliant failure, Sheridan. He was a wit to the bitter end." Edwin Clark

— + N Y Times p9 J1 18 '26 1250w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p4m J1 18 '26 1200w

"Mrs. Barrington has written an interesting book. She has wisely refrained from imitating too precisely contemporary fashions of speech; her dialogue, like the dialogue of nineteenth-century historical novels, is a kind of poetic jargon, the accredited language of Romance. Her style is apt to be too florid." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 142:350 S 25 '26 560w

"One wishes that the impersonal narrative of it might have slipped less clumsily in and out of an eighteenth century manner. Nevertheless the tale as a tale is succulent, flled with piquant situations and a paste-like sparkle. It will doubtless be immensely popular and many will find an additional charm and a virtuous satisfaction in the belief that romance is here tinctured with learning." Grace Frank

+ — Sat R of Lit 4:935 J1 17 '26 600w

Spec 137:443 S 18 '26 300w
 Spring'd Republican p7f Ag 22 '26 500w
 Times [London] Lit Sup p656 S 30 '26
 260w

BECK, MRS L. ADAMS (E. BARRINGTON, pseud.). Splendour of Asia; the story and teaching of the Buddha. 269p $2.50 Dodd
 294 Buddha and Buddhism 26-7191

The life of Gotama Buddha is told in the rich cadence of an oriental prose poem. His painless birth, the princely pleasures of his youth, his felicitous marriage crowned by the birth of a son, the loving conspiracy of father and wife to keep from him all knowledge of evil and pain, all these but lead to renunciation. The young prince takes up the long and painful pilgrimage which ends in spiritual attainment—and the teachings of the Buddha.

"The reader who turns to the Buddhist Scriptures in the Pali writings will be impressed by the insight, the constructive delicacy and creative illumination with which L. Adams Beck invokes for us the spirit of the Enlightened One. To choose with intelligence from so bewildering a mass of material, to reject with discrimination, to arrange with inevitable taste, and to interpret with a mind open to correction—these are the qualities of the acceptable biographer and historian; to them our author adds the charm of a literary style at one with her theme, and the novelist's magic gift of making a hero come alive." Florence Converse

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf My '26 580w

Booklist 22:375 Je '26

Reviewed by L. G. Marshall
 Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Mr
 28 '26 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p91 Jl '26

"Twenty-five hundred years ago the Buddha taught those who would hear him; with rare insight, Mrs. Beck has captured the persuasive gentleness and beauty of a very noble character and has enshrined his life and teaching in lovely prose."

+ Ind 116:498 Ap 24 '26 100w

"Her style is poetic, exuberant with gorgeous pictures and metaphoric imagery. Her book abounds in descriptions couched in a rapturous prose, phrasing a glorified delight in natural beauty, tho with a restraint and dignity compatible with the loftiness of her subject." W: R. Langfeld

+ Int Bk R p518 Jl '26 400w

"Mrs Beck is eloquent and persuasive in presenting a story of great beauty. Her communication is marred, however, by ponderous 'fine writing' which is almost as unprepossessing as that of Dr. Samuel Johnson in his didactic tale, Rasselas. In spite of her atrocious prose, however, The Splendor of Asia gives a fair account of a difficult theme."

+ — N Y Times p7 O 3 '26 620w

BEDFORD, HERBERT. Robert Schumann, his life and work. (Masters of music) 267p $2 Harper [7s 6d K. Paul]

B or 92 Schumann, Robert Alexander
 26-166

Beginning with a sketch of the romantic movement of which Schumann was one of the chief exponents the author follows the development of Schumann's life and genius, with a chapter on his methods and technique and a list of his works.

"Though not an outstanding book, it is however, more diverting and easier to read than Niecks, Robert Schumann."

Booklist 22:247 Mr '26

"Mr. Bedford is strongly burdened with his little insular sense of moral obligations and he reads Schumann more than one righteous lecture on his youthful habits of extravagance, his ungentlemanly practice of appealing to his family for money. However, the book is concise and readable, and it has real value in the clear, ordered perspective it affords of Schumann's life experiences." P: Bowdoin

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 2 '26 450w

"Mr. Bedford has not succeeded in revealing Schumann's personality."

— Nation and Ath 38:446 D 19 '25 100w

"Mr. Bedford is rather apt to wander from his theme into vague ineffective generalisation, and an occasional unattractive jauntiness mars his style."

— New Statesman 26:360 Ja 2 '26 30w
 Pratt p32 summer '26

"Covers more or less familiar ground adequately, without making pretensions to either literary or aesthetic subtleties."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p767 N
 19 '25 60w

"A well written biography presenting the personality of Schumann most vividly."

+ Wis Lib Bul 22:138 Ap '26

BEDFORD, JESSIE. See Godfrey, E., pseud.

BEDFORD-JONES, HENRY (JOHN WYCLIFFE, pseud.). Rodomont. 335p $2 Putnam
 [7s 6d Hurst & B.]

26-4946

The scene of this tale of romance and adventure is Mont St Michel in the days of Louis XIV. The hero, Rodomont, has a mission to the Mont to deliver a letter. But the letter which gains him admission to the monastery proves to be an order for the imprisonment of the bearer, Rodomont soon discovers that he is in the midst of complicated intrigues from which he plans escape through the help of a queer misshapen brother of the monastery. Rodomont's friend and fellow Canadian arranges for a boat to rescue the escaping prisoners, but through his carelessness a great fight is precipitated which is the climax of the story. However, out of great perils the conspirators make good their escape to England.

Booklist 22:375 Je '26

"It is a pleasing yarn of simple souls involved in unlikely adventure." Mary Willcox
 + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ap 26 '26 460w

Boston Transcript p6 My 5 '26 300w

Reviewed by Dorothy Kaucher
 Lit R p8 My 29 '26 250w

"In spite of the conventional paraphernalia that the author employs so freely, the story is told with a zest and rapidity that keep the reader's interest constantly awake. As a source of historical information the novel has but little value, for the author does not depict his setting with any great detail; but as a source of entertainment it fulfills its purpose and will enable the reader to spend an exciting and even blood-curdling hour or two."

+ N Y Times p22 Mr 28 '26 480w

"Few late adventure romances of our ken maintain their action throughout at so violent a pitch as one finds here. It is a vigorous, well written tale."

+ N Y World p7m Ap 4 '26 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p937 D 16 '26
 130w

BEEBE, WILLIAM. Arcturus adventure; an account of the New York zoological society's first oceanographic expedition. 439p il $6 (25s) Putnam

591.986 Arcturus (ship). Galapagos islands—Description and travel. Keeling islands. Scientific expeditions. New York zoological society. Marine fauna 26-26558

"Here is Mr. Beebe's official account of the voyage of the Arcturus to the Sargasso Sea and the Galapagos region in the Pacific. Mr. Beebe [found], besides an erupting volcano and a river of lava flowing into the sea, a bookful of strange, interesting things, ranging from

BEEBE, WILLIAM—Continued
microscopic organisms to first-class devil-fish, whales, and other bulky marvels of the deep."—
Ind

Booklist 22:403 J1 '26

"The Arcturus Adventure" is not his best book, but it is a good one. In it the sea personalities, flora and fauna, are given their usual glamorous place, and the whole narrative is illuminated by Mr. Beebe's exquisite style, ably augmented by Ruth Rose. There are no travel books quite like these, and the scientist is always soundly back of the romancer." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:705 Ag '26 280w

"I am grateful to Mr. Beebe as I am to the sailors who first crossed the surface of the Pacific. He has dived in the spirit of Columbus, to discover a new world. His report from the borders of it has an exciting fresh eloquence and an imagery that is lustrous, rich, and strange. It is thrilling with his eager sense of untrodden vistas, unfathomed caverns and canyons, wide untraversed continents, filled with unimaginable marvels—waiting for their Magellan." Stuart Sherman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 30 '26 3100w

Reviewed by E. B. Schriftgiesser
Boston Transcript p2 Je 19 '26 1350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p86 J1 '26

"The story is so enthralling that if Mr Beebe were to write a similar account of an expedition to the New York Aquarium, visitors would be booking reservations eight weeks in advance. His description of the kaleidoscopic movement of life undersea is the outstanding chapter in a continuously excellent book."

+ Dial 81:445 N '26 140w

"A thoroughly readable volume, splendidly illustrated, dealing with all manner of strange and interesting things and dealing with them adequately and well. It is no reflection on Mr. Beebe's scientific attainments to say that his ability as a writer distinguishes him from his fellows. They are inarticularly scientific; he is intensely articulate and a scientist." D. R.

+ Ind 116:695 Je 12 '26 1050w

"Truly, 'The Arcturus Adventure' is well named—it is an adventure not only for the author but for the reader, an adventure into little known but fascinating domains of science, an adventure that opens up not only new vistas but new universes for the inquiring mind. And yet, like the author's previous works the book is not only scientific in content but popular in style; it is not made difficult by a technical terminology and is palpably not intended for the specialist; it is a volume that any alert reader may follow with interest, and that not a few will find absorbing, for not many writers of avowed romance have been able to imagine scenes stranger and more fascinating than Mr. Beebe, has depicted with all the sobriety of truth." S. A. Coblentz

+ Int Bk R p512 J1 '26 1300w

Reviewed by Fullerton Waldo
Lit R p2 Je 19 '26 750w

"His gift is reporting, not philosophizing. In 'Galapagos,' a glorious story of a glowing experience, he arrived. In 'The Arcturus Adventure' he seems desperately conscious of that arrival. It isn't good enough for William Beebe, who remains one of the rare human scientists capable of writing for laymen." L. S. Gannett
Nation 123:225 S 8 '26 430w

Reviewed by Gilbert Thomas
Nation and Ath 40:194 N 6 '26 110w

"This is a typical Beebe book, full of strange information and painfully acquired detail, the result of months of unremitting toil and scientific research, and all served up as cheerily and breezily as though it were a conjuring trick at a children's party or a new kind of magic-lantern show."

+ New Statesman 28:145 N 13 '26 700w
N Y New Tech Bks 11:35 J1 '26

"It is hard to do justice in a short space to a book so varied and so enormously entertaining. And it is impossible to indicate the beauty of many of the drawings and colored plates. Isabel Cooper's colored plates are gorgeous, and there are some delicate things by Don Dickerman, Dwight Franklin and Helen Tee-Van. For strangely enough, there is often liveliness of color in fish which live in the Stygian blackness of the great depths." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p1 My 23 '26 1900w

St Louis 24:240 S '26

"Few recent travel books are so full of true enthusiasm, and arouse so much of it in the reader."

+ Sat R 142:557 N 6 '26 1000w

"It is a kaleidoscopic, glittering book, bright with Beebe's joy in color, swift with his joy in action. With all this, it is solid. It is the book of a savant, but a delightfully human savant, more human, infinitely more alive than most of us. The ordinary scientists would have called the book 'The Arcturus Expedition.'" H. R. Sass

+ Sat R of Lit 2:867 Je 19 '26 900w

"If anybody has seen a more beautiful and fascinating book than this we should like to hear about it. This book is a gift from America to the world."

+ Spec 137:sup580 O 9 '26 780w

Times [London] Lit Sup p918 D 9 '26 60w

Reviewed by Alexander Petrunkevitch
Yale R n s 16:405 Ja '27 350w

BEEIDING, FRANCIS. Little white hag. 320p
$2 Little [7s 6d Hutchinson] 26-1451

"Two Americans match wits with a gang of criminals who are controlling the illicit drug trade. When one is in the clutches of the enemy and at death's door, his friend rescues him, and then vice versa. So thrilling that it is slightly monotonous. Will be liked by Oppenheim readers."—Cleveland

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 F 14 '26 130w

Boston Transcript p4 F 24 '26 280w
Cleveland Open Shelf p68 My '26

"This exciting story is rather like an Oppenheim novel, but not quite so good. The formula is similar but the magic is not there."

— + Ind 116:194 F 13 '26 80w

"Interesting and well told." L. M. Field
+ Int Bk R p362 My '26 100w

Reviewed by A. C. Bierce
Lit R p12 F 13 '26 220w

"Thrills, suspense, surprises, dangers, mysteries—here is a novel replete with them all and having a complicated plot which in the first few pages enmeshes the reader in its entanglements so completely that he will be loath to drop the book until he has threaded the last passage in its maze and learned how all its mysteries and complications turn out."

+ N Y Times p25 Ja 31 '26 480w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 24 '26 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p121 F 18 '26 100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:110 Mr '26

BEER, THOMAS. Mauve decade; American life at the end of the nineteenth century. 268p
$3.50 (12s 6d) Knopf

973.8 United States—Intellectual life. United States—Civilization. Nineteenth century. American literature—History and criticism 26-9922

In a book brimming with color and vitality and lacking no illustrative detail which it was possible to gather from books, unpublished letters or oral tradition, Mr Beer has depicted the period of the nineties in America. Stroke on stroke, he brings to life its women, morals, politics, society, literature, the West, the Irish—the personalities and the state of mind of the period—and dramatizes them all. By way of contrast and effective background for his picture, the book opens with a little group of New England transcendentalists gathered around the open grave of Ralph Waldo Emerson, while Bronson Alcott "drawled out the lines of a dire poem."

Booklist 22:413 J1 '26

"By far his most brilliant performance. Its pages sparkle with wit and with a keen sense of the opposing value of events to the historian—or perhaps we might call him the histographer," J. F.

+ Bookm 63:475 Je '26 450w

"Mr. Beer must be an enormously diligent student of his period, 1890-1900. He must have read volumes, studied scores of pictures, rummaged the files of old journals, for many a page and paragraph of his book. His writing steadily implies knowledge extensive, detailed, intimate. But here is no outpoured cornucopia. The materials are completely transmuted by the esthetic consciousness. This narrative moves as to the sound of flutes and recorders. It is an harmonious and musical composition. It is an arrangement of brilliant pictures as brightly suggestive as a Japanese screen. We have never had such writing in America before." Stuart Sherman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ap 26 '26 2700w

Reviewed by J. W. Lane, Jr.

Boston Transcript p3 Je 12 '26 1700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p119 N '26

Dial 81:354 O '26 70w

"It has the romantic brilliance of 'Sandoval' and the biographical irony of 'Stephen Crane,' the fascination of a work of fiction and the stimulating quality of a first-rate piece of historical research. There is biography in this volume and autobiography, literary and social history, politics, and even fiction, but all these elements are fused by a witty imagination and a glamorous style into a narrative which conceals the author's tireless patience and labor beneath a scintillating surface." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 116:552 My 8 '26 1250w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 116:581 My 15 '26 1200w

"Wonderful pictures, memorable and humorous anecdotes, cynical observations, a keen sense of the ridiculous, judicious evaluation (as in the chapter on magazines especially)—well, with all these one has quite a book." C. H. Grattan

+ Int Bk R p437 Je '26 1100w

"Mr. Beer is much more than the flippant retailer of sophisticated paradoxes and semi-indecencies. Devoid of hack-writing instincts, he has no ax to grind. He is unchronological, occasionally profound and invariably interesting. . . Those who know what literary labor pains are will—in the midst of the sheer delight of reading—recognize 'The Mauve Decade' as a painful work, wrought out in the spirit of sacrifice which is felt only by those who care for what they do. Anyway you look at it and whatever its omissions and faults, Beer's book certainly deserves to be studied as the work of one of our best." T. L. Masson

+ Lit R p1 My 1 '26 2550w

"'The Mauve Decade' is not easy reading, nor was it easy writing. The research was difficult enough, requiring as it did a pair of hands to stir the particular thick dust of an age more talked about than known; and Mr. Beer has fairly plunged his hands in that deposit. But he labored even more steadily over his style, which is so mannered that only a minority will understand it, let alone like it. I like it, though I was always aware that the wielder of it wavered a bit too much between the methods of history and of fiction." Mark Van Doren

Nation 122:556 My 19 '26 600w

"He is so well furnished with discernment, fortified with knowledge painstakingly acquired, that he might have been more generously patient with the limitations of the giants of a less illuminated age. That is, he might—but then his own age is still the age of paradox, invented in its own first decade by Mr. Shaw and Mr. Chesterton. . . Yet you are wrong if you take Mr. Beer for a mere paradoxer. In fact, the clear-eyed, arrogant young man educated at New Haven has made a most valuable contribution to the record of facts and the perspective of persons in the period." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 25 '26 2500w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p4 Je 20 '26 1250w

Pratt p34 autumn '26

St Louis 24:172 Je '26

"Mr. Beer's style is rather like [certain] windows: it excludes enlightenment and almost defeats curiosity. It gives the impression that he cannot possibly have anything interesting to say. But he has. His subject is the development of American life during the 'nineties,' and a reader who has the patience to discover how rich is his material and how well he has selected and arranged it will be only the angrier at his method of presenting it. I have rarely read a more irritating book, but, I must add almost reluctantly, rarely one more exciting."

+ Sat R 142:288 S 11 '26 550w

"This brilliant and curious study of the late '80s and the '90s is not history at all in any recognized classification, but rather impressionistic literature in which, facet by facet, the form and pressure of a period are put together and made to sparkle from every angle. . . Obscure sometimes, too clever often, this book nevertheless shows what has been wrong with the writing of American history and wrong with the study of American literature. Too impressionistic for a final account, too inconsecutive for easy reading, too full of brilliant epigrams to be altogether true, it demonstrates the failure of soberer writers to get at the truth with their laborious progressions of cause and effect."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:718 Ap 17 '26 950w

Sat R of Lit 2:881 Je 26 '26 230w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 29 '26 600w

"You will enjoy his penetrant, if mannered, comment on the high gods and folly of the day, and find in his own distastes and condescensions signs that help explain our later revolt in both manners and morals." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 56:331 Je 1 '26 250w

"As a review of a period The Mauve Decade is prejudiced, no doubt, but always stimulating and lively; it presents a crowded scene with knowledge and humour, and contains odd bits of information that the social historian may loot later on."

Times [London] Lit Sup p576 S 2 '26 950w

BEERBOHM, MAX. Observations. 58p 1l $7.50 Doubleday [25s Heinemann]

827 Caricatures and cartoons [26-8662]

"In 'Observations' he presents the old and new orders side by side, and always to the disadvantage of the latter. Again and again he marches out his old troupe of burlesquers and sets them performing—Swinburne, Jowett, Gosse, Balfour, Wells, Shaw, Wilde, Beardsley and the rest—and his comic sequence called 'The Young Self and the Old Self,' nineteen applied colloquies between youth and age, contains some of his finest effects in caricature."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"In terms of æsthetics Mr. Beerbohm is not a draftsman at all. For his own purposes, however, his drawing is consummate, and that is all that can be asked of an artist. He has a genius for likenesses; better than anyone else he understands how to convey the attitudes of his subjects; and his point of view is not less penetrating than original. Add to these humor without venom and refined imagination and you have lifted caricature into the realm of art." T: Craven

BEERBOHM, MAX—Continued

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 F 7 '26 850w

N Y World p6m D 27 '25 70w

Reviewed by Bohun Lynch

Sat R 140:540 N 7 '25 650w

"It is, for the most part, a volume of the rarest humor of our time, revealing an intelligence sharp as a misericord. The coup de grace to pretension was never more dexterously given. And this merciful dagger of graphite has impaled some gorgeous lepidoptera!"

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:461 Ja 2 '26 530w

"In matters of purely intellectual comment his wit is piercing, and it is above all a pictorial wit. The best caricatures in this volume are those of the Brothers Sitwell, of Mr. Lytton Strachey, and of the old and young selves of Mr. Bennett confronted. In each the drawing speaks for itself, the design is harmonious, the satire is included."

+ Spec 135:1192 D 26 '25 300w

Reviewed by Helen MacAfee

Yale R n s 15:813 Jl '26 500w

BEETHOVEN, LUDWIG VAN. Beethoven's letters; with explanatory notes by A. C. Kallischer; tr. with preface by J. S. Shedlock; selected and ed. by A. Eaglefield-Hull. 410p il $5 Dutton [10s 6d Dent]

B or 92

The letters are arranged chronologically and not according to content. They have been selected to keep within the limits of a single volume, and to interest the general reader rather than the student of music or of history. Explanatory notes are included where necessary.

Bookm 64:108 S '26 200w

"The material given in these pages is all familiar, and on the whole it presents a fair self-portrait of the composer." P: Bowdoin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p31 N 21 '26 350w

Boston Transcript p3 My 22 '26 250w

"The original English translation has long been out of print and copies of it are no longer readily accessible. On this account this revised, condensed and handsomely printed edition containing all the really pertinent matter relating to Beethoven's work and character, will be heartily welcome to the musical students of the rising generation." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p2 My 8 '26 600w

Nation and Ath 39:sup298 Je 12 '26 60w

New Statesman 27:236 Je 12 '26 1100w

Reviewed by R: Aldrich

N Y Times p14 My 30 '26 200w

"This is much handier than the original edition of 1909 in two volumes, and saves the general reader the trouble of weeding out the less significant letters. The preface by Shedlock is very worth while."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:211 O 16 '26 360w

Reviewed by Alan Porter

Spec 136:371 F 27 '26 620w

Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 18 '26 1250w

BEGBIE, HAROLD (GENTLEMAN WITH A DUSTER, pseud.). Broken lights; a short study on the varieties of Christian opinion. 173p $1.50 Doran [5s Mills & Boon]

280 Modernism. Christianity. Sects 26-12573

Beginning with a summary of the origin and nature of the religious impulse Mr Begbie goes on to examine the differences and agreements of the Roman Catholic, Anglo-Catholic and liberal Evangelical faith, to sketch the history of Modernism and to explain the differences which separate the conservative and the extreme in this school of religious thought. A chapter on mysticism is included, and one on agnosticism.

Booklist 23:61 N '26

Pratt p9 autumn '26

"Those who read Mr. Harold Begbie's newspaper articles on the various phases of religious belief will be glad to know that he has expanded them into a book which is a model of clearness and of fairness. Anglo-Catholic, Evangelical, Modernist, Quaker, Methodist and Agnostic alike are caught in the sympathetic web of his mind and thoughtfully examined." E. S. H.

+ Spec 136:675 Ap 10 '26 180w

"The average man will certainly profit by reading this book, and may come to believe, with the author, that 'every school of religious opinion is a beam of light broken from the white radiance of eternity.'"

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p239 Mr 25 '26 360w

BEGBIE, HAROLD (GENTLEMAN WITH A DUSTER, pseud.). The other door. 315p $2 Doran

26-19725

Turning to fiction the "gentleman with a duster" writes a story of contemporary aristocratic life in England, with a strong undercurrent of religious and social philosophizing.

"The mysticism is delicately and convincingly done; the sturdy common sense of Emily and Lord Roger reassure you. But of course the value of the volume, and such it has, distinctly, is its picture of the confused spiritual and mental life of England of the present day. And the author follows a gleam." I. W. L.

Boston Transcript p1 D 11 '26 720w

"'A Gentleman With a Duster' has tried to write a great novel. Perhaps it is because he is so adept in getting actual people and events down on paper that he cannot realize the necessity of making imagined people actual. At any rate, for some reason, he has omitted the necessary creative act." J. M. Cassidy

Lit R p5 D 4 '26 320w

"An unnecessarily edifying but platitudinous tract on religion and the aristocracy, these themes, also, evidently requiring a love interest before they become comprehensible." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 40:89 O 16 '26 30w

"His defect as a novelist would seem to be that he is more interested in ideas than in persons: all the same, some of his characters in The Other Door are quite convincing." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 27:740 O 9 '26 60w

"Where the Gentleman of the Duster has been successful in his characterization, his novel comes off well. His younger characters are not drawn with the same insight. They are blurred and escape him. Probably the direction of the plot has warped them from naturalness. Yet 'The Other Door' remains a stimulating, if uneven, novel."

+ N Y Times p33 N 21 '26 620w

"The most recent offering of the Gentleman with a Duster is unexpected to the point of being shocking. Not only has he abandoned the field of gossipy portraiture of the preëminent, but he has committed the grave social error of introducing God into a work of fiction."

— Sat R of Lit 3:471 D 25 '26 360w

BEGBIE, HAROLD (GENTLEMAN WITH A DUSTER, pseud.). State of England; conditions political, financial, industrial and social, 1925 (Eng title Declension). 149p $1.75 Putnam

330.942 Great Britain—Economic conditions. Great Britain—Social conditions 25-24993

Essays alarmist and pessimistic in tone expressing the author's views about England's decline, morally, economically and politically. Contents: Economic foundations—Signs of unsoundness—A thesis of life.

Am Pol Sci R 20:925 N '26 50w

Booklist 22:232 Mr '26

"This is distinctly a cruel book, yet it is provocative of profound thought."

Bookm 63:240 Ap '26 100w

"On the whole, I think his view of England is rather superficial and too despondent." H: W. Nevins

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 F 7 '26 780w

"These may indeed be anxious days for England, but one doubts if they deserve the lamentations of this anonymous and pontifical journalist. In his lament over the decay of morals and manners, the corruption of the rich, the faltering leadership of the aristocracy and the Church he develops into a very second-rate Jeremiah."

— Ind 115:716 D 19 '25 220w

"What the Dustman says of England is the truth, but only half the truth. He sees a land of orgy and bestiality. But this also is the land that promotes the spirit of Locarno, stands silent before its cenotaphs and demonstrates what the Dustman alleges to be its contempt for architecture by building three magnificent cathedrals in fifty years, restoring every scrap of medieval loveliness that can be discovered and setting the fashion for the whole world in garden cities, the paradise of that middle class which, according to the Dustman, has disappeared." P. W. Wilson

— N Y Times p1 D 13 '25 2550w

N Y World 7pm D 6 '25 60w

"This is beyond doubt the gloomiest book ever written. Compared with it, the Book of Job is blithesome, Dante's 'Inferno' jocund, 'The City of Dreadful Night' sportive."

— Outlook 142:76 Ja 13 '26 150w

Reviewed by J. B. Brebner

Pol Sci Q 41:316 Je '26 350w

St Louis 24:27 F '26

Reviewed by Martin Hemphill

Sat R of Lit 3:89 S 4 '26 360w

"It is idle to ask such a writer to treat any phenomenon from a historical or sociological standpoint. He is merely purveying succulent phrases of smug and snobbish exasperation."

— Springfield Republican p10 F 18 '26 2200w

BEGOUEN, MAX. Bison of clay; tr. by Robert Luther Duffus. 252p $2 (7s 6d) Longmans

26-17608

From the drawings and carvings on the walls of the cavern of Tuc d'Audoubert in southern France, and the prehistoric relics found within the caves, the author has constructed this romantic narrative of a primitive people. He has woven into the love story of the Lynx and Spring-on-the-prairie authenticated pictures of the daily customs, the rites and fetiches of the Magdalenians.

"The story moves breathlessly and pictures multiply. 'Stranger than fiction' is not merely a jacket blurb when applied to M. Begouën's book, and the translator is invariably to be commended except for his unidiomatic use of the word 'commence.' He especially compels our gratitude for his appendix on 'What the Caves Can Tell,' enabling us to compare the narrative with the facts of archæology."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 N 7 '26 480w

Boston Transcript p4 S 11 '26 100w

"'Bison of Clay' rivals any tale of James Fenimore Cooper; and if his credentials in the scientific world count for anything, it is to be presumed M. Begouen brings a certain quality of erudition which his more famous fictional predecessor occasionally spurned magnanimously."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 23 '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 D '26

"A highly interesting book. While it cannot be said to 'invade a new field of fiction,' as its cover claims, the present narrative is not alone well-documented as to fact, but vivid with regard to fancy." F: H. Martens

+ Lit R p6 O 30 '26 300w

"M. Begouën has written a remarkably interesting and provocative narrative."

+ N Y Times p9 D 5 '26 260w

"It is a vivid, colorful novel of the life of the cave man in which the author has subordinated minute archeological accuracy to the demands of the narrative."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:300 N 13 '26 220w

"Attractive story, rich with local and contemporary colour."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p772 N 4 '26 170w

BEHNKE, KATE EMIL. Singers' difficulties; how to overcome them. 187p il $2 Stokes [6s Cassell]

784.9 Singing and voice culture [26-18010]

A scientific work on breathing and voice production by the daughter of the late Emil-Behnke whose researches with the laryngoscope and X-rays added notably to the knowledge of vocal physiology. The book deals with faults in technique which are at the root of the majority of the difficulties encountered by singers, showing not only how they may be overcome but how in most cases they need not arise if training is based on the laws of physiology.

"Here is no hazy description of the sensations the singer ought to feel, nor any ingenious method of arriving at those sensations. Miss Emil-Behnke simply offers a natural, scientific system of anatomical position of the factors used. This book will indubitably find its way to the singer's bookshelf or to the studio of the teacher, and it is reasonable to suppose that there it will find immediate understanding." M. D. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 9 '26 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p186 Mr 11 '26 120w

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, JUNIOR SUB, pseud.). Half a sovereign; an improbable romance. 307p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

26-15578

This "improbable romance" takes the reader along with a heterogeneous group on a yachting trip to the coast of North Africa. Colonel Leslie Miles who tells the story detests his traveling companions tho he is too meek to resist their impositions. Barbara Hatton is the sole exception. She is an early and never forgotten flame who joins the party at Algiers. There the humorous vicissitudes of the tale pass the bounds of probability when the infatuated shade of Queen Dido appears, to rid the colonel of his inferiority complex forever.

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 9 '27 330w

"A very jolly tale, and for him who would find hidden meanings, why the hidden meanings are there." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 29 '26 1200w

"Always, in taking up a book of Ian Hay's, one has the pleasant knowledge that the next hour or two cannot possibly be wasted. This latest volume is no traitor to its author."

+ Ind 117:361 S 25 '26 200w

"He tries unsuccessfully to combine in 'Half a Sovereign' his own hearty manner with Anstey's fancy, and plunges a yacht-full of imbeciles into a Carthaginian nightmare, trapped out with the properties of a Griffith monster-spectacle."

— Nation and Ath 39:770 O 2 '26 90w

"It is light entertainment, with just enough humorous substance to save it from complete banality. The mechanics of the story are more than commonplace."

+ — N Y Times p25 S 19 '26 320w

BEITH, J: H.—Continued

"It is a charming book, and in the circumstances the author deals very gently with the yachting party."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p548 Ag 19 '26 380w

BEKKER, PAUL. Beethoven; tr. and adapted from the German by M. M. Bozman. 391p $4 Dutton [10s 6d Dent]

B or 92 Beethoven, Ludwig van [26-10967]

The author, who is a music critic of Berlin, divides his work into two parts, the first a biographical study of Beethoven the man, the second and longer, a critical study of Beethoven the musician.

Booklist 22:415 J1 '26

"The book is a joy typographically; there is an index; and appendices cover chronologically Beethoven's life and works."

+ Bookin 63:608 J1 '26 140w

"What gives 'Beethoven' its chief consequence is the modernity of Herr Bekker's attitude and estimates touching many matters that tradition has devastatingly standardized. He interprets the quality of Beethoven's work from the angle of contemporary life, feeling, necessity. It is the sort of changing, fluctuant evaluation which, through successive ages, all great art must endure to prove itself lasting." P: Bowdoin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ag 8 '26 420w

"The biographical portion is extremely interesting; in the second part, which is devoted to the music, he shows himself an able and original critic. The book has a very useful chronological summary of Beethoven's works."

+ Nation and Ath 38:532 Ja 9 '26 100w

"The biographical narrative and the analysis of the works are admirably done. All will not agree with the author's position in various respects; but the book is one that will stimulate thought and will contribute to the understanding and admiration of the man and his works." R: Aldrich

+ — N Y Times p14 My 30 '26 650w

Sat R of Lit 3:121 S 18 '26 400w

Reviewed by Alan Porter

Spec 136:371 F 27 '26 620w

"[This] study of Beethoven is certainly the most intelligent that has yet appeared."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 18 '26 1250w

BELFRAGE, S. HENNING. What's best to eat? with a practical supplement by Lucy H. Yates. 212p $3 Wood [7s 6d Heinemann]

613.2 Diet

"In simple language the physiological requirements of the body are described, together with the various classes of foods and the needs which they respectively satisfy. Restricted diets such as vegetarianism and fruitarianism are discussed and rejected—with reservations—in favor of the 'balanced' diet, which includes all foodstuffs taken in correct proportions and quantities. Considerable attention is devoted to the far-reaching effects of even slight repeated dietetic omissions or excesses, and to the consideration of means by which a diet may be rendered 'balanced' yet economical. The Practical Supplement deals with the problems of catering and cooking, giving a large number of recipes which are both attractive and inexpensive."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The book is a popular presentation by an English author, and in its discussion of essential food factors is generally sound and sensible. It has the tendency, however, to ascribe all of the ills of mankind to faulty nutrition, and the chapters on constipation and food and disease contain many statements which are not only unorthodox, but, by the consensus of scientific opinion, are wrong." J. A. T.

+ — Am J Pub Health 16:1131 N '26 270w

J Home Econ 18:647 N '26 120w

"Those who open this book will find their interest stimulated by the first paragraph, and sustained until the last. The authors attack their subject with knowledge, judgment, and method... Common sense distinguishes the treatment of the subject throughout."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p398 Je 10 '26 300w

BELLAMANN, HENRY. Petenera's daughter. 271p $2 Harcourt

26-15790

From her sunny, improvident father Sule Irack has inherited a tiny flame of joy; constant exposure to his love of life and laughter lightens the girl's sullen nature and stirs a longing to be like La Petenera, joy-giving dancer of an old Basque song. But Sule loves a son of the silent, dour, hard-working Pennsylvania Dutch who, when their child is coming, bolts from town. This defection is bitter to Sule, yet when Harry returns after her father and his have died, she marries him and goes to live and work on his farm. The long, hard adjustment between contrasting natures is then to be made. Harry cannot be changed, but with satisfaction Sule sees that their son has inherited the temperament of the Basques.

Boston Transcript p8 O 9 '26 1050w

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 N '26

"Mr. Bellamann has made a delightful story out of all the mean things that go to make up an uneducated rural community. The reader will hate to lay it down after the first chapter. The characters move logically and even rhythmically." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p4 N 20 '26 400w

"'Petenera's Daughter' has passages of somewhat over-decorated prose. Mr. Bellamann occasionally loses his way in his descriptions. On the whole, however, the novel is an authentic vision of an attainable earthly paradise. Ursula and Mom and Mrs. Gingrich and Harry and Eddy and Paul Irack and Pop are vividly conceived and self-active characters. It is a wholly acceptable novel."

+ N Y Times p8 S 19 '26 580w

"A sound piece of work. It is by indefinable qualities of mood and style that the narrative is lifted to a high level of creative interpretation." H. W. Boynton

+ Outlook 144:214 O 13 '26 330w

"'Petenera's Daughter' belongs with those first novels which show not only promise, but achievement. It has weaknesses, it has deficiencies; but so far as comprehension of life goes, or maturity of method, or style, there is nothing about it which couldn't exist in the work of a writer who, by virtue of several novels, has passed through the stage of trial and error and found himself." L: Kronenberger

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:233 O 23 '26 430w

BELLAMY, FRANCIS RUFUS. Spanish faith; a romance of old Mexico and the Caribbean. 378p $2 Harper

26-9263

A dashing story of love, gallantry, and intrigue. In the pouring rain of a night in 1816 or thereabouts, Roger Buchanan of New York stepped into a waiting chaise before the Three Hatters tavern in London, and into the arms of a youthful Spanish beauty. Roger was already committed to a dangerous errand in Mexico and the West Indies. He was now committed to love. The story moves swiftly from London to an assembly ball in Baltimore, thence to a kidnapping in Mexico and a treasure hunt in the West Indies, then back to New York, with Spanish treachery disarmed and Spanish faith rewarded.

Booklist 23:78 N '26

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 My 9 '26 380w

"Enchantingly done, with a dash and reality which allow of no gainsaying."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 29 '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p108 S '26

"Mr. Bellamy has written a story of very familiar pattern, thriving on coincidence and improbability, moving at double-quick time, which on occasion turns into a forced march, but by no means not entertaining."

N Y Times p8 My 16 '26 480w

"Mr. Bellamy writes with distinct and praiseworthy traces of the Stevensonian manner."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:792 My 15 '26 150w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 15 '26 280w

Wis Lib Bul 22:230 Jl '26

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Emerald of Catherine the Great; with illustrations by G. K. Chesterton. 218p il $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Arrowsmith]

26-20761

Mr Belloc has written a mystery story "in which there is nothing to find out"—that is to say, for the reader to find out. The emerald, gorgeous gift of Catherine the Great to the first de Bohun (pronounced Deboon, but at that time plain Bones), a priceless gem, disappears as it is being handed to Marjorie de Bohun on her eighteenth birthday. The guests in the house at the time are a mixed lot—Mr. Belloc describes them and Mr. Chesterton draws them with a few witty strokes. Each one of them comes into possession of the emerald, and each one with furtive haste palms it off on the next until Mr Collop, the great detective incog., and the parrot Attaboy "find" the stone.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 26 '26 100w

"Very bright and farcical burlesque on the detective story. It is, indeed, the novelty which it purports to be." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 22 '26 420w

Reviewed by Grant Overton
Lit R p3 D 11 '26 350w

"The story is not anywhere one of crime; it is a kind of psychological extravaganza shot through with a particularly mordant vein of social satire. The satire is so incessant and so bitter at times that it is almost misanthropy, but there is no mistaking the intense cleverness or the singularly amusing quality of the book."

+ Living Age 330:695 S 25 '26 280w (Reprinted from Daily Telegraph)

"Apparently he has written a book of abundant nonsensicality for bold grownups, and betrayed, by the simple device of admitting us immediately into the secret, the logical deduction and cocksurety of the detective tale."

Nation and Ath 39:648 S 4 '26 350w

"Aided by some lively sketches from the pen of Mr. Chesterton, Belloc plays horse with the conventional detective story, and delicately inserts some of his own sprightly satire on English society into this farcical burlesque."

N Y Times p7 N 28 '26 1100w

N Y World p11m N 28 '26 180w

"What delights us throughout the book is the charm of Mr. Belloc's manner and the never-failing grace of his style. Where else do we find the business of literary composition undertaken with so much energy, so much freedom, so much felicity? The pace and sweep of Belloc's prose makes much careful, if excellent, writing seem ungainly and pedestrian."

+ Sat R 142:236 Ag 28 '26 220w

Springf'd Republican p7f D 26 '26 330w

"The satire is too crude to be effective. Take away William Bones and what remains? Mr. Belloc's temper remains; and its flings are amusing enough as an exhibition of temper. Mr. G. K. Chesterton has contributed twenty-one drawings. Anatomically his figures are plausible presentments of the author's; but in his expressions Mr. Chesterton has been rather critic than illustrator; he has concerned himself solely with folly and oddity; he laughs on the right side of his mouth, and he will make other people laugh too."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p548 Ag 19 '26 500w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Miniatures of French history. 299p $3.50 Harper [7s 6d Nelson]

944 France—History

From the founding of Marseilles to the crisis of the Marne, the course of French history is shown in a series of pictures, flashlights on significant and dramatic episodes thru twenty centuries.

Booklist 23:166 Ja '27

Bookm 64:636 Ja '27 160w

Reviewed by Albert Guerard

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 O 31 '26 1050w

"Mr. Belloc, as a historian has three claims upon public consideration: he writes readably, carries the burden of his learning easily, and never permits his cranky notions to interfere with fact. The present gift-volume—a very neat one in its external make-up—will be particularly acceptable to eager, studious boys and girls of sixteen or thereabouts, staring round-eyed, from the Darien-peak of their youth, upon the wonders of the human past."

+ Nation 123:sup619 D 1 '26 40w

N Y Times p5 D 19 '26 380w

"Mr. Belloc is usually at his best when inspired by the history of France, and in this little book of sketches he reaches a high point of vision and good writing."

+ Sat R 140:513 O 31 '25 200w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Napoleon's campaign of 1812, and the retreat from Moscow. 284p $3.50 Harper [6s Nelson]

944.05 Napoleon I, emperor of the French.
Napoleonic wars 26-12904

Belloc's account of the adventure which ruined Napoleon was largely written upon the sites of the campaign which it describes. It is a military account, as sound historically as it is dramatic in narration, of the strategy of the Russian campaign and the retreat from Moscow. Many sketch maps are included.

"It tells its tale in a clear, vivid narrative style and, since it was written a hundred years after the event, allows the author to pen a concluding summary such as no contemporary could have written."

+ Bookm 64:108 S '26 160w

"As a narrative, the work is a very fine achievement. As a Philosophy of History, its value is more questionable. I am reluctant to follow Mr. Belloc into the Pripet Marshes of hypothetical history. But, for two hundred and eighty-four pages of thrilling romance, I beg to tender him my heartiest thanks." Albert Guerard

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Je 6 '26 860w

"The exposition is so lucid that the most militarily ignorant of novices could scarcely fail to grasp not only the general scheme of things, but also the chronology and significance of detail. . . Mr. Belloc has transcended the catalogued events of the chroniclers, and has given us a broad and unprejudiced interpretation."

M. S. M.
+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 12 '26 680w

"Mr. Belloc belongs to the haranguing type of English writers. He gives the effect of knowing everything and being cocksure about it. In spite of the prejudice provoked by the manner, the reader always does, however, credit him with a great deal of the knowledge he pretends to. The given subject this time is Napoleon's retreat from Moscow and it is handled clearly, interestingly, and with a sturdy grasp of the main facts."

+ Dial 81:519 D '26 80w

BELLOC, HILAIRE—Continued

"His exposition is immensely helped by the admirable and numerous maps and sketches which illustrate his arguments perfectly. As always, he writes with distinction and a certain dramatic effectiveness. His book is as forceful as it is concise and lucid."

+ Ind 116:666 Je 5 '26 300w

Reviewed by A. M. Nikolaieff
Lit R p16 S 11 '26 620w

"Aside from interesting speculations, Mr. Belloc's history is excellent from the purely military point of view. The moves of the campaign from the day Napoleon left Dresden until he recrossed the Beresina are set out in copybook clearness."

+ N Y Times p7 My 30 '26 750w

Outlook 143:258 Je 16 '26 180w

R of Rs 74:110 Jl '26 130w

"The same story has been told perhaps a hundred times or more, but there is a vigor and freshness about this little book which is very welcome. More than almost any military writer, Mr. Belloc has the power of breathing life into the past and making us see events as we think they must have occurred. . . It is a strange and wonderful story, exceedingly well told."

Times [London] Lit Sup p641 O 16 '24 580w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Short talks with the dead and others. 208p $3 Harper

824

These are the easy, rambling essays of a writer whose originality and wit raise even his lightest work above the commonplace. Partial contents: Talking of Venice; Talking of Byron; Talking of fakes; Talking of domesday; Talking (and singing) of the Nordic man; A conversation with a reader; Talking of bad verse; Talking of fame in authorship; On talking and not talking of people in trains; On Rasselas; Talking of poverty; On "dating."

"Though this casually prepared volume cannot be said to glean its author's full abundance, it contains, as do all the samples of that harvest, some food, at any rate, for the haughtiest and least pleasurable palates." Mary Kolars

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 S 12 '26 1000w

"Behind all the gay literary persiflage Mr. Belloc tilts earnestly at shams, at pretences and at cheap notoriety. He is as always a brilliant writer."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 11 '26 200w

Cath World 124:135 O '26 200w

"Excellent essays with plenty of the lighter sort alternating with sound, serious writing. . . Well worth the purchase and perusal, this volume shows that the essay still lives and breathes beneath the avalanche of fiction."

+ Ind 117:596 N 20 '26 150w

"These twenty-nine essays are as entertaining as anything of the sort he has written. The satire on the Nordic man, though superficial, is done with such resource and good spirits that one reads it straight to the end without stopping."

+ Nation and Ath 39:186 My 22 '26 560w

New Repub 48:76 S 8 '26 720w

Reviewed by H. L. Stuart

N Y Times p7 Ag 1 '26 1500w

Outlook 143:548 Ag 18 '26 80w

"A book of short essays, by a writer who has produced so many, added to a literature already very rich in essays, is surely no great matter. But it seems impossible for Mr. Belloc, so closely knit together are all his convictions, so definite is his personality, to write any casual-seeming page without the whole man being involved. These papers, the individual importance of which need not be exaggerated, tell quite disproportionately. Light themselves, they have the whole weight of an intelligence at once massive and nimble behind them."

+ Sat R 141:752 Je 19 '26 720w

"Mr. Belloc's latest effusion, 'Short Talks with the Dead and Others,' is frankly dull. Into some 201 pages he has crowded no less than twenty-nine essays, or pseudo essays, not one of which is worth quotation, and not one of which is distinguishable from any other he has written." Michael Pym

— Sat R of Lit 3:68 Ag 28 '26 800w

"We have him here at his slightest, often in his least reasonable frame of mind, sometimes frankly clowning and not always giving us his best clowning; and yet almost every one of these short papers leaves an impression of wit and strength and the soundest of prose. There is hardly another writer of to-day who could impart to random musings of this sort a pungency like the tang of bitter ale—pre-war, let us hasten to add."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p351 My 27 '26 620w

Wis Lib Bul 22:294 N '26

BELMONT, PERRY. Survival of the democratic principle; including the tariff issue. 334p $2.50 (10s 6d) Putnam

329.3 Democratic party. United States—Politics and government. Tariff—United States 26-13093

In a somewhat desultory discussion of events in the political history of the United States, Mr. Belmont traces the course of the democratic principle implanted by Thomas Jefferson and the hopes of its survival. The last half of the book is given to a discussion of the evils of centralization and bureaucracy and the corruption of high protective tariffs under a strongly centralized government.

"The chief fault of Mr. Belmont's book is his lack of logical concentration upon his subject and it impels one to suggest to him, should he again write under a title which implies an understanding or imparting of political philosophy, that he should cultivate a more orderly way of thinking, less diffuseness, and, above all, a greatly narrowed viewpoint." S. L. C.

— Boston Transcript p2 Jl 24 '26 780w

N Y Times p22 S 26 '26 380w

Outlook 144:59 S 8 '26 80w

"What is left vague in Mr. Belmont's first volume is not made much clearer in his second, and the same rambling method persists. . . In spite of the want of precision in his conclusions, Mr. Belmont lets fall by the way a deal of sound and irritating political common sense." W: MacDonald

— + Sat R of Lit 3:55 Ag 21 '26 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p658 S 30 '26 130w

BENEFIELD, BARRY. Short turns. 328p $2 Century

26-14922

Fourteen short stories of very different types, each of them remarkable for its sympathy, insight and clarity. Contents: Carrie Snyder; Daughters of joy; That Cesar Hon-fleur; White silk tights; A fiery sweetness in the air; Miss Willett; Down Bayou Dubac; Maybe this is love; Ole Mistis; Simply Sugar Pie; Wind in the pines; Glow peddler; Queen of the graveyard ghouls; Blocker Locke.

Booklist 23:174 Ja '27

Reviewed by B. C. Williams

Bookm 64:360 N '26 480w

"Many critics have compared him with Dickens and Barrie, whom he but faintly resembles, being neither as humorous as the one nor as delicate as the other and still far from both in stature. It should not be necessary to bracket him. He has a style of his own." Lenore Marshall

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 19 '26 630w

Boston Transcript p4 S 29 '26 800w

"Perhaps the one outstanding piece is The Queen of the Graveyard Ghouls, a charmingly conceived and deftly written whimsy with just the suggestion of a sting for anyone who can feel it. All in all, Short Turns is a distinctly interesting piece of work from a new pen that promises fine things still to come."

+ Ind 117:451 O 16 '26 150w

"'Miss Willett' the sixth story in the volume, is about the best little yarn that has come out since the moon was blue. So good is it in fact, that it makes the thirteen others in the book sound just ordinary." H. C. Burr

+ Int Bk R p774 N '26 560w

"Whether he writes of the bayou country or the city jungles, of love triumphant or tragic, whether he relates an incident or depicts a character, Mr. Benét is always himself a writer whose work, no less than workmanship, will recommend him to the public which likes to read of flesh-and-blood people meeting the day-to-day crises of this perplexing but fascinating business called life."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 29 '26 770w

Springf'd Republican p7f O 24 '26 460w

BENET, STEPHEN VINCENT. Spanish bayonet. 268p $2 Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

26-4705

This is a romance of Florida in revolutionary times, but the war is merely the background of a story which is concerned with the development of Florida by the English and with the exploitation of a small group of Minorcan, Greek and Italian colonists, brought there as indentured laborers by the director of a rich indigo plantation and kept in a state of virtual slavery. Andrew Beard, son of a rich New Yorker, is sent to Florida to investigate the affairs of the plantation. He takes up his residence in the home of the director of the plantation, a house divided against itself and rent by plots in which Andrew becomes strangely involved. He is cast into prison but makes a daring escape with one of the Minorcan laborers. The story closes with Andrew and his new-found friend bound for the north and planning to join the revolutionary army.

Booklist 22:376 Je '26

"As swift and colorful a novel as I have read in many years. He has captured his period in a few quick strokes, and spends the rest of his time telling a stirring story, with beautiful phrases and striking scenes." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:203 Ap '26 60w

"It is a plot odd and strange enough, yet Mr. Benét vivifies it when a less skilled writer might have made a clumsy job of it. It is a tale resting on improbabilities, an amusing grotesque in which the guessing reader will find himself outwitted. It is a book often of hard, dark shadows, done by a man keenly sensitive to beauty." C: J. Finger

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Mr 14 '26 580w

"Mr. Benét does some things rather exquisitely. Because he is young, and as yet not as instructed as he will later be, he puts into his book a charming, gloomy pessimism, a fondness for picturesque horror, which will stir an older man's blood, whether he will or no. Also, because he is young, he saturates it all with the ardor of the romance of youth, which is the eager waiting for unknown great adventure. Because he is, in many ways, an artist, a person who sees things with the eye of the imagination, his descriptions are poetry." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 3 '26 1800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Jl '26

Dial 80:521 Je '26 120w

"Mr. Benét is not at his best in depicting adventure of this sort. . . He has not yet caught the trick of this sort of writing. He should stick to more subtle delineations or go in frankly for adventure. Mixing the two does not make for a happy result." J. S.

— Ind 116:305 Mr 13 '26 220w

"It is an exciting tale, with an equipage of colorful language to carry it swiftly along to the conclusion. It has the high tension of the novel of action, the atmosphere of the true historical narrative, the play of words of a classic, and the emotion of a great poem." M. B. Brown

Int Bk R p518 Jl '26 400w

Reviewed by Frank Wallace

Lit R p5 Mr 6 '25 550w

"Nice things now and then to be sure—lilting phrases, the imitation velvet of romantic language, vivid fabrications, glimpses of fair land and water, but none of the authentic stuff that such stories require." M. H.

— + New Repub 46:152 Mr 24 '26 120w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 28:312 D 18 '26 160w

"'Spanish Bayonet,' by Stephen Vincent Benét, is a rather outstanding example of what happens to the historical novel when spasmodic incident and antiquarian knowledge combine their forces."

— N Y Times p8 F 28 '26 780w

"Not in itself a pleasing tale—but what a jolly art it is to make all this so agreeable, to transform it by literary magic into a thing of harmless excitement and amusing picturesqueness!" C. H. Gaines

No Am 22:371 Je '26 550w

"It is a slightly artificial tale, of necessity, and the writer does not perfectly conceal his art at all times. The performance makes one think a little of Stevenson, a little of Conrad, never stands quite solid on the feet of its own creative impulse." H. W. Boynton

+ Outlook 142:463 Mr 24 '26 170w

Reviewed by T: Beer

Sat R of Lit 2:698 Ap 10 '26 1050w

"The book is well written and is exciting, though there is a tendency towards melodrama."

+ — Spec 137:869 N 13 '26 120w

"The story is a conventional narrative of adventure, the atmosphere of danger and foreboding being well maintained."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f My 9 '26 220w

"The plot is good and is developed with plenty of historical colour. The chief fault is a tendency toward fine writing."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p748 O 28 '26 170w

BENET, WILLIAM ROSE. Flying king of Kuri. 289p il $2 Doran

26-16416

"The scene of the story is New York City and the secret country of Kafiristan. There are two children in it, Michael and Amanda; they are fortunate enough to discover what children are always longing to come into—a house apart from the house that their family live in. It is an apartment very near their own apartment; they can go into it through the cupboard when their elders are not about and the people in this apartment are very odd and at the same time very sympathetic. Mr. Tractable—for the people are Mr. and Mrs. Tractable—makes plans and inventions, and he shows the children his architectural plan for 'A Recreation Home for Superannuated Cats.' Visits to the Tractable apartment always led to exciting and interesting happenings."—Sat R of Lit

"The book is full of just the kind of excitement children enjoy. There are bandits and pirates and tramps and lions and eagles; there is nonsense and poetry, mastery and fantasy, and there are touches of beauty one could wish to see expressed pictorially. The colored illustrations are a distinct disappointment." A. C. Moore

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ja 2 '27 620w

"A tedious tale of adventures incredible but uninteresting. The illustrations are the most entertaining part of the book." Babette Deutsch

— New Repub 48:359 N 10 '26 20w

BENET, W: R.—Continued

"In this story William Rose Benet has performed a charming service for city children. He has linked his tale of fancy with the reality. He has brought the land of magic to the dense reality of Times Square. He has given boys and girls a glorious fairy tale, with all the improbabilities made so probable by his understanding that unreality must have all the serious appearances of reality." M. G. Bonner

+ N Y World p10m N 7 '26 230w

"The Flying King of Kurio' is as a story, ingenious and novel, but ingenuity and novelty are the least of its qualities. It is an imaginative story, and it has that sort of imagination that is in Mr. Benet's poems—an imagination that shows a delight in things and in creatures, in speed and in brightness, and that is happy in the devising of incidents. It is the right sort of imagination to go into the making of a children's book." Padraic Colum

+ Sat R of Lit 3:273 N 6 '26 620w

BENJAMIN, EARL WHITNEY. Marketing poultry products. (Poultry science ser.) 2d rev ed 332p il $3.50 Wiley

636.5 Poultry. Eggs 25-9733

"Intended for producers, distributors, and consumers of poultry products and for students working in the technical field of poultry husbandry, or in the general field of economics at agricultural schools."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:87 F '26

BENN, SIR ERNEST JOHN PICKSTONE, bart. Confessions of a capitalist. 287p $5 Scribner [18s Hutchinson]

B or 92 Capitalism. Economics. Business [25-25529]

"From the depths of his own experience this successful English business man defends that maligned but not forgotten man, the capitalist." (Ind) "He presents, as it were, the accounts of his great publishing firm, and shows to what excellent use his capital is put, and how he works as hard as he can for general prosperity, even though he is paid £10,000 a year for his work." (Spec)

Booklist 23:76 N '26

"The principal defect in his argument against socialism, which is the burden of his book, is that he is without the faintest notion of what it is all about." W. E. Woodward

—Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 My 5 '26 950w

Reviewed by D. H. Robertson
Econ J 36:99 Mr '25 1100w

"His story is candid and consistent. In these days, when a perfectly defensible system like capitalism is constantly apologizing for its existence, it is refreshing to find a man brave enough to stand up and defend the system by which he lives and works. On the other hand, Mr. Benn's defense is not brilliant or in any way invulnerable, and his self-satisfaction becomes in the long run a weariness and a grief to the reader."

+ — Ind 116:399 Ap 3 '26 220w

Lit R p3 Mr 27 '26 770w

"Were all men as efficient and humane as Sir Ernest Benn his book might be more convincing. But it is at least a thoroughly readable picture of actual business-life, which, we agree with him, is a thing that economists of all schools are too apt to neglect."

+ Living Age 327:430 N 21 '25 420w (Reprinted from Manchester Guardian)

Reviewed by H: R. Mussey
Nation 122:559 My 19 '26 450w

"Sir Ernest Benn professes to be a ruthless fellow, putting down the bald truth without regard for art or style, but he shows himself to be a skillful writer, fully capable of hiding the weak points in his case behind an apt illustration, or of discounting criticism by a frank admission."

+ Nation and Ath 38:220 N 7 '25 620w

"How it was all accomplished, the obviously honest and decent atmosphere about the whole affair, the anecdotes of his career, the sense he gives his readers of genuine service performed, are far more effective a defense of things-as-they-are than, for example, his eulogy of 'Pareto's Law: the Inevitability of Inequality.' His business record itself, in other words, set down openly and frankly, is his real contribution to human understanding—not the rationalization and justification which he has spun around it." Evans Clark

+ — N Y Times p14 D 27 '25 750w

Reviewed by H. E. Gaston
N Y World p6m Ap 11 '26 650w

Outlook 143:260 Je 16 '26 50w

"This book, with its bold declaration that in earning £10,000 a year its writer is rendering a service to the nation, is refreshing after some of the apologetic writings on such subjects to which chicken-hearted defenders of capitalism have treated us."

Sat R 140:372 O 3 '25 100w

Reviewed by Harold Cox
Sat R 140:392 O 10 '25 480w

"It is a courageous book; and though we may not agree to the full measure with his admiration for American methods in commerce and sociology, yet we congratulate him for the polemical success the book must have in bringing to men's attention an aspect of capitalism which is rarely considered."

+ Spec 135:551 O 3 '25 180w

"This is a most refreshing book. Sir Ernest Benn apologizes for its egotism on the ground that a personal story of the life of one who has built up a large business is the liveliest way of presenting its economic lessons. His plea is certainly justified where the teller of the story has such zest and evident pleasure in his work."

+ Spec 136:sup466 Mr 13 '26 360w

"This book is an outburst, a piece of sincere and forceful writing and an illuminating autobiography. There is no vainglory in his pages, but looking back upon his life Sir Ernest finds it good, both for himself and for society, and in this spirit sets out his experiences and the conclusions to which they point."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p728 N 5 '25 706w

BENN, SIR ERNEST JOHN PICKSTONE, bart. If I were a labour leader. 154p $1.75 Scribner [3s 6d Benn]

331.8 Labor and laboring classes—Great Britain. Industrial relations. General strike. Great Britain, 1926 26-27510

The author, an English capitalist who has already given some account of himself in his "Confessions of a capitalist" (Book Review Digest, May, 1926) approaches his subject in the frame of mind of a labor leader constructing a policy and drawing up a set of principles and rules for labor. He strongly approves trade unionism, but condemns socialism and the general strike. He would have the trade unions keep out of politics and devote their activities to increasing not only wages, but the quantity of output, and to improving conditions by cooperating with both employer and consumer.

Booklist 23:64 N '26

Reviewed by Allan Nevins
Bookm 64:226 O '26 270w

Ind 117:225 Ag 21 '26 270w

"This is the first book to discuss the genesis and lessons of the general strike, and is a real contribution to the thorny question of industrial relations in England."

+ Living Age 331:93 O 1 '26 180w

Nation 123:381 O 13 '26 250w

"A short and readable book on the text of the General Strike."

Nation and Ath 39:480 Jl 24 '26 200w

New Statesman 27:506 Ag 14 '26 300w

Reviewed by Evans Clark
N Y Times p1 Ag 1 '26 700w

"The book is forcibly and entertainingly written, and even readers certain to reject much of its teaching will find it a stimulating and helpful work."

+ Outlook 144:92 S 15 '26 130w

Sat R of Lit 3:396 D 4 '26 600w

"This volume is practical and personal, quivering with life and optimism."

+ Spec 136:1049 Je 19 '26 440w

Times [London] Lit Sup p454 Jl 8 '26 580w

Wis Lib Bul 22:271 O '26

BENNER, CLAUDE LEON. Federal intermediate credit system; with the aid of the council and staff of the Institute of economics. (Inst. of economics. Investigations in agricultural economics) 375p $2.50 Macmillan [10s Allen & U.]

332.311 Agricultural credit 26-7824

In the introduction the author clearly defines his work thus: "It is the purpose of this study, (1) to explain the causes which gave rise to the passage of the Agricultural Credits Act of 1923; (2) to show the place and function that the new institutions established by this act have in our financial system; and (3) to show to what extent our rural banking practice is being modified by the operation of these newly created rural credit agencies. Our study will thus be limited to an analysis of the intermediate credit needs of agriculture, and to an appraisal of the institutions granting this credit."

"There has been need of a book which would display a firm grasp of the principles of finance and be written in a style simple and attractive to the inexpert reader. The service of preparing such a volume has been performed very satisfactorily by Claude L. Benner with the cooperation of the staff of the Institute of Economics." H. L. Reed

+ Am Econ R 16:503 S '26 390w

Booklist 23:64 N '26

Boston Transcript p5 Ag 28 '26 170w

"The conclusions of the author appear to be well founded and of considerable weight, although the system is too young for final judgment to be passed on its efficacy. On the whole, the book appears to have been very carefully done and gives one a good grasp of the agricultural credit problem in the United States and of the most recent developments in attempting to meet it."

+ J Pol Econ 34:543 Ag '26 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p433 Je 24 '26 50w

Wis Lib Bul 22:195 Je '26

BENNETT, ALFRED ROSLING. London and Londoners in the eighteen-fifties and sixties. 371p $5 Greenberg

914.21 London—Social life and customs

[25-3770]

"Here are gathered together not only the idiosyncrasies, prejudices and loves of one observer but a veritable mine of antiquarian information of all sorts salted with the personality of one who must be rated as something of a 'character' in the classic sense. From a boyhood in Islington, Camberwell and Greenwich we follow Mr. Bennett joyfully up and down the city, hearing of inventions, amusements, stray thoughts and prominent murders. With equal aplomb Mr. Bennett describes the appearance of Donati's comet in 1855 and announces that 'aerated bread was first heard of about 1860.'" —Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 10 '26 220w

"Mr. Bennett's is a book not of records but of personal reminiscences in the intimate daily life of a great city seventy-five years ago.

Hardly history, perhaps, but full of the charming trivialities that put history in its place."

+ Lit R p8 Ja 9 '26 150w

"With loving detail this unrepentant mid-Victorian paints the streets and river life of his time. When it comes to the personages and events of his mature years, however, this eye-witness loses much of his charm. About locomotives and politicians and regattas he writes palely. Here the struggle for facts seems to wipe out many of his color impressions."

+ — N Y Times p3 F 14 '26 600w

St Louis 24:83 Ap '26

"There is the savor of reality in his pages. They take us back to the physical London of Dickens and Thackeray. The author must have possessed from an early age a genuine faculty for observation."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a N 29 '25 1550w

BENNETT, ALICE HORLOCK. The prince's love affair. 287p $2 Longmans

George IV, king of Great Britain—Fiction 26-24561

A novel based upon the love affair of George IV, then Prince of Wales, and Mrs Fitzherbert. Young Antony Hamilton goes up to London to serve the Prince. His Royal Highness takes a great liking to the youth and on occasion makes use of the resemblance between himself and Antony to further his private affairs. From this intimate point of vantage Antony writes of the court circle and his adventures within it, telling in particular the story of the beautiful, steadfast Marie Fitzherbert and her ill-starred love for the Prince.

Cleveland Open Shelf p121 N '26

N Y Times p20 D 19 '26 180w

"A conscientious historical accuracy is the most praiseworthy feature of this version of a celebrated love affair."

Sat R of Lit 3:344 N 27 '26 130w

"On the whole, a sound though rather sugary book; showing careful reading of memoirs—no anachronisms—and presenting a valuable guide of conduct for virtuous young ladies who have the misfortune to be offered attention from princes of the Blood Royal."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p739 O 28 '26 400w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Lord Raingo. 393p $2 Doran [7s 6d Cassell]

26-17765

London in the midst of the war, during the middle months of 1918, is the background of this novel which is from one point of view a political satire—a picture of the war as it was waged on the home front, of the British government in undress, and of the pettiness, vanity, ineptitude and jealousies of little men recklessly trafficking in lives and money. From another point of view the novel is a character study of the hero, a retired business man of great wealth who is called by the prime minister to a place in the cabinet and at the same time given a peerage as the payment he exacts for the job of directing British publicity and propaganda. The identity of the prime minister is easily recognized under the caricature, as well as that of other ministers in their moments of authority. Breakfasts at No. 10 Downing Street and scenes in Parliament and Cabinet fill in the background, while in the all-round picture of the very human Lord Raingo there is the touch of a love affair and a really moving account of his illness and death.

Booklist 23:132 D '26

"The novel is not a farce. It is in reality a closely written analytical piece. One laughs immoderately as one reads, but the weight of the book's authenticity remains. Bennett is a great novelist, perhaps the greatest of his time, and he has one characteristic which should en-

BENNETT, ARNOLD—Continued

dear him to the reader: he is very painstaking. With all its fun and rapid movement, 'Raingo' is most conscientiously written. I venture to think that the illness and death of Raingo occupy too much of the book, and that Arnold Bennett is a little too fond of describing deathbeds. The end of the novel, the last hundred pages, show the hero sick. The story remains and holds one, but the hilarious mood of Bennett's satire necessarily passes and we put the book down feeling sympathy for the man at whom we have been laughing." Stephen Graham

+ — Bookm 64:356 N '26 500w

"The book is a failure and it is a success. It is a success because one likes it to the extent of carrying it about with one all day, reading and re-reading little pet half-pages. It is a failure because it does nothing at all with its subject. It distills no significance from it; it merely makes a bungling statement of it." Rebecca West

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 O 10 '26 3500w

"In many ways this is a disheartening story. Mr. Bennett having arrived at his highest point, technically speaking, with all his genius flexibly employed, gives us a picture of life which is devoid of idealism, of aspiration, of dreams or of tenderness. There is no caress without a motive. There is no act born of spontaneity and freedom. If this is what the Bennett genius gives us after twenty-eight years of constant writing, we feel more impressed with the overwhelming nature of his liabilities and rather less interested in his many assets." D. F. Gilman

— Boston Transcript p3 O 16 '26 1700w

"There are no crannies or crevices in the daily, nightly life of this very practical, British, middle-class, human Lord Raingo that are not filled. The reader feels as if he had added something to his personality that had dimensions. It is more like acquiring a house than reading a book." C. R. Walker

Ind 117:535 N 6 '26 720w

"Mr. Bennett is hardly convincing. He is himself too slick, too polished, too busy hitting off emotions in quick phrases. There was a time when he could move us with his pictures of Clayhanger and of Hilda Lessways by the subtle process of building up, detail by detail, the effect he desired. He is too nimble in 'Lord Raingo,' flitting like a butterfly from scene to scene with dazzling rapidity." L. G. Short

— Lit R p3 O 16 '26 620w

Living Age 331:470 D 1 '26 220w

"The mysterious change of Raingo from childish imbecility to subtlety and intelligence is only a particular instance of the book's fatal wobble. One does not ask for more psychological consistency in the characters of a novel than in those of real life. But the mystery of Lord Raingo is due, not to the eternal wobble of the human soul, but to the wobble in Mr. Bennett's craftsmanship. The illness and death of Lord Raingo have nothing to do with what has gone before. They form an episode which could have been written only by a novelist of great skill, but it is an episode which is both out of proportion and out of relation to the remainder of the book. It is, in fact, the end of a novel which Mr. Bennett has never written." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 40:86 O 16 '26 1300w

"Taken as a whole, it is not a very good book—not to be compared, that is to say, with the author's own best work—but it is a book that was well worth writing, and is well worth reading. Incidentally its substantially accurate picture of the mentality of our rulers in the spring of 1918 has a definite historical value."

+ New Statesman 28:18 O 16 '26 550w

Reviewed by H. I. Brock

N Y Times p7 O 17 '26 1500w

"The detail is lively but it lacks the sense of great issues: jobs and trivialities and expensive dinners seem to have occupied almost exclusively the minds of Mr. Bennett's statesmen. Lord Raingo's illness is by far the most effective thing in the book. It is not pretty, but is it Art?" L. P. Hartley

Sat R 142:446 O 16 '26 500w

"If in Part I. Mr. Bennett is on the whole not really enjoying himself, not working in the fullest freedom, in Part II. he is, in my opinion, often at his greatest. Surely and strongly he prepares for his last page. Rarely perhaps have a disease and its medical treatment been so minutely described in a story, but that minuteness plays its part in bringing about the poignancy of the final effect. And as to that final effect itself, I am aware that it is easier to end a novel movingly with a death than with any other event whatever. Nevertheless I believe that this dissolution of Lord Raingo's stands apart from other imaginary deaths. I believe it is one of the remarkable passages in modern fiction, standing beside Mr. Bennett's own famous account of an execution in 'The Old Wives' Tale.'" Montgomery Belgion

+ Sat R of Lit 3:193 O 16 '26 1200w

"The first point of criticism to be made about Mr. Arnold Bennett's novel is its amazing competence. . . . What the author sets out to do, that he accomplishes. No one knows anything of the difficulty of smooth, selective, and yet comprehensive, narration, the difficulty of not describing too many things, and of not treating them too minutely; the difficulty of letting the flow of the story be neither jerky, nor rapid, nor slow, nor erratic, but even, both in pace and volume, can possibly refuse high praise to Mr. Arnold Bennett's methods of presentation. His character drawing is as successful as is his narration." J. St. L. Strachey

+ Spec 137:593 O 9 '26 1600w

"The only part of the book that is nearly worthy of its author is the exhaustive study of the fatal illness, nurses, doctors, surgeons, temperatures, lies and fears, which ends the career of poor Lord Raingo, who was allowed to see far too many visitors. But, when we remember the pneumonia of Mr. Povey in 'The Old Wives' Tale,' short and undistinguished like Povey himself, the expansive and expensive detail of Lord Raingo's sick bed seems a little tawdry."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p694 O 14 '26 500w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Things that have interested me; third series. 225p $2.50 Doran [75 6d Chatto & W.]

824

26-7141

Among the things that interest Mr Bennett in his third series of short papers are the theater, books, friends, woman, clothes, travels in Spain, religious experience.

Bookm 63:491 Je '26 150w

"Arnold Bennett continues in 'Things That Have Interested Me: Third Series' to exemplify common sense and, in a manner, to justify it. No one reading these essays will be exalted or deeply moved by them, and yet few will escape the sense of satisfaction that derives from fireside and office felicity, from a feeling of order and teleology in small things." J. W. Gassner

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ap 26 '26 130w

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 17 '26 620w
Cleveland Open Shelf p128 D '26

"Aside from the quality of average interest, the book is vulgar and banal. Mr. Bennett, one might expect, would bring to his interesting experiences an experience and an appreciation just a shade or two richer than those of a second-class tripper and tourist, but one's great expectations are consistently disappointed. This is a depressing book from the author of 'An Old Wives' Tale.'"

— Ind 116:399 Ap 3 '26 200w

"It is not a world-shaking book; at its best it is interesting, at its worst it is scrappy. It contains a lot of common sense about a lot of subjects. What Bennett says of André Gide is equally true of himself: that he has a 'broad and vivacious curiosity.' That is the charm of every one of the 'Things That Have Interested Me' series." H. S.

+ — Int Bk R p394 My '26 600w

Living Age 328:696 Mr 27 '26 620w

"The Americans have a pleasant habit of calling almost any occasion, even if the participants are but two or three, a party; and beside this habit, they have the enviable gift of making that occasion a party. Something of this gift is Mr. Bennett's. His eupeptic enjoyment, his self-confidence, his positive conviction that he knows the best of everything, and the best way to get it; his complete ignoring of the possibility that there may be other people, equally intelligent, who prefer other avenues to enjoyment, or who actually dislike some of his modes of pleasure . . . all these combine to create an atmosphere of acceptance which only the pedant, the churl and the imaginatively critical can resist." R. E. Roberts

New Statesman 26:712 Mr 20 '26 1350w

"In spite of a certain superficiality and shortness of range inherent in the author's very method, the forty little sketches and essays gathered together in the present volume display a pleasing variety."

+ — N Y Times p5 Ap 18 '26 680w

Reviewed by F. P. Adams

N Y World p5m My 16 '26 700w

St Louis 24:170 Je '26

Reviewed by E. Shanks

Sat R 141:231 F 20 '26 1250w

"Mr. Bennett could preside over a very interesting 'colyum' for an American newspaper with the tag end of his mental energy and this book is further proof of how fascinating that 'colyum' would be."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:743 Ap 24 '26 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p278 Ap 15 '26 950w

Reviewed by J. W. Beach

Yale R n s 16:379 Ja '27 180w

BENNETT, C. M. Pedro of the Black Death. 349p $2 Dutton [5s Nisbet]

26-16535

"Swear that you will die, my son, ere you turn member of the pirate crew." Thus George's father adjured the boy as the vessel fell into pirate hands and they themselves were taken captive. Father and son took oath together and tho they were immediately separated, the father swimming to safety while George remained in the personal custody of Pedro, the pirate captain, each kept his oath to the end. Every kind of adventure came to the boy left behind, in the interval of separation from his father, and in the thrilling recital of those events any boy will find his cup of adventure full.

"The story lives right up to its title; the sea atmosphere is well worked up, the adventures are hair raising, and the pirates are altogether the most ferocious lot that ever sailed the Main." H: Beston

+ Ind 117:551 N 13 '26 80w

J Home Econ 18:649 N '26 20w

"A capital pirate story." J: Nl: Beffel

+ New Repub 48:358 N 10 '26 120w

BENNETT, CHARLES ALPHEUS. History of manual and industrial education up to 1870. 461p il $3.50 Manual arts press

371.42 Manual training. Industrial education 26-15053

Quoting freely from the writings of educators contemporary with the period described, the author presents a chronological summation of the development of manual and industrial education from its obscure beginnings in antiquity down to 1870. A list of sources is given with each chapter, and the work is indexed and illustrated.

"A valuable compilation."

+ J Home Econ 18:710 D '26 100w

N Y New Tech Bks 11:35 Jl '26

BENNETT, EDWARD, and CROTHERS, HAROLD MARION. Introductory electro-dynamics for engineers. 665p il $4.50 McGraw

538.3 Electrodynamics 26-5994

"The text has been used in mimeographed form during the past seven years at the University of Wisconsin in the introductory course in Electrical Engineering." (Preface) "It is developed and written in a way by which a specialist would attempt to lay a foundation for thorough technical knowledge. As a result it is dry, reasoned and profound."—Electrical World (Pittsburgh Mo Bul)

N Y New Tech Bks 11:3 Ja '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:363 Jl '26

BENNETT, GEORGE EDWARD. Accounting systems, principles and problems of installation. 554p $7.50 Shaw, A.W.

657 Accounting 26-2619

"The writer has attempted to break new ground by discussing the subject-matter from the view-point of the average trading, service, and manufacturing activities of small and moderate size."—Preface

Harvard Business R 5:125 O '26 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:562 N '26

BENNETT, MARK. Tack ship! 303p $2.50 Longmans [7s 6d E. Arnold]

Stories of the days of the sailing ship, written by one who loves the sea and has evidently experienced the dangers and the joys which he describes.

"Even in these days of the ever-increasing popularity of sea-yarns, and hence their increasing publication, these are notable."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 9 '26 580w

"He misses the significance of the character and nature of drama and his book falls far short of the standards of fiction. Nevertheless, 'Tack Ship' has a value, if only photographic, for its picture of a sea life that had vanished."

— + N Y Times p5 F 7 '26 200w

"Told in a direct, seamanlike manner with no attempt at 'fine writing' which makes them all the more convincing."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p758 N 12 '25 120w

BENOIT, PIERRE. Jacob's well; tr. from the French by Angelo S. Rappoport. 288p $2 International pub. [7s 6d S. Paul]

26-6145

On a professional tour of the cities of the Mediterranean a famous Jewish dancer and courtesan visits Haifa, where she encounters the inspired leader of a small Zionist colony. He induces her to join the colony and to her own surprise the dancer not only consents but shortly afterward marries the hunchback leader. Later she is sent to Paris to raise funds for the movement and there is drawn back into her old way of life until a young girl appears as emissary from the impoverished and stricken colony.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ap 18 '26 280w

"It is an odd tale; attractively written and well translated. Its presentation of the work of Zionism is interesting and instructive."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 12 '26 200w

"Jacob's Well does not bear the label of propaganda, but it certainly carries the stamp of sentimentality—which is worse."

— Dial 81:262 S '26 130w

BENOIT, PIERRE—Continued

"It is a skillfully worked out study, keeping free of sensationalism, and done with more restraint and a better economy of effort than any of the author's earlier books. The translation is passably good in its English, tho one feels that there has been some evaporation in the process." H. L. Pangborn

+ Int Bk R p522 J1 '26 360w

"Could a story be more entertaining in a short night's reading, at least as told sparingly, wittily and with Gallic good taste by Pierre Benoit?" D. Novak

+ Lit R p10 Ap 17 '26 280w

Reviewed by W. F. Kahn

New Repub 47:235 J1 14 '26 90w

"This is a good and a simple novel. It will be of interest to all those deeply interested in Zionism. On the other hand, those who are intelligently curious about Zionism and colonization ought to find it deeply interesting. It is not propaganda. It has propaganda value. M. Benoit evidently is an ardent Zionist. It is just as evident that he is a good craftsman. The novel stands on its own legs."

+ N Y World p7m Ap 11 '26 360w

"He indulges in no false sentiment. The leading character, Hagar Moses, is depicted convincingly without mawkish moralizings or equally mawkish aestheticisms. Her husband, the hunchback idealist Isaac Cochbas, is drawn with equal success. Rapid succession of incidents and a not too extravagant plot hold the reader's attention throughout."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:924 J1 10 '26 150w

Springf'd Republican p7f Je 27 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p356 My 27 '26 250w

BENRUBI, ISAAC. Contemporary thought of France; tr. by E. B. Dickes. (Lib. of contemporary thought) 214p $2.50 Knopf [5s Williams & N.]

194 Philosophy, French

"Dr. Benrubi discerns three main tendencies in the latest movement of French thought: they are, in fact, the empirical, scientific school issuing from Comte's positivism; the school of critical idealism, based on Kant; and the school of 'spiritual positivism, which bases itself on experience, but revolts against materialism and emphasizes the non-rational factors of life. Under the first head the author summarizes the ideas of Comte, Taine, Renan, and Durkheim; under the second those of Renouvier, Tarde, Henri Poincaré, and J. Milhaud; under the third those of Maine de Biran, Boutroux, Bergson, E. Le Roy, Maurice Blondel, and the chief Catholic Modernists."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The book is surprisingly alive and expertly articulated, a manual which can be read through in two or three sittings with pleasure and profit, and then stood on the reference shelf, toward the end nearest the study table."

R. T. House

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 N 14 '26 480w

"A definitive handbook of contemporary French philosophy and a concise account of the intellectual life of modern France."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 8 '26 200w

"Dr. Benrubi performs with considerable success the difficult task of compressing into a little over 200 pages the essentials of the doctrine of over eighty modern French philosophers, though a certain obscurity, due to elliptical treatment, could hardly be avoided."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p679 O 7 '26 270w

BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER. Diary of Arthur Christopher Benson; ed. by Percy Lubbock. 320p il $7.50 Longmans [24s Hutchinson]

B or 92

The diary of the much read essayist, who was for many years master of Magdalene college, Cambridge, probably contains more of the real Benson than the books which he turned off so easily and rapidly. A notable company of friends come and go thru the pages of the book, but his diary is above all a self-portrait. Here he talked to himself, mused and meditated on all manner of subjects and analyzed his own baffling nature. The original diary from which his friend Percy Lubbock has made these selections was most voluminous, covering a period of twenty-nine years and filling 180 manuscript notebooks.

Reviewed by Hugh Walpole

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ja 9 '27 1350w

"The reader of these diaries and their explanatory comment by the editor, will not lack for abundant personallia. They are the outcome of the mind of a man who lived a very full life." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 24 '26 1300w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 118:50 Ja 8 '27 1200w

"Even those who find his works the triumph of mediocrity will agree that the diary is a fascinating document, if only because it enables them to seek out and attempt to define the curious flaw which made A. C. Benson in books so much less interesting than A. C. Benson in life."

+ Nation and Ath 40:457 D 24 '26 600w

"An interesting book; there are delightful descriptions of places, scenes and people in it, many witty and pensive comments upon them, and the intimacy it permits alternately satisfies and tantalises affectionate curiosity."

+ New Statesman 28:341 D 25 '26 1250w

"In this hurriedly written diary, with its scores of little pictures of scenery, people and events, we do not remember a single cliché phrase. As his skill in biography shows, Benson was a sensitive interpreter of personality. Many a scholastic, academic and literary personage stands out from a single entry here with a startling lifelikeness. But Benson's best gift is his eye for scenery and buildings—especially scenery; he is a true Nature worshipper."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p813 N 18 '26 650w

BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER. Rambles and reflections. 312p $3.75 Putnam [10s 6d Murray]

824

26-11945

"Its forty essays are all in the author's characteristic vein—discursive, quietly flowing comment on themes and personalities that aroused his interest or affection: the Sussex downs, water springs and freshets, social pleasures, robes and ceremonies, modern moralities, the art of conversation, Carlyle, Coleridge, Gissing, George Macdonald, Lord Rayleigh, etc."—Lit R

Booklist 23:68 N '26

"For all the charm of his style, one must conclude that the wine of Mr. Benson's prose lacks body; or, as Mr. Lubbock says, it grows pale as soon as it is poured." H. S. V. Jones

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Je 6 '26 620w

"Some of these reflective pieces of writing have already been published. All of them are conservative, well bred, thoughtful reflections made by a scholar who has never come too close to problems connected with earning daily bread."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 8 '26 320w

"Admirers of Benson will all desire to place it alongside its many predecessors from which they have unquestionably derived much 'sweetness and light.'" W. N. C. Carlton

Lit R p2 Je 12 '26 380w

"A. C. Benson was neither original nor profound. But he had a large experience of certain aspects of life; he felt intensively; and he was less devoid of ideas than some of his writings might suggest. This final volume will serve his memory well, and will make it less easy for future critics to dismiss him as a mere facile sentimentalist."

+ — Nation and Ath 39:49 Ap 10 '26 500w

Sat R 141:371 Mr 20 '26 50w

"'Rambles and Reflections' shows no declension from the standard of its predecessors, nor does it exhibit any improvement thereon. Dr. Benson was one of the most static writers of his period, and if he aimed at the elimination of the unexpected from his work he succeeded in full measure."

+ — Sat R 141:623 My 22 '26 480w

"Calm, correct, and occasionally pleasing, these posthumous essays. Will be of interest to leisurely readers who demand neither vigor nor depth in an essayist."

Sat R of Lit 2:923 Jl 10 '26 150w

"After Mr. Benson's manner let us look on this as a significant trifle: his voice is not stilled, he will continue to say wise and witty things to future generations: men and women who loved and admired him in life will continue to meet him in spirit and answer to his mood."

Spec 136:724 Ap 17 '26 700w

"These essays were chiefly written during the last two years of Dr. Benson's life. They touch on moods and scenes and people in his agreeable and discursive way, always easy, graceful and sincere without being compelling."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p233 Mr 25 '26 1050w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Mezzanine. 300p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Cassell]

26-17768

"Walter was forty and Elizabeth was nearly ten years older, and although they were supposed both to have reached tranquillity and the 'middle floor' of life, they could not really count on inner peace. So in Mezzanine, E. F. Benson tackles their problem, or rather Elizabeth's problem, and works out the story to a satisfactory conclusion with his usual skill."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 23:174 Ja '27

"'Mezzanine' is, in a word, a book that can offend nobody, injure no innocent soul, take up no improper place on the library shelf, and scarcely have more effect upon the reading world than to create a placid ripple which the next stronger current will smooth away."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 D 19 '26 360w

"This new novel is serious, analytical and absorbing, with a dash of humor for flavor and plenty of sympathetic understanding of the ideals and aims of two high bred and well intentioned people." D. F. Gilman

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 23 '26 1600w

"There is no brilliant social background in the novel; the characters are isolated with their problem, which is worked out with painfully exact psychological detail. A construction slow in building, but solid. Mr. Benson has completely emancipated himself from Dodo." R. M. L.

+ New Repub 49:50 D 1 '26 120w

"This is one of Mr. Benson's most careful and readable stories, and Elizabeth is a delightful character."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p430 Je 24 '26 450w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Rex. 321p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-15637

Brilliant, youthfully cynical, inspiring love that he cannot return and accepting the lavish devotion of his mother and Oliver his friend, at best with nothing more than affectionate complaisance and at worst with ill-concealed irritation, this egregiously selfish young hero is a difficult person to admire. The sacrifice of his mother allows him to live in London where he writes brilliant, if unsuccessful, plays. Flouted by a woman who has deliberately aroused his love, he turns to writing clap-trap that is instantly successful. The fiasco of his love affair seems to have permanently embittered Rex; he retaliates by publicly scorning his late love. But Dora on her death-bed asks for and grants him forgiveness, and leaves him with a newly discovered capacity for love and compassion.

"Mr. Benson's clear style is admirably suited to his narrative. His figures of speech, so frequent and so appropriate effect a precise fusion of things physical and abstract, a stimulating and forceful imagery which strengthens, not only the excellent early chapters devoted to the relationship of Rex to his father, but the later chapters as well." Fitzhugh Gray

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Mr 7 '26 680w

"If he lacks the witty tumult and the irresponsible sparkle he possess in 'Dodo,' he shows a somewhat more varied psychology and a somewhat more effective grasp of more numerous emotions and reactions, tho still no real deepening of feeling, for he is still obviously writing to a very popular audience and evidently feels that it must be amused, not disturbed." C. Trueblood

+ — Int Bk R p387 My '26 300w

"The novel is interesting, for Mr. Benson has the born story-teller's gift of entertaining narrative, and if its conclusion seems as unreal as that of the cheaply clever play Rex wrote and despised, by far the greater part of it has verisimilitude. There are of course some charming descriptive passages."

+ — N Y Times p8 F 7 '26 820w

N Y World p7m Ja 31 '26 20w

"Through the book runs that characteristic vein of humor that makes this author such delightful reading."

+ N Y World p7m F 28 '26 100w

"The experienced reader would no doubt guess the dénouement even had the publisher's blurb not obligingly given it away. The conclusion is just the sort of thing that Rex and his sophisticated young intellectuals (of the 'nineties) would have become ribald over; but there it is—and Mr. Benson has again given us an entertaining novel in his second best style."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:579 F 20 '26 500w

"Rex is a distinctly recognizable character, or it might be truer to say that Mr. Benson makes him so in the sharp focus of his lens. Whether he is worth such a careful analysis is another matter."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p224 Mr 26 '25 150w

BENSON, STELLA (MRS J. C. O'GORHAM ANDERSON). Goodbye, stranger. 260p $2.25 (7s 6d) Macmillan

26-20320

The story is a difficult one to enter. Once within it, and acclimatized to its atmosphere of faerie, one discovers a rare assortment of characters. An American wife, her English husband and his mother, are set down in a small station in China with the usual European complement of doctor, consul and missionaries. The wife, the object of Miss Benson's satire, is endowed with typically American virtues and shortcomings. Her husband is the stranger. He has lost his normal cheerful manhood, and has become a changeling of perverse mood and the outrageous frankness of a child. His old mother gloats over the change and enjoys the wife's discomfiture. A troupe of women entertainers arrive in town, and the climax is precipitated when Clifford, the changeling, falls in love with one of them, an abnormal being like himself. Their queer affair, the effect of it upon themselves and those about them, and its outcome—this, in an uncanny environment of its own, is the story.

BENSON, STELLA—Continued

Reviewed by Garreta Bussey

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 N 14 '26 900wNation 123:696 D 29 '26 60w

Reviewed by Austin Clarke

Nation and Ath 40:392 D 11 '26 130w

"At first sight the figures are whimsical humors, tilted toward each other at unconventional angles, seen against a background that is fantastically absurd. Little by little, however, one becomes conscious of recurrent themes which reveal a feeling for life in its essence, themes to which Miss Benson's rather cryptic verse supplies a sort of obligato. Miss Benson is very finished, very polished in her irony."

New Repub 49:49 D 1 '26 250w

"Her prose proceeds from strength to strength. About her verse—which used to be so very good—I am more doubtful. She heads her chapters with lyrics presumably of her own composition; they have lost form without acquiring substance. But chapter headings after all are a small matter. And in the development of her proper theme Miss Benson is as strong, as incisive as ever—as relentless in her understanding of pain, as vivid in her exposure of absurdity; and funnier, if possible, than she used to be." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 28:176 N 20 '26 780wN Y Times p7 N 14 '26 650w

"One could not read 'Good-bye, Stranger' without being disturbed and excited; one could hardly read it without laughter, one might read it with tears. It has enough vitality in one page to galvanize a dozen ordinary novels. But it has not solidity enough to absorb its own recoil."

L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 142:737 D 11 '26 650w

"Miss Benson is sometimes pure artist; as in her treatment of Daley. Other whiles she is a little too self-expressive, almost personal. But there is a peculiar acrid flavour, a thin remote music to everything she writes."

Spec 137:930 N 20 '26 280w

"Miss Benson has taken an old story, and the perplexity in human affairs which is behind it, and made it into a work of art. Her book is at once clever and beautiful, flippant and wise. She does not always resist the temptation to astonish and mystify the vulgar, and her cleverness and her wit would serve her better if they were kept in stricter subordination to wisdom and beauty."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p908 D 9 '26 520wBERCOVICI, KONRAD. Singing winds. 315p $2 Doubleday

26-19022

Here are a dozen stories of gypsy life—tales of love and passion, of brigands and smugglers, of peasant customs and superstitions. Contents: The vineyard; Perta; The mill on the river; Ripe wheat; Sava; Tinsel; After the storm; The whip; Steel against steel; Mothers; The flood; Wolves.

Booklist 23:174 Ja '27

"These tales fascinatingly present the gayety and the hardships, the contentment and the cruelty of a way of life which is drawing to a close."

+ N Y Times p11 S 26 '26 500wBERCOVICI, KONRAD, ed. Best short stories of the world; ed. with an introd. by Konrad Bercovici. 516p $2.50 Stratford

Short stories—Collections 25-25011

Among the nineteen stories in the volume many familiar and famous titles appear and a few that are not so well known. Contents: The procurator of Judea, by Anatole France; A passion in the desert, by Honoré de Balzac; Bontje, the silent, by J. L. Perez; The birthday of the infanta, by Oscar Wilde; The lost words of love, by Catulle Mendès; I'm a fool, by Sherwood Anderson; The Easter torch, by

I. L. Caragiale; Makar Chudra, by Maxim Gorki; The fourth nail, a gypsy legend; What men live by, by Leo Tolstoi; Life of Ma Parker, by Katherine Mansfield; Madame Tellier's establishment, by Guy de Maupassant; Lazarus, by Leonid Andreyev; The gentleman from San Francisco, by Ivan Bunin; Saidjah, by Multatuli (Edward D. Dekker); Montes, by Frank Harris; Genesis, chapters 1-3; The gold-bug, by E. A. Poe; The party, by Anton Chekhov.

Booklist 22:251 Mr '26

"Among anthologies, as anthologies go, this is full value. The editor's introduction contains trenchant remarks on the form and information about the authors."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ja 24 '26 220w

"It is for the most part a praiseworthy selection. The introduction is about as useless and ridiculous as most of the stuff written about the short story, and one cannot help being surprised that so good a short story writer as Mr. Bercovici undoubtedly is should go off at such a tangent when he begins to spin theories about his own art." Herschel Brickell

+ — Lit R p5 Ja 23 '26 150w

"Despite his eloquent but inconsistent pleading, the tales chosen by him, with the exception of Poe's artificial Gold Bug, are sufficiently deserving of their title to be convincing proof against his generalizations." J. J. Smertenko

Nation 122:644 Je 9 '26 220wN Y World p7m D 13 '26 60wSpringf'd Republican p7a Ja 17 '26 180w

"Of the nineteen stories selected here there are not more than half-a-dozen, we believe, which would gain anything like general approval; and the fact must be taken as evidence of Mr. Bercovici's independence of judgment, which in two or three instances he has put to very good use. Six 'winners' out of nineteen, however, is a better average than collections of this kind can usually boast."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p58 Ja 28 '26 950wBERESFORD, JOHN. Godfather of Downing street: Sir George Downing, 1623-1684; an essay in biography. 318p il $5 Houghton [15s R. Cobden-Sanderson]

B or 92 Downing, Sir George [25-10719]

"On a little cul-de-sac off Whitehall stands No. 10 Downing Street. Of all the seats of executive power that are known by the names of their location 'No. 10' possibly carries more prestige per red brick than any other in the world. This biography of Sir George Downing, after whom Downing Street was named, which takes the reader back to life in the Colony of Massachusetts, is chiefly interesting for the light it sheds on the origins of Downing Street, a piece of property which he 'helde of the Crowne.'" —Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by Violet Barbour

Am Hist R 32:355 Ja '27 400w

"Mr. Beresford's narrative is discursive, but it rests upon solid and industrious research, and besides the facts about Downing adds something to our knowledge of the relations between England and the Netherlands in the time of Cromwell and Charles II, and of the administrative methods of the English Treasury." W: MacDonald

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 My 9 '26 550wBoston Transcript p2 F 13 '26 1550w

"This intricate history of claims and counter-claims, of 'sharp' and 'quickenings' dispatches, is ably elucidated by Mr. Beresford, who did well to select Downing's career, and to follow its bright thread so patiently and ingeniously through the diplomatic maze. Downing played a large part in the building-up of British sea-power; and Downing Street need not blush for its godfather, for all he was 'a perfidious rogue.'"

Nation and Ath 37:404 Je 27 '25 650w

"Sir George had an extraordinary personality, which in many respects was not at all admirable. His biographer has taken great pains to present him in full length portrait against a colorful background of the England of his day."

N Y Times p26 F 7 '26 430w

"Mr. Beresford has given us an account of the epoch which could hardly be surpassed for lucidity, erudition, vivacity and charm." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 140:74 J1 18 '25 520w

"The book is a lovable book, despite a certain amount of dryness, and it is one that can be commended to American and English reader alike."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:707 Ap 10 '26 280w

"While Mr. Beresford has produced the portrait of a most unpleasant person, so that you feel that Pepys' description of him as a perfidious rogue was not far out, he has given us at the same time a very interesting and well-documented book."

+ Spec 135:272 Ag 15 '25 800w

Times [London] Lit Sup p409 Je 18 '25 200w

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS. Almost pagan. 333p $2.50 Bobbs

26-15606

Henry Blackstone is one of those perennial heroes who reach middle age—forty-five to be exact—without experiencing the wilder thrills of romance. In his case the thrills had been scarcely more than a twinge. He early settled down to a quiet anchorage with a wife and three children beside him. His literary work, reflecting this external calm, distinctly lacked punch. Then came the first shock, his son's wrongdoing, closely followed by the second, the reentrance of the lady whom Henry years before had put down as dangerous. She disturbed the puritanic quiet of his mind and aroused the latent pagan in his heart. When their romantic interlude had passed—for Henry was not quite pagan enough to prolong it—and the family harmony was restored, Henry's life and work, enhanced by the experience, took on new zest.

Booklist 23:78 N '26

"Mr. Beresford's latest book is no more than third rate, a class for which the blighting adjective 'competent' must again do duty. A merely competent novel is based upon a quite credible though hackneyed theme, one of the human problems which make up the common stock of fiction, developed through a series of plausible incidents to an acceptable conclusion, without ever rising to distinction or style or brilliance of intellectual implication, or tapping the deep reserves of emotional power." Isabel Paterson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 S 12 '26 720w

"Although we are tempted to smile, while we applaud, at the diabolical ingenuousness and ingenuousness of this novelist, we are also willing to give him his due. He has done a masterful piece of work, both from a literary point of view, and we should imagine, from that of the Ten Best Sellers." I. W. L.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 S 18 '26 620w

Ind 117:362 S 25 '26 80w

"A dreary book. Sprightly without being amusing; sordid without being realistic." M. T. Ritter

— Int Bk R p772 N '26 320w

"Almost pagan has all the ingredients of a best seller and at the same time the quality of literature. It deserves success." Dawn Powell

Lit R p3 S 25 '26 500w

New Repub 48:127 S 22 '26 220w

"In some respects 'Almost Pagan' is a depressing novel. It leaves the impression, not so much that behavioristic standards in England have been upset by the war and all that has followed, as that something which was once there has gone from English character leaving its reactions both to good and ill, like some spring out of which the temper has been taken, languid and ineffective."

N Y Times p6 S 5 '26 1050w

"'Almost Pagan' is a quietly exciting, mischievously behaved, undramatic sounding drama of life among some delegates of the English middle class. It is even in tone, competent, professional. There were times when one reader wished that the affairs of the Blackstones might be dismissed for more adventurous stuff; times when he felt that the story was becoming professional with its publishing and editorial details, but Mr. Beresford emerged ably from this pit onto the higher ground of a human problem." Harry Salpeter

+ — N Y World p4m S 5 '26 850w

"'Almost Pagan' sets the problem of the troubled forties and creditably reaches towards the unattainable solution. In general the narrative progresses with vitality, although in two places it lags, and at the end it is definite where all logic demands uncertainty. It is, in spite of its weaknesses, an entertaining novel, and one worthy of intelligent attention." R. B. MacDougall

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:100 S 11 '26 630w

BERNSTEIN, HERMAN. Road to peace; interviews with famous Americans and Europeans. 245p $2.50 Frank-Maurice

341 Peace. European war, 1914-1918—Influence and results. World politics. International cooperation 26-12491

"A collection of interviews with a great many contemporary leaders in all countries, dealing with a wide range of subjects but all bearing in some degree upon the problems of post-war reconstruction." (Sat R of Lit) "The Americans whose views are quoted number Herbert Hoover, Senator Borah, and Owen D. Young; British opinion is represented by Lord Balfour, Havelock Ellis, and Hall Caine; the spokesmen for France are Paul Painlevé, Romain Rolland, and Henri Barbusse; Hjalmar Schacht and Alfred Kerr voice the pacifist aspirations of Germany, while Leonid Krassin and Christian Rakovsky are strong in their protestations of Soviet Russia's desire for universal peace. President Masaryk of Czechoslovakia and his Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Bénès, utter persuasive pleas for the preservation of international unity, and Premier Grabski of Poland speaks with wisdom in kindred vein." (Bookm)

Am Pol Sci R 20:705 Ag '26 60w

Bookm 63:722 Ag '26 150w

"All these things we have heard before, and while most of them are as true as most political utterances, there is nothing very novel or significant in any of them. The Hall Caine interview, which dates back fifteen years, is as pertinent as any of the others."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 22 '26 200w

"While flavored somewhat by the attitude existing between the man with a note-book and the interviewed, which is usually a little artificial, this record of Mr. Bernstein's is nevertheless valuable and enlightening."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 J1 14 '26 230w

"Propaganda rages unchecked and irresponsibly throughout the nations. As a corrective of this international impotence, Mr. Bernstein's revelation of the minds of the world's leaders is an important contribution to the literature of peace."

+ N Y Times p5 My 23 '26 600w

Reviewed by W. J. Ghent

Outlook 143:148 My 26 '26 120w

"The interviews, as interviews, are not bad. They are good, straightforward, newspaper stuff, and if I had come on them in a daily paper I should have pounced on them with delight. Even when bound up to make a book they are still extremely readable. No one can read 'The Road to Peace' without learning a great deal that he ought to know. But in the nature of things the chapters have little continuity and they are not likely to lead the footsteps of a reluctant humanity very far down the Road which provides a title." J: Bakeless

BERNSTEIN, HERMAN—Continued

+ — Sat of Lit 2:872 Je 19 '26 160w

BERRY, JAMES BERTHOLD. Teaching agriculture; an analysis of the teaching activity in its relation to the learning process. (New-world agriculture ser.) 227p il $2 World bk. (5s Harrap)

630.7 Agriculture—Study and teaching
24-28783

"Principles and methods of teaching agriculture as a vocation."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:28 Ja '26

"The volume will be of help to teachers of agriculture and of practical arts in high schools and colleges but more particularly to teachers of vocational agriculture. The teaching procedure described offers fruitful suggestions to teachers of academic subjects." O. D. Frank

+ School R 33:395 My '25 320w

BERTRAM, ANTHONY. The pool. 310p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Allen & U.]

"This study of low life in the neighborhood of the Docks, by the brutality of its realism and the simplicity of its narration, would have inevitably called up the name of Zola a generation ago. It deals with the doings of Rosie Betts, a high-spirited young factory girl, among the gang of young men—Bert the boxer, Sid and Ernie Parker, and the rest—who congregated round the coffee stall and took the girls to the pictures. The book contains certain scenes and episodes upon which it is almost unbearable to reflect especially since they are presented in the crude directness of Cockney speech accurately transliterated."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"It is a good novel because it has passion, humor and simplicity. The plot is absorbing from the start."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 21 '26 360w

"In his picture of Cockney life in the London slums he has, in his way, achieved something of a small masterpiece." J: Cournos

+ Lit R p3 O 23 '26 350w

Living Age 330:431 Ag 21 '26 250w

Nation and Ath 39:184 My 22 '26 180w

"Mr. Anthony Bertram has power and originality, and The Pool, which is his first novel, gives promise of something better than itself." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 27:199 Je 5 '26 250w

"In spite of one or two situations that are not fully motivated the book on the whole seems to take a powerful grip upon reality and to depict knowingly and veraciously the lives of the denizens of one of London's submerged districts. The atmosphere and the background are suggested with an air of thoroughgoing understanding. The character of Rosie is presented vividly and with conviction."

+ — N Y Times p31 O 24 '26 450w

"Mr. Bertram writes with simplicity and restraint, never trying to force his tone. In consequence of this reticence there is a flatness in certain passages; and the dialogue, though spirited and true to type, lacks fertility and picturesqueness of repartee. It is almost too life-like. Back-chat is apt to be wearisome, and Mr. Bertram gives us little else. The motives of the characters, oddly enough, are less convincing than the characters themselves." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 141:624 My 22 '26 550w

"These people live as naturally on the page as they do on the London streets. Their speech is the raw, indelicate, repetitious, sometimes unwittingly humorous speech of their kind, and they reveal themselves through what they say and do rather than through any reflections of the author concerning them. One may wish that Mr. Bertram's highly concentrated art—as Mr. Bennett's in 'Riceyman Steps'—might have been applied to a subject and scene of more general significance, but this is scarcely legitimate criticism. 'The Pool,' within its sphere, is a notable achievement." Grace Frank

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:233 O 23 '26 520w

"Its virtue is that its author has attempted to depict the squalor of slum life without any touch of false gentleness or prettiness. Long conversations in Cockney dialect fill the greater part of the book. The speech is lively and accurate and almost unendurably ugly; it is when we consider the character of the heroine Rosie that we are doubtful."

+ — Spec 136:922 My 29 '26 170w

Springf'd Republican p7f N 7 '26 450w

"It is impossible to give any description of this tale which does not make it seem revolting, but we hasten to add that there is nothing in the least revolting in the author's attitude to his story or his characters. He has a real dramatic gift, and uses it in presenting a case taken from a harsh, ugly life which, presumably, he knows. And the virtue of the case is the character of Rosie herself. Mr. Bertram has given her, quite convincingly, those qualities of pride, independence and domination which, in other circumstances, have made great women."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p338 My 26 '26 600w

BERTRAM, ARTHUR, pseud. See Ibbott, A. P.

BEST love stories of 1925; ed. by Muriel Miller Humphrey. 330p $2 Dodd

Short stories—Collections (25-11154)

"Second annual collection of Best Love Stories. The magazines from which they have been chosen are many and as varied as the tales themselves. The gamut between Collier's and Liberty, the Dial and the Atlantic, is run. The authors are as varied as the periodicals. Those whose names we immediately recognize are: Ben Hecht, Zona Gale, Mary Heaton Vorse, Barry Benfield and Mildred Cram."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 23:78 N '26

"Some of the stories seem weak and pointless; others vital. At any rate, the book ought to provide entertainment for a summer's evening."

+ — Boston Transcript p5 Je 19 '26 160w

"She has evidently felt free to choose the work of other than 'best selling' authors and the present volume is in consequence both refreshing and varied. Short stories of unusual merit are rare and it is no disparagement of Mrs. Humphrey's judgment to say that unusual stories in the present collection are not numerous. But all are readable and, best of all, the keynote of Mrs. Humphrey's choice is love as a sentiment rather than as a passion." J. J. R.

+ Cath World 124:138 O '26 230w

"Well selected stories from representative writers for the magazine. Not love stories in the usually accepted sense."

+ Wis Lib Bul 22:230 JI '26

BEST poems of 1925; ed. by L. A. G. Strong. 248p $2 Dodd

821.08 English poetry—Collections (24-3693)

"The Best Poems of 1925' edited by L. A. G. Strong, includes both English and American poems culled from the periodicals of the year. It illustrates more keenly than perhaps some Englishmen will like how much more daring is the poetic impulse in this country."—

Springf'd Republican

Booklist 22:285 Ap '26

"Mr. Strong must be given credit for discovering some excellent poems by relatively unknown writers. But, even so, Mr. Strong has been guilty of including poems which by no test could be considered as among the thousand best of the year."

+ Bookm 63:103 Mr '26 150w

Reviewed by Stuart Sherman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 D 6
'25 600w

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 20 '26 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p88 J1 '26

"This is undoubtedly the most interesting of Mr Strong's three anthologies."

+ Dial 80:428 My '26 50w

"If not exactly clarifying, is not without its riches."

Nation 122:162 F 10 '26 30w

"His industry must be unusually great, and his taste has not been blinded by his reading. His yearly anthologies are always clear and interesting and representative."

Spec 135:1145 D 19 '25 200w

"It seems as if the English poets whose works are included had turned away from life and sought peace in the contemplation of familiar homely objects and the past. There is charm and tradition and good manners; but vitality is lacking here."

Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 27 '26 220w

BETHEA, JACK. Deep seam. 314p $2 Houghton
[7s 6d Hodder & S.]

26-6638

Selden, superintendent of the Ivanhoe mines is "as coldblooded a man as ever held in his hands the destinies and happiness of two thousand people." He ruined Christine Bennett's husband, and having thus forced her to come back to Ivanhoe to her father's house, told her what arrangements he had made for her life. The girl accepted defeat, and took the job he offered as secretary, quietly planning her retaliation which came in a manner unforeseen by either of them.

Booklist 22:376 Je '26

"The story reeks with melodrama, but so does mining. Its human nature is mutable, and interesting; so is all human nature. If we do not get quite so absorbed in lovely Christine as we should it is because we are never quite sure to what strata of society she belongs at any given time." I. W. L.

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 10 '26 560w

Cleveland Open Shelf p68 My '26

N Y Times p22 Je 6 '26 350w

"A fine and well-balanced story. The knowledge of the coal industry possessed by the author is minute, but he never lets it bore the reader; rather, he uses it as the chosen background for a struggle between good and evil, distrust and faith. Thus we have an 'industrial novel' quite out of the ordinary—dramatic and exciting."

+ Outlook 142:656 Ap 28 '26 120w

"The action, as befits background and characters, is grim and primitive, but handled with a sure grasp of its dramatic values."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:618 Mr 6 '26 180w

"The story is strong in action and in simple contrasts of character."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p724 O 21 '26
190w

Wis Lib Bul 22:172 My '26

BEURET, GEORGETTE. When I was a girl in France. (Children of other lands books) 208p il $1.25 Lothrop

B or 92 France—Social life and customs.
Children in France 25-17633

The author, who is a musician, tells the story of her happy childhood in the French town of Besançon and in the country surrounding.

Booklist 22:167 Ja '26

Springf'd Republican p7a D 13 '25 150w

"Charmingly written childhood reminiscences."

+ Wis Lib Bul 22:142 Ap '26

BEYLE, MARIE HENRI (DE STENDHAL, pseud.). Abbess of Castro, and other tales; tr. from the French by C. K. Scott Moncrieff. 289p $2.50 Boni & Laveright [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

26-7899

All of these five tales of Stendhal deal with Italian themes. Contents: The abbess of Castro; Vittoria Accoramboni; The Cenci; The Duchess of Palliano; Vanina Vanini.

"The translation is generally excellent, the format is pleasing and the edition seems destined to become the English standard for an important author whose fame after a hundred years is continuing to spread." Malcolm Cowley

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 21
'26 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p107 S '26

"These stories out of Italy are prolix and often tedious. But one never for a moment misses the substance and the energy of Stendhal's unique genius. He is a writer who has influenced many. His power is unavoidable."

+ Lit R p8 Ap 24 '26 170w

"The Abbess of Castro' is not one of Stendhal's best stories, and indicates his faults more clearly than his virtues. Mr. Scott Moncrieff's translation is, as usual, excellent."

+ Nation and Ath 40:89 O 16 '26 100w

Reviewed by Robert Littell

New Repub 48:sup158 S 29 '26 650w

"The Abbess contains little of what makes Stendhal worth reading."

+ New Statesman 28:50 O 23 '26 550w

"They are magnificent, cleanly drawn, colorful, yet not wholly flattering portraits, not at all unlike certain of those by Bronzino which can be seen in the Uffizi Gallery. For only in his acutely accurate psychology is de Stendhal ahead of his time. In his method he belongs—with, of course, minor qualifications—to the vivid sixteenth century, of which he so mordantly writes." Edwin Clark

+ N Y Times p13 Je 6 '26 850w

"They are told with all of Stendhal's narrative verve and unflinching power to conjure up the people whom he describes. As a whole, they present Stendhal's view of the Italian in contrast with the French character—nature in contrast with civilization—always to the advantage of the former."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:827 My 29 '26 280w

Springf'd Republican p14 Mr 25 '26 180w

"Mr. C. K. Scott-Moncrieff's translation is on the same high level as that of his other translations. He is one of the few English translators of today in whom the reader can place absolute confidence. It is to be doubted, however, whether these minor tales of Stendhal appear particularly interesting when denuded as they must inevitably be, of that irreproducible element which is his style of writing French."

Times [London] Lit Sup p671 O 7 '26
450w

BIANCO, MRS MARGERY (WILLIAMS). Apple tree. 47p il $1.50 Doran

26-8493

A gentle story for children, of the coming of Easter and the spring.

Booklist 22:425 J1 '26

Reviewed by A. C. Moore
Bookm 63:210 Ap '26 40w

BIANCO, MARGERY—Continued

"Slight as it is, the book possesses two outstanding qualities—a simplicity of treatment well suited to the delicate theme of the story, and a homeliness of incident which, while it relates the story strongly to everyday life, brings out all the more clearly its spiritual values." Marcia Dalphin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Ap 4 '26 320w

"This delicate and charming fantasy is primarily an Easter story, but so filled is it with the beauty of spring and the limitless faith of childhood, that it can give pleasure at any time, providing it is read in the spirit of Easter. . . . The tale is exquisitely told, with all of Mrs. Williams's gift for imagery and love for childhood."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 9 '26 150w
Cleveland Open Shelf p114 N '26

BIBESCO, ELIZABETH (ASQUITH) princess.
The whole story. 311p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Hutchins]

26-6148

A collection of fifteen short stories, for the most part plotless, depending upon their psychological implications to carry them thru. Contents: The whole story; A box of matches; Violets in a vase; The la Peronniere letters; Puju; What can the matter be? The "Bureau de poste"; Miss Fanshawe; The red cushion; Red hair; Third persons; 1913-1923; While there is life—; Coming back; A lesson to a gentleman; "Love belongs to the happy—".

"She seems to write Stravinsky under a Cooper-Hewitt light upon slips of note-paper while a wind from the cedars beneath her window blows the papers away before the ink has dried—one is tempted to parody the Princess Bibesco's highly individual style." Anne Hard

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 23 '26 850w

"Perhaps the most outstanding feature of the book is the author's infallible grasp of feminine mental and emotional processes. Men have been openly explaining (and secretly marveling at) women from the beginning of time, but the women who have been able to analyze their own sex with such uncompromising activity and without ever degenerating into the safety of a judgment, are rare." M. S. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 10 '26 400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p109 S '26

"Princess Bibesco's stories are always entertaining, and the fifteen in this volume are no exception. If one were to point out any particular fault, it would be that at times she leaves too much to the imagination—moves leisurely into her story with only the most meagre of stage settings, leaving the reader to form his background as best he may."

+ Ind 116:362 Mr 27 '26 180w

"Princess Bibesco closes with a delicious touch, an extract from a biographical dictionary from which we gather that the young man is immortal as the receiver of the letters which, in life, he threw unopened into a box. The story proves what Princess Bibesco can do when she gives her whole mind to writing. Undeniably clever though the others are, they are just preliminary sketches by comparison." L. G. Short

+ Lit R p4 Mr 27 '26 350w

"The stories in this, her latest volume, are far and away the best that Princess Bibesco has yet written. In this collection she emerges as a deft and sympathetic creator of people who does not allow a somewhat feverish talent for the mot juste, a highly developed flair for oddities, verbal, human and material, and a gift of ironic curiosity to interfere with the main thing—the bringing to life of people in whom we can believe, with our hearts as well as with our heads." R. L.

+ New Repub 47:68 Je 2 '26 650w

"Princess Bibesco always writes with wit and subtlety, though her wit is not always on the same level. And sometimes it is a little difficult to see on which side her shafts of irony fall. When she seems to be making fun of somebody in her own pages, she may merely be making fun of the person who turns the pages." F. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 26:49 O 24 '25 520w

"Princess Bibesco writes her deft, ironical studies of temperament with a sophistication entirely shorn of cheapness and almost entirely shorn of mere cleverness. Her people appear not only in isolation, but also in contrast; they are not only dissected, but also counterpoised. To all of them she brings a brilliance not so much creative as interpretative."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 21 '26 720w

"Elizabeth Bibesco has a taste for rather 'gamey' situation, and a glittering turn of dialogue."

N Y World p7m Mr 28 '26 230w

Outlook 143:148 My 26 '26 40w

"Princess Bibesco's earlier books were mainly occupied with one topic, love. In her new volume she has extended her boundaries with marked success. The 'La Peronniere Letters' and 'Red Hair' show what she can do with subjects from which love is absent or to which it is incidental. These stories are full of shrewdness and penetration. They have an admirably firm outline and their objectivity suggests that the range of her subject-matter is unlimited if she chooses to call upon it."

+ Sat R 140:482 O 24 '25 450w

"There are a number of good things in her stories; a wit that is often new in form or application is hers, and no doubt for placing such brilliance within the reach of every reader, for his personal use, she is deserving of the fervent thanks of every hostess. She experiments a bit with style, and has a slight tendency to reiterate a fine phrase or a trifle of happy descriptive prose, but in general her writing is worthy of the smart dialogue."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:122 S 18 '26 550w

Spring'd Republican p7f Ag 8 '26 250w

"It is unfortunate that the story which gives its name to the title of the book is by no means one of the most attractive; it may deservedly claim to be a brilliant piece of characterization, but its strength is dissipated in familiar verbal ingenuities. Of the other tales—there is not a single complete failure among them—'Violets in a Vase' has a reticence which makes full atonement for the one or two ludicrous touches of irony in the book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p616 S 24 '25 430w

BIBLE. OLD TESTAMENT—PSALMS. The Psalms; tr. by J. M. Powis Smith. 274p $3 Univ. of Chicago press

223.2

26-19183

The translation of the Psalms is not an attempt to put them into modern everyday English. The purpose of the new rendering is, rather, to incorporate the results of recent scholarship, keeping as far as possible to the authorized version but correcting that text where it has been found to be wrong.

"For a long time we have needed a translation of the Book of Psalms into the language of our day—a translation that would give the modern reader new insight into the classical rendering of the King James Version, and enable him to see in the Psalms the meaning they originally had. Such a translation is the new version by J. M. Powis Smith."

+ J Geol 34:adv O '26 480w

"While we may, in minor points of diction, criticize the translation and disagree with it, there is little doubt that its dignity, literary style and insight into the Semitic mind will be generally recognized. It is a translation that will be grateful to the devotional reader and the scholar alike, because both scholarship and fine religious feeling have gone into the making of it."

+ J Religion 6:547 S '26 180w

"Anyone who reads the Psalms simply to recall the sound and feelings which experience has made for him into a half forgotten tune should keep away from this version. But the reader who desires to know more nearly what was thought and said by the early Jewish singers in their services in the Second Temple will find in this volume a conscientious and discriminating attempt to tell him. Had the translator claimed originality or boasted of great ingenuity his work would have been less valuable. The author's modesty both about his own work and the original psalter commends him." H: J. Caddybury

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:115 S 18 '26 1400w

BIGGERS, EARL DERR. Chinese parrot. 316p $2 Bobbs

26-15964

Madame Jordan is anxious to sell her pearl necklace, and P. J. Madden is anxious to buy it. The bargain is struck thru the head of a jewelry firm in New York and the first payment is made. The jeweler's son and a Chinese detective are commissioned to deliver the necklace to Madden at his isolated ranch house on the California desert. In that awe-inspiring setting, and in the accompanying medley of humor, romance, mystery, and dark deeds, the mission is accomplished and the Chinese detective makes a scoop.

Booklist 23:175 Ja '27

"The present reviewer finds in 'The Chinese Parrot' those same engaging qualities that made Earl Derr Biggers's earlier book so deservedly popular. He strikes '13' again." Carty Ranck

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 N 7 '26 100w

"With the happy faculty of combining humor with mystery and coming out with a story that is ingenious and readable to the last page, Mr. Biggers has done it again. His leading characters are youthful, full of energy and mentally equal to the solving of any mystery."

+ Boston Transcript p1 S 25 '26 120w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 N '26

"It is not only a corking mystery story with an unexpected ending but it is rich in humor."

+ Lit R p6 O 2 '26 150w

"Mr. Biggers makes good use of his various changes of background, and the plot is so successfully contrived that guessing it is next to impossible."

+ N Y Times p12 Ja 2 '27 460w

"The situations which arise during the uncovering bit by bit of a gang of crooks are mildly exciting; the love affair between Bob and a young lady 'location finder' for the movies sparkles; and the solution of the mystery is one that not many readers will guess."

+ Outlook 144:280 O 27 '26 300w

BIGGERS, EARL DERR. Fifty candles. 159p $1 Bobbs

26-4065

A birthday party was in preparation, the fifty candles ready lighted on the cake, when the host was discovered on the floor near the table, dead of a knife thrust. Who killed him and why? The Chinese servant for whom the party was given? The dead man's wife? Her lover? Or the defrauded business partner? Along with the mystery there is a slight element of romance in this story of novelette length.

"If the characters are not the kind I myself care for, and if the tale is told without writing grace or beauty of mood, well—we can't have everything. Mr. Biggers should win the mystery addicts hands down with his ingenious murder, his inscrutable Chinaman, his illuminated birthday cake and his story of true but rather incredible love." Will Cuppy

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Mr 7 '26 400w

"A picturesque and interesting tale." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p362 My '26 100w

Lit R p8 My 22 '26 80w

"Mr. Biggers gives a dull, horrendous prelude and spends all his pages in making his young man make love to the silliest girl heroine yet to appear in detective mythology. For your reward you get one (1) murder. I ask you, is it quite fair?" Donald Douglas

— N Y World p7m Mr 14 '26 100w

"The story is very ingeniously put together and well told. It is a short story rather than a novel, but it is an unusually good one, and it has a pretty little love story woven in with the mystery."

+ N Y Times p22 Mr 14 '26 460w

"Those of us who have recognized the padding and multiplying of false trails in so many stories of this type will thank Mr. Biggers for telling his yarn quickly and stopping when it is done."

+ Outlook 142:534 Ap 7 '26 50w

"It is a well-told tale, just the size to slip into a pocket for beguiling say 50 miles of railroad travel or half a lonely evening. The reader will forget the passing of time and space in absorption in the story."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 28 '26 200w

BIGGS, JOHN. Demigods. 230p $2 Scribner

26-9110

Hosea Gault, prophet and religious fanatic, led a small group of followers into the Connecticut valley and founded there the Dunkard colony of Boontown. He married and had one son, John, born to inherit his father's religious zeal. Cast out of the colony, he strides across the pages a revolting red behemoth, driven by a devastating energy like his father before him to seek a world of his own.

"Demigods is a novel done futuristically; a canvas of perplexing planes and levels, of clashing colors, and it is only by reading the whole and then looking at the ensemble through half-shut eyes that a great, yawping, Rabelaisian figure springs out of the confusion; and that is one John Gault, brought up as a Dunkard, cast off as a pagan and finishing as an obese vulgarian touched with religious mania." T. S. Stribling

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 My 9 '26 980w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 21 '26 520w

"The caprice of this story stems from Rabelais and Cervantes. It is the result of a vigorously applied imagination and an exciting enthusiasm for philosophical perversity. It is a yarn that may mean almost anything to anybody. And it is highly amusing, if startling, whatever it means." Walter Yust

Lit R p7 My 29 '26 650w

"There is much that is fascinating in this novel. But in many ways, like the character of John Gault, its peculiar distortions defeat its purpose."

+ — N Y Times p16 My 16 '26 600w

Outlook 143:416 Jl 21 '26 60w

"Told in a cadenced and biblically colored prose admirably suited to the theme."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:844 Je 5 '26 250w

Springf'd Republican p7f S 12 '26 500w

BILBY, JULIAN W. Nanook of the North; the story of an Eskimo family. 261p il $2.50 Dodd [15s Arrowsmith]

919.8 Eskimos [25-25972]

The Nanook of this story is a typical central Eskimo, an inhabitant of the bleakest section of the Arctic regions, and while he is not the famous Nanook of the movies, his story is like that of his prototype a faithful presentation of the life, the tribal customs and superstitions of the central Eskimo, and as such is illustrated in part with reproductions from the film, and in part from other photographs of the same scenes and characters.

BILBY, J. W.—Continued

Booklist 23:167 Ja '27

Bookm 64:xxvii Ja '27 170w

"His long residence among them gives him the right to speak with authority, and his graphic and interesting tale of the life of a people who are changing rapidly under the impact of civilization is not only thoroughly readable but makes a worth-while contribution to anthropology."

+ N Y Times p24 O 10 '26 280w

"Parents looking out in good time for Christmas presents will not go far wrong if they put Mr. Bilby's excellent book on their list."

+ Sat R 140:664 D 5 '25 700w

BILL, ALFRED H. Highroads of peril; being the adventures of Franklin Darlington, American, among the secret agents of the exiled Louis XVIII, king of France. 322p il $2 Little

26-15795

The hero of this historical romance of the Napoleonic era is a young American in London who is dismissed by his uncle for his foppish ways and is laughed at by his lady. He plunges into an amazing series of adventures revolving about the gallant Duc d'Enghien, political opponent of Napoleon murdered by the emperor's command. He moves from London to Boulogne, thence to the Black Forest and finally to Vincennes where the duke meets death and the hero and his love are reconciled.

"The story keeps going, and though the suspense is not too well sustained, the reader always wonders what can happen next."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ja 2 '27 200w

"Here you have history, adventure, and good writing." H: Boston

+ Ind 117:551 N 13 '26 100w

Lit R p12 S 25 '26 80w

"In 'Highroads of Peril,' Alfred H. Bill has written an engrossing historical romance. The story, laid in Europe in the final days of the First Consulate, moves along with such smoothness and kaleidoscopic variety of incident that once begun it is difficult to lay it aside until the final melodramatic climax is reached."

+ N Y Times p22 S 19 '26 520w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Broken trail (Eng title Sour grapes). 314p $2 Stokes

26-15962

An adventure story which vibrates between Canada and the Scottish border. Garnet, formerly of the Northwest mounted police, in order to help his friend Keith Harden, a young banker accused of theft, does some clever detective work. He not only succeeds in catching the real thief but also wins the love of Harden's charming sister.

"His admirers may rest assured that this is a typical Bindloss novel. It is, in fact, the thirty-third typical Bindloss novel."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 N 7 '26 80w

"The Broken Trail' is not the greatest novel of Mr. Bindloss—nor is it the author at his worst. However, it serves its purpose as pleasant entertainment for those who have read Bindloss and like his style."

Boston Transcript p4 O 20 '26 180w

"The introduction of the thinly mysterious is unavailing in the endeavor to enliven the inanimate plot. From beginning to end, the tale is extremely tame, clumsily handled, and devoid of anything resembling inventiveness."

— Sat R of Lit 3:178 O 9 '26 120w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Pine Creek ranch (Eng title Helen, the conqueror). 314p $2 Stokes

26-6140

In answer to an advertisement an English factory girl comes to Canada to marry the owner of Pine Creek ranch. She finds the farm in a pitiable condition, for her husband is an idler and occasional drunkard. She makes a plucky fight to save both her husband and the ranch and, succeeding, earns the admiration of the community.

"It is a calmer and in many ways better story than most of Mr. Bindloss's epics of the prairies."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 2 '26 280w

Boston Transcript p7 My 8 '26 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p54 Ap '26

"Very interesting tale."

+ Lit R p8 Mr 20 '26 170w

N Y Times p9 My 16 '26 330w

Times [London] Lit Sup p250 Ap 1 '26 120w

BINNEY, GEORGE. With seaplane and sledge in the Arctic; with a preface by W. J. Sollas. 287p il $6 Doran [21s Hutchinson] 919.8 Arctic regions [26-2060]

"This book describes the work done and the adventures experienced by the Oxford University Arctic Expedition of 1924—the third of a series organized by Mr. Binney in conjunction with some of the younger members of the University, who thought that their taste for Arctic sports might be usefully turned to the service of science. Professor Sollas, who contributes a preface dealing with the valuable additions thus made to our knowledge of Spitzbergen and the surrounding ocean, tells us that the cost of the expedition was only £5,300, which was contributed in varying shares by the explorers themselves. Their average age was in the twenties, and 'the keynote of the expedition was laughter and high spirits.'"—Sat R

Booklist 23:74 N '26

Bookm 64:xxxii O '26 200w

"Most readable book. Happily, the author's performance is better than his philosophy! Read this book and grow young." C. L. Skinner

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 3 '26 1200w

"The book reads like an adventure story, as indeed it is, only adventure with reality and purpose. It is well written and profusely illustrated. An important and interesting addition to the literature of the Arctic." F. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p1 O 16 '26 540w

"A well-written and well-illustrated account."

+ Nation and Ath 38:472 D 26 '25 150w

New Statesman 26:supvx D 12 '25 280w

"The volume has added zest and appeal, over and above its notable interest as a story of adventure, because it is full of the spirit of youth."

+ N Y Times p20 O 17 '26 230w

"Mr. Binney's simple and enthusiastic record is well worth reading, and shows, as Professor Sollas justly observes, that 'the spirit of the ancient Vikings is not yet extinct among us.'"

+ Sat R 141:100 Ja 23 '26 130w

"Youth is there and the zest of youth, but there is no flashy cleverness. As a piece of description it would be hard to better his story of the seaplane's first flight."

+ Spec 136:282 F 13 '26 580w

"Even were the results smaller, the expedition was more than justified as a gallant exploit of youth; and Mr. Binney's narrative makes lively and heartening reading."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p877 D 17 '25 620w

BIRKELAND, KNUT BERGESEN. Whalers of Akutan; an account of modern whaling in the Aleutian islands. 171p il $3 Yale univ. press

639.2 Whaling

26-9596

This differs from other stories of whalers and whaling in that it gives a more complete picture of the commercial side of the industry as it is carried on by a whaling company in the Aleutian islands. It tells how the whales are killed by harpoons shot by expert gunners from cannon mounted on a sturdy little steamboat, and how the catch is then towed ashore and turned into money.

"A promoter of this Aleutian enterprise, and an investor in it, the author of this book went north to take control of things when his company drifted towards shoal water. The story he tells is thus a factory manager's account of a whale-disposal industry and not much else. The author unfortunately has not the slightest kind of literary gift. The pictures, however, are excellent." H: Beston

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 6 '26 220w

Boston Transcript p4 My 22 '26 580w

Ind 117:253 Ag 28 '26 150w

Reviewed by J. W. Leonard

Int Bk R p569 Ag '26 160w

"He has come to his subject fresh and untutored in the ways of whales, and so makes a significant contribution, rich in details, to the study of their habits and life."

+ N Y Times p23 My 16 '26 300w

Outlook 143:450 Jl 28 '26 50w

"Those who desire to know what honest industry without superfluous adventure is like, will be pleased with 'The Whalers of Akutan.' Whaling of this kind forms an important industry, and a larger one than many people realize." F. V. Morley

+ Sat R of Lit 3:102 S 11 '26 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p466 Jl 8 '26 60w

BIRKHOFF, GEORGE DAVID. Origin, nature, and influence of relativity. (Lowell inst. lectures) 185p $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan

530.1 Relativity (physics) 26-177

"Here Professor Birkhoff presents in print the contents of the Lowell lectures of 1923, somewhat revised and extended. As the book is written primarily for the non-mathematical reader, the use of analytical symbols is confined to two of the eight chapters. An account of the concepts underlying the relativity theory and their experimental confirmation occupies the first half of the book. The most important chapter is that on the structure of matter, in which the author attempts to extend Einstein's theory so as to account for the stability of atomic nuclei, and is led to some very suggestive conclusions."—Sat R of Lit

"The style is very terse, too much so in fact, and the substance can be abstracted—by a non-technical reader—only with considerable difficulty. The book is by no means a popularization of the subject; but it will be of considerable value as the statement of the point of an eminent mathematician, to those whose preparation allows them to follow all the steps of mathematical reasoning."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 29 '26 200w

N Y New Tech Bks 11:4 Ja '26

Sat R of Lit 2:620 Mr 6 '26 160w

Springf'd Republican p7f My 30 '26 220w

BIRMINGHAM, GEORGE A., pseud. See Han-nay, J. O.

BISHOP, FARNHAM, and BRODEUR, ARTHUR GILCHRIST. Altar of the legion. 316p il $2 Little

26-4302

This tale of the lost land of Lyonesse, or Legionis Asa, is based half on legend, half on history. King Owain of Wales sends a messenger to ask for help against the besieging Saxons. This messenger, Prince Meriadue, masquerading as his sister, the Princess Gwenllian, encounters the heroic Roman Drusus of Lyonesse, and enlists his aid against the beleaguered king. Battle and bloodshed, deeds of valor and high treason, love, hate, and religious warfare are the substance of the tale, which culminates in the disappearance of Legionis Asa under the sea.

"Skillful hands have fashioned this rousing tale. Villainy, disguises, buried treasures and savage fights, portrayed with convincing archaeological detail, keep the plot moving swiftly toward a satisfying climax."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Mr 21 '26 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 N '26

"It might be catalogued as 'an historical novel,' a trifle hard to read because of its Latin names, but with romance enough to make it interesting." W. C. K.

+ Lit R p8 Ap 17 '26 230w

"Vigorous, colorful and swiftly moving story."

+ N Y Times p9 F 21 '26 1000w

"Drusus talks like a cross between a disinterested reformer and a translated Latin grammar. All the villains are bad blond Saxons. All the good people are patriotic Welsh and Romans."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 28 '26 250w

Sat R of Lit 2:907 Jl 3 '26 280w

Springf'd Republican p6a Ap 11 '26 200w

Wis Lib Bul 22:333 D '26

BISHOP, WILLIAM WARNER. Backs of books; and other essays in librarianship. 338p $4 Williams & Wilkins [18s Balliere]

020.4 Library science. Libraries—Addresses, essays, lectures. Librarians. Books and reading 26-9454

A collection of papers and addresses by the librarian of the University of Michigan, on various phases of the librarian's calling. Many of these essays have been delivered to library schools and associations, some contributed to the Library journal and other periodicals. Partial contents: The Vatican library; Book-hunting in Rome; A decade of library progress in America; The amount of help given to readers; Cataloging as an asset; The theory of reference work; Changing ideals in librarianship; The American Library association at the crossroads; Fashions in books.

Booklist 22:393 Jl '26

St Louis 24:159 Je '26

"This is just the kind of book which with a little judicious guidance by marking should be put into the hands of school and college executives, other than formal members of library boards, leaders of social and educational movements, et al., so that they may get at the life and adventure of the library movement. The author is decidedly of the group of great librarians whom he characterizes as men who 'not only knew, but knew how.'" F. A. Manny

+ Survey 57:106 O 15 '26 390w

"The subject matter is generally speaking of a technical kind, but Mr. Bishop has a scholar's outlook and his pages can be dipped into by the general reader with profit."

Times [London] Lit Sup p618 S 16 '26 260w

Wis Lib Bul 22:163 My '26

BIXLER, JULIUS SEELYE. Religion in the philosophy of William James. (Amherst bks.) 225p $3 Marshall Jones

191 James, William. Religion—Philosophy 26-12514

"Sets forth the conflict of two kinds of religious values, monistic and pluralistic. James finally decided in favor of pluralism with its aggressive attitude toward life, at the same time retaining certain monistic concepts. Evidence is adduced of James's belief in survival, and the author avers his opposition to the absolute was on account of its denial of more important values. The empirical method, pragmatic test, and will to believe are discussed at length."—Outlook

BIXLER, J. S.—Continued

Booklist 23:108 D '26

"This is distinctly a scholarly work and written in a style fortunate for the lay reader." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 63:xv Ag '26 100w

"Admirable volume. He is a sympathetic interpreter and he manages to co-ordinate clearly the welter of ideas which are scattered in a rather ramshackle way in James's writings. Thus his book presents an important side of James's thought in a fashion to assist the student and to interest the layman." S. P. Lamprecht

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 S 19 '26 1950w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 23 '26 1000w

"A really scholarly contribution." A. G. B.

+ Cath World 124:563 Ja '27 670w

Int J Ethics 37:107 O '26 100w

"A fascinating book dealing sympathetically but critically with one of the most alluring figures in the early years of the twentieth century."

+ J Religion 6:546 S '26 60w

"I cannot help feeling that Mr. Bixler, by a selection that suits his own purpose rather than does justice to the changing life history and myriad-minded personality of William James, presents us with a pattern of his thought that does compose a set and special conclusion, a conclusion that philosophy figures as an item in the religion of William James, and not religion as an item in his philosophy, a false conclusion, therefore. Perhaps the facts that this book is an expanded Ph.D. thesis and that its author is a clergyman have a bearing on its character. They certainly must have influenced the startling dullness with which the liveliest of the thinkers of the last generation is here treated." H. M. Kallen

— New Repub 48:199 O 6 '26 620w

Outlook 144:92 S 15 '26 60w

Sat R of Lit 3:422 D 11 '26 500w

BKAH-HGYUR. Tibetan tales, derived from Indian sources; tr. from the Tibetan of the Kahgyur by F. Anton Von Schiefner, and from the German into English by W. R. S. Ralston, with an introd.; new ed. with preface by C. A. F. Rhys Davids. (Broadway translations) 368p $5 Dutton

398 Folklore—Tibet 26-19904

A translation of legends and fables from the Far East many of them derived from the Panchatantra and other Indian sources.

"The feats of these Tibetan ascetics suggest that there are varieties of religious experience unreamt of in Western philosophy. Nor can one find in European folk-lore a tale like that of 'The Dumb Cripple,' in which Prince Abja makes a pretense of being mute and lame so that he may avoid the greater affliction of kingship. The majority of the tales, however, are less foreign. The fundamental motifs occurring in them are old friends in new guises." Babette Deutsch

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 15 '26 720w

Reviewed by Harendranath Maitra

Lit R p4 My 29 '26 180w

BLACK, CLEMENTINA. Linleys of Bath; with an introd. by George Saintsbury. 300p il $5 Minton, Balch & Co. [15s Secker]

920 Linley family

"Thomas Linley, 'probably the best master of singing whom England has ever produced,' and Mary Johnson, a woman of very ordinary character and appearance—these two married in 1752 and produced a family of twelve children. The most famous of these, Eliza, achieved fame as a singer before her marriage to Richard Brinsley Sheridan; the others, of almost equal beauty and attainments with three exceptions, lived out brief and tragic lives. It is of these children that Clementina Black has written a book which will stand as a unique and felicitous example of a family chronicle which is thorough, scholarly and yet charming in every detail."—N Y Times

"Miss Black has done her best, and on the whole has done pretty well. Her style is good and her facts, such as they are, present themselves in nicely arranged order. But the fame of the Linley family has died out so completely that the questioning 'Who?' has almost gained the rank of a suffix." J. N. Leonard

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 2 '27 420w

"In place of idle gossip we are given splendid glimpses of the Linley women. It must be admitted that the authoress is sometimes overscholarly in her work, especially when she examines each letter so carefully for evidence of true origin. All this may be forgiven, however, when the reader notes how carefully she has grouped and arranged her facts. We have no pointless chatter; the story of the Linleys goes marching on from their birth to the dolorous death and departing out of this world of them all." S. H.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 29 '26 550w

"The Linleys of Bath was a labour of love, but of love kept in order by fine gifts of criticism and presentation."

+ New Statesman 28:supxvi N 13 '26 260w

"She presents a picture of a fragile and unforgettable group of people who lived life charmingly, sincerely and artistically. So long as beauty in art, in person and in character has the power to evoke a sigh for lost loveliness, so long will her account of 'The Linleys of Bath' float like a glittering bubble on the surging tide of biographical literature." J. Carter

+ N Y Times p6 N 28 '26 1100w

"The late Miss Clementina Black, whose delightful book is now reissued after an interval of fifteen years, did her work extremely well. When her authorities fail she fills in the story with ingenious and convincing conjecture and she preserves an excellent sense of proportion."

+ Sat R 142:686 D 4 '26 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p840 N 25 '26 850w

BLACK, JACK. You can't win; with a foreword by Robert Herrick. 394p $2 Macmillan

B or 92 Crime and criminals 26-17437

A professional thief who after twenty-five years' experience in the underworld had the character and will to break the chains of his criminal habits and reinstate himself in society tells the story of his crimes and prison experiences. The tale of his long career in crime is told simply and with the art of the born story teller. There is no preaching, no complaining, no whining for sympathy, but the moral implied in the title is that you can't win by being a crook, and that the earnings, in dollars and cents, do not average up to the wages gained from an honest trade.

Booklist 23:171 Ja '27

"I believe Jack Black has written a remarkable book; it is vivid and picturesque; it is not fiction; it is a book that was needed and it should be widely read." Clarence Darrow

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 O 24 '26 800w

"The book is as full of exciting adventures as any pudding could be full of plums. And it carries an air of sincerity which convinces while it fascinates." E. G.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 30 '26 640w

"Subjected in the reading to every test 'You Can't Win' rings true. Jack Black protests against many of the abuses and inhumanities of the prisons of other days, the straitjacket and the brutalities of individual wardens and guards, but the protest is objective, not subjective." A. B. Maurice

+ Lit R p4 O 9 '26 800w

"Despite the fascination of these picaresque adventures, the most nobly exciting thing in the book is the revelation it gives of the unbreakable spirit of Jack Black himself." R. L. Burgess

+ Nation 123:sup605 D 1 '26 260w

"Nothing half as rewarding has come down the highway of books about thieves, tramps, murderers, bootleggers and crooks in years. . . Jack Black's story combines so many things: the carefully worked out detail and suspense of the detective story, the sharp eye and ears of a collector of fellow characters, all very different and alive, the naked, honest, unfevered revelation of the autobiography of a man's heart and mind." R. L.

+ New Repub 48:382 N 17 '26 1000w

"Much of this book is about loneliness. Yet its pages are bracingly companionable. It is one of the friendliest books ever written. It is a superb piece of autobiography, testimony that cannot be impeached. While it is a statement of an American tragedy, it has laughter, brevity, style; as a book to pass the time away with, it is in a class with the best fiction." Carl Sandburg

+ N Y World p9m O 10 '26 750w

"Here and there in the volume occur coincidences which suggest the employment of the creative art by Mr. Black; yet that may be but another way of saying that this autobiography of an ex-crook is far more thrilling than the average work of Wild West fiction built around bad-man characters." Robertus Love

+ Sat R of Lit 3:170 O 9 '26 680w

"In many ways 'You Can't Win' stands out over the general run of this type of 'confessions.' It is clear, lucid, written with facility and told with a wealth of incident which cannot fail to arouse interest. On the surface, the book, whether fiction or fact, is a good psychological study of an essentially criminal mind—criminal, that is, by choice."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 D 8 '26 400w

"It is better than a novel for it scorns artifice and depends for its breath-taking thrills upon facts and the age-long instinct for the man-hunt." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 57:331 D 1 '26 400w

BLACK, JOHN BENNETT. Art of history; a study of four great historians of the eighteenth century. 188p $2.50 Crofts [7s 6d Methuen]

907 History—Historiography. Voltaire, François Marie Aroutet de. Hume, David. Robertson, William. Gibbon, Edward

26-16593

This study of the art of writing history is specifically an examination of the conception of history held by four great historians of the eighteenth century—Voltaire, Hume, Robertson and Gibbon. The writer maintains that the popularity of history in that century was due to the fact that it was a humane study related to literature, philosophy and ethics—an art rather than a science. It is his belief that modern history writing with its insistence on the scientific method, on documentation and specialization, while adding greatly to the accuracy and fullness of historical knowledge has lost in cultural value and popular appeal.

"The impression received by the general reader from Dr. Black's book as to the character of historical writing in the eighteenth century will be that there were giants on the earth in those days, though all were hampered by the general atmosphere; but that in greatness Gibbon immensely surpasses his contemporaries." Alice Gardner

Eng Hist R 41:460 J1 '26 780w

"Even the massive self-compacency of Gibbon might have been a little shaken if he could hear Professor Black accusing him, with plenty of evidence to back the assertion, of deliberately distorting his characters to make his history more amusing reading for smug cynics like himself. Nevertheless it would be hard to find a more convincing champion at the Bar than Professor Black: his case for the defence gains immensely from the cool candour with which it is presented. What stands out in his argument is not what his clients, being human, failed to do, but what they did."

New Statesman 27:202 Je 5 '26 920w

"Pleasant and gracefully written little volume."

+ Sat R 141:162 F 6 '26 1200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p408 Je 17 '26 680w

BLACKBURN, BARBARA. Return to bondage. 333p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Secker]

26-16329

"The story is a study of a young group in London, Laura Oliphant and Joan Rivers and their particular swains occupying most of the foreground. Laura, decorative and spoilt, the product of a charming home and a family that has made no demands on her deeper qualities, escapes from a love affair with a lout to the usual freedom of London 'digs' with her friend Joan, and makes some effort to find a job. But work in a florist's shop lasts two days, and she sinks into laziness and mild Bohemianism. Her marriage to Wilfrid Burns follows very soon, and, genuinely in love, she braces up to enjoy life in a suburban cottage. . . Serious difficulties begin, coldness and mutual neglect. And she runs away from bondage, but she knows that there is no permanent escape."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Barbara Blackburn writes with her eye not on the personalities of her people nor on the drama of her situation, but on her philosophy of life. Joan, Laura and Wilfred, Laura's husband, are sharply enough differentiated, and one follows with interest the twists and turns and inconsistencies of their minds in the painful process of adjustment. Most of the minor characters, however, seem to be mere conveniences for the purposes of the story; and the story itself a convenient vehicle for the rather Carlylese conclusions its author wishes to draw." Garreta Busey

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 O 3 '26 450w

"There is nothing particularly bad about 'Return to Bondage.' It simply lacks any definite power. Its plot is old and terribly hackneyed. The author's treatment of it has also been used a thousand times. The characters are weak, unoriginal and erratically depicted. Perhaps there lies the reason for the book's dullness—there is so little originality. And originality will cover a multitude of literary sins."

— Boston Transcript p2 O 23 '26 160w

"Another story of disillusionment in human relations, rather diffusely handled in the diverging lines of experience of the two heroines. Miss Blackburn writes only prose, a firm, dry, rapid style which gives her touch upon life something of aphoristic authority."

+ — New Repub 48:254 O 20 '26 130w

"Altogether the book is quiet, human, understanding. It is in no sense a great book, and even those who find it ringing true may find it from time to time a little dull in the reading. For embellishments there are none, dramatic, poetic or colorful. It is a subdued, not a bright picture; and the picture has no frame."

+ — N Y Times p13 D 19 '26 600w

"From the mass of laborious fiction about the modern girl and the conflict of generations, this emerges as a story wise, witty, and free-moving. The book is as feminine in substance as a tale by Dorothy Canfield or Kathleen Norris; but in its detachment more like the work of G. B. Stern or Virginia Woolf. It neither ogles youth nor mocks. It bends a gaze steady and benign upon that timeless and unfathomable mystery." H. W. Boynton

+ Sat R of Lit 3:272 N 6 '26 580w

BLACKBURN, BARBARA—Continued

"A first novel with a 'message' sounds solemn enough, and a 'message' is announced on the cover of Return to Bondage, but luckily it is conveyed with so little pretentiousness that the reader may take it or leave it. . . . A well-written book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p354 My 27 '26 320w

BLACKER, CHARLES PATON. Birth control and the state; a plea and a forecast. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 87p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

176 Birth control

26-14615

The writer sums up the arguments for and against birth control and the dissemination of knowledge concerning it, stressing the personal, social, and racial consequences of the measure and suggesting government regulation thru the Ministry of health.

"An admirable presentation of facts concerning the subject, which is a very live question in England and which is gaining prominent adherents very rapidly in this country. The book is interestingly written and can be recommended to all those interested in this subject." M. P. Ravenel

+ Am J Pub Health 16:1039 O '26 200w
Booklist 23:65 N '26

"His is a book no one should fail to read, least of all those among us who are overdone by the usual propaganda." A. B. Parsons

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 17 '26 650w

J Home Econ 18:532 S '26 160w

"The temperate discussion of arguments for and against birth-control with which this appeal is prefaced should insure for it a fair hearing, and the evidence of unwanted babies in the slums adduced from the author's own medical experience is most impressive."

+ Nation and Ath 39:228 Je 19 '26 80w

Reviewed by D. B. Woolsey

New Repub 48:102 S 15 '26 180w

New Statesman 27:558 Ag 28 '26 950w

N Y Times p14 Ag 8 '26 320w

"He writes lucidly, moderately, and from wide knowledge; his book undoubtedly gives a better understanding of the subject than any other brief account we know."

+ Sat R 141:706 Je 12 '26 480w

Reviewed by C. E. M. Joad

Spec 136:sup1004 Je 12 '26 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p287 Ap 15 '26 100w

BLACKMAR, FRANK WILSON. History of human society. 512p $3 Scribner

901 Civilization. Sociology. Progress 26-6037

A study of social progress from the first grouping of primitive man to the complicated structure of the present day. The book tells what we know of man, how he first lived, how he worked with other men, what kinds of houses he built, what tools he made, and how he formed a government under which to live.

"It is a profoundly sound, sane, and sanitary book. Yet it does not parade its learning, but seems to meet plain folks on their own ground. It deserves to be adopted as one of the indispensable in American school curricula." A. W. Small

+ Am J Soc 31:817 My '26 300w

Booklist 22:397 Jl '26

"The position taken by Professor Blackmar is virtually a last stand of the older evolutionary thinkers against the inroads of the cultural group. This book might have been written in the days of Herbert Spencer, long before the anthropologists began amassing the wealth of material that has so profoundly affected social theory. The few arguments advanced to meet the newer school are so feebly stated that they are quite ineffective." M. M. Willey

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 S 5 '26 460w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 3 '26 520w

"The purpose is a commendable one—to tell us how our culture came to be what it is. But the story is told without the slightest reference to recent researches in anthropology, and with only the meagerest dependence on recent historical studies. In addition, there are a large number of simple errors of fact." J. Storck

— Hist Outlook 17:301 O '26 470w

"Many of the conclusions which Professor Blackmar derives from the material which he considers seem to me to be either unwarranted or premature. When the sociologist becomes philosopher and hazards generalizations based upon the researches of others he invariably says too much or too little." E. C. Lindeman

— Sat R of Lit 3:89 S 4 '26 250w

"It presents the conclusions of science and history in a way to provide a review of a fascinating subject in small compass, being designed to serve as an introduction to more special study in particular fields of human knowledge or periods of history."

+ Springfield Republican pff My 23 '26 600w
Wis Lib Bul 22:273 O '26

BLAISDELL, ALLEN HOLT. Problems in thermodynamics and steam power plant engineering. 163p $1.25 Wiley [6s Chapman & Hall]

536.7 Thermodynamics. Steam power-plants 25-11842

A series of problems designed to meet the needs of instructors and students in the subjects of thermodynamics and steam power plants. Contents: Problems in thermodynamics, by Allen H. Blaisdell; Problems in steam power plant engineering, by Thos. G. Estep.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:182 Ap '26

BLAKE, GLADYS. Old king's treasure. 253p $1.75 Appleton

26-5383

For many years Count Reni had lived in America with his American wife and children and had left his ancestral estate in Sicily to the care of an overseer. Of late things were going badly. Tenants would not stay in the villa. They declared it was haunted, and perhaps the overseer was not dealing justly with those who worked the land; so the count decided to return incognito with his family and find out the source of the trouble. It was an exciting summer for the children, Nick and Agnes, and their new-made Sicilian friends. They discovered the "ghost," were kidnapped by bandits, and found an old king's treasure in a buried city—and a most useful treasure it was.

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 17 '26 180w

Sat R of Lit 2:669 Mr 27 '26 100w

BLANCHARD, FREDERIC THOMAS. Fielding the novelist; a study in historical criticism. 655p il $6 Yale univ. press [30s Oxford univ. press]

823 Fielding, Henry

26-7579

An "exhaustive study of the estimates of Fielding and his work from the date of his first publication to the present." There are several reproductions from early illustrations of Fielding's works.

Booklist 23:23 O '26

"Without exaggeration it may be said that Professor Blanchard has undertaken and accomplished what is little less than a stupendous, a valuable and a permanently important work in his 'Fielding the Novelist.'" E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 10 '26 2050w

"This is a study of a kind still much too rare, and yet all important in literary criticism. . . A fine book to keep critics humble and mindful of death! and one which teaches us more about the real connotation of merit, fame, appreciation, competent judges than any critical study I know." A. L. Guérard

California Monthly S '26

Reviewed by C. S. Baldwin
Dial 81:440 N '26 800w

Reviewed by R. E. Spiller
Lit R p5 Ag 7 '26 500w

"Much research and documentation have gone to this elaborate study, which is the more remarkable from the agreeable and lively style with which the immense story is told. . . From Gray to Dr. Johnson, through Scott to the present day, including three chapters on Victorian opinion, the fluctuations and reactions [of opinion] are set out, and Mr. Blanchard weaves the many strands into a single and instructive story with great skill. . . The charm and value of his book result from the rare combination of personal enthusiasm, an excellent style, and documentary research. I do not recall any work of the same kind equally thorough and equally readable." Osbert Burdett

Lond Mercury 14:538 S '26

"To some readers the account will seem frightfully complete; but if they read on they will be vastly entertained and informed." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 123:483 N 10 '26 590w

Outlook 143:186 Je 2 '26 220w

"His book represents a vast deal of labor, but it was a labor of love. If anything, Professor Blanchard is too pronounced a partisan. His partiality, however, does not materially affect the value of the book in so far as it is a summary of other people's estimates. Admirably printed and indexed, it is a mine of information, rendered easily accessible." E. S. Noyes

+ Sat R of Lit 3:198 O 16 '26 520w

Times [London] Lit Sup p509 J1 29 '26 1450w

BLASCO IBANEZ, VICENTE. Novelist's tour of the world; auth. tr. by Leo Ongle and Arthur Livingston. 420p il $6 Dutton

910 Voyages and travels 26-17960

Blasco Ibañez brings the novelist's sense of romance and color to his description of a tour of the seven seas which began at New York and ended in the Riviera. The scenes and characters described are given a fresh wonder and beauty.

"A series of pictures whose details glow not only with the style of a great novelist, but with the iridescent light of a poet's imaginative vision. There is nothing blasé about Ibanez's attitude, even toward places with whose well-known characteristics, scenic, romantic or historic, lesser minds (judging from many travel-chronicles) often affect to be surfeited." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 3 '26 950w

"The famous Spaniard recounts his travel adventures as only a novelist could. He gives us, not merely delightful descriptions of people and places, but the historical background necessary to understand and enjoy them."

+ Ind 117:685 D 11 '26 100w

R of Rs 74:667 D '26 60w

"The book is a long procession of delight, a pageant of beauty, from one end of the world to the other."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:438 D 11 '26 200w

BLEACKLEY, HORACE WILLIAM. Ladies fair and frail; sketches of the demi-monde during the eighteenth century. 328p il $3.50 Dodd

920.7 Woman—Biography

Sketches of six famous courtesans who reigned as beauties during the latter half of the gay eighteenth century in England. Portraits and bibliographies are included. Contents: Fanny Murray; Kitty Fisher; Nancy Parsons; Kitty Kennedy; Grace Dalrymple Eliot; Gertrude Mahon; Bibliographies; Appendices.

"Externals apart, this volume of short biographical sketches of six famous courtesans reveals few purple patches and very little of anything else but 'facts'—and not exactly bare facts, for here all is 'delicacy' of the old school when a spade was a trowel for laying it on pretty thick." G. F. Willison

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 S 12 '26 980w

Reviewed by Ralph Bergengren
Boston Transcript p4 S 25 '26 1850w

"His style is usually uninspired and sometimes plainly careless. He has little wit and no sense of the dramatic. But not even a lumbering manner and a moralistic habit of mind which makes one look back to see if the date of the original edition were not 1860 can make Mr. Bleackley's portrait gallery dull. He has chosen his subjects with a fine eye for the dramatic, and has cast some light, not only on human frailty in general but upon its peculiar manifestations in the eighteenth century."

+ — N Y Times p10 Ag 29 '26 2000w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter
N Y World p4m Ag 29 '26 930w

BLODGETT, HARVEY ALVARO. Financial independence; how to win it. 222p $1.50 Appleton

332 Saving and thrift 26-9655

Here is advice on how to spend, how to save, and how to invest your money. In the preface the author states ten rules to follow on the road to financial independence. These ten rules are explained and amplified in the succeeding chapters.

Booklist 23:7 O '26

"The ten chapters, based upon the ten major principles Mr. Blodgett has found useful, are admirably conservative, including as they do, some of the preachments of Ben Franklin himself."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Je 6 '26 130w

J Home Econ 18:611 O '26 100w

N Y Times p26 My 23 '26 350w

"A very useful, simple, clear, and direct book which is, moreover, entirely practical."

+ Outlook 143:223 Je 9 '26 70w

Times [London] Lit Sup p497 J1 22 '26 40w

Wis Lib Bul 22:225 J1 '26

BLOM, ERIC. Stepchildren of music. 302p il $2.50 Dial press [6s G. T. Foulis]

780.4 Music [25-17032]

"In 'Stepchildren of Music' Mr. Blom offers us twenty-five short essays on the little musical goat-children of notable composers which have heretofore been kept discreetly hidden in the woodshed, but which, he shows, us, are frequently worthy of our study. In nearly every case he has dealt with the unfamiliar. Some of the less-known works of well-known musicians discussed are Tchaikovsky's first three symphonies, Wagner's French songs (potboilers written on his arrival in Paris), Liszt's scenic-descriptive piano albums, César Franck's songs and shorter compositions of Beethoven, who, the author declares, 'became less interesting almost in exact proportion to the smaller number of bars in each piece.'"—N Y Times

"Mr. Blom's obsession with the indiscretions of the musically great seem disproportionate, although his book reveals an erudite critical faculty which commands attention and respect. His report of certain unfamiliar compositions is also alluring enough to arouse the reader's wish to hear them performed, but even the cleverest description of musical sound is at best a Barmecide feast. After a perusal of the chapter on Arnold Bax's arrangements of Old English carols, one experiences the disappointment of an audience assembled to read the program notes of a concert and then dismissed by the announcement of a canceled performance." Janet Ramsey

BLOM, ERIC—Continued

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ag 15 '26 400w

"The title is hardly inclusive, for while he sometimes speaks a good word for a forgotten composer, he also indulges in rather a stringent criticism of less known works of musicians who could hardly be called step-children. Be that as it may, he has produced a book filled with quite new material, presented in a light and attractive manner, in a style generally beyond cavil." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p1 J1 31 '26 380w

"Mr. Blom has the valuable trick of describing music so that its outlines can be heard in the imagination. All of Mr. Blom's album leaves are entertaining and all of them are sound, sane criticism." R. A. Simon

+ Lit R p4 N 27 '26 350w

"In his introduction Mr. Blom expresses a hope that his book will give the reader a taste for exploring the byways of musical history; but it must be admitted that the essays can hardly appeal to those without some knowledge of or interest in music. Almost none of the compositions mentioned are heard nowadays and a great difficulty would be experienced in obtaining many of the scores. On the other hand the volume performs no small service for the student of music, introducing him to many men whom he might have known only casually."

+ — N Y Times p4 S 26 '26 780w

Sat R of Lit 3:488 Ja 1 '27 320w

BLUM, DAVID L., ed. Some recent New York university verse; with an introd. by James B. Munn. 104p $2 N.Y. univ. press

811.08 College verse

An anthology of verse, the work of New York university undergraduates and of others who have been recently graduated from the university.

"The best known of these poets are Countee Cullen and Charles Norman, and, although there are latent qualities here in Israel Citkowitz and Gordon Lawrence that interest the discoverer of embryonic talent, the better known poets are, strangely enough, the better poets as well." Genevieve Taggard

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 N 21 '26 400w

"Despite their youth many of the writers of these poems have already gained recognition in several of the better periodicals. The most interesting of them are the four written by Countee Cullen. 'His Heritage' and 'John Keats' alone give the book an excuse for being. The former poem has a tinge of Vachel Lindsay in its lines, but the rhythm seems to be even more excellent than that achieved by Lindsay. There are many poems worth mentioning. The one note that they strike in common is that of great sincerity."

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 24 '26 170w

Reviewed by K. L. Bates

Lit R p4 J1 17 '26 180w

"The sensibility displayed by most of these verses is very superficial. Technically they are all quite accomplished, but with the exception of Mr. Cullen, who has already proved his quality, they are generally marked by a brittle cleverness or a faint and finished nostalgia. Mr. Gordon Lawrence, however, shows promise of a deeper sincerity, although at present he sacrifices vision to vehemence."

Times [London] Lit Sup p499 J1 22 '26 120w

BODENHEIM, MAXWELL. Ninth avenue. 2 267p $2 Boni & Liveright

26-21294

In spite of occasional lapses into physical intimacy with men who took her out, Blanche Palmer of Hell's Kitchen, Ninth avenue, New York, keeps her vague dream of a mate finer than they, finer than herself, and refuses to marry either the half-educated Jew or the flashy vaudeville actor who offer themselves. Her family are no help to spiritual progress (or any other), and leaving home Blanche gets in with some Greenwich Villagers, smooths out her grammar and starts to write. At a cabaret in Harlem she meets a young poet and falls in love with him without knowing that he is part Negro. Both Blanche and Eric suffer acutely. When the book closes, their problem, tho temporarily settled, is not solved.

"Reading the book is like taking a trip on the Ninth Avenue Elevated: one gets some of the sounds and odors and one or two casual flashes of life, but the experience has neither coherence nor depth." Babette Deutsch

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 D 19 '26 560w

"While Mr. Bodenheimer rationalizes sympathetically and clearly, one carries away a feeling of frustration and the conviction that the difficult problem is no nearer a solution because of 'Ninth Avenue' than it ever was."

+ — Ind 177:682 D 11 '26 220w

"'Ninth Avenue' is just a sex story. Its superficial realism and good, off-hand characterization do not interfere seriously with its prospects for success with that audience which recognizes something pretty serious and unmistakably important whenever the adverb 'sexually' appears in print, as it does frequently in the latest Bodenheimer bouquet." R. A. S.

+ — Lit R p5 D 4 '26 420w

"Mr. Bodenheimer has a good ear for contemporary American speech, and he draws shop-girls, cabaret performers, and metropolitan loafers with lifelike vigor. But his novels are like the earliest bicycles—a big wheel of melodrama and a tiny wheel of poetry—with Mr. Bodenheimer perched high and pedaling hard."

+ — Nation 123:696 D 29 '26 150w

"Ninth Avenue is a feeble and jejune picture of low-life aspiring to high-life."

+ — N Y Times p39 D 12 '26 530w

N Y World p11m Ja 9 '27 380w

BOK, EDWARD WILLIAM. Dollars only. 245p $1.75 Scribner

174 Business ethics. Wealth, Use of 26-8234

The book is dedicated to Mr Bok's belief that men are not interested in dollars only, that things of the spirit count for much in the world. He proves his point by citing many cases of men who having succeeded in business have retired and given themselves and their fortunes in service to the world.

Booklist 23:13 O '26

"'Dollars Only' is a good book for wealthy men who might be waiting for something of this kind to start them off in charitable work, and it may also be a source of pleasure to the impecunious idealist."

Bookm 63:490 Je '26 150w

Reviewed by H. S. Solow

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 My 30 '26 600w

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 3 '26 480w

"None of these essays is profound, and none is intended to be; none of them presents ideas which are in any way new, and several of them are questionable in more ways than one; the chief merit of them all is their undoubted sincerity. Often Mr. Bok descends to the merest commonplaces." S. A. Coblenz

+ — Int Bk R p325 Ap '26 330w

Lit R p3 Mr 27 '26 770w

N Y Times p5 Ap 4 '26 800w

"'Dollars Only,' is a business man's book; a book in which the business man may see himself in a most pleasing light."

N Y World p6m Mr 21 '26 520w

Outlook 142:498 Mr 31 '26 70w

Pratt p8 autumn '26

St Louis 24:159 Je '26

"Mr. Bok could not write uninterestingly if he tried, but here he is in his element, for he has practised exactly what he preaches. The eclectically minded will ignore this book, but the great public will read it eagerly. And the great public is wiser than some of us think."

+ — Spec 136:531 Mr 20 '26 230w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 5 '26 420w

Times [London] Lit Sup. p358 My 27 '26 150w

BOLITHO, WILLIAM, pseud. (WILLIAM B. RYALL). Italy under Mussolini. 129p $2 Macmillan

945 Italy—Fascisti movement. Mussolini, Benito 26-11583

Reprint of a series of articles which appeared originally in the World during December, 1925. Mr Bolitho inquires into the meaning of the movement, its secret beginnings, the course of its acts and the motives of its leaders. The book is a strong statement of the case against Fascism which he describes as "a disease of our economic system, to which all modern countries are liable in the future, a product of war and tariffs, of industrialism and trades unions. Its leader is a variety of Socialist boss who will run to other editions. He has robbed his own country of liberty and all that makes life in common worth while."

"His book would have been much more convincing if he had not resorted to innuendo as one of his weapons."

Am Pol Sci R 20:923 N '26 50w

Booklist 23:70 N '26

"The author, whose knowledge of the history and present political functioning of Fascism was derived from first hand study of the formidable subject, reveals facts and conditions which should aid greatly in clarifying the somewhat obscure conception, prevalent in this country, of the dwarf Napoleon's destructive control of his native land's destiny."

Bookm 64:234 O '26 120w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 17 '26 400w

"'Italy under Mussolini' is an extremely interesting and intelligible statement of the case against Fascismo. Mr. Bolitho is extremely hostile to the Fascist idea, but he is always temperate in his statements, and he presents an impressive array of facts to justify his conclusions. He has packed an immense amount of important information into a trifle more than a hundred pages."

+ Ind 117:51 Jl 10 '26 130w

"William Bolitho, a trained and competent journalist, has given us a vivid picture of Italy under Mussolini." R. M. Field

+ Lit R p1 N 27 '26 360w

Reviewed by Walter Littlefield

N Y Times p14 Je 20 '26 700w

N Y World p4m Je 6 '26 130w

Outlook 143:480 Ag 4 '26 330w

Pratt p33 autumn '26

BOLITHO, WILLIAM, pseud. (WILLIAM B. RYALL). Murder for profit. 332p $2.50 Harper [10s 6d J. Cape]

343 Murder. Crime and criminals 26-17439

In these studies of the abnormal William Bolitho has gathered together a strange group of criminals—mass-murderers or men who made a profession of murder. The six men whose crimes and their motives are studied are William Burke and William Hare, partners in wholesale murder in Edinburgh, who supplied medical students with dead bodies; Jean Baptiste Troppmann, an Alsatian who was executed for the butchery of a family of eight; George Joseph Smith, who specialized in drowning his wives in a bath-tub; the notorious Landru whose crimes shook Paris in 1919; and Haarmann, police-spy of Hanover, found guilty of twenty-four murders.

"It is difficult to decide whether William Bolitho has, in his latest book, done a better piece of work as an artist, as a reporter, or as a criminologist." H. S. Solow

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 O 31 '26 1150w

"Mr. Bolitho's work is heavy and slow at times, but by and large it is a fascinating study, the most thorough and balanced of the recent grist on the subject."

+ — Ind 117:480 O 23 '26 160w

"A brilliant fascinating piece of literature is 'Murder for Profit,' but I fear Mr. Bolitho is at bottom a social moralist—a utopist." B: De Casseres

+ Lit R p2 N 6 '26 1480w

"Murder for Profit is a book to remember, with an admiring shudder, for a long time, and a book to reread." Robert Littell

+ New Repub 49:143 D 22 '26 530w

"Mr. Bolitho's style is rather too mannered; and he does not vary it sufficiently. He is best in the studies of Landru and Smith: the story of Haarmann, though we can understand his decision to include it, is hardly suited to popular treatment at all. Murder for Profit is a notable addition to the modern literature of criminology."

+ — New Statesman 28:212 N 27 '26 900w

Reviewed by J: Carter

N Y Times p2 O 10 '26 1300w

"Rather learned and painstaking essays. The subject is sensational, and even horrible, but Mr. Bolitho is not a hasty nor sensational writer. He is, instead, a student, so profoundly concerned with sociological causes as almost to bury his facts under a load of speculation."

+ — Outlook 144:344 N 10 '26 170w

"It cannot be said that Mr. Bolitho's style is always very well suited to his purpose. The special correspondent's way of getting his effects works better on the sheet of a newspaper than between the covers of a book. Nevertheless his five subjects, Burke and Hare, Troppmann, Smith, Landru and Haarmann, make in their mere grouping a startling impression." E: Shanks

+ — Sat R 142:410 O 9 '26 1350w

"Mr Bolitho has written a book which is far above the ruck; quite distinguished from the stream of trivial criminology which is being imported from England at the rate of two or three titles a month. It is a painstaking study of the tribe of Cain as social phenomena. Far from hasty and journalistic in style, this book is erudite to the verge of being ponderous." E: Pearson

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:231 O 23 '26 1260w

"He has a remarkable ability to follow the nerves of a story which makes his writing vivid, and marvelously informative in little room. He has a style, too, and putting aside the morbid romanticism of De Quincey's famous essay on murder as a fine art, he writes of his mass murderers with a concentrated epithet, and a breadth of thinking that makes a profound impression. This is journalism raised to literature."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:445 D 18 '26 100w

"Mr. Bolitho's work is readable. His subject matter, ghoulish as it is, is not made revolting. While 'Murder for Profit' deserves attention for its theorizing, it is mainly to be considered a narrative of crime."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 N 3 '26 540w

"Here is a horrid international gallery, pictured for us with all Bolitho's cool courage, rare curiosity about the business called life, and

BOLITHO, WILLIAM, pseud.—Continued
all his passion for pattern in style. But here is no truckling with melodrama for groundlings' thrills." Leon Whipple
Survey 57:331 D 1 '26 330w

BOLLONI, MME GEORGES (SANDOR KEMERL, pseud.). Rambles with Anatole France. 335p $5 Lippincott

B or 92 France, Anatole

After the death of Mme de Caillavet, Mme Georges Bölloni, who had gone to interview Anatole France for a newspaper in Hungary, remained with him to act as his secretary. She accompanied France on his walks and drives about Paris and on a longer journey to Italy, and in this informal volume records his reactions to encounters and impressions along the way. There are several informal photographs, and a few hitherto unpublished letters are reproduced in facsimile.

Boston Transcript p5 D 4 '26 440w

"The woman sits always at the feet of the master. She does not merely cull his wise saws, his sprightly sallies, the barbs of his wit and the audacities of his skillful tongue. She takes notes even of his banalities. Probably her Anatole France is more like than Brousson's Anatole France. None the less the world will prefer Brousson's portrait. Granting that and taking the present contribution as supplementary, we have a book which admirers of M. Bergeret cannot quite afford to miss. Here also are revelations—even if they are likely to be homely revelations." H. I. Brock
N Y Times p9 N 21 '26 1200w

BONE, JAMES. Perambulator in Edinburgh. 2 181p il $5 Knopf [12s 6d Cape]

914.144 Edinburgh—Description. Architecture
—Edinburgh 26-22872

"In 'The Perambulator in Edinburgh' the author seeks to give a picture of the Edinburgh of today in the light of its past. He has gone into many of the nooks and corners of the ancient city, he has roamed through the homes of the gentry that are now tenanted by the very poor, he has witnessed what elegance and harmony remain in them, and how their present inhabitants look upon those relics of the past. Furthermore, he has looked upon the faces of the people of Edinburgh and into their souls."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p8 D 4 '26 620w

"The book is, as the author says of the Edinburgh daunter, 'a quiet relishsome peregrination,' and the artist has rendered well the surprising heights of the city."

+ New Statesman 28:supxli N 13 '26 320w

"'The Perambulator in Edinburgh' is not the stock type of descriptive book, and yet the reader will find all the ingredients of that type here, a careful architectural and topographical analysis, comment on ancient decorations, fireplaces, doors, knockers and windows and the reincarnation of various historical figures. But animating all this and lifting what might be 'the usual thing' to another plane entirely is the spirit with which Mr. Bone approaches his task." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p7 D 19 '26 1650w

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p759 N 4 '26 1350w

BONNER, GERALDINE. Leading lady. 301p $2 Bobbs

26-3795

"A company of Thespians, quartered on an island off the Maine coast are appalled to find a murder in their midst. Who was responsible for the death of Sybil Saunders, the young actress who took the part of Viola in 'Twelfth Night'? Out of an accidental likeness Miss Bonner has evolved a mystery that will baffle the most astute."—Lit R

"Geraldine Bonner has written at other times some fairly stimulating and interesting fiction, but in 'The Leading Lady' she has evidently taken seriously the report that all Americans are morons." Carty Ranck

—Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 14 '26 220w

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 6 '26 320w

"This is a particularly ingenious tale, both in development and in its conclusion." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p362 My '26 60w

"Her characters are all admirably realized and her final solution is a triumph. We found 'The Leading Lady,' from the first page to the last a delightfully thrilling affair." H. A. J.
+ Lit R p8 F 27 '26 100w

—N Y Times p14 F 21 '26 260w

"Miss Bonner did not intend a profound psychological study. She keeps the emotional motivation to broad simple lines. And while she does not invest her story with the glamour that is the gift of the really first-rate mystery writers, she nevertheless does quite an adequate job. She has concocted a decidedly readable thriller."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:709 Ap 10 '26 200w

Spring'd Republican p7f My 16 '26 200w

BONTA, EDWIN. Small-house primer. 105p il $2.50 Little

728 Architecture, Domestic 25-24776

The architect-author plans the small house in relation to site and surrounding and with regard to the needs and comfort of the family. Thruout the text there are numerous small sketches which graphically illustrate what to strive for and what to avoid.

Booklist 22:283 Ap '26

"A cleverly arranged appendix shows the reader what is wrong with several designs for houses and rooms, teaching by bad example what to avoid in the way of mismanagement, disproportion and kindred evils. On the entrancing subject of design Mr. Bonta proves himself a friendly and helpful companion. After the site itself, some such volume is the next essential for most folk, and here is a very good one."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ja 31 '26 170w

Cleveland Open Shelf p37 Mr '26

"A practical and suggestive volume for people of moderate means."

+ J Home Econ 18:99 F '26 100w

"This ought to be an illuminating and informing book for those many people in smaller cities, towns, suburbs, countrysides, who are preparing to build their own homes."

+ N Y Times p10 Ja 10 '26 320w

St Louis 24:56 Mr '26

"A book the prospective builder will pore over with interest and any reader can learn much about architecture from it."

Wis Lib Bul 22:30 Ja '26

BOODIN, JOHN ELOF. Cosmic evolution; outlines of cosmic idealism. 484p $3.50 Macmillan
113 Cosmogony. Evolution. Psychology
Relativity 25-25852

The first part of the book contains a general summary of the author's theory of evolution which, as it is the story of the earth in its setting in the cosmos, he calls cosmic evolution; the second part contains a statement of his theory in relation to human nature and its evolution; and the third part discusses cosmic evolution in relation to the theory of relativity.

Am J Soc 31:840 My '26 50w

Reviewed by H. M. Parshley

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ag 1 '26

"There is much more than imagination in what he has to say about cosmic evolution. His chapters show a competent grasp of modern developments in science, and a good third of the work is given to the relativity doctrine." E. N.

Boston Transcript p4 F 24 '26 700w
J Religion 6:221 Mr '26

"Professor Boodin's book shows the fruit of an enormous reading among present scientific discussions in all fields. For bringing this material together and showing the need and possibility of weaving it into a larger picture he deserves the thanks of all thinkers." E. A. Burt

+ J Religion 6:435 Jl '26 500w

"The individual reader must finally decide for himself whether he is ever being brought nearer to God after reading Boodin's very lucid and scholarly work. In any case, if the book does not certainly bring him nearer to God, it will bring him quite close to a full comprehension of the nature and possible solutions of fundamental metaphysical and cosmological problems."

Joseph Ratner

+ New Repub 46:374 My 12 '26 1400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p544 Ag 19 '26 880w

BOODLE, ADELAIDE A. R. L. S. and his Sine qua non; flashlights from Skerryvore. 168p il $1.50 Scribner [6s Murray]

B or 92 Stevenson, Robert Louis. Stevenson, Fanny (Van de Grift) Osbourne (Mrs Robert Louis Stevenson) 26-19866

As a neighbor of the Stevensons at Skerryvore Miss Boodle was admitted to the intimacy of their friendship, being affectionately named by them the "Gamekeeper," for her care of their pets during their long absences. She gives attractive glimpses of the home life at Skerryvore and shows the deep sympathy and accord that existed between R. L. S. and his wife.

Bookm 64:238 O '26 230w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p4 Je 19 '26 1800w

"This book is commended to every one who has ever heard the name Stevenson. It is commended not only because it carries out a purpose every Stevensonian has had at heart since the writer's death, but also because it is a well written, simply expressed concentration of the diary of a woman whose powers of observation were no less acute than her understanding of Robert Louis himself." Paul Neumann

+ Lit R p5 Je 19 '26 320w

Outlook 143:546 Ag 18 '26 100w

St Louis 24:321 N '26

"Here is all too palpable a page toward the making of what Mr. Hellman called the Stevenson legend; it is a trivial and undiscriminating piece of hero-worship. For a sensitive reader this book does just the reverse of what it obviously hoped to do. It irritates."

— Sat R of Lit 3:39 Ag 14 '26 350w

"Completely charming."

+ Spec 137:sup910 N 20 '26 60w

"The value of the book lies in the way in which Miss Boodle manages to present the beloved author and his wife so simply, clearly and personally that they seem to be walking and talking through her pages."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 16 '26 350w

"Among all the books on Stevenson this is one of the wisest and the pleasantest."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p822 N 18 '26 100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:297 N '26

BOOK without a name; being the 18th century journal of an unmarried English lady to her natural son. 292p $2.50 Brentano's

26-16056

"The Book Without a Name" purports to be a journal written by an unknown English woman to her natural son and published from the worn sheets of a manuscript 150 years old. The story of that manuscript is told in the preface. From the time that it was laid away, after the death of the woman in 1776 to the present date of publication, it has been treasured with much reverent care and a deal of sentiment as a peculiar heritage in the English family that gave it birth. As each successive son, grandson and great-grandson has come of age he has been allowed to pore over its contents. The public, of course, is entitled to feel some suspicion about the authenticity of '18th century manuscripts.' —Springf'd Republican

"The principal significance of the 'Journal' lies in its frankness, in its defiant and liberal attitude toward life. It is the same attitude which still animates this lady's intellectual posterity to-day. Her desire to be rid of the complexities of existence, her passion for freedom, are not felt from what we think of as the 'modern' angle but from a permanent and abiding one. In proving that lies the interest of the book." L. G. Marshall

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 O 24 '26 800w

Boston Transcript p5 N 13 '26 230w

"Almost none of the incidents of her love-affair is allowed to brighten the author's monotone in her discursive notes on life as she has threnodized and rhapsodized it. We are moved neither to praise nor to blame: for she has spread between herself and the reader the chaste gray mantle of indifference." T. S. M.

— New Repub 49:24 N 24 '26 480w

"Exuberant life and vitality, quick and penetrating thought, a fresh and unconventional attitude toward the world, animate the pages of this work."

+ Springfield Republican p10 N 18 '26 300w

BOOTH, BRAMWELL. Echoes and memories. 223p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Salvation army

"Bramwell Booth, eldest son of the old General, was one of his officers for nearly forty years and his Chief of Staff for more than thirty. Since his father's death Bramwell has been titular and active head of the organization. His book is really a personal and living witness of the miracles performed all over the world during the last sixty-one years by The Salvation Army." —Lit R

Reviewed by Alan Rinehart

Bookm 63:xii Ag '26 560w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 S 12 '26 150w

Boston Transcript p3 My 8 '26 350w

"It is a book that one feels proud to have read. There is no cant or humbug about it. Even those who have no use for The Salvation Army, or any other religious organization, but who do like reading good biography, will find it a fascinating and illuminating book, very readable and intensely human." W. O. Tewson

+ Lit R p1 Je 5 '26 1300w

"General Booth's unassuming book is well worth reading. He is not a man to preach his gospel in and out of season; there is enthusiasm on every page, but no obtrusiveness, and certainly no cant."

+ New Statesman 27:123 My 15 '26 600w

N Y Times p20 Ap 25 '26 400w

R of Rs 73:669 Je '26 80w

St Louis 24:321 N '26

"He has commendably refrained from the senile vice of garrulity, and these pages will be read with pleasure by many who do not belong to his Army. Almost the only unkindly sentiment in the whole record lies in the reference to 'poor Huxley and one or two other infidels.'"

Sat R 141:377 Mr 20 '26 100w

BOOTH, BRAMWELL—Continued

"In form it is rambling, in style undistinguished, and throughout completely innocent of anything like singleness of purpose. But nevertheless it gives a first-rate idea of the sincerity, earnestness, and complete lack of bigotry which have characterized the Army from its foundation."

— + Sat R of Lit 3:27 Ag 7 '26 250w

"An intensely human story."

+ Spec 136:277 F 13 '26 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p122 F 18 '26 200w

BOOTH, CHARLES G. Sinister house; a mystery story of southern California. 302p $2 Morrow

26-16334

On her way to Colonel Conniston's home where she is to put in order the colonel's private museum, Gail Hollister witnesses a holdup and recognizes her lover as the bandit. That same night Colonel Conniston is killed and some of his valuable treasures stolen. Search is made for the highwayman, and Gail's acquaintance with him being discovered, the girl herself falls under suspicion. She shields the amateur bandit, helps him escape and at great risk to herself undertakes to establish his innocence of the double crime.

"Interesting from beginning to end is this tale of murder and mystery, even though the first death did come in that well worn situation—a locked room with no possible egress for the murderer. The characters are all well drawn." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p4 O 16 '26 130w

Outlook 144:184 O 6 '26 50w

BORAAS, JULIUS, and SELKE, GEORGE ALBERT. Rural school administration and supervision; with introd. by Lotus D. Coffman. 260p $1.80 Heath

379.173 Rural schools

26-5999

An authoritative discussion of the administrative problems of the rural school which aims at the improvement in quantity and quality of rural education.

"The style is so simple and non-technical that it will be comprehended readily even by the teacher with little training and educational background. The rural superintendent, supervisor, and teacher, who have not had the advantage of recent work in a good teacher-training institution should find it worth their time to read the book. Students of school administration and teachers-in-training will find the treatment too sketchy and superficial for their needs." C. V. Good

+ — El School J 26:713 My '26 550w

BORDEN, MARY (MRS E. L. SPEARS) (BRIDGET MACLAGAN, pseud.). Jericho Sands. 313p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Heinemann]

26-1534

"A romance of the English countryside laid against a background of the old landed aristocracy; the theme, the destructive influence of that aristocracy on the lives of three young people who love unwisely."—N Y World

Reviewed by E. R. Curtis

Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '26 500w

Booklist 22:295 Ap '26

"'Jericho Sands' is devastating. It spares no one. Its impassioned telling of a tragic sex tanglement reveals Mary Borden's possession of an enriched technique and a sure sense of the flow of her narrative. This novel will shock many; for it does not shun the delineation of unhappiness resulting from religious narrowness and mania. Yet seldom does one happen on a livelier or more interesting theme, or a clearer set of characters. Technically, the feat is worthy of all praise." J. F.

Bookm 62:711 F '26 160w

"In 'Jericho Sands,' Mary Borden attempted a most interesting technical feat, and was successful. She tells a story of mixed loves and religious prejudice, and tells it from both the prejudiced and the tolerant angle. It proves to be fascinating if not always pleasant." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:202 Ap '26 60w

"To get at the story of 'Jericho Sands' you have to unwrap layer after layer of tissue paper—tissue paper representing the unimportant and almost opaque qualities of various people's minds. The principals are so well bred that they are practically speechless. A generous sprinkling with a sense of humor might have brought the whole lot to life and saved them from solemn—honorable—self-destruction." Mary Ross

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 F 7 '26 800w

"This is a rare and astounding story for a woman to write. It is depressing at moments, more than that, even terrible. Yet it is so truly a transcript of life that few words of any critic will be needed to acclaim its author. It is a remarkable novel, by a remarkable interpreter of the British upper classes." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 20 '26 600w

Reviewed by B. M. Weaver

Int Bk R p525 Jl '26 300w

"Miss Borden has perfected the curious style that so jealously guards her characters. She does the port-wine-and-gout manner most pleasantly; and Simon's anguish pours out in warm, erratic, stilted gushes—the expression of tortured sensibilities gauged almost faultlessly. Miss Borden writes with such penetration and polish that we should like, for our own resultant enjoyment, to see a vigorous theme take merciless possession of her." Eva Goldbeck

+ Lit R p4 Mr 20 '26 600w

"That part of the book in which Simon tells his story often displays convincingly the mixture of passion and prim ignorance in his badly restrained imagination, and in the chapters where he gives place to Tweedle the middle-aged hedonist, the style is vigorous and apt. Nevertheless, the trick of banishing the novelist in favour of the characters themselves becomes almost irritating when combined with a story whose ugliness brings pain and fatigue."

+ Nation and Ath 38:332 N 28 '25 270w

"It is too late for Mr. Arlen to look to his laurels. They have gone to Jericho Sands." P. C. Kennedy.

New Statesman 26:305 D 19 '25 1450w

"'Jericho Sands' will classify Mary Borden as a writer of sincerity and passion, of powerful observation, deep-running sympathies and gifts for expression which qualify her for success in the field of fiction. Yet there is something too articulate, too exotically emotional about her work to convey the sense of actuality."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 10 '26 850w

N Y World p7m Ja 10 '26 50w

"The telling of the story is a technical feat of a high order. One feels that Miss Borden has told her story in the only possible form. It is a thoughtful and significant and honest and workmanlike novel." J: W. Crawford

+ N Y World p7m Ja 24 '26 600w

"Not a pleasant book, but one with a deep and passionate sincerity. Miss Borden has analyzed her characters so minutely as sometimes to be painful, and bared their emotions beyond a point which we have been taught to believe British."

+ Outlook 142:422 Mr 17 '26 180w

"There are almost too many calamities, and the characters are never represented as really capable of happiness or of making a good job of their lives. The man destined from birth for tragedy is only half tragic; and Miss Borden makes what we think is the mistake of giving us at the beginning, through the mouth of a third person, a long discussion of her characters, declaring her intention of breaking them on the wheel. In detail the book is excellent. Miss Borden is a workmanlike and a brilliant writer; but in this instance her rigid adherence to her theme has turned the bus, fiction, into a tram." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 140:600 N 21 '25 580w

"Miss Borden's alien admiration of the English code would never admit the suspicion that a score of twentieth century English novelists have echoed Somerset Maugham's observation that Magersfontein and Spion Kop were lost on the playing fields of Eton and Harrow. None the less there is much to be said for the code: recent English novelists have turned against it only because arguments for it had ceased to be news, except to Americans." Elmer Davis

— + Sat R of Lit 2:491 Ja 16 '26 550w

"Miss Borden tells their story remarkably well, even brilliantly, lavishes all her picturesque talent and verbal felicity on even the minor characters. Indeed, it seems a pity that she should have chosen to keep Simon and Priscilla so much to the fore when their relatives are so much more interesting."

+ Spec 135:942 N 21 '25 420w

"The country scenes are excellent and both Jericho Sands and the Manor House of Creech are so imaginatively and affectionately described that the reader walks through them with an unusual sense of reality. But when the entertainment is over doubt and ingratitude begin."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p770 N 19 '25 450w

BOSE, SIR JAGADIS CHUNDER. Nervous mechanism of plants. 224p il $6.40 (16s) Longmans

581.1 Plants—Irritability and movements 26-11014

"The general theory of Sir Chandra Bose is that the physiological mechanism is identical in plants and animals. It is the final result of a long series of investigations which he began to make known in 1900."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Boston Transcript p5 Je 19 '26 500w

"Sir Jagadis Bose is to be congratulated on the way in which he has treated the problems and on designing so many instruments for exact measurement."

+ Nature 118:654 N 6 '26 450w

"Bose is possessed of a speculative type of mind, and in all likelihood he is swayed more or less by the intangible mysticism common to his country, and as a result has 'overinterpreted' his observations. Nothing can be more obvious to any reader of this book than that such criticisms are not based upon anything the volume contains; it is impossible to ignore the relentless logic of his conclusions, which are based upon the most modern methods of scientific laboratory procedure." Van Buren Thorne

+ N Y Times p12 Je 20 '26 1600w

"This book is too technical for the general public but is of far reaching importance."

Spec 136:913 My 29 '26 100w

"We cannot go further than say that in our judgment Bose works out a very suggestive parallel between the conducting system in plants and the nervous system in animals. But we do not think that he allows enough for the alternative interpretation in terms of the diffusion of fluids and of the hormones which they may contain. The work of Ricca and of Snow demands fuller consideration. But even if Sir Jagadis's interpretation fails to convince, his facts are illuminating." J. A. Thomson

Spec 137:249 Ag 14 '26 1100w

"This lucid and well-illustrated account of his observations and theories is the more interesting because it deals with matters still in dispute."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p379 Je 3 '26 330w

BOTTOMLEY, MYRL E. Design of small properties: a book for the home-owner in city and country. (Rural science ser.) 233p il $3 Macmillan

710 Landscape gardening 26-13182

The book treats the landscape development of small properties in city and country—the principles of design in the arrangement of buildings, drives and walks, gardens and lawns, the use of garden ornaments and furniture, planting design and the care of trees and shrubs. Lists of trees and shrubs, with their characteristics and habits, are given, also lists of flowers, perennial and annual. Illustrated with diagrams.

Booklist 23:120 D '26

Reviewed by Florence Brobeck

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 19 '26 400w

"All his studies are visualized by fascinating plans and diagrams which are in themselves bits of art."

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 18 '26 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p133 D '26

J Home Econ 18:609 O '26 120w

Lit R p5 Ag 28 '26 100w

"They are all simple designs of moderate cost, susceptible of change to meet different needs. The author describes them in an interesting style, with analysis and explanation of why one design is good and another is not, of the objects to be aimed at and the effects to be secured."

+ N Y Times p2 Ag 8 '26 330w

Outlook 144:122 S 22 '26 50w

BOUGHNER, MRS GENEVIEVE (JACKSON).

Women in journalism; a guide to the opportunities and a manual of the technique of women's work for newspapers and magazines. 348p il $2.50 Appleton

070 Women as journalists. Journalism

26-4915

For the student of journalism in college courses and for the woman interested in journalism as a career, Mrs Boughner has prepared this comprehensive survey of the field for women on newspapers and magazines. She tells how to get and how to hold each of the various positions from society editor to syndicate writer, and in an appendix offers help in preparing manuscripts and adds a bibliography. The book is indexed.

Booklist 22:393 J1 '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p106 S '26

J Home Econ 18:276 My '26 70w

"She has a sound grasp of the material she covers, and presents a thorough-going analysis of the opportunities in each field and the qualifications and preparation necessary for success in it." Elinor Hillyer

+ Lit R p9 My 8 '26 250w

"Here is an excellent handbook for young women who aspire to be hack writers. It gives an extraordinarily depressing picture of the sprightly blah and melancholy mush for which there is a market. It makes keeping house and being supported seem an adventure beside the cramped world of a writing desk."

New Repub 47:236 J1 14 '26 300w

"A discussion and handbook valuable for woman students in journalism, their teachers and advisers, and for beginners in newspaper and magazine work. It makes a fairly comprehensive survey of present-day possibilities for women in that field and is eminently practical and usable."

+ N Y Times p23 Mr 7 '26 280w

Pratt p6 summer '26

Wis Lib Bul 22:137 Ap '26

BOULENGER, EDWARD GEORGE. Aquarium book. 208p il $3.50 Appleton [10s 6d Duckworth]

590.7 Aquariums. Marine fauna [26-13275]

The director of the London zoological society's aquarium describes his interesting charges and their habits, and in the introduction gives some pointers to the amateur aquarium-keeper at home.

Booklist 23:13 O '26

Reviewed by W. Beebe

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ag 15 '26 470w

"Many excellent illustrations accompany the text and help to give the book high value both as a study of aquatic life and as a guide to the aquarium."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 10 '26 620w

Sat R of Lit 2:877 Je 19 '26 50w

Wis Lib Bul 22:225 Jl '26

BOULTING, E. FRANCES. Beautiful child-hood. 238p il $2 Harcourt

232 Jesus Christ 26-17131

Following the gospel narrative in part, and in part drawing from her knowledge of the country, the people, and the times, Miss Boulting tells the story of the boyhood of Jesus in a way that should bring him a real and living child, before the minds of other children. Each chapter carries explanatory notes and references to sources. The illustrations are in color and in black and white.

"The book does not go beyond the years of boyhood, so it does both more and less than most others on this subject. But it is successfully illustrated and many notes either give sources or add information or explanation to the text. Two clear maps of Palestine and of the Egyptian journeys will be appreciated by readers."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:403 D 4 '26 170w

"The book is for parents and children, but it contains numerous notes which make it invaluable for teachers. The illustrations in color and pen-and-ink by Maud Tindal Atkinson add to the appearance and interest of the book."

+ Springfield Republican p7f D 12 '26 170w

BOUSFIELD, PAUL. Pleasure and pain; a theory of the energetic foundation of feeling. 114p $2 Dutton

157 Pleasure, Pain 26-14210

In his study of pleasure and pain and the inter-relation of the two Dr Bousfield develops this theory: that tension is a fundamental condition of all being, organic and inorganic, and that pleasure is the result of the removal of tension or pain.

"Interesting little treatise." R. E. Park

+ Am J Soc 32:150 Jl '26 160w

Cleveland Open Shelf p99 S '26

Times [London] Lit Sup p606 S 16 '26 270w

BOWEN, ELIZABETH. Ann Lee's, and other stories. 288p $2 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d Sidgwick & J.]

"A touch of E. M. Forster, perhaps—and the merest pinch of Aldous Huxley? A sub-acidity recalling Jane Austen? A choice of themes which is possibly what has led to a comparison between her and Katherine Mansfield? Anyway, whether these comparisons are just or unjust, they carry no suggestion of plagiarism."—New Statesman

"She is more purely intellectual than Katherine Mansfield. Her response to life, her conclusions from it, are more recognizably tinged with the universal. More sardonic, less prone to the intrusions of that pleading tenderness, she is also more unwaveringly honest. Finally, she is the equal not merely of Katherine Mansfield, but of Sherwood Anderson or A. E. Coppard in the skillful use of that courageously simple technique which has replaced the unity of artificial structure by the more inevitable unity of mood." Mary Kolars

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 O 31 '26 650w

"In general, Miss Bowen has a habit of not quite bringing off her story. It glitters, but it seems insipid. There is not enough substance to carry the faultlessness of the form."

— + Boston Transcript p7 N 17 '26 180w

Reviewed by Frances Newman

Lit R p3 D 11 '26 520w

"Miss Bowen's delightful stories demand a reader with all his wits about him, for though she sets her scenes and defines her characters with a decision exceeding Katherine Mansfield's, yet the encounters are so elusive, the relations so subtle, and her handling of situations so light, that you can afford to miss no hint of her intention. And although her structures are tangible enough, they are so brittly fine that clumsy reading would trample them to confusion."

+ Nation and Ath 39:211 My 29 '26 120w

"Miss Bowen's prose has its own fragrance and its own precision. She sees, not without tartness, the cruel contrast between prim faces and broken hearts; she can deal with the conventions of the boarding-house as comedy, without letting us forget that a boarder may be a tragic figure. The Secession, for instance, deals with the transference of a gentleman's affection from an old friend who has taken it for granted to a new acquaintance who lights the flame of romance; it is told with a cutting restraint, and is full of little pictures drawn to perfection." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 27:388 Jl 17 '26 320w

"Her content seems, at times, a little thin; she raises the reader's expectations, in some of her stories, to the height of a tempest, which she demurely and tidily offers in a teapot. She is at her best in a sort of comedy of manners. Her technique is all but faultless; it brings out, all the more clearly, her shortcomings where feelings and emotions are involved."

+ — N Y Times p9 O 3 '26 450w

"They have little plot and no 'punch.' A few—'The Contessina,' 'The Secession,' and 'The Storm'—are relatively overt and external; something or other happens that you can recognize and put your finger on. But oftener, as in the title story, you are simply permitted to share a mood, an emotion, an instant of crisis, as if under a flash of white light and by a swift side-glance. If you stare straight at the object, there is nothing." H. W. Boynton

+ — Outlook 144:214 O 13 '26 300w

"Miss Bowen's colours are faint beside Mr. Huxley's. The thrill of the executant is wanting. She does not tread a narrow path between success and failure; she works in fine shades, too subtle to be affected by such crude terms as failure and success. Sometimes she is a little tenuous, sometimes a little obscure, sometimes a little dull: she does not always do herself justice. But even her worst is good. At their best her stories, of their sort, can hardly be praised too much." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 141:688 Je 5 '26 450w

Springfield Republican p7f D 12 '26 100w

"For sheer comedy 'The Contessina,' which presents the child, the flirt, and the spitfire that an Englishman may find in an Italian girl of sixteen, bears away the palm. 'The Secession' and 'Making Arrangements' are also original and well-told. It may be Miss Bowen's failing that she only sees in lightning-flashes and hears thunder in a calm sky, but she gives us perfectly what she perceives—the sudden shocks of quiet life and the ominousness of its minor reverberations."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p300 Ap 22 '26 500w

BOWEN, JOHN THOMAS. Dairy engineering. (Wiley agricultural engineering ser.) 532p il $3.75 Wiley [8s 6d Chapman & H.]

631.37 Agricultural engineering. Dairying 25-4094

"Presents practical information on selection, installation, and operation of electrical and mechanical equipment for the power plants of large milk plants or creameries."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Cleveland Open Shelf p33 Mr '26

"The book is the first to come to our attention that deals exclusively with dairy engineering. It is devoted primarily to the mechanical and electrical engineering aspects of the subject, but does treat of some of the main essentials of sanitary control. As the book is designed both for the plant operator and for use in college classrooms, its scope is comprehensive. The book gives promise of usefulness in a large and growing field."

+ Eng N 94:490 Mr 19 '25 280w

"The method of presentation is clear and the subject matter well arranged, so that the book will serve as a useful and trustworthy guide to the dairy engineer, and also as a text-book to the student of dairying."

+ Nature 117:151 Ja 30 '26 240w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:85 F '26

BOWEN, MRS LOUISE HADDUCK (DE KOVEN). Growing up with a city. 226p il $2.50 Macmillan

360 Chicago—Social conditions 26-7830

When Mrs Bowen was young she heard from her grandparents many stories of the days when Chicago was young. She includes some of these with her memories of the city as she grew up with it and took upon herself an ever-increasing share in its social, political and charitable enterprises.

"Told with humor and insight, the story of one generation in Chicago makes us hopeful for the next." C. C. Park

+ Am J Soc 32:151 Jl '26 140w

Booklist 22:416 Jl '26

Reviewed by L. B. Gilkes
Bookm 63:716 Ag '26 100w

"She describes it all with a very graceful modesty and much humor."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 2 '26 200w

Boston Transcript p1 Je 5 '26 550w

"Mrs. Bowen writes as she has lived—with good humor, sound sense, and a kind of straight-forward nobility. Her book is an interesting record of things as they were and a perfectly unself-conscious testimony as to what one woman could do with the means at her disposal for the people of her day and generation."

+ Ind 116:722 Je 19 '26 150w

"Her book is charmingly reminiscent and shows what one woman of zeal can do." H. C. Burr

+ Int Bk R p432 Je '26 420w

New Repub 47:181 Je 30 '26 200w

"The book tells a stirring life story, the kind of woman's life story that would not have been possible in any previous time in the world's history, even if Mrs. Bowen tells it so modestly that one has to read between the lines to understand the real significance of many of its features. But perhaps the most striking phase of the memoirs is that in which one glimpses, first, the beginnings of Chicago and then the Chicago of today and remembers that they are both compassed within a single lifetime."

+ N Y Times p20 Ap 11 '26 560w

"It is all capital reading and illuminating history."

+ Outlook 143:354 Jl 7 '26 180w

Pratt p35 autumn '26

R of Rs 73:669 Je '26 80w

Springfd Republican p14 My 26 '26 450w

Reviewed by G. R. Taylor

Survey Graphic 9:41 Ap '26 1250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p582 S 2 '26 100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:229 Jl '26

BOWEN, MARJORIE, pseud. (MRS GABRIELLE MARGARET VERE [CAMPBELL] LONG). Mistress Nell Gwyn. 242p $2 Appleton [3s 6d Hodder & S.]

Gwyn, Nell—Fiction

This tale of the pretty orange girl who charmed King Charles II with her wit and gaiety and faithfully loved him to the end is dedicated to Dorothy Gish and told as lightly as a scenario for the films.

"The author has succeeded in giving a continuous lively charm to the story without inventing any new characters or supplying incident other than that suggested by history and tradition."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 O 31 '26 180w

"Miss Bowen has written one of the best historical passion tales we have read in a long time. It is extremely accurate, presenting the life of the court of the dissolute Charles with amazing clearness and yet with sympathetic understanding." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 6 '26 1350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 N '26

"The author skims the tragedy of Nelly's life and presents an excellent costume scenario, inoffensive, but exasperating. It is mostly tears and flappedoodle."

— Lit R p6 Ag 28 '26 100w

N Y Times p13 D 26 '26 170w

Sat R of Lit 3:178 O 9 '26 130w

"The writing is not quite up to Miss Bowen's usual standard, and the reader will have an uneasy feeling that each chapter is obliged to provide as a sine qua non the proper sub-titles."

— Spec 136:609 Mr 27 '26 120w

BOWEN, WILLIAM. Philip and the faun. 143p il $2 Little

26-15704

This fantasy tells of a little boy who hears the pipes of Pan and, wandering thru the woods to find him, meets a nymph and a faun. The three go forth to the city where if they find others who can hear the fairy music, Pan will awaken and live again.

" 'Philip and the Faun' is disappointing. It should be enchanting and fascinating, because it is wrought from the gold of fancy. But it is just a good little story averagely well-told and never even for a moment rising to the first heights of a heavenly fascinating fanciful style."

— + Boston Transcript p8 D 4 '26 170w

"With infinite delicacy, and a perception which might easily serve the turn of satire if so urged, the author has given us a tale, obviously figmented in his own imagination, subtly inspired by the oafish stolidity of his unimaginative fellows, which strikes a note too often left unvibrant in our go-getting consciousness."

+ Ind 117:451 O 16 '26 170w

"Here is a little story pieced together out of sundry fragments so that the whole is rather disjointed in its effect. A child reading it might not notice this particularly and might relish the tale of the adventure in the grove, but to an adult the result is surely rather too sentimental and patchwork."

— + N Y Times p13 D 26 '26 380w

"The symbolism is transparent enough and the mingling of phantasy and reality unusually successful. We rather think, however, that the simplicity both of matter and manner will make its appeal more directly to children than to their elders."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:180 O 9 '26 280w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (MRS BERTHA [MUZZY] SINCLAIR-COWAN). Black Thunder. 312p $2 Little [7s 6d Hodder & S.] 26-1387

Arlea's search for her missing uncle takes her from the East to a small Nevada mining town called Whisky Flat. On the day of her arrival Indians rush the town, but are driven off by the settlers encamped in the store. The Eastern girl is almost as shocked by the crude manners of the settlers as she is frightened by the Indians. Her dislike centers in Laughing Low who delights in baiting her anger. He is called Black Thunder by the Indians, who believe him to be an ally of the powers of darkness. The superstition is a fortunate one, for when a landslide blocks the valley and holds Whisky Flat at the mercy of the Indians, Black Thunder and his magic save the town.

"A story stirring, wholesome, colorful." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 13 '26 620w
Cleveland Open Shelf p68 My '26

"That many readers will find delectable thrills in 'Black Thunder' is not to be doubted. Packed in this story is an abundance of the most violent action, and the fearless always win, while virtue is adequately rewarded. Despite its having probably enough prototypes to fill even 'the wide open spaces,' the story offers yet another appeal to the undying boyishness in the hearts of those who love action more than beauty of style." Sidney Shultz

+ Int Bk R p266 Mr '26 350w

"It's a charming story and as well told as any of the tales of Miss Bower, which is saying a good deal." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p8 F 13 '26 250w

"Critics will say that this book is merely one more attempt, like so many of Mr. Zane Grey's, to bring the nickel 'thriller' to the dignity of cloth quartos—and they will be quite right."

— N Y Times p8 Ja 17 '26 680w

N Y World p6m Ja 3 '26 60w

"This 'Western' tale has fewer artificialities than the average of its type, mainly because the author knows her field and personnel, and because the scene is at no time strained to manufacture thrills."

Springf'd Republican p7f My 9 '26 150w

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p749 O 28 '26 180w

Wis Lib Bul 22:110 Mr '26

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (MRS BERTHA [MUZZY] SINCLAIR-COWAN). Van Patten. 290p $2 Little 26-14384

If Van Patten doesn't get Ches Baker, it is more than likely that Ches will get Van, as he has sworn to do. But a horse's hoof gives Baker his quietus, one of the very horses he had stolen from Lea, his wife, and that Van was trying to recover for Lea, his first and only love. He recovers the horses, all but Query her favorite. He goes after that one too, and after sundry adventures presents Query and himself in person, to be received with thanks.

"She has an agreeable and homely style. She breezes through her tale with 'nice' little bits of atmosphere that are not too obvious. Moreover, her humor, although sometimes partaking of the very conventional, is simple and genuine."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 14 '26 350w

"Anything that Miss Bower writes concerning the great West of the old days is certain to be true to life and full of interest. Her latest tale is no exception to the rule and Van Patten is a likable hero." C. P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p4 S 11 '26 180w

Springf'd Republican p7f S 19 '26 260w

Wis Lib Bul 23:333 D '26

BOWERS, CLAUDE GERNADE. Jefferson and Hamilton; the struggle for democracy in America. 531p il $5 Houghton [21s Constable] 973.4 United States—History—Constitutional period, 1789-1809. United States—Politics and government. Hamilton, Alexander. Jefferson, Thomas 25-23830

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"This book is the most readable and the most interesting which there is on the subject. Any Jeffersonophil penchant which appears in these pages serves as a good antidote to the several recent studies extolling the marvels of Federalism and glorifying too exclusively the genius of Hamilton." S. F. Bemis

+ Am Hist R 31:543 Ap '26 950w

Reviewed by A. N. Holcombe

Am Pol Sci R 20:215 F '26 480w

"Absorbingly interesting from cover to cover, revealing a close acquaintance with the historical sources and the capacity for a vivid and lively style." H. C. Nixon

+ Ann Am Acad 126:164 J1 '26 200w

Reviewed by M. A. DeW. Howe

Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '26 460w

Booklist 22:244 Mr '26

"Claude Bowers's 'Jefferson and Hamilton' is history as well as biography with a dash of ironic humor to leaven the whole. In this book both great men have found fitting tribute." D. L. Mann

+ Bookm 63:486 Je '26 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p38 Mr '26

"All students of American history should read this book, and the general reader will not be wasting time or thought if he tackles it. For it is a masterly exposition of the practical working of ideas which are still alive to-day, and still have meaning for us."

+ Nation and Ath 38:902 Mr 27 '26 700w

"The chief merit of this book lies in the vivid presentation of the picturesque and personal aspects of the events recorded. The author excels in sketches of manners and in portraits of men and women, and in the ample space provided by his 500 pages he presents a vivacious and at times absorbing picture of a critical epoch in American affairs."

+ New Statesman 26:781 Ap 3 '26 800w

Reviewed by H. and D. Lillenthal

Outlook 143:323 Je 30 '26 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:158 Mr '26

Pratt p34 spring '26

Sat R 141:229 F 20 '26 70w

"One great merit of the book is its freedom from idolatry. The personalities of Jefferson and Hamilton are, on the whole, impartially revealed and the facts are allowed to speak for themselves."

+ Sat R 141:408 Mr 27 '26 1000w

"Mr. Bowers's report of what went on in the United States in the ten years 1790-1800 puts him in the front rank of archivist-journalist historians. One cannot praise him too highly for his success in doing just what he set out to do. His book is well organized, strong, interesting, and as accurate as any piece of journalism could and should be." A. J. Nock

+ Sat R of Lit 2:607 Mr 6 '26 400w

"Claude Bowers has already established a reputation for brilliant writing, and he has enhanced it by his 'Jefferson and Hamilton.' It is by all odds his best work, and certainly the most interesting account of the first three administrations which has yet been written." P. B.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 28 '26 750w

Times [London] Lit Sup p189 Ap 22 '26 2250w

Wis Lib Bul 22:139 Ap '26

"A brilliant, confident book that bowls over the general reader, and leaves him gasping with delight." N. W. Stephenson

+ Yale R n s 16:163 O '26 850w

BOWIE, WALTER RUSSELL. Inescapable Christ. 206p $1.50 Scribner [6s Murray]
232 Jesus Christ 25-23425

Stating that the suggestion for the title comes from Francis Thompson's Hound of Heaven, the author continues: "so down the roadway of our restless time come the feet of the inescapable Christ. . . I seem to hear the echo of those footsteps in our world today." The author expands the idea, and explains how and why he finds in the spirit of Christ the ultimate expression of the need of the modern world.

"There is an extreme humanness in these pages which makes you feel that the author himself is talking with you out of the warmth and the vivid experiences of his own life." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 63:xxxvi Mr '26 170w

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 D 6 '25 460w

"Dr. Bowie has a virile and vital way of presenting the claims and the challenge of Jesus to this modern world. It is a ringing, resounding message, broad, liberal in its sympathy and gripping in its power."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 30 '26 200w

Reviewed by O. S. Davis
J Religion 6:527 S '26 200w

"His work is singularly free from the platitudes and clichés which mar so many sermons. Like the preachers in King's Chapel, he puts the emphasis on experience rather than upon dogma, and his appeal is to reason rather than to emotion." J. A. MacCallum

+ Lit R p4 Ja 9 '26 80w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p6 F 7 '26 900w
Spec 136:849 My 15 '26 350w

"This is not particularly new, but it is appealing because Dr Bowie's attitude is so temperate, so sympathetic, and withal so personal and human. The book is not a sermon, but is more like a series of personal talks or conferences. It takes old themes and treats them in the light of modern conditions."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 12 '26 550w

BOWLES, WILLIAM LISLE. Wiltshire parson and his friends; the correspondence of William Lisle Bowles; together with four hitherto unidentified reviews by Coleridge; ed. by Garland Greever. 207p $3.50 Houghton [10s 6d Constable]

B or 92

Introductory to the correspondence of William Lisle Bowles, poet-clergyman, a sketch of his life is given, followed by chapters on his literary works and his relations with his contemporaries. Among the letters which fill the major part of the book are two hitherto unpublished ones from Coleridge to Bowles.

"Students of English literature will perhaps best appreciate the value of these provocative letters, edited with a clarity of method which calls for a special gratitude. But all true lovers of books will find in them rare entertainment." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p10 D 11 '26 750w

Reviewed by Augustine Birrel
Nation and Ath 40:185 N 6 '26 860w

"This is a book of which it may be doubted whether it was worth doing at all; but there can be no doubt that it has been done well." New Statesman 27:742 O 9 '26 550w

"If this book was not written as a labour of love, it must have been written from a love of labour. William Lisle Bowles was a personage of a certain importance in his own day; he is a person of considerable unimportance in ours, and that unimportance is emphasized rather than removed by a perusal of his letters."

Sat R 142:386 O 2 '26 420w

Reviewed by R. Church
Spec 137:sup588 O 9 '26 360w

"The title of this book is badly chosen. It is not as a Wiltshire parson, or as Canon of Salisbury, that Bowles is remembered; nor does his correspondence at all reveal him in that capacity. These letters completely accord with his reputation, which is that of a minor poet, and the minor friend of poets. And it may be said at once that the letters of Bowles himself and most of his friends have no intrinsic interest, save in so far as a few of them deal with the conditions of publishing a hundred years ago. The real value of the book lies in the two letters and the four hitherto unknown reviews of Coleridge's which the editor has discovered."

Times [London] Lit Sup p629 S 23 '26 1700w

BOWMAN, JOHN G. World that was. 81p $1.50 Macmillan

26-15738

The world of a very small child, his home and family, his garden, his "prairie primeval" where hours and days were spent in stillness with the brook, the flowers and the grasses, his Dad who read poetry to the little boy on his lap and who knew the little boy's mind without the telling, so close and quiet the bond between them,—this, simply and beautifully conveyed is the author's world that was.

"Books about children, but intended for grown people, have become very numerous of late, though few of them are half as charming as Mr. John G. Bowman's account of 'The World That Was.'" L. M. Field

+ Lit R p6 O 23 '26 320w

"On the whole, the book eludes classification—and therein lies much of its worth. It lacks the self-conscious style of Kenneth Grahame and in general tone is closer to W. H. Hudson's 'A Little Boy Lost.' But in Hudson's book the imagination is released from fact and soars away. The child is remote from his elders and tries to get even further away. In 'The World That Was,' the child makes his discoveries in a real world and tends to draw toward his elders. In fact, that is about the only point likely to be questioned—parents and teachers and brothers are all completely understanding in their attitudes toward an imaginative small boy. But again, true or not, it is refreshing to come on such an account rather than on the more usual narrative of a self-pitying and misunderstood childhood." R. L. Sergei

+ N Y Times p4 S 19 '26 920w

"Mr. Bowman has written an unusual little book. It is small, and it is upon a theme in itself not at all unusual today—being memories of his own childhood. But he has managed to endow it with a quality of real individuality and—in the first chapters preëminently—he has a real achievement."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:299 N 13 '26 180w

Springf'd Republican p10 O 23 '26 200w

BOYD, ERNEST AUGUSTUS. Guy de Maupassant; a biographical study. 258p il $4 Knopf

B or 92 Maupassant, Guy de 26-21353

Mr Boyd has written a restrained yet sufficiently revealing study of the abnormal and twisted personality of the brilliant story-teller whose career ended at the age of forty-four in the cell of a madhouse. His mother having destroyed the documents which contained the facts of his unhappy career, the biographer is forced to depend upon de Maupassant's writings and the memories of his contemporaries as the sources of this study.

"The qualities we have learned to seek in Mr. Boyd's work are happily evident in this book. They are: familiarity with his subject, intelligence, a civilized point of view, and a straightforward, unaffected style. Such flaws

BOYD, E. A.—Continued

as are here discernible are flaws of construction, observable in the first few chapters." L: Galantiere

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 D 12 '26 2100w

"In this most entertaining biography we are spared long flights into fanciful realms, which serve solely the biographer's desire to elicit applause for his hero. Neither are we keenly aware of the cum laude spirit which dictated it. Indeed, at times Mr. Boyd gallantly doffs his hat to Flaubert, in comparisons disadvantageous to Maupassant." Joseph Collins

+ Lit R p1 Ja 8 '27 1050w

"Excellent biographical study." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 123:669 D 22 '26 270w

+ New Repub 49:119 D 15 '26 650w

"His book is the most complete, the most reliable and the most authoritative work on Maupassant the present reviewer has ever chanced to read. Equally commendable are its literary qualities." A. I. Nazarov

+ N Y Times p9 N 21 '26 870w

"Mr. Boyd's biographical study has enough of the elements of sensationalism to bring the blush of shame to a reader of the most shameless tabloid. Mr. Boyd has not exploited those elements. Considering his scandalous opportunities, he has shown incredible good taste, delicacy and restraint." Henry Salpeter

+ N Y World p10m N 21 '26 700w

BOYD, WILLIAM KENNETH. Story of Durham, city of the new South. 345p $3 Duke univ. press, Durham, N.C.

975.6 Durham, North Carolina—History 25-28061

"After briefly describing the physiographic influences and the early settlements of Durham and its environs, Professor Boyd traces in considerable detail the development of the industrial, social, and political institutions of Durham. He shows how from a small hamlet Durham, in the course of half a century, became a flourishing industrial city of 50,000 people, comparatively free from the spirit of persecution, ostracism, and racial hatreds. Chapters IV and V on the tobacco industry are especially informing to the student of economic history. Chapter XIV indicates the great progress made by the negro in one of the South's leading industrial communities. An appendix summarizes the notable benefaction of the late James B. Duke to Duke University."—Hist Outlook

"The book as a whole differs as far as possible from the ordinary local history. Indeed, its appeal is not in any sense dependent upon one's interest in this particular community, for Durham is merely the medium through which a trained and competent historian interprets the forces that underlie the revival of the South after the debacle of the 'sixties." R. D. W. Connor

+ Am Hist R 31:844 J1 '26 380w

"Its perspective is admirable and the style good. The story, one might call it a romance, is told quietly, effectively, with the right tone in dealing with the personalities, which of necessity play so large a part in such a development." C. R. Woodruff

+ Ann Am Acad 125:267 My '26 230w

Reviewed by J. D. Wade

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 F 7 '26 500w

Boston Transcript p4 F 24 '26 1000w

"The book is a model for those who write local history."

+ Hist Outlook 17:250 My '26 180w

"I have never seen a more satisfactory record of a municipality. To begin with, the book is honest; it recognizes failures as well as successes, and makes exhaustive study of the facts before it presents its conclusions. Yet with all its details, it is not dry-as-dust; on the contrary, it brings dead facts to life." Garland Greever

+ Lit R p7 Ap 3 '26 360w

Nation 123:252 S 15 '26 160w

N Y World p6m Ja 3 '26 50w

R of Rs 73:557 My '26 120w

Survey 56:110 Ap 15 '26 70w

BOYLE, CONSTANCE ANTONINA. Stranger within the gates. 298p $2 Seltzer [7s 6d Allen and U.]

26-7013

A story of split personality. Walter Southern is a shrinking, fastidious chap who knows nothing of the high-handed escapades of his other self. When the "state" comes on he wakes each time to a different rôle, but each time he knows and loves the same girl, taking up his relations with her where they left off only to drop them again when he is restored to normal. The girl's agony increases with each episode, for she is left with an unexplained child. In normal life Walter is in love with an altogether different girl. The situation brings intolerable grief to his mother and the other two women. Each of the three is striving to effect a cure.

"Sydney's struggles to understand and then to fuse the two personalities, hold your attention, in spite of amateurish dabs at pathological psychology, psycho-analysis and hypnotism." E. N. Sachs

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 18 '26 200w

"One feels throughout the novel that it has been written as a demonstration of an interesting theory, rather than as a straightforward story of action. It certainly cannot be commended for character drawing; and many of the situations are unpleasant and unreal."

— Boston Transcript p4 Ap 21 '26 360w

"It would be rash, in these days of psycho-analytic miracles, to call it impossible. Anyhow, it makes an interesting story." H. L. Pangborn

Int Bk R p451 Je '26 420w

"Miss Nina Boyle has an excellent idea and a keen sense of character. It is over the question of 'skill' that Miss Boyle stumbles. The boy has been despised and derided by his father as a molly-coddle, and it might be supposed that his sub-conscious mind would be dwelling dismally upon deeds of daring. Hence, that during his lapses of memory he should be fiercely adventurous is believable, but that he should become skilled with his hands without any training is not easy to believe, and destroys the illusion of reality."

+ — New Statesman 26:720 Mr 20 '26 260w

"Although the solution is built very much according to the standard pattern, the book on the whole is highly interesting, and is to be commended not only for the unusual story it tells but because it points the way into alluring fields wherein few have seen fit to tread."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 18 '26 380w

Springf'd Republican p7f J1 18 '26 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p144 F 25 '26 230w

BRACKETT, CHARLES. That last infirmity. 311p $2 Day

26-16335

James McCarthy died and left his startled Aloysia a million. Beside the million Aloysia had great sea-blue eyes, devastating Irish charm, and four stunning daughters. Miss Harper, lonely in her aristocratic citadel, discovered Aloysia and took her up, introduced her to Syracuse society, carried her abroad, and really would have loved her but for her astounding success with the right people. What with success and ambition for her girls, Aloysia lost her head but her Irish heart asserted itself in time to avert catastrophe.

Booklist 23:175 Ja '27

"A happy and an amusing book this, and with some traces of serious portrayal of character, but the delicate traceries of its rilleries are far the best of it. Not many have a talent for real frappé. One who has should not mix it with suety puddings." Edgar Johnson

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 O 3 '26 580w

"This novel has too much real humanity not to make one regret that it is not a better book. Possibly by his next novel his transition from clever hokum will be completed and his gift for characterization will come into its own. The present exaggerated romance is readable and amusing and also irritating."

+ — N Y Times p9 O 3 '26 380w

"That Last Infirmary" is full of sparkling episodes and social commentary and character study, and we gladly pass over the improbabilities of Mr. Brackett's plot for the wit in which they are envisaged." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p10m N 7 '26 230w

Outlook 144:216 O 13 '26 80w

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL. Darwin. 315p il $3.50 Houghton

B or 92 Darwin, Charles Robert 26-17912

In the opening paragraph of this book the author writes: "One who, without special scientific qualifications, is profoundly interested in the characters and souls of men, all men, may perhaps be justified in making an intimate study of a man whose influence upon other men, for good and evil both, has been enormous, and who was himself one of the simplest, purest, noblest, most candid, most lovable, most Christian souls that ever lived." Mr Bradford applies to Darwin's character and work his now familiar method of psychography, revealing Darwin as observer, thinker, discoverer, loser, lover and destroyer.

"Just as Mr. Bradford has failed to give proper credit to the pre-Darwin searchers, so he has failed to delve sufficiently, it seems to me, into the various aftermaths of 'The Origin of Species' . . . By not digging everywhere, by failing to find out how little of Darwin's theory is left, Mr. Bradford has missed the chance to make a great, tragic picture of that man." Paul de Kruif

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 O 17 '26 1000w

"Readers of this book are sure to come away from it with an admiration for Darwin tinged with reverence, and if they are at all like the present reviewer they will be all the more amazed how good people could have found any of their religious beliefs attacked by the highly technical and unphilosophic generalizations of this very great man." R: C. Cabot, M.D.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 6 '26 1550w

"To one who is interested in personality, who finds fascination not only in seeing men and women in their outer habit as they live, but also in catching glimpses of their ultimate and inner nature, the publication of Mr. Bradford's study of the soul of Darwin is eventful." Garland Greever

+ Lit R p6 N 13 '26 1300w

"If Mr. Bradford is sometimes too garrulous and repetitious, he is frequently shrewd and discriminating; if he tends to exhort too much, he has no patience whatever with the theologians who dogged and besmirched Darwin; and if he is somewhat too personal and plaintive in his concern over metaphysical mysteries, he shows a minute, judicious, and urbane knowledge of the vast revolution which Darwin was chiefly instrumental in effecting."

Nation 123:sup620 D 1 '26 180w

"Under his skillful guidance Darwin emerges as a modest and gallant figure—a man whose devotion to science and to its highest ideals was religious in the heroic sense of the word." Halsey Raines

+ N Y Times p5 O 31 '26 1600w

"'Darwin' is more than a study in character and achievement; it is a rallying standard for the liberal. And it is, conceivably, something of a justification of the man whose 'rigorous logic' has cleared away a lot of cobwebs that befogged mankind for centuries before he began to write. Darwin, whose name comes into many people's consciousness as the inventor of the theory of ape-descent, which he never proposed in the form in which it is repeated, becomes in this book the liberator even of those who are determined to misunderstand him." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p9m O 24 '26 1050w

"No biographer among his own countrymen has thus far given us as vivid an account of Darwin's personal life as Mr. Bradford gives in this study, applying his method of 'psychography.'"

+ R of Rs 74:559 N '26 130w

"'Darwin' is neither profound nor exhaustive. It amounts practically to a sympathetic summary of the Letters; and one reader, at least, will always prefer Darwin's own brief Autobiography to all the psychographs in the world. What he has specifically set out to do, however, Mr. Bradford has very satisfactorily done, and more it is unfair to demand of any author." J: Bakeless

Sat R of Lit 3:293 N 13 '26 900w

"Abstaining from conjectural and oversubtle elaboration, Mr. Bradford interprets Darwin solidly and simply as a man and as a devotee of scientific truth, and succeeds in bringing before the reader the personality of one of the noblest of Englishmen and most significant achievers in the history of science. In a work clearly planned and carefully executed the surpassing virtue of Darwin is analyzed in its major manifestations of human excellence and devotion to truth."

+ Springfield Republican p7f O 17 '26 1350w

Wis Lib Bul 22:297 N '26

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL. Naturalist of souls; studies in psychography. new ed 369p $3.50 Houghton

920 Literature—History and criticism

26-4298

A new edition, revised and enlarged, of one of Mr Bradford's earlier volumes of biographical portraits. To the original volume several new sketches have been added—Walter Pater, a French Lamb and a Gentleman of Athens—and the chapter on the Novel two thousand years ago has been omitted. Contents: Psychography; Walter Pater; The poetry of Donne; A pessimist poet [Leopardi]; Anthony Trollope; An odd sort of popular book [Burton's Anatomy of melancholy]; Alexandre Dumas; A French Lamb [Lemaitre]; A great English portrait-painter [Edward Hyde, earl of Clarendon]; A gentleman of Athens [Xenophon]; Letters of a Roman gentleman [Pliny]; Ovid among the Goths; Portrait of a saint [Francis of Sales]; Appendix.

Reviewed by E. N. Simpson

Am J Soc 32:313 S '26 280w

Booklist 22:432 J1 '26

"In 'A Naturalist of Souls' you may find some of the best of his critical work. His essay on Walter Pater is excellent." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:223 Ap '26 250w

Boston Transcript p3 My 22 '26 900w

Dial 81:175 Ag '26 160w

"These essays are not only charming and perennially interesting in themselves, but they are technically interesting in the light they shed on the development of Mr. Bradford's method. His is a rare and difficult art, and in it he is a master."

+ Ind 116:498 Ap 24 '26 200w

"If we except a certain thinness and congenital inability to strike quite deeply enough beneath the surface, there is much to please the intelligent reader in this volume, for, at least, that reader will observe a painstaking and modernistically inclined writer striving to

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL—Continued
free himself from an old form and properly formulate a new and more trenchant method of exposition." H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y World p6m Mr 21 '26 1150w

"Of the new 'psychographs' in the volume the one which, by its charm of manner and vividly of depiction, best justifies the new art is that on Xenophon."

+ Outlook 142:672 Ap 14 '26 230w

"It is the author's gift to transport his readers into the very presence of the subject he would have them know."

+ Springfield Republican p7f Ap 25 '26 460w
Wis Lib Bul 22:140 Ap '26

BRADLEE, FRANCIS BOARDMAN CROWN-
INSFIELD. Blockade running during the Civil war; and the effect of land and water transportation on the Confederacy. 340p il
$7.50 Essex inst.

973.758 United States—History—Civil war—
Naval operations. Blockade running. Confederate States of America 25-27750

The book is an account of the blockade runners during the Civil war and of the services that they rendered to the South. Many extracts are given from the literature of blockade running and there are numerous reproductions from prints in the author's collection. Chapters are included on the railroads, post office, telegraphs and express service of the Confederacy.

"This well-printed volume is a very valuable contribution to the history of the Civil War.
It is almost entirely of a documentary character, making available to the public a mass of interesting and detailed information, which the author has, on the whole, arranged and presented in excellent fashion." E. Breck

+ Am Hist R 31:547 Ap '26 1350w

"It is a printed note-book that will have considerable value for the historical student who will digest its contents." F. L. Paxson
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ja
24 '26 330w

"It is always interesting, and at times the narrative is thrilling. It makes a real addition to the first-hand literature of the Civil War in departments which have not received adequate treatment hitherto." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '25 920w

Springfield Republican p6 My 24 '26 750w

BRADLEY, ARTHUR GRANVILLE. In praise of north Wales. 269p il $5 Houghton [12s 6d
Methuen]

914.29 Wales—Description and travel

[26-3137]

"This is a series of descriptions of a grand and rugged countryside little known until recently and full of the intense individuality of an unspoiled land and people. The legends of the Welsh bards and characters of the countryside and, above all, the delicious anecdotes of George Borrow are the fine flower of the discourse."—Outlook

Booklist 22:325 My '26

"Full of leisure and charm. It is a mellow book, packed with accurate and pleasant information and written for love of that sweet country's sake." Jeannette Marks

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 21
'26 520w

Cleveland Open Shelf p86 Jl '26

Reviewed by Keith Hutchison

Int Bk R p505 Jl '26 300w

"A singularly rich contribution to the season's array of travel books." E. C. B.

+ Lit R p9 Mr 20 '26 100w

"It is filled with all manner of information—quaint bits about the people, their life, and the history of the localities. Moreover, it is written out of such deep delight in the region and such warmth of affection for it all that the author invests his narrative constantly with the human appeals and interests it has for him."

+ N Y Times p12 F 21 '26 320w

"If only the author of a book which has such enormous possibilities would organize his wealth of material a little more definitely! It is too rambling and discursive."

+ — Outlook 142:616 Ap 21 '26 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p638 O 1 '25
650w

BRADLEY, WILLARD KING. Inside secrets of photoplay writing. 187p $2 Funk

792 Moving-picture plays 26-3908

By the simple expedient of including in full the synopsis of one of his own successful photoplays and the continuity of another, the author shows how the scenario writer prepares his manuscript for the producer. Other chapters contain hints on the sources of ideas for photoplays and advice on selling the finished product.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 F 28
'26 100w

Boston Transcript p7 My 15 '26 300w

"Bradley admits he is a scenario writer. He is not sure that he has written a book. It is evident that he has learned his craft through the trial and error method. He is, apparently, a graduate of the school of hard knocks. He has no illusions about the task of the scenario writer. His practical suggestions are: Get an idea, think in pictures, then describe the pictures, so that the eye of the camera may photograph them. Persevere. That's how he writes scenarios. That's how he has written his book." Rowland Rogers

Int Bk R p370 My '26 560w

BRAGDON, CLAUDE FAYETTE. Old lamps for new; the ancient wisdom in the modern world.
205p il $3 (10s 6d) Knopf

814 Theosophy 25-21596

"'Old Lamps for New' is a collection of new and old essays which present the familiar doctrines of theosophy in a most attractive form. . . Perhaps the clarity of Claude Bragdon's mysticism is due to his creative work in architecture and design."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:362 Je '26

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 27
'25 1000w

"Written in a graceful, dignified style."
Cleveland Open Shelf p121 D '25

"The essays are all written with a clarity and luminosity not always found in exposition of theosophical doctrines, the sentiment is exalted and the diction is limpid and beautiful."

+ N Y Times p7 N 15 '25 300w

"Without agreeing with more than a fraction of what he says, we may still welcome and thoroughly enjoy his work."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:343 N 28 '25 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p418 Je 17 '26
130w

BRALEY, BERTON. Enchanted flivver. 255p
il $2 Century

26-18090

Dan wanted a flivver very much. So a fairy named Trochee brought him one. It was an enchanted flivver and ran by magic. Dan of course enjoyed it very much, and he enjoyed too the companionship of Trochee, an engaging fellow who looked like a kewpie about fifty years old, and who lapsed with equal ease into poetry or puns. The author and illustrator have had a good time making the book and have guaranteed a good time to the boys and girls who read it.

"This highly diverting account of the adventures of a boy with a magic Lizzie, under the guidance of a fairy poet, is in the vein of Alice in Wonderland. The narrative moves rapidly, the puns are good, the frequent ballads hum, and the employment of modern mechanical devices as fairy tale properties is most successful."

+ New Repub 48:358 N 10 '26 60w

"A gay, whimsical tale, full of quips and jokes and puns and quaint notions written by Berton Braley and illustrated from equally whimsical drawings by Reginald Birch."

+ N Y Times p6 D 5 '26 70w

BRANCH, DOUGLAS. Cowboy and his interpreters. 278p il $2.50 Appleton

917.8 Cowboys 26-16243

Here is a picture of the real American cowboy without the trappings of legend and romance. The book describes the evolution of the cowboy, his dress and his mount, and his life on cattle-trail, ranch and range. There are chapters on some cowboy celebrities, on cowboy songs, and on cowboys in literature and the movies.

Booklist 23:167 Ja '27

Bookm 64:637 Ja '27 180w

"I think Branch's criticisms of cowboy literature the fairest and finest I have ever read. Especially the chapter dealing with Owen Wister's 'Virginian' and Emerson Hough's 'North of 36.' His criticism of the present day Western story magazines may not set so well with their editors or the readers who thrive on stories of the Connecticut cowboy variety. But 'The Cowboy and His Interpreters' should be a joy to every one who knows and loves the real West." Ross Santee

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 D 12 '26 680w

Outlook 144:341 N 10 '26 520w

BRAND, MAX. Fire-brain. 391p $2 Putnam

26-7340

After twenty-five years of battle, with every scar aching for a rest, the hero slipped into Amity. Amity was what he needed and the quiet Texas village seemed to offer it in fact as in name. But within a few hours Sherburn had a fight and made a friend. The friend was big Pete Gresham, the town's boss. Big Pete was looking for strong men. He needed help in trailing Red Hawk, an Indian desperado whose gang was making frequent robberies and killings. So Sherburn joined up with Gresham, winning popularity mixed with awe and the nickname Fire Brain. Tho he did not find the peace he had come for, his good luck held, both in war and in love.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Je 20 '26 140w

"A certain quality of artlessness, of the playfulness of the game between the reader and author, is caught in Mr. Brand's tale. He remains simple, direct and well intentioned to the end. Skill is the only requirement. Mr. Brand possesses a sufficient quantity of this commodity."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 24 '26 180w

"It is a mildly entertaining tale, the solution being evident too early in the telling." C. P. S. Lit R p5 J1 3 '26 90w

Outlook 142:656 Ap 28 '26 60w

BRAND, MAX. White Wolf. 334p $2 Putnam

26-15961

Crosden's interest in dog breeding amounted to an obsession. He had been trying for years to produce the perfect bull-terrier and when at last one was littered high up in the California mountains, the man was mad with joy. Then a wolf came and destroyed the little canine family. But unknown to Crosden, the perfect white pup escaped and running straight to the wolf's own lair thrust himself among her cubs and was presently adopted by her. The white dog grew into a wolfhound, while a griefcrazed breeder alone in the mountains with his little daughter, kept watch for the "king's" return.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 O 24 '26 100w

"A vivid tale of wild-life adventure."

+ N Y Times p38 D 12 '26 500w

"The human characters of the tale are secondary in importance to the animals and our only objection to Mr. Brand's drawing of four-legged creatures is that he endows them with a gift of stately speech among themselves that renders them slightly incongruous."

Sat R of Lit 3:218 O 16 '26 180w

Springf'd Republican p7f N 21 '26 180w

BRANDES, GEORG MORRIS COHEN. Hellas; travels in Greece; tr. by Jacob W. Hartmann. 219p $2.50 Greenberg

880.4 Greek literature. Greece—Civilization 26-17486

"The first three essays deal with the Iliad, the Odyssey and the Anabasis, respectively, and the last two with political conditions in modern Greece, with incidental references to ancient Greece."—N Y World

"The individual essays are incisive and stimulating in themselves, they reveal Brandes's critical independence and his aptitude for controversy, yet we question the wisdom of their inclusion within the covers of a single book."

+ — Bookm 64:xiv S '26 130w

"The translation is defaced by not a few misspellings of Greek names, offenses against English idiom and grammar, awkward rhetoric and slovenly paraphrasing; much of the incoherence which continually mars the work must however, be attributed to the author, whose reputation as a judicious critic this volume will not greatly enhance." A. S. Pease

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ag 29 '26 550w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 19 '26 900w

"The astounding thing about this book is not that it is superbly excellent, for every book I have ever read by Brandes has been that, but that it, written in what must be the last few years of the man's life, shows no sign of flagging. There are the same swift and sure judgments that there were in his 'Main Currents of Nineteenth Century Literature,' the same astuteness, the same youthful and modern attitude." G. D. Eaton

+ Int Bk R p654 S '26 800w

Living Age 330:696 S 25 '26 150w

Reviewed by C. M. Smertenko

Nation 123:153 Ag 18 '26 560w

Reviewed by Grace Frank

New Repub 48:sup165 S 29 '26 130w

"His book, for the most part competently translated, though not without occasional awkwardness, bears on its face evidence of the decline in values which he laments. It is badly proof-read and none too well printed."

+ — N Y Times p14 Je 27 '26 1000w

"'Hellas' is not a firmly integrated book. It is rather, judging from internal evidence, a collection of speeches which happen to cluster about the old Greece and the new. What all of them betray is an intense, passionate admiration for the Greek spirit, tempered nevertheless with a fairly firm grasp on its defects and its limitations." C. H. Grattan

+ N Y World p5m My 23 '26 1000w

Times [London] Lit Sup p376 Je 3 '26 200w

BRANDON, JOHN G. Young love. 300p $2 Brentano's [3s 6d Methuen]

26-791

"When in London, Bill, short of money, but long on love at first sight for the beautiful Sheila, hires out as her chauffeur, does even a timorous reader doubt what is really to be the outcome? A thousand times, no. The fact that

BRANDON, JOHN G.—Continued

Sheila's estates in Ireland are about to be lost to her; that the young wizard of financial London is a villain of a suitor apparently holding all the trumps; that murder is plotted—all this is just put in the path of our hero to make the glorious final happiness greater."—Sat R of Lit

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Mr 14 '26 350w

"The characterization is distinctive, conversation entertaining, repartee clever, description pretty well eliminated and something unexpected happens every few pages. The story is genuine melodrama, such as makes strong appeal to 'movie' audiences but altogether decent and wholesome in final standards." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p10 Ap 17 '26 580w
Cleveland Open Shelf p103 S '26

"The story is readable," Elizabeth Sanderson
+ Lit R p8 My 1 '26 50w

"The story is written in a spirit of high good humor, like some rollicking modern symphony that depicts life in its rapid and strenuous pace of today."

+ N Y Times p19 F 7 '26 620w

N Y World p7m Ja 31 '26 50w

"Not a sentimental romance, as the title might suggest, but a lively, jolly, buoyant tale, with a chuckle on every page and a plot that keeps one wide awake."

+ Outlook 142:338 Mr 3 '26 150w

Sat R of Lit 2:669 Mr 27 '26 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p658 O 8 '25 130w

BRASHER, REX. 'Secrets of the friendly woods. 220p il $2.50 Century

591.5 Natural history—Outdoor books. Animals—Habits and behavior. Birds 26-7814

These friendly observations on bird and animal life as seen on a wooded farm in New York state are illustrated with drawings by the author.

Booklist 23:13 O '26

Reviewed by L. G. Marshall

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Jl 18 '26 200w

N Y Times p10 My 30 '26 200w

St Louis 24:240 S '26

"The style is cool and easy, and the observation close. A literary rather than a scientific book."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:725 Ap 17 '26 60w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ap 18 '26 300w

Wis Lib Bul 22:169 My '26

BRAYBROOKE, PATRICK. Genius of Bernard Shaw. 168p il $2.50 Lippincott

822 Shaw, George Bernard 26-26531

The book is an analysis of Shaw's philosophy as expressed in his plays and an appraisal of his genius. It is Mr Braybrooke's belief that Shaw's claim to permanent fame rests on two essential facts—that the plays deal with matters that will interest future generations and that Shaw is most decidedly possessed of the quality which men call genius.

Booklist 22:416 Jl '26

"He leaves his eminent subject about where he found him. While this study cannot truthfully be said to displace certain other analyses of G. B. S., it should serve as an informational primer for those (if they exist) who have not yet taken up Shaw in a serious way."

+ Bookm 63:608 Jl '26 120w

"Nobody can possibly care what a man who writes like this thinks about G. B. Shaw—or anything else. However, to complete the record, we should add that Mr. Braybrooke contributes nothing whatever of any critical value." W. P. Eaton

—Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Je 18 '26 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p104 S '26

Reviewed by E. Davison

Sat R of Lit 3:170 O 9 '26 60w

BRAYBROOKE, PATRICK. Novelists we are seven. 156p il $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Daniel]

823 Novelists

Patrick Braybrooke treats critically the work of seven English novelists: Temple Thurston, May Sinclair, Gilbert Frankau, Hugh Walpole, Ian Hay, W. B. Maxwell and Rebecca West.

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 2 '27 520w

Boston Transcript p5 O 6 '26 520w

Sat R of Lit 3:239 O 23 '26 300w

BRAYMER, DANIEL HARVEY, and ROE, A. C. Rewinding small motors; practical details of repair shop practice with step-by-step procedure for rewinding all types and designs of fractional horsepower direct and alternating current motors. 247p il $2.50 McGraw

621.31 Armatures. Electric motors 25-16225

"Handbook for the experienced winder. Deals with the rewinding of motors in common use for portable drills, grinders, automobile starters, sewing-machines, fans, vacuum cleaners, washing-machines, etc."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 10:32 Jl '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:27 Ja '26

BREASTED, JAMES HENRY. Conquest of civilization. 717p il $5 Harper

930 History, Ancient 26-27481

This volume, a reprinting of a treatise which first appeared as a textbook in 1916, under the title "Ancient times," is published as a companion volume to "The ordeal of civilization" by James Harvey Robinson. The two volumes are advertised by the publishers under the title "The human adventure."

Booklist 23:71 N '26

Reviewed by Paul Radin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 N 7 '26 350w

Boston Transcript p4 O 16 '26 360w

Cath World 124:564 Ja '27 450w

"Mr. Breasted's book is full of fascinating tales of Rosetta Stones, and Behistun monuments, and the sleuthing out of ancient languages and peoples. It is the kind of book that keeps one up all night, and makes one dream all day of marvelous discoveries and the wizardry of secret ciphers that are unknown tongues." C. E. Ayres

+ New Repub 48:330 N 10 '26 700w

Reviewed by W. MacDonald

N Y Times p23 D 19 '26 750w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

N Y World p10m O 24 '26 330w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 3 '27 600w

Times [London] Lit Sup p863 N 25 '26 600w

BRETHERTON, C. H. Midas; or, The United States and the future. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 88p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

917.3 United States—Civilization. National characteristics, American 26-11817

"When we talk of the future of the United States we necessarily mean the degree and kind of civilization it is likely to evolve." The author's conclusion seems to be that judged by European standards the civilization the United States is likely to evolve will be scant in degree and mean in kind. It will embrace a well developed business and social technique, but of culture divorced from materialistic ends virtually nil. The tone of the book is not ill-natured, but fact is sometimes sacrificed to sprightliness.

Am J Soc 32:517 N '26 30w

Booklist 22:413 J1 '26

Bookm 63:605 J1 '26 50w

Reviewed by H. S. Solow

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 My 30 '26 250w

Ind 117:276 S 4 '26 180w

"These chapters are written in a sprightly style and some of the criticisms are deserved, but Mr. Bretherton does not approach his subject in the right spirit." T. S. Knowlson

+ Lit R p10 My 29 '26 300w

Living Age 329:123 Ap 10 '26 300w

Nature 118:76 J1 17 '26 400w

"He endeavors to maintain the tone of enlightened and challenging persiflage which characterizes the Today and Tomorrow Series, but his high notes are a trifle flat." R. M. Lovett

New Repub 47:119 Je 16 '26 1500w

"C. H. Bretherton's 'Midas, or the United States and the Future' isn't at all a good book. It badly needs a tonic for the sentimental gland." Simeon Strunsky

— N Y Times p4 My 9 '26 520w

"Altogether it is a merry and an interesting little book." W. J. Ghent

+ N Y World p4m My 30 '26 250w

Reviewed by W. J. Ghent

Outlook 143:148 My 26 '26 120w

"Mr. Bretherton is no chance visitor to the country whose life and character he sets out to analyse. He tells us in his preface that he has lived in the United States. We are given no clue to the length of his stay there, [but] it seems to have been scarcely long enough to qualify him as a trustworthy guide on some of the problems he discusses. . . In the chapters on 'The Future of the Melting Pot,' 'The Future of American Character,' and 'The Intellectual Future of America' may be found much helpful discussion of American characteristics."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p226 Mr 25 '26 300w

BREWER, DANIEL CHAUNCEY. Conquest of New England by the immigrant. 369p $2 Putnam

974 New England—Foreign population. New England—History. Immigrants in the United States 26-12327

This study reveals to what extent and in what capacities the immigrant has superseded the native born American in city and country thruout the New England states.

Reviewed by A. B. Darling

Am Hist R 32:369 Ja '27 400w

"It is biologically an unsound special plea, presented, as such things often are, with considerable eloquence and fervor of conviction, and flying sentimentally in the face of natural law. It is only fair to add that the book is sincere and interesting; to those who have some idea of how nature works out her racial problems it is even highly entertaining."

— + Bookm 64:103 S '26 250w

Reviewed by M. J. Herskovits

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 22 '26 1750w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 26 '26 520w

Reviewed by Arthur Pound

— Ind 117:22 J1 3 '26 1250w

Reviewed by L. D. Lyman

N Y Times p3 O 10 '26 1850w

Outlook 144:60 S 8 '26 250w

Reviewed by H. P. Fairchild

Sat R of Lit 3:131 S 25 '26 620w

"Merely another exploit in 'viewing with alarm.' The possibilities here presented of an ethnic, social, economic and political study are entirely lost in the author's declamations over the perversion of a birthright."

— Springf'd Republican p14 Je 10 '26 550w

Survey 56:470 J1 15 '26 30w

Times [London] Lit Sup p751 O 28 '26 230w

BREWSTER, ARTHUR JUDSON. Introduction to retail advertising. 319p il $5 Shaw, A.W. 659 Advertising 26-10991

"Many of those prominent in advertising work are interested in national advertising for large industries, and much of the existing literature is chiefly from that viewpoint. The present work is primarily for the small retail dealer who writes or supervises his own advertising, and it should be valuable, though occasionally lacking in clearness and accuracy."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:562 N '26

BRICKELL, ALFRED, ed. Few, but roses; poems from the French. 95p $2 Brentano's [6s Unwin]

841.08 French poetry—Translations into English. French poetry—Collections

"The title of this anthology is as apt as it is beautiful. It is a collection of translations from the whole range of French poetry in which the names of the translators are as famous, if not more so, than the names of the poets translated. Among the translators are Edmund Spenser, Andrew Lang, James Elroy Flecker, Edmund Gosse, Keats, Leigh Hunt, Rossetti, Alice Meynell, Santayana and Symons. Aldous Huxley also is represented, with a translation of the Mallarme poem which inspired Debussy to write his great tone poem."—N Y World

Reviewed by B. R. Redman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 S 19 '26 280w

"The book is interesting because it contains both good poems and excellent English translations, but it will not displace other anthologies."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 O 23 '26 160w

"The translations beautifully meet Mr. Brickell's condition, to wit, that they do not reveal they are translations."

+ N Y World p9m O 3 '26 100w

BRIDGES, HORACE JAMES, ed. Aspects of ethical religion. 423p $3 Am. ethical union 170 Ethics. Ethical culture movement

Each of the contributors writes on the aspect of ethical religion which most appeals to him, without reference to—and indeed without having seen—the other papers. The volume therefore contains a many-sided exposition of the whole ethical movement and is at the same time a tribute to Felix Adler, the founder of the movement.

"It is an intellectual and philosophical piece of work of the very first order." S. S. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 31 '26 590w

Wis Lib Bul 22:292 N '26

BRIDGES, T. C. Young folk's book of invention. 287p il $2 Little

609 Inventions 26-7174

The story of world-wide invention from the crude implements of primitive man to the complicated marvels of modern machinery is here adequately presented and copiously illustrated.

"One hundred and fourteen illustrations add value to the book, and help to make the text clear to the young mind."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 26 '26 150w

N Y Times p6 D 5 '26 40w

BRIDGES, T. C.—Continued

St Louls 24:324 N '26

"The boy who would know something of the evolution of the mechanical world in which he lives will find a pleasant way to that knowledge in this book."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:876 Je 19 '26 120w

Spring'd Republican p10 S 30 '26 100w

BRIGGS, CLARE A. How to draw cartoons. 133p il $3 Harper

741 Caricatures and cartoons 26-5230

The originator of "Mr and Mrs." "When a feller needs a friend" and other popular cartoon series writes a book of advice to the young aspirant who would follow in his steps. Other well known cartoonists contribute friendly suggestions in the concluding chapter, and the whole volume is profusely illustrated from the work of the author and his fellow artists.

Booklist 22:360 Je '26

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 1 '26 350w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p4 Ap 18 '26 2100w

Pratt p23 autumn '26

R of Rs 73:447 Ap '26 150w

Spring'd Republican p16 Ap 14 '26 450w

"A book of sound advice to aspiring young cartoonists."

+ Wis Lib Bul 22:138 Ap '26

BRIGGS, MARTIN SHAW. Short history of the building crafts. 296p il $3.50 Oxford [8s 6d Milford]

690.9 Building—History. Building trades 26-2918

"Well illustrated introduction to the history of building construction. Traces the various trades common to building in the past and the present."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:552 N '26

BRIGGS, THOMAS HENRY. Curriculum problems. (Modern teachers' ser.) 138p $1 Macmillan

375 Education—Curricula 26-13764

In this little book, the first chapter—More fundamental curriculum research—calls attention to the questions involved in any serious study of curriculum problems. The two remaining chapters—Emotionalized attitudes, and Mores—discuss "phases of life so important that education cannot afford to neglect them longer." The purpose of the book is to state these problems, not to offer a solution for them.

Booklist 23:111 D '26

"Professor Brigg's mode of presentation has the major virtues of directness, clearness, and restraint. In relatively brief space, he presents a great wealth of ideas and suggestions." Franklin Bobbitt

+ El School J 27:307 D '26 340w

"The book is not a contribution to curriculum practice, and it will prove a disappointment to those who read it with the idea of securing immediate assistance in curriculum reform. It was prepared for thinkers, those who are willing to be challenged by problems. The author has outlined a sufficient number of problems in the three chapters of his little book to keep the curriculum students in secondary education employed for a generation." W. C. Reavis

+ School R 34:714 N '26 300w

BRIGHAM, GERTRUDE RICHARDSON (VIKTOR FLAMBEAU, pseud.). Red letter days in Europe; with a glimpse of Northern Africa. 435p il $4 Sully

914 Europe—Description and travel. Africa, North—Description and travel 25-25539

The author's Corona traveled with her on the first trip thru the British Isles and across the continent, and on the later ones from Spain to Portugal, North Africa and Sicily, and thru central and western Europe, so that these descriptions are of real people and real events, written not from memory but on the spot.

"On the beaten path, Viktor Flambeau displays little initiative. However, she visited Latvia, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Roumania, and the Balkans, where she mingled with artists, and she is able to report a significant renaissance linked with nationalism in these less known countries."

+ — Bookm 63:xlviil Ap '26 70w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Mr 21 '26 120w

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 9 '26 220w

"The remarkable feature of this travel book lies not in any singular experiences which befell the truthful and far-roving author but in the fact that she has succeeded in giving a clear-cut bird's-eye impression of virtually every present-day European country." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p10 F 27 '26 280w

BRILLAT-SAVARIN, JEAN ANTHELME. Physiology of taste; or, Meditations on transcendental gastronomy; a complete tr. from the French; foreword by Frank Crowninshield. 360p $3.50 Boni & Liveright; ltd ed $15 Doubleday

641.01 Food. Gastronomy. Taste 26-17277

"Brillat-Savarin's 'Physiology of Taste' appeared for the first time one hundred years ago. This good-humored Frenchman—who was in New York playing the fiddle in a little New York theatre when George Washington took oath of office for his second term, but who certainly must have been much more interested in the American wild turkey he killed and found so extraordinarily palatable—considered food with the most sincere respect. He develops for his own amusement a science, which he calls gastronomy, and which observes meticulously and reports precisely (the gastronomers govern their future table service and diversions accordingly) on the senses related to the enjoyment of food, the kinds and combinations of food which titillate the most severely educated palate, the persons who are intelligent eaters and those who merely feed, the history and evolution of the highly and subtly organized menu. The reports, noted down from time to time, make the strangest and one of the most charming books we think we have ever read."—Lit R

"Its heavy apparatus of definition and classification might seem tedious were it not as thoroughly pervaded with a genial sense of well-being as a fat man after a good dinner." G. F. Whicher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 S 12 '26 500w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 O 10 '26 250w

"It is a part of real education to read and inwardly digest his immortal treatise, so full of anecdotes, wit, wisdom and practical philosophy. Everything about it, even the author's name, smacks of brilliancy and good savor. The present edition is worthily presented." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 14 '26 1050w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 D '26

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Int Bk R p735 N '26 1500w

J Home Econ 18:647 N '26 30w

Reviewed by Walter Yust
Lit R p7 S 4 '26 750w

"Half serious and half jocose, 'The Physiology of Taste' is neither solid enough to be science nor quite specific enough to serve as a cook-book; but it possesses the full flavor of that eighteenth-century France in which the youth of its author fell."

+ — Nation 123:382 O 13 '26 120w

"He is wise and witty throughout, particularly delightful in his many anecdotes. His book is the sort that can be picked up at random, the reader being sure to find some new passage of rich entertainment that passed unnoticed before." Thurston Macauley

+ New Repub 48:278 O 27 '26 750w

"His book from beginning to end reeks with the joys of the table. And yet it is a gentle and urbane book, full of whimsical passages and reflections, and of humorous anecdotes. The table of contents is in itself alluring." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p5 S 26 '26 1200w

"Because Brillat-Savarin laid hold of eternal truths in their contemporary forms, he abides as the teacher whose wisdom can never be made of no avail by change in conditions. His profound conviction of the importance of his subject, his grasp of general principles; his command of pertinent anecdote: these merits, and a style in which classical French is flavoured with racy phrases gathered from the people, make him the most persuasive and agreeable of the philosophers of the dinner-table." T. E. Welby

+ Sat R 140:762 D 26 '25 1000w

BRINTON, CRANE. Political ideas of the English romanticists. 250p $5 Oxford [15s Milford] 820.4 English literature—History and criticism. Romanticism

"Mr. Brinton's aim is to present, from the comments and reflections of its most articulate observers (who happen to be men of letters), a picture of that half-century or more of change (between 1790, say, and 1850) which he asks leave to call the modern 'Revolution': the period when laws and canons were banished from the world of literature and the arts, when Pope became a minor poet and Keats and Shelley commenced greatness, when religion, like philosophy, ceased to be 'rational,' when the landed aristocracy abdicated and rural life, receding before an urban industrial civilization, became for most English citizens an anomaly or a distraction. In comparison with that period he contends, our own development is almost normal."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"There is a fulness of ideas, provocative to thought, which a review cannot attempt to reproduce. And we cannot refrain from expressing appreciation of Mr. Brinton's powers of style, and particularly of the restraint he imposes on his conspicuous gift for sarcasm and irony. His sincere respect for the great Victorians generally triumphs over the prevalent temptation to be witty at their expense." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 S 19 '26 1200w

"The subject for this book seems to have been suggested by H. G. Laski and the author has worked it out in masterly and brilliant fashion." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p1 J1 24 '26 560w

"We have to thank Mr. Crane Brinton for one of the most thorough and thoughtful essays in literary criticism that has appeared for some time. A perusal of his book gave one the impression of a sure and concise grip of a difficult and intricate transition period in English life and letters; a reperusal, which the worth of the work done in these pages demands, only deepens the reader's admiration."

+ New Statesman 27:500 Ag 14 '26 1800w

"For a first book this is a work of great promise; and simply on its merits, though it has some youthful shortcomings, it is a book of note. It is, we understand, a revision of a doctorate thesis, but it has none of the tameness and rigidity which characterize such work. Mr. Brinton is spirited as well as scholarly, and suffers, indeed, rather from too much flexibility than from too little."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p543 Ag 19 '26 900w

BRISBANE, COUTTS. Here come swords! 302p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

A conflict of powers in a small dukedom of mediaeval Italy is the plot of the story. Into the very garden of his enemy, Pietro penetrated with Nicco on his shoulder and held converse with the garden's lovely prisoner, Bianca de Marco. The lady's jailer, self styled duke, had ousted Pietro's father, rightful lord of Nona, banished his family, and assumed the title. But the friends of the old lord were many, and Pietro, adventuring among them with the little monkey for company, fanned their impatience for the downfall of the duke, and found in bright-haired Bianca a cause and an ally.

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 D 12 '26 120w

"It is a light story, lightly told."

Boston Transcript p1 O 16 '26 160w

"Though it has plenty of fighting and more than a few hairbreadth escapes, the tale is amusing rather than exciting. It is gayly written, with an emphasis on the amusing side of every situation. One feels that the author of 'Here Come Swords' thoroughly enjoyed writing his complicated yarn, and the reader shares his pleasure in a narrative whose characters have little solemnity about them." L. M. Field

+ Lit R p7 O 2 '26 450w

"The characterization is not memorable, but the swiftness of incident and the color and humor of the tale make an entertaining evening's reading."

+ — N Y Times p33 O 10 '26 420w

"A well contrived and pleasant story which, within its obvious limitations, admirably fulfills itself."

Sat R of Lit 3:322 N 20 '26 270w

"Mr. Brisbane writes spiritedly and provides a restrained succession of convincing episodes, happily making use of English dialect as an indication of Italian peasant speech. In this way he escapes from all temptation to bespatter his pages with linguistic italics, and thereby maintains the cheerful character of his style without losing any of his local colour."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p266 Ap 8 '26 160w

BRISCO, NORRIS ARTHUR, and WINGATE, JOHN W. Retail buying. (Retailing ser.) 396p il $4 Prentice-Hall

658.87 Buying. Retail trade 25-13662

"Purpose is 'to present the fundamental principles underlying the buying of merchandise . . . to present actual problems that confront a buyer; and . . . to meet pedagogical requirements by combining text and case methods of presenting the subject.' (Foreword)"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:146 Ja '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:248 My '26

BRITISH India, from Queen Elizabeth to Lord Reading, by an Indian Mahomedan; with a foreword by Sir Theodore Morison. 573p il $8.50 (32s) Pitman

954 India—History. India—Politics and government

Written by an Indian Mohamedan with a strong English bias, this history of British India from Queen Elizabeth to Lord Reading dwells at length on the past but gives scant attention to the important political changes of recent years.

BRITISH INDIA—Continued

Reviewed by E. P. White

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 S 5
'26 480w

Reviewed by Harendranath Maitra

Lit R p6 Ag 7 '26 150w

"It is the balanced outlook of the author which gives this work its value, for there is no evidence of original research. He has been content to compile his record from previous histories and present-day documents and speeches, and, for the most part, to accept the judgment of earlier, and mostly British, historians. The generous outlook of this Indian Mohammedan calls for reciprocation."

+ Living Age 330:384 Ag 14 '26 550w (Reprinted from London Observer)

"He treads a firmly beaten track, using the accepted English materials. Even his brief summary of the Mutiny contains nothing that would raise a protest in an English school-room. The 200 pages devoted to the events of the past fifty years make as odd a specimen of historical writing by an Indian as one may expect to see. It is obviously an interesting thing that an Indian Mahomedan should compose a eulogistic history of British India; but praise without discrimination is of no higher worth in an Indian than in an English writer."

— New Statesman 27:supx Je 5 '26 250w

Reviewed by C. Johnston

N Y Times p11 Ag 15 '26 1550w

BRITISH TRADES UNION DELEGATION TO RUSSIA AND CAUCASIA, 1924. Russia today; official report. 284p $1.75; pa $1.25 International pub.

330.947 Russia—Social conditions. Russia—Economic conditions 25-18169

The book is a report of the delegation sent by the British trade union congress to investigate conditions in Russia under the soviet regime. The survey covers politics, finance, industry, transportation and agriculture, foreign commerce, judiciary, social and labor conditions. The general conclusion is: "that the U.S.S.R. is a strong and stable state . . . that has the active support of a large majority of the workers and the acceptance of an equally large majority of the peasants; that the machinery of government . . . seems to work well . . . in every way better than anything that Russia has ever yet had."

"Much of the material is in the form of condensations of Russian official reports, arranged with clearness and spirit. Whatever the limitations of the report as a profound analysis of Russian problems may be, it would be difficult to discover another volume dealing with Russia today which gives a more comprehensive and readable account." Amy Hewes

+ Am Econ R 16:89 Mr '26 800w

"The report has been written rather naively for a rather naive public and, it must be admitted, by rather naive reporters." H: G. Alsberg

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 My 31 '25 720w

Boston Transcript p4 N 21 '25 360w

"The most comprehensive report yet issued by any group which has visited Soviet Russia. An enormous task of friendly research lies behind the chapters."

+ Nation 121:582 N 18 '25 60w

"Perhaps the most authoritative survey of actual conditions under the Soviet regime which has yet been published in English. It is a model piece of work in that it shows the exact itinerary of the group and specifies every bit of evidence observed during the trip. It has been criticized in detail, but the major conclusions of the report have not been shaken by the most violent opponents of the Soviet government. No one who cares to understand the Russian situation can afford to neglect its findings."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 F 3 '26 550w

BROAD, CHARLIE DUNBAR. Mind and its place in nature. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 684p $5 Harcourt [16s K. Paul]

120 Psychology. Knowledge, Theory of. Consciousness. Subconsciousness. Immortality 25-17638

"The present volume is devoted to what Dr Broad calls criticism: it is an attempt to unravel the various strands of doctrine that have been used in dealing with the nature of the mind, to deal with each strand separately, in a critical fashion, and finally to give a coherent account of the mind and its place in nature."—Spring'd Republican

Reviewed by Paul Radin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 18 '26 1200w

"Plainly the reader needs a good wind to follow the argument through its intricate windings to its rather abrupt and baffling end. But the road is always clearly marked with that painstaking accuracy of thought and expression which characterized the author's two earlier volumes. He makes his definitions so precise, and so refines his distinctions, that no one can fail to understand exactly what he means or to follow even his most intricate arguments." Durant Drake

+ J Philos 23:579 O 14 '26 2750w

"It may be doubted whether his results are definitive. Nevertheless, his book is full of accurate thought and useful distinctions to a degree which is surpassed by very few philosophers; and on this ground it deserves to be read by all serious students." Bertrand Russell

+ — Nation and Ath 33:323 N 28 '25 1050w

"Dr. Broad's new book is no réchauffé of his previous work, and it is extremely remote from being one of those compilations of other people's ideas which seek to pass themselves off as 'scholarship.' The Mind and its Place in Nature is in a high degree a vigorous, personal and original book, and takes a worthy place in the brilliant philosophical tradition of Trinity College." Maurice Amos

+ New Statesman 26:16 O 17 '25 1550w

St Louis 24:49 Mr '26

"The amateur reader who would like to know as briefly as possible what mind is, had best look elsewhere, or confine himself to the summaries which the author charitably supplies at the end of the chapter; for it is Dr. Broad's way to erect and overthrow at least a dozen very carefully elaborated false hypotheses for one that he allows to stand. But for the professional student who is bent on erecting a hypothesis of his own, this book provides both an extraordinary assemblage of philosophical designs and building materials, and a well-equipped gymnasium for the exercise of the philosophical muscles." R. B. Perry

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:612 Mr 6 '26 760w

"The book while abounding in subtle distinctions and alarming terminology is interesting and stimulating throughout to a reader with an interest in the subject." G. B.

+ Spring'd Republican p7f Je 6 '26 750w

"We think that this is quite the best book that Dr. Broad has yet given us, and one of the most important contributions to philosophy made in recent times."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p632 O 1 '25 1950w

BROMFIELD, LOUIS. Early autumn; a story of a lady. 307p $2 Stokes [7s 6d J. Cape] 26-17996

Olivia had lived with the Pentland tradition for twenty years. Dazzled by its eminence she had married into the family at an early age and had willingly slipped into the Pentland groove. What warmth she brought to the marriage had been quickly chilled by her husband's puritanism, and for years Olivia's one friend in the household was her father-in-law. Each of these two recognized with respect the quality of the other. Enter Michael O'Hara. He offered Olivia love on her own terms, and the possibility of color and warmth in a life of her own if she could but grasp it and break with the Pentland tradition. In the ensuing struggle against her adopted mental environment Olivia found that, more Pentland than the Pentlands, she was struggling against herself.

Booklist 23:132 D '26

"We find him making use of lovely and amazingly pertinent description to evolve his moods and his characters. We find him developing in picturesqueness of style and in the ability to choose his detail. In the story of the Pentlands, Mr. Bromfield has written both a dramatic novel and a stinging satire. It is an important book, and an entertaining one." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:349 N '26 400w

"Having succeeded in vitalizing the personal and the impersonal, it is probable that Bromfield will work toward a synthesis of the two, and if he can only, as the years go by, develop an interest in youth comparable to his interest in age, his portrait gallery will assume a balanced character that it now lacks. Among American novelists of his years he is best fitted to write an 'American Comedy' on the Balzacian plan, and it will be no more plainly realistic than was Balzac's comedy." B. R. Redman
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 O 17 '26 1050w

"This is a story worth reading and worth discussing. No one can deny that Mr. Bromfield has things to say which are worth hearing—even if you should not always agree with him. We must go far to discover another young writer of the promise and the ability of Louis Bromfield." D. L. Mann

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 30 '26 1900w

Ind 117:681 D 11 '26 150w

"The book is thoroughly American, but it has a mellowness and a power of perspective which American fiction too often lacks. Notable as 'Possession' was, this new novel is even better, more closely knit, more skilfully handled, unmarred by the touches of extravagance which appeared in the earlier book." L. M. F.

+ Int Bk R p772 N '26 420w

"His present novel, 'Early Autumn,' picks up its skirts and runs away with the other two. It enjoys all the excitement and deep tinted color and the life-savor of 'The Green Bay Tree'; achieves a unity not to be found in 'Possession,' and a sure-fingered manipulation of incident and character and a subtle and profound appreciation of atmosphere; by all odds, Mr. Bromfield's best book and an important American novel as well." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 O 16 '26 920w

Reviewed by A. B. Parsons
Nation 123:sup614 D 1 '26 350w

Reviewed by Austin Clarke
Nation and Ath 40:394 D 11 '26 60w

"Like the two preceding novels, Early Autumn has an easy gusto which is content with a secondhand prose, running into the wide grooves of phrases which have been worn thin. Mr. Bromfield uses these phrases without recharging them. The book has also the fertility of characters in broad, hard strokes of The Green Bay Tree and Possession. Although the reader misses the satisfaction of original work, this gusto and fertility make Mr. Bromfield's novels interesting to read: not to re-read." L. S. Morris

+ New Repub 49:143 D 22 '26 320w

"Mr. Bromfield's latest novel shows a distinct falling off from his earlier work. Despite a degree of intrinsic interest and competent workmanship, the book's essence is only a sterile working over of stale material which will discourage many of those who saw in Louis Bromfield the promise of a fresh and original interpreter of American life."

+ N Y Times p4 O 17 '26 1200w

N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 70w

Outlook 144:475 D 8 '26 250w

"He does not succeed in making his materials yield their maximum value. He is fertile in invention and skilful in composition, but his uncommon facility frequently lapses into superficiality. He is capable of writing prose that has grace, urbanity, and charm. He is equally capable of writing prose that is glaringly untidy and awkward. He is, in short, an uneven writer; a novelist of singular promise who has made little progress in the mastery of his craft." Lloyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 3:294 N 13 '26 560w

"If the reader cannot feel that Mr Bromfield has got his atmosphere quite right, this story has essential affinity with the human comedy, regardless of localities, and the author shows verve in combining his characters for human and dramatic effects. Best of all, while the characters betray some immaturity of outline and development, the author's perception is highly sensitized, and, within limits, satirically alert."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f O 17 '26 420w

Reviewed by V. F. Calverton

Survey 57:161 N 1 '26 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p932 D 16 '26 420w

BRONSHTEIN, LEV DAVIDOVICH. See Trotsky, L., pseud.

BRONSON, FRANCIS WOOLSEY. Spring running. 306p $2 Doran

26-6814

This novel of youth starts with the childhood of Charles Hammer, follows him thru his adolescent years in and out of youthful love experiences till the completion of the cycle carries him back to his first and childhood love.

"'Spring Running' has color and speed. It discovers a new and graceful talent, sensitive to beauty and gifted with the ability to tell a not uncommon story in a very readable way. On the debit side Mr. Bronson's style has not yet become his own—it is heavily influenced, it often mistakes over-emphasis for power, its images are only too frequently forced and strained." S. V. Benet

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 My 2 '26 720w

"A rather promising, intense young novel." Ind 116:555 My 8 '26 40w

"'Spring Running' is a first novel and a first novel of considerable freshness and strength. If it is brimming over with superfluities, digressions, matter which, from an artistic point of view, should have been omitted, it is never lacking in drive, energy or the effect of creative force." Landon Robinson

+ Lit R p7 My 1 '26 320w

"Spring Running is a success as a picture of modern youth. The characterization is excellent and the conversation always entertaining and occasionally provocative of understanding amusement." M. E. U.

+ New Repub 47:209 J1 7 '26 120w

"'Spring Running' is not a good novel; the author's promise is not distinctively that of a coming novelist. Mr. Bronson has not found his métier in this literary form; his book is immature, uneven and inadequate; and it is five years out of date as well."

— N Y Times p9 Mr 28 '26 750w

"Apart from the fact that the heroine pursues the hero to the altar, there is no point to this story. The author's, as well as the hero's, mind appears to be wrapped in a cocoon of femininity."

— N Y World p7m Ap 25 '26 280w

"A forceful and entertaining study of adolescence."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:776 My 8 '26 230w

"Seldom does a young novelist so justifiably earn the right to serious consideration as a promising recruit to the crowded ranks. Mr Bronson not only writes well, but displays marked versatility in the handling of material and creates several characters that are more than types."

BRONSON F. W.—Continued
+ Spring'd Republican p7f Ap 18 '26
400w

BROOKS, CHARLES STEPHEN. Roundabout to Canterbury. 346p il $3 Harcourt

914.2 England—Description and travel
26-16133

This pleasant chronicle of the road adventures of "three tramps in Southern England" is concerned at least as much with where they went and what they saw as with that they thought and felt by the way. The happily interpretive drawings and the route map which forms the end papers are by Julia McCune Story.

Booklist 23:126 D '26

"Round About to Canterbury" will be dipped into by many who amid the roar of hustling cities think wistfully of a happy vacation in years past or in the years to be." Stephen Graham

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 N 21 '26 420w

"Not a guidebook, but it is packed with information; it is not a comedian's commentary on a foreign country, but it is full of a delicate humor."

+ Ind 117:396 O 2 '26 180w

"The author, blessed with a whimsical Lambsian delight in wandering through the byways of South England, travels arm in arm with a blithe humor that aids and abets him at every step. His book, therefore, is a delight from beginning to end."

+ N Y Times p13 N 14 '26 300w

"Mr. Brooks writes with a bubbling humor and makes no effort to delve beneath the smiling surface, nor does he dispel cherished beliefs in the mutton monotony of the cuisine and the excellence of native brews." Drake de Kay

+ Outlook 144:279 O 27 '26 480w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Sat R of Lit 3:232 O 23 '26 600w

Spring'd Republican p6f D 12 '26 170w

Wis Lib Bul 22:273 O '26

BROOKS, SIDNEY. America and Germany, 1918-1925; with a preface by George Barr Baker. 191p $1.50 (6s 6d) Macmillan

330.943 Germany—Economic conditions. Food supply—Germany. Reconstruction (European war)—Germany. United States—Relations (general) with Germany. Germany—Relations (general) with United States
26-916

The book discusses the political and economic situation in Germany since the war, and America's efforts to aid in the work of rehabilitation with food supplies and financial support.

"What is said of Germany's internal struggles leading to the Weimar constitution, her naïve expectations of financial credits from America, and the Dawes plan and its working, is quite sketchy and shows little trace of first-hand knowledge. The main portion of the book, however, is interesting and valuable. The difficulties presented by the economic blockade up to the signing of the peace, the problems connected with the use of German shipping, and the German task of financing the food shipments are adequately and sympathetically treated." S. B. H.

+ Am Hist R 31:595 Ap '26 320w

"The book is based in part upon documentary material hitherto unpublished, and it should be especially welcomed because it is among the first of its kind in which the facts are presented in a way to lead to a better understanding between Germany and America." K. F. Geiser

+ Ann Am Acad 123:234 Ja '26 180w

Booklist 22:325 My '26

Bookm 63:234 Ap '26 160w

"On the whole the volume offers comparatively little that is unknown to students of the subject or that could not have been derived from an intelligent perusal of newspapers and magazines, to say nothing of existing books. While it provides something of a 'narrative of our dealings with Germany' along the lines indicated, the result is not altogether a connected story. To many readers the novel feature in the book will be the account of the almost insuperable difficulties met by the Americans at the conference in Versailles." W. R. Shepherd

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ja 24 '26 500w

"Although this little volume has an atmosphere of sympathy for certain tendencies in the late German Empire which cannot be condoned today any more than eight years ago, it appears a valuable book."

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 27 '26 200w

"Mr. Brooks's small volume, if it gets the wide reading it deserves, should be vigorously influential in promoting the healthy development of a spirit of amity. Moreover, his book is an important contribution to the history of the years immediately following the armistice."

+ N Y Times p26 Ja 24 '26 450w

Reviewed by J. L. Heaton

N Y World p7m Ja 31 '26 700w

"The summary is precise, impartial, and valuable for reference; but rather too dry for popular appeal."

+ Outlook 142:76 Ja 13 '26 100w

R of Rs 73:221 F '26 130w

"In an informal and intimate commentary on conditions and points of view in the two countries in the seven years since the armistice, Mr Brooks has told a story not only worth telling for its own sake, but significant for the future of America as well as Germany."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 D 30 '25 620w

BROSTER, DOROTHY KATHLEEN. Flight of the heron. 388p $2 Dodd

Bonnie Prince Charlie is a fugitive in the highlands, fleeing before the British soldiers and sheltered by his loyal Highlanders. Chief of these is Lochiel, and first of Lochiel's Camerons is Ewen of Ardroy. The leader of the pursuing troops is an Englishman, Captain Windham. Now an old clansman gifted with second sight has predicted a strange intertwining of the destinies of these two—the Englishman, Keith Windham, and Ewen Cameron, the Scot—foretelling disaster, a great grief and a great service from the linking of their lives. The flight of a heron brings about the first of these destined meetings and starts the story on its adventurous course. Love, the friendship of men, and passionate loyalty to a losing cause are its ruling motives.

"If you don't mind an historical novel, then you'll like this (which is a left-handed way of saying that here is an adroitly constructed tale of romantic war and of romantic love)." H. H. Balos

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 31 '26 230w

"This may be called an old-time historical novel. The style is easy and interesting. The story is for those who love descriptions of the Scottish lochs and mountains, and for those who love the history attending Scotland at this period in its development."

Boston Transcript p4 O 13 '26 180w

BROWN, HEYWOOD CAMPBELL. Gandle follows his nose. 191p $1.50 Boni & Liveright

26-9261

Having consulted a wizard and worsted him at his own black magic, Gandle set out on his eighteenth birthday to see and to find out. His nose led him into a world of fantasy and weird delight, for right under it he found a lamp complete with genie. At once Gandle wished himself into a number of pleasant possessions and a train of exciting tho puzzling experiences.

Booklist 22:420 J1 '26

Bookm 63:203 Ap '26 40w

"It is a pleasant tale which moves twinklingly along, touching lightly some grave and tender notes, presenting some truths agreeably familiar, and attractively decorated with dragons and the like." Garreta Busey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ap 18 '26 300w

"We honestly fail to be perplexed or amused by this story by Heywood Broun. Such highly imaginative writing is for the purpose of giving its creator pleasure. No outside admirer will ever know what Mr. Broun means by 'Gandle Follows His Nose' until the final sentence is reached. A fine attitude toward life that of Bunny Gandle's; but why didn't he explain matters more clearly to us before?"

— + Boston Transcript p4 Mr 31 '26 320w

"In spite of obvious borrowings from various prose romances, and in particular from 'Don Quixote,' Mr. Broun has on the whole achieved something unmistakably individual; and the reader will be able to discover in the book a complete philosophy of life. The crisp brevity of the style is not always effective, and at times becomes just a trifle monotonous; but the story is interestingly conceived, and is particularly worthy of note in that it escapes from the rut of every-day fiction into byways that are but little followed." S. A. C.

+ Int Bk R p453 Je '26 450w

"This is a jolly, unpretentious yarn—honestly conceived and simply written." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p5 Ap 3 '26 450w

Nation 123:18 J1 7 '26 70w

Reviewed by Roderick Marshall

New Repub 47:95 Je 9 '26 130w

"If the truth must be told, it is rather jéjune adventuring. Most mere fairy tales are more rollicking and imaginative. Mr. Broun has propped a hero who has little life in him, and told the story of his youth without much vigor."

N Y Times p8 Mr 28 '26 700w

"Fancy, humor, and philosophy—Mr. Broun has them all and blends them richly; but he is not quite the man for dragons. Nor for wizards. Nor for princesses and genies and lamps. So at least it seems to us, but we shall not defend our position if it is challenged, because this is just the kind of book which can neither be critically pulled to pieces nor vindicated by reasonable argument."

Outlook 142:572 Ap 14 '26 180w

"It is a tender little fable, crisply and sharply written, with lively touches of Mr. Broun's engaging humor. He has a real gift for this sort of thing."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:668 Mr 27 '26 400w

Wis Lib Bul 22:198 Je '26

BROWER, HARRIETTE MOORE. Modern masters of the keyboard. 303p il $3 Stokes 786.3 Pianoforte—Instruction and study. Pianists 26-15814

This is the author's third book of interviews with famous pianists. Her method is to give her own impressions of the personality of the artist and then to give in the artist's words comment on such questions of music and technique as will be of especial interest and aid to teacher and student of the piano. Illustrated from photographs, many of them autographed for the author.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 28 '26 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 D '26

"Her book is very readable and her matter well arranged."

+ Lit R p13 O 16 '26 170w

"Her book is interesting and informing."

+ N Y Times p20 D 26 '26 160w

BROWN, ABBIE FARWELL. Silver stair. 148p $1.75 Houghton

811

26-19173

A new collection of lyrics and ballads by a poet of New England.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 9 '27 250w

Reviewed by K. L. Bates

Boston Transcript p4 N 27 '26 950w

"Thoroughly New England in tone, vigorous, and at times delightfully whimsical, Abbie Farwell Brown is a poet to be reckoned with. Her ballads are generally better than her lyrics. When she writes of the sea, and of ships, and the men who sail them, she is at her best. Her verse has in it the surge and some of the ruggedness of these things; therefore, in part, their beauty also." J. M. March

+ Lit R p4 N 27 '26 200w

BROWN, ABBIE FARWELL. Under the rowan tree. 189p il $1.75 Houghton

26-18093

The title story is a fairy tale about little lame Caterina and the magical things that happened to her under the rowan tree. The other seventeen are stories with and without magic of little children everywhere, Italian, Swiss, English, and American.

"This book of short stories and verses by a well known writer of children's books is distinctly disappointing."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 N 14 '26 350w

"Here are tales of the real fairy gold, charming, imaginative, delicate, and kindly, all of them bound together in an attractive book well worthy of a place beside the best of other days." H: Beston

+ Ind 117:552 N 13 '26 60w

"It is a cycle to be proud of and one that will while away many long hours. The initial story, 'Fritz-and-Franz,' 'The Angel and the Gargoyle,' 'The Bells of Masket' and the 'Yankee Balloon' are its brightest stars."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:323 N 20 '26 70w

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. These twelve; a study in temperament. 278p $2 Century

225.9 Apostles

26-4506

"Dean Brown takes nine of the twelve original Apostles, leaving out the three named in Matthew's list, James the son of Alphaeus, Lebbaeus and Bartholomew, about whom little or nothing is known, and supplying their places with chapters on Barnabas, Paul and Jesus. He studies the character and temperament of each one, choosing some distinguishing characteristic to bring out prominently and make the keynote of his service to Christianity, of his life, of his significance to the present-day world."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:312 My '26

"Merely from the standpoint of fascinating character study it is a book for your permanent library, but it is as well a most useful book if you have any desire to understand types of men and to deal with them on the basis of your understanding." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 63:xxxvii Ap '26 260w

"These studies are exquisitely done, erudite, ripe, full of quotations from olden days and current events. They are like white magic, which evokes the personages you would see from hitherto subjectively empty spaces. They are absorbingly interesting."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 20 '26 380w

J Religion 6:556 S '26 100w

BROWN, C. R.—Continued

"With keen discrimination Dr. Brown presents these men naturally and vividly and without the slightest trace of pedantry. Occasionally he is perhaps a little too discursive, but he is always interesting because he is sane, human, modern and master of his facts." J. A. MacCallum

+ Lit R p5 Mr 27 '26 600w

"The kind of book even freshmen and sophomores might enjoy, which is likely to appeal to the heedless and sophisticated younger generation, which any one will appreciate who is interested in people, in the dramatic and romantic beginnings of the Christian religion, in the significance of religion in the life of today."

+ N Y Times p23 F 21 '26 400w

Pratt p9 summer '26

St Louis 24:235 S '26

Springf'd Republican p6 S 7 '26 150w

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. Where do you live? 148p $1.50 Yale univ. press [7s Oxford univ. press]

252 Sermons

26-8342

A third collection of religious addresses given to the students of Yale and other colleges by the dean of the Yale divinity school.

Booklist 23:5 O '26

"Sons (anywhere) and fathers and mothers (anywhere) can well afford time to drink at this well of sane spiritual insight and vigor of life." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 63:xxiii My '26 130w

"They are short sermons, significant in their insight into the attitude of youth, that cares more for honesty and fair play than ritual. This insight is backed up by Dr. Brown's historical and philosophical reflection."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 8 '26 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p100 S '26

"In this book there is much sound morality, stirring exhortation, happy illustration, lingering epigram, apposite quotation, and here and there, a trumpet note of Old Testament admonition and warning. But as for the Gospel we could wish it had been more emphasized." C. E. Macartney

+ — Lit R p10 Je 5 '26 1050w

Sat R of Lit 3:44 Ag 14 '26 100w

BROWN, CHARLES WILLIAM. My ditty bag. 282p $2 Small

910 Seafaring life. Seamen

25-24255

"An old seaman of the merchant marine 'overhauls his mental ditty bag' and offers his crude but interesting odds and ends of memories of days at sea and ashore. He writes of master mariners of fifty years ago; a real mutiny and shipwreck; shanghaied sailors; President McKinley; Secretary Mellon and Melville Stone; Japan and the Japanese forty years ago and today; and, the Filipinos and prohibition."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 31 '26 250w

"The scope of the memories Captain Brown draws from his 'ditty-bag' is greater than that of many a volume twice as large. He writes tersely and to the point. As a master-mariner should." F. B.

Boston Transcript p4 D 9 '25 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p23 F '26

"Critical readers may find fault with the story on account of its simple tone, a great recommendation in the mind of this reviewer. A book strongly to be recommended."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:484 Ja 9 '26 150w

Wis Lib Bul 22:108 Mr '26

BROWN, EDMUND. Marketing. 503p il $3 Harper

381 Marketing

25-21509

Marketing procedure and practice is here taken up through an analysis of the problems of marketing individual commodities. After a short introduction there are fourteen chapters, each one dealing with a single commodity or a group of related commodities. The remaining twenty-one chapters are classified under the general headings: organized exchanges and future trading; wholesale distribution; retail distribution; marketing policy.

"The book is the best presentation along commodity lines which has come to the writer's attention. The topics are generally well chosen and the treatment is surely sufficiently detailed. Use of descriptive material from a variety of sources perhaps impairs the literary quality of the work. However, when any writer attempts to describe as many trades as are here represented he must perforce rely largely upon such sources. It is an interesting and useful book; and it should meet the requirements of those who favor the commodity approach to the study of marketing." C. E. Griffin

+ Am Econ R 16:114 Mr '26 600w

"The author does not present a complete, well-rounded body of marketing theory and makes no new contribution to the subject. The detailed description and analysis of the marketing procedure of the commodities studied will be of value for reference."

Harvard Business R 4:378 Ap '26 100w

"Taken as a whole, this volume gives a wealth of information on the marketing job and it is the equal of any text I have seen in its method of approach to the subject of marketing." A. T. Kearney

+ Management R 15:127 Ap '26 520w

St Louis 24:52 Mr '26

Sat R of Lit 2:322 N 21 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 22:225 Jl '26

BROWN, FORD K. Life of William Godwin. 387p il $6 Dutton [16s Dent]

B or 92 Godwin, William

26-14560

The book tells in ample detail the life of the English philosophic radical who is remembered chiefly today as the husband of the pioneer feminist Mary Wollstonecraft and father-in-law of the poet Shelley. Many other lives touched Godwin's. The names of Coleridge, Southey, Charles and Mary Lamb, Hazlitt, Hannah More, Crabbe Robinson, Harriet Shelley and others fill these pages and there is a touch of comedy in the account of Godwin's involved and frequently disturbed marital affairs.

Booklist 23:76 N '26

"Mr. Brown's narrative, though not often 'scintillating,' is sound and exceptionally well nourished. There is tragic matter in it comparable to that which distinguishes Thebes and Pelops's line. There is comic matter in it sufficient to occupy a whole school of cynical playwrights. There is philosophy at the heart of it as disputable as Plato's, and on the whole not a whit more absurd. What Mr. Brown thinks of it all I do not quite make out, for his treatment is singularly objective and non-committal." Stuart Sherman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ag 29 '26 1850w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 7 '26 1500w

"It is biography that recreates life, and the very best we have read this year." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p6 S 25 '26 920w

"The book contains little that is new. Unfortunately Mr. Brown's method of quotation is unscholarly; slight alterations in diction and arrangement are made without notice, and the defect is too prevalent for one to suppose that he has had the privilege of using original documents in each case. Exact sources are seldom indicated. There are also inaccuracies in dates, not always a trifling matter in biography. These defects prevent the work's being authoritative.

It does, however, serve the useful purpose of collecting reminiscences of Godwin not unknown but not before assembled." R. A. Preston

+ Nation 123:249 S 15 '26 1450w

"Mr. Brown adds little of importance that is new. That was hardly his aim. Most of the matter has long been available in C. Kegan Paul's two valuable volumes. What this book does is to build up at last a composite portrait; and as such it is so thorough and competent and alive that until, if ever, new material comes to light, it can scarcely be superseded."

+ Nation and Ath 39:46 Ap 10 '26 750w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 48:48 S 1 '26 700w

"Mr. Ford K. Brown here gives us a careful and thorough account of Godwin's life. His book provides a mass of interesting glimpses of Godwin and his friends. Mr. Brown neither extenuates nor sets down in malice. He is a most faithful chronicler, and he enlivens his book with many excellent quotations. But his biography has serious faults. For it is a book almost without feeling. He never seems to get inside Godwin, to feel with him, or to apprehend his point of view with either real sympathy or real aversion."

+ New Statesman 26:812 Ap 10 '26 420w

"He has written a sober, scholarly, thorough and just account of the life of a man who, by all the canons of modern biography, is fair game for the new method of stuffing your subject with contemporary straw and then knocking it about to suit yourself." J. Carter

+ N Y Times p3 Ag 8 '26 2250w

Outlook 144:217 O 13 '26 60w

"Working with admirable patience and industry, Mr. Brown has made an engaging book about a dull philosopher who was once an influence and had friends much brighter than himself."

Sat R 141:574 My 1 '26 600w

"Mr. Brown is, I believe, a newcomer to literary biography; certainly he is a welcome addition. His volume has a few minor inaccuracies, and it is written throughout in a subacid tone which sometimes grated upon the reader. But he has drawn a clear and intelligible picture." H. J. Laski

+ Sat R of Lit 3:191 O 16 '26 690w

"Mr. Brown has given us an exceedingly good life. We should imagine that it will long remain the standard work on Godwin."

+ Spec 136:371 F 27 '26 850w

SpRING'd Republican p7f S 12 '26 1200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p273 Ap 15 '26 2250w

BROWN, GEORGE EUSTACE RIOU GRANT. Burma as I saw it, 1889-1917; with a chapter on recent events. 234p il $5 Stokes [15s Methuen]

915.91 Burma 26-11590

An experience of twenty-seven years as magistrate and revenue officer in Burma has provided the author with ample material for his book. He describes the country, the people, their habits and their laws, and in citing some of the cases brought before him for decision reveals to us the native mind, its superstitions and tabus. With but two exceptions the interesting illustrations are from photographs taken by the author.

Booklist 23:30 O '26

"The major portion of his book covers illuminatingly the broader ranges of modern Burmese life but the author thereafter proceeds to a less interesting discussion of economics, administrative, land and taxation questions. These latter make dry reading for those who are not attentive observers of England's systems and policies of colonial government."

E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p12 Ja 30 '26 200w

"He has a natural liking for unadorned facts, and knows how to impart them without fatiguing either himself or his reader. Moreover, his masculine, racy, and unpretentious style, which enables him to take an anecdote in his stride without fussing, exactly fits the unforced temper of his narrative."

+ Nation and Ath 38:754 F 27 '26 500w

New Statesman 24:684 Mr 13 '26 130w

"He writes about Burma and the Burmese in a most human style, making the people seem as real as if one were accustomed to meeting them every day, and giving graphic pictures of the country, its resources and its chief features and of the manners and customs of the people."

+ N Y Times p18 Ja 31 '26 360w

"The book is valuable chiefly for the interesting picture which it outlines of life as lived by the everyday Burman in the remoter villages."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p151 Mr 4 '26 600w

BROWN, ROLLO WALTER. Dean Briggs. 331p il $3.50 Harper

B or 92 Briggs, Le Baron Russell 26-11231

As professor of English and dean of Harvard university, and as president of Radcliffe college Le Baron Russell Briggs has been known and loved by thousands of students. Many wondered at President Eliot's choice of the young English professor of thirty-five as dean of Harvard but he soon became the best dean the college ever had. In this lovingly drawn picture of his simple, unassuming character and unconventional methods of discipline Mr Brown makes clear the secret of Dean Briggs's widespread influence and the affection in which he was held.

Booklist 22:416 Jl '26

"An engaging and sympathetic study. The book is a lesson in what modern education can become in the hands of a tireless individualist with the courage of his convictions."

+ Bookm 63:720 Ag '26 100w

"Mr. Brown's book is rather a vivid record than a revelation. He had, comparatively speaking, no 'inside information' about Dean Briggs. Was there any? I doubt whether any future biographer will ever be able to draw a curtain disclosing a secondary personality or a suppressed personality at war with the serene soul who served Harvard University." Stuart Sherman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 9 '26 2800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 S '26

Reviewed by Robert Hillyer

Dial 81:73 Jl '26 600w

Ind 116:639 My 29 '26 140w

Reviewed by Fullerton Waldo

Lit R p3 Je 5 '26 1200w

Nation 123:200 S 1 '26 100w

"A book which was written from the heart but which keeps clear of adulation. No doubt Dean Briggs the teacher was responsible for the good taste and the clarity of the exposition and for the simplicity of style, which perfectly fits the subject." P. H. Boynton

+ New Repub 48:51 S 1 '26 820w

"It is not too much to say that Mr. Brown's pages will recreate for thousands of Harvard graduates the figure of the man they always respected, occasionally feared and often loved. And for those who through the misfortune of temporal or special causes never came into contact with Le Baron Russell Briggs he fashions the figure of one of the truly great persons in American educational history." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p6 My 16 '26 2600w

N Y World p4m Je 6 '26 120w

"It may be questioned whether Mr. Brown might not have told his story in somewhat less space. But his book will be read with pleasure by all Harvard men, by university teachers and officers, by parents, and by all who enjoy a record of the career of a lovable man."

BROWN, R. W.—Continued

+ Outlook 144:90 S 15 '26 180w

"Mr. Brown's 'Dean Briggs' must not be regarded as a book of limited appeal. It is the story of a Dean, but it is not the story of an ordinary Dean. It is a book for all who are interested in life or education or the great art of stringing words together. Most of all, it is a book that will bear any amount of re-reading." J. Bakeless

+ Sat R of Lit 2:901 J1 3 '26 850w

"Rollo Walter Brown's 'Dean Briggs' is a trifle bulkier and more diffuse than might be wished, but has the heart of the matter—that is, the heart of the man—in it. . . If Dean Briggs does not know that he is a national figure, this book should help to make him aware of the fact."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 My 10 '26 850w
Wis Lib Bul 22:229 J1 '26

BROWN, WILLIAM HENRY. Textbook of general botany. 484p il $2.96 Ginn
580 Botany [25-7644]

"A very valuable feature of this book is its wealth of illustrations. . . It is devoted solely to the development of the general principles of the science, and the job is thoroughly done in a clear-cut and orderly fashion. . . The treatment is elementary for freshmen in college but would also be suitable for normal school or upper grades in secondary schools." (School Science and Mathematics)—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Will be found superior to many similar books in that it deals more with general principles than specific types, and so covers all localities." K. M.

+ Cath World 121:860 S '25 30w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:22 Ja '26

"There are two outstanding features in Professor Brown's text: first, its universality in the selection and presentation of subject-matter, and second, its excellent illustrations." Raymond Kienholz

+ Science 61:567 My 29 '25 900w

BROWN, WILLIAM HERBERT. Tobacco under the searchlight. 235p $1.75 Standard pub.

613.84 Tobacco habit. Tobacco—Physiological effect 25-25309

"Collection of incidents intended to show the evils of the tobacco habit."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:553 N '26

BROWN, WILLIAM MONTGOMERY. My heresy; the autobiography of an idea. 273p $2 Day

B or 92 26-16410

"The author's trial for heresy at Cleveland in 1924 and his deposition from his rank as bishop in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1925 at New Orleans are recent enough to attract to his story many readers who enjoy religious ideas most when a strong and highly colored light plays upon them. Bishop Brown gives an eager presentation of his life up from an illiterate boy till he became Bishop of Arkansas; then of his meeting with Karl Marx and with Darwin, and his subsequent abandonment of all orthodox ideas both economic and theological."—Outlook

"Here is the book at last, as candid, as sincere, as wantonly mischievous as one could desire, quite enough to make all the orthodox who lack a sense of humor freely perspire. It is a little terror; a bit of palpitating humanity; and I defy any one of his enemies to match it with an account of his own hatching and patching and thatching and catching." W: N. Guthrie

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 O 17 '26 960w

Reviewed by J: H. Holmes
Nation 123:562 D 1 '26 750w

Reviewed by Mary Siegrist
N Y Times p11 Ja 2 '27 1050w

Reviewed by Herbert Asbury
N Y World p8m O 10 '26 1000w

"The portrait presented is vivid—of a lovable personality, stronger perhaps in good will than in wit, and with a naïve but not unforgivable liking for bothering those with whom he differed."

+ Outlook 144:185 O 6 '26 200w

"Most readers who take up Bishop Brown's book are interested in it, we think, because of the human story it contains and not because of any predisposition concerning this theological dogma or that. Bishop Brown unquestionably has a story to tell and the interest of that story is enhanced by the brief biographical sketch with which the publishers preface the book."

+ R of Rs 74:444 O '26 160w

Reviewed by P. E. Osgood
Sat R of Lit 3:151 O 2 '26 1100w

"Bishop William Montgomery Brown has written what to me is the most brilliant and searching book of the year." Leon Whipple
Survey 57:332 D 1 '26 330w

BROWNE, LEWIS. This believing world; a simple account of the great religions of mankind. 347p il $3.50 Macmillan

290 Religions 26-15942

Here is a simple account of the great religions of mankind, an outline of comparative religion showing how the faiths of the world have been evolved and transmitted since primitive times. The eloquence and clarity of the account, the absence of any controversial spirit and the drawings and animated maps with which the author has illustrated the book make it decidedly readable, a true work of popularization.

Booklist 23:108 D '26

Bookm 64:362 N '26 570w

"Dr. Browne has written his narrative with transparent clearness, and sometimes with romantic eloquence. He has taken the difficult and dubious science of comparative religion, compelled the scholars and antiquarians to phrase themselves intelligibly, and brought the entire procession of the world's faiths upon one canvas, illuminated with order and clarity, and vitalized with the happiest selection of items that are of permanent interest and fundamental worth." Will Durant

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 S 12 '26 1450w

"It is a study which has merited all of the high praise bestowed upon it, not only for originality of conception, comprehensiveness and style, but for its reserve and avoidance of controversial contentions." F. P. H.

Boston Transcript p2 O 30 '26 1000w

Cath World 124:425 D '26 720w

"Dr. Browne has respectable learning, and his style is almost melodramatic in the presentment of the tragic and crashing contrasts of human defeat, progress, and victory. He also has a mind that is filled with disillusioned appreciation, and this adds pique and charm." A. C. Dieffenbach

+ Ind 117:562 N 13 '26 550w

"The book is written in the listen-my-children style. But there is strong meat here, nourishment for real people, both mental and spiritual. Simplicity of this kind comes not except through long meditation, through that sort of living with one's own thought, which enables one to tell about it in such a way as to omit nothing of any importance; yet apparently to convey no information of the kind the guide books classify as 'useful,' which means dull. Here is a good writer, a good workman and an excellent artist combined." T: L. Masson

+ Lit R p1 S 11 '26 1750w

Reviewed by Woodbridge Riley
Nation 123:299 S 29 '26 650w

"Like Van Loon's Story of Mankind, This Believing World occupies a picturesque educational borderland—history simplified into pictorial narrative, appealing to the adult by its freshness of presentation and to the child by its consecutive dramatic interest." D. B. W.

+ New Repub 49:230 Ja 12 '27 150w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p3 S 12 '26 1550w

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes
N Y World p4m S 12 '26 520w

"His account is vivid, direct, and free from irrelevant discussions. The reader soon finds that it is a narrative that Dr. Browne has written, and not a volume of theology."

+ R of Rs 74:446 O '26 100w

"Mr. Browne has indeed given us a fine massing and mastery of the myriad facts of the historic faiths. The book is comprehensive, attractive, and authentic. It has verve, too; its crescendo is powerful; its charm of presentation is absolute." P. E. Osgood

+ Sat R of Lit 3:99 S 11 '26 950w

"Of all the adjectives which might be applied to this book the most appropriate is that over-worked one 'readable.' Mr. Browne has a decided gift for story telling and he has made this greatest of all stories as exciting as a novel." J. S. B.

+ Springfield Republican p7f O 3 '26 950w

BROWNELL, HERBERT, and WADE, FRANK BERTRAM. Teaching of science and the science teacher; the relationship of science teaching to education in general, with especial reference to secondary schools and the upper elementary grades. (Century education ser.) 322p il $2 Century

507 Science—Study and teaching 25-19421

The book is written as a text for the teacher-in-training and as a source of suggestions for the science teacher, particularly for those who are beginning their service. One of the authors is engaged in training students in the teaching of science, while the other is head of a science department in a large city high school.

Cleveland Open Shelf p63 My '26

"While the book purports to be written for science teachers, if I were the publishers of it I would advertise it also for all principals of schools, for it gives a supervisor of instruction a standard to which this branch of study should be brought in every institution receiving public funds."

+ Educ R 71:57 Ja '26 560w

"Among the recent books dealing with the teaching of science, that by Brownell and Wade will best serve the new teacher. He will find it replete with helpful suggestions emanating from two experienced teachers, suggestions which, if heeded, will save him many blunders. The book will seem platitudinous to the mature teacher, though he will find in it some new ideas." E. R. Downing

+ — El School J 26:551 Mr '26 280w

Pratt p16 summer '26

St Louis 24:52 Mr '26

"Although this book will be of value to all who require aid in improving their teaching technique, it will be found most useful by new teachers and by teachers in small high schools with meager equipment. An adverse criticism may well be offered regarding Part III. The authors give only seventy-eight pages to this section, of which twenty-two pages are devoted to nature study, nine pages to general science, sixteen pages to biology, fourteen pages to physics, and seventeen pages to chemistry. Obviously, very few constructive suggestions can be offered in such brief discussions." Clifford Holley

+ — School R 34:310 Ap '26 620w

BROWNING, CARL HAMILTON. Bacteriology. (Home univ. lib. of modern knowledge) 256p il $1 Holt [2s 6d Williams & N.]

589.95 Bacteriology 25-15132

Regarding the purpose and scope of his book, the author states in the preface: "Within the limits of this book it has been possible only to give a general outline of the main facts concerning bacteria, to state some specific examples of their action and to whet curiosity regarding the rest." Chapter headings include The methods of investigating bacteria, Bacterial products, Bacteria and disease, Antiseptics.

Booklist 22:146 Ja '26

Reviewed by E. E. S'osson

Bookm 63:69 Mr '26 130w

"He fails to thrill you. But Browning's facts? They are accurate. They are sufficiently detailed. They are selected with judgment." Paul De Kruif

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ja 24 '26 620w

"We think that Prof. Carl Browning has been extraordinarily successful in presenting a general outline of the principal facts concerning bacteria in a simple and concise manner suited to the general reader."

+ Nature 117:79 Ja 16 '26 130w

"Professor Browning's 'Bacteriology' presents a quite matter of fact and straightforward, albeit highly entertaining, account of one of the most recently developed and important departments of biology."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:484 Ja 9 '26 70w

BRUCE, CHARLES GRANVILLE. Twenty years in Borneo. 266p il $4 Stokes [15s Cassell]

919.11 Borneo [25-2477]

The reader shares the author's relish in the recounting of these brighter episodes of official life in the tropics, an experience which began in 1902 when the author went out, an untried youth, to take on the duties of an officer in the armed constabulary of North Borneo.

"Certainly there are phases in primitive life not to be easily treated of in a book, fear of the censor staying the hand, wherefore any book about uncivilized life must be necessarily incomplete. But perhaps such details, which, be it said, are not always of sexual import but sometimes gruesome, sometimes of a sort to incite a chuckle—such details do not matter so very much when all is said and done, for fundamentally the savage bears a close likeness to other men. Mr. Bruce subordinates all that kind of thing and yet interests finely."

C: J. Finger

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 S 5 '26 380w

New Statesman 24:supvi N 8 '24 100w

"There are innumerable anecdotes that range in spirit all the way from the trivial and amusing to the tragic, and there are vividly related scenes and incidents that give the reader a more intimate feeling of knowledge of the country than would hundreds of pages of description. And all of it is written with such zest, such eager interest in every experience, such unflinching response to the humorous side of every situation that can possibly have one that the reader is constantly thinking what a good time this young man must have had."

+ N Y Times p4 Ag 15 '26 350w

"His book is full of good stories well told, and essentially readable, in spite of the affection he has for French words and for occasional cumbersome expressions."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p718 N 13 '24 1000w

BRUSH, KATHARINE. Glitter. 309p $2 Minton, Balch & co.

26-7902

A story of college life. Girls and women like Jock without effort. He usually likes them too, and even when he doesn't he is very nice about it. For instance, tho he had really fallen in love with the glittering Yvonne he kept his promise and invited Molly to the prom. And later at the dance when he found plain little Cecily having a pretty poor time, he danced with her, comforted her, and gave her a lot of advice. From that moment you just know that Cecily will grow ravishing, Yvonne noble, and Jock wise but never disillusioned.

BRUSH, KATHARINE—Continued

"An entertaining novel of real and very appealing young people—which category may well include Jock's amazing mother."
+ Ind 116:306 Mr 13 '26 130w

"If allowance be made for the impossibility of perfection in the task undertaken, she has done well. 'Glitter,' be it said at once, is free from that smartness which taints five out of every six attempts in the field of college stories; hence it can be read with enjoyment even though it leaves the reader unconvinced. And this it does."

+ — N Y Times p3 Mr 7 '26 800w

Reviewed by Joseph Auslander
N Y World p7m Ap 25 '26 180w

BRYAN, GEORGE SANDS. Edison, the man² and his work. 350p il $4 Knopf

B or 92 Edison, Thomas Alva 26-19839

"Beginning with the story of the early years, during which the telegraph operator turned to inventing, Mr. Bryan describes Edison's spectacular successes in connection with the telegraph, the telephone, the electric light, the motion-picture camera and the phonograph, as well as with somewhat outside ventures in the making of Portland cement, magnetic ore-milling, and a whole host of later miscellaneous achievements."—Boston Transcript

"The wizard of Menlo Park stands forth in these pages with new definiteness and intelligibility. The author has naturally depended on material previously published on Edison, yet he has also incorporated much up-to-date information regarding 'the man and his work.'"
+ Boston Transcript p4 N 6 '26 380w

Reviewed by Robert Littell
New Repub 49:47 D 1 '26 1400w

"A well-constructed biography. With little attempt at literary fret-work, Mr. Bryan provides a vivid, compact and readily assimilable account of a life devoted whole-heartedly to invention and mechanical discovery." Halsey Raines

+ N Y Times p3 N 21 '26 1550w

"His 'Edison' is rich in facts understandably set forth, it meets more or less squarely points of debate, it seeks, but not wholly successfully, to show the man as he actually is by other means than listing and explaining his inventions. What is wanted and what this book falls considerably short of being, is a book telling us what Edison is like, a book separating him from his work, if such a thing is possible. Mr. Bryan is content with anecdotes, practically all of them much better than average, but they go but a little distance, if any, beneath the surface." D: F. McCord

+ — N Y World p10m D 5 '26 220w

"There is always a place for such a work as this, if for no other reason, because the reading public does not find it easy to keep up with the remarkable volume and range of Mr. Edison's achievements. Even those who are fairly familiar with the principal Edison inventions will find reference in this book to many devices to which his name has never been associated but in which he had a part in perfecting and making valuable."

+ R of Rs 74:559 N '26 80w

BRYAN, WILLIAM JENNINGS, and BRYAN, MARY ELIZABETH (BAIRD) (MRS WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN). Memoirs of William Jennings Bryan. 560p il $3.75 Winston

B or 92 25-25222

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:291 Ap '26

"Fairness, restraint, a complete understanding of her husband's character and aspirations, as well as the use of material virtually unobtainable by others, render Mrs. Bryan's work eminently readable."

+ Bookm 62:728 F '26 150w

"All in all one will find himself little closer to this great American, as Mr. and Mrs. Bryan tell the story. They have written too much in the spirit that the hero . . . was free from every ordinary blemish of humanity. Such writing is seldom convincing." F. P. H.

— Boston Transcript p4 F 13 '26 950w

"William J. Bryan was a part of the history of his time, and the story of his life contained in this dual effort has some permanent value; but some day it must be better told. It should be told without the egoism of the principal character, or the adulation of his most ardent admirer." A. W. Dunn

+ Int Bk R p244 Mr '26 1400w

Reviewed by D: S. Muzzey
Nation 123:41 JI 14 '26 700w

"While the portions of the book devoted to important affairs, to the campaigns, elections, wars and positions in the Cabinet are unrevealing, being largely gossipy reminiscence and amiable self-justification, a few little details come to light which make Bryan more human, more visible. His own account of his early years is pleasant, at times almost charming." Robert Littell

+ — New Repub 45:361 F 17 '26 1300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:151 Mr '26
St Louis 24:35 F '26

"It is not a satisfactory biography of Bryan, yet it will furnish his biographers with much valuable material—chiefly illumination on the character of his mind. . . . In it is the key that unlocks the man William Jennings Bryan and the woman he took for his wife. The two are unperishably photographed there; but the picture is only for discerning eyes." W: A. White

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:508 Ja 23 '26 580w

BRYANT, JOHN MYRON, and CORRELL, JAMES A. Alternating-current circuits. 412p il $4 McGraw

621.313 Electric currents, Alternating. Electric circuits 25-21727

"Introductory course discussing the theory of alternating-current circuits and giving rigid mathematical derivations of the equations applying to the various types. Applies the principles to polyphase circuits and transmission lines."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:140 Mr '26

BRYANT, MRS LORINDA (MUNSON). Children's book of celebrated towers. 106p il $2.50 Century

729.36 Towers 26-15815

Among these fifty famous towers of the world described in text and picture, there are included cathedral spires of the continent, minarets of India, pagodas of Japan, and pyramids of Egypt.

Booklist 23:86 N '26

"This book about towers fairly reeks of the schoolroom and has far too many generalities and statements of historical facts to be very popular with young readers themselves unless they happen to be needing information for a composition or geographical essay. We wished the author had told more amusing and human facts about some of the towers. The photographs which accompany the text, are excellent in many cases and such fascinating material ought to have produced something more attractive."

— + Sat R of Lit 3:302 N 13 '26 180w
Wis Lib Bul 22:300 N '26

BRYDEN, DEAN. Palistry for pleasure. 201p il $1 Sully

133.6 Palistry 26-7192

The author writes easily and directly the chief rules to be followed in this ever popular pastime.

Boston Transcript p3 Je 26 '26 150w

"The book is chiefly interesting to those wishing to take up palistry for entertainments."

Springf'd Republican p10 S 14 '26 80w

BUCHAN, ANNA (O. DOUGLAS, pseud.). Proper place. 322p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

26-18505

Lady Jane Rutherford is forced to sell the Rutherford estate and to seek more modest quarters elsewhere. With her daughter Nicole and Barbara, her niece, she goes to a little place in Scotland to make a new home, while at the same time the wealthy commoners, kind souls, who have bought Rutherford take up their life in its stately old walls not without trepidation. Nicole does not resent the change as Barbara does. She is on the contrary charmed with the quaint Scottish town and her characterful neighbors. A small boy and a famous explorer become her first friends and remain her captives, bringing generous gifts of humor and romance.

"Mrs. Jackson, who becomes 'county' in a splash of tomato satin, and the gentle Lady Jane and her daughter Nicole are striking and effectively contrasting creations in a company of deftly limned and lovable characters."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 2 '27 90w

"Here O. Douglas's skill in character drawing is at its best. Through a keen knowledge of her people and a pleasant sense of humor, her creations live and have their being in very truth, with all their various idiosyncrasies." F. M. W.

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 15 '26 430w

"A quiet, gentle little story, agreeably told, 'The Proper Place' is perhaps rather too pleasant for the more or less unregenerate reader. Like the heroine's cousin, Barbara Burt, one grows quite 'sick of honest worth,' after having it administered so persistently and in such large doses."

+ — N Y Times p12 D 26 '26 200w

"The story throughout is agreeably restrained, slightly too uneventful, markedly successful in character drawing and, but for the rare instances when the peasant retainers are allowed to burst into speech, is devoid of dialect."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:399 D 4 '26 170w

"Three of the characters are so likeable that the story reads like a chronicle of the doings of personal friends."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p548 Ag 19 '26 210w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Dancing Floor. 286p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

26-16356

Thru his nephew Sir Edward Leithen first met Vernon Milbourne. Sir Edward found himself extraordinarily attracted to this handsome English boy with his air of courteous reticence, and it pleased him when Vernon chose to confide in him the story of his strange, recurring dream. This confidence cemented their friendship. Later Koré Arabin entered their lives. This strange wild girl from the Grecian island of Plakos repelled them both. But when Sir Edward understood that under her mood of desperate abandon lay the horror of the past and the certain tragedy of the future, he offered Koré his friendship and help. The scene shifts to Plakos where in the valley of the Dancing Floor Vernon's dream is at last fulfilled and Koré is rescued from the fearful death.

Booklist 23:175 Ja '27

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ja 2 '27 360w

Boston Transcript p4 O 20 '26 900w

"This is the best adventure story Mr. Buchan has written since 'Green Mantle.' In addition, this book is flavored with a dash of recondite scholarship, a liberal helping of dangerous mysticism, and lashings of romance."

+ Ind 117:480 O 23 '26 80w

"The best piece of romantic adventure this season has produced. The very idea of making a novel out of 'The Golden Bough'—which is what Buchan has done—is the best idea that has turned up in fiction since the war." H: Tetlow

+ Lit R p3 O 30 '26 1250w

"Mr. John Buchan has shown again that he can write a popular story, conventional, icily calculated, and of no significance, in better English than anyone else. With a style fitted for excellent work he writes inanities, tries to make us forget everything that is of consequence, showing now and then a touch of hostility, one would almost imagine, against thought and sincerity." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 39:615 Ag 28 '26 50w

"Here is a book starting out like a competent and conventional character study that turns, after a hundred pages or so, into one of the best adventure stories of the year. Colonel Buchan handles his melodrama with masterful restraint, and the characterization is convincing enough so that the reader is actually interested in knowing what happened to the people he describes."

+ N Y Times p39 D 12 '26 480w

"John Buchan is surely first among those who write tales of escapes and hurried journeys. Oppenheim, Fletcher, Wrenn, and the rest may curdle more blood or perplex more brains, but no one else, we think, gives a reader quite the same sense of hearing high adventure he himself has missed only by bad luck and for a time."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:262 O 30 '26 360w

Spec 137:185 J1 31 '26 520w

"In other hands such a theme might easily become maudlin or dull; but Mr. Buchan shows extraordinary skill in shutting off the sentiment and turning on the action at the right moment, and dull he never is."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p536 Ag 12 '26 380w

Wis Lib Bul 22:298 N '26

BUCHANAN, ANGUS. Sahara. 301p il $7.50 Appleton [21s Murray]

916.61 Sahara—Description and travel. Natural history—Sahara [26-13835]

An experienced field naturalist and explorer writes of a long and painful trek across the Sahara, a journey made in the interest of science and in the love of far places. The excellent illustrations add in large measure to the fascination of the account.

Booklist 23:126 D '26

"It is the vision of the untrammelled which Buchanan possesses that makes Sahara a book which will appeal to all who have not lost or stifled the instinct to explore which 'is in all of us whether the field be far flung or near at hand.'" Marguerite Harrison

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 S 26 '26 1450w

Boston Transcript p4 J1 10 '26 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p120 N '26

BUCHANAN, ANGUS—Continued

Reviewed by F. H. Martens

Lit R p5 J1 24 '26 350w

"Captain Buchanan is no Doughty, but his workaday English only breaks down when he expatiates on the vastness, the mystery, and glamour of the desert, and then he sometimes gets lost in a jungle of tropical prose."

Nation and Ath 39:sup302 Je 12 '26 300w

"While the interest is mainly in natural history, there is a great deal of geographical value in the book. In fact, few volumes give better impressions of the vastness and solitude of the desert. It is a pity that the small map is wholly inadequate for a book of this importance."

+ Nature 118:189 Ag 7 '26 200w

"Captain Angus Buchanan is an eloquent talker. He can also write. He succeeds in conveying to us very well the terror of the dead, decaying desert, across which caravans pass like hurried, silent ghosts."

+ New Statesman 26:supix Mr 13 '26 230w

"It is as entertaining as any travel book done in the conventional mold, and more illuminating and informative than the majority. And its value derives from two independent sources: first of all, from the fact that the author writes with individuality, shrewdness and imagination; and secondly, from the circumstance that his acquaintance with the Sahara was prolonged and thoroughgoing and is the fruit of months of strain and hardship across the barren and hostile sands." S. A. Coblenz

+ N Y Times p10 J1 18 '26 1400w

"The illustrations, with a few exceptions, are really beautiful, and the text, though it has no particular distinction, is very readable."

+ Spec 136:370 F 27 '26 70w

Times [London] Lit Sup p227 Mr 25 '26 900w

BUCHANAN, ROBERT EARLE. General systematic bacteriology: history, nomenclature, groups of bacteria. (Society of Am. bacteriologists. Monographs on systematic bacteriology) 597p $6 Williams & Wilkins

589.95 Bacteriology—Classification. Bacteriology—Nomenclature 25-2278

"A comprehensive work, constituting the best available guide to classification and nomenclature of bacteria. Discusses proposed classifications and codes of nomenclature, but devotes most space to 'Nomenclatural status of names which have been applied to groups of bacteria of higher rank than species.'"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Am J Pub Health 15:1009 N '25 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:18 Ja '26

BUCHHOLZ, HEINRICH EWOLD (EZEKIEL CHEEVER, pseud.). U. S.; a second study in democracy. 400p $2.20 Warwick & York

342.73 United States—Politics and government 26-18368

The author lifts up his voice against the government for its autocratic assumption of authority in such activities as "transportation, agriculture, industry, child-rearing, and what not." He discusses each of these lapses from democracy and suggests a remedy.

"Mr. Buchholz starts out with a grouch, spreads himself out so thin that he comes through in all but a few spots, and ends up with a suggestion for remedying affairs which is only faintly amusing. The book is a handy manual of complaints, unclassified, poorly substantiated and mutually contradictory." H. S. Solow

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 S 19 '26 700w

Reviewed by H. L. Mencken

Nation 123:374 O 13 '26 1100w

"Mr. Buchholz has sought in 'U.S.' to put forth an earnest strong, influential, popular book. He has given veritable evidence of earnestness. He has failed as to power, by a somewhat strained and awkward employment of the gymnastics of verbal force. He will lack influence, and quite likely the wide popular following within range of an adequate effort on his theme, for he will inspire mistrust of the whole by his lapses, not few, into unsupported statement and mixed thinking."

— Sat R of Lit 3:263 O 30 '26 390w

Times [London] Lit Sup p635 S 23 '26 100w

Reviewed by Paul Blanshard

World Tomorrow 9:270 D '26 350w

BUCK, ARTHUR EUGENE. Municipal budgets and budget making. (Monograph ser.) 77p $1.50 National municipal league

352.1 Budget. Municipal finance 25-8935

"A practical handbook on municipal budgets for city officials. Deals with both the principles of budget making and the methods by which these principles may be translated into actual practice in city budgets. Of value to city officials and to students of municipal government."—Wis Lib Bul

"The book maintains the same high standard already set by Mr. Buck in his earlier and more comprehensive treatise on Budget Making."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:652 Ag '25 120w

Booklist 22:277 Ap '26

"In conception and execution the book promises to serve its main purpose which is to set forth the essentials of sound budget procedure for the benefit of both officials and students."

Eng N 94:1029 Je 18 '25 80w

"The book deserves praise for what it contains, and it is not just to criticize it for omission outside its plan." E. A. Bradford

+ N Y Times p20 Je 21 '25 1150w

Wis Lib Bul 22:29 Ja '26

BUCK, CHARLES NEVILLE. Flight to the hills. 348p $2 Doubleday

26-7846

Cynthia is quarreling with Jock. Her intentions are strictly honorable, but his are not. During the quarrel Jock is shot from the street. Cynthia flees from possible complications and loses herself in the hills. A mountaineer finds her, offers her safe convoy to his Kentucky home. From Jock to the mountaineer! With a liberal besprinkling of dialect the story tells how she became worthy of the one and much too good for the other.

"Mr. Buck's novel is to be read for its enchanting dialect rather than for any other notable qualities. Still, there are feuds and shots in the dark and simply no end of unimpeachable morals."

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ap 4 '26 160w

"Mr. Buck's latest story is another one of the bed-time variety that all come under the general title of 'What to do when you can't sleep.'"

— Boston Transcript p5 Mr 13 '26 300w

Reviewed by C. P. Sawyer

Lit R p4 Je 19 '26 150w

"Those whose taste in literature demands little but a 'good story' will find it an excellent substitute for sleepless nights, as publishers are in the habit of saying."

Sat R of Lit 2:726 Ap 17 '26 220w

BUCK, HOWARD SWAZEY. Study in Smollett; chiefly "Peregrine Pickle," with a complete collation of the first and second editions. (Philip Hamilton McMillan memorial publication fund) 216p $3 Yale univ. press, [14s Milford]

B or 92 Smollett, Tobias George 26-3729

The study, a dissertation presented for the degree of Doctor of philosophy in Yale university, is an investigation of some important phases of Smollett's biography that center in his novel, "Peregrine Pickle." Considerable space is given to the controversy about the "Memoirs of a lady of quality," which was incorporated in the novel and which at first added greatly to its popularity, and to Smollett's quarrels with some of the prominent men of his times. The appendix is a collation of the first and second editions of "Peregrine Pickle."

Booklist 22:408 J1 '26

"Of the many questions taken up by Mr. Buck, all appear to have been settled beyond reasonable doubt. In the course of his investigation he has added an unsuspected comedy to the Smollett canon." W. L. Cross

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 My 9 '26 1100w

Reviewed by R. E. Spiller
Lit R p5 Ag 7 '26 130w

Reviewed by Edwin Clark
N Y Times p10 Ag 8 '26 1600w

"Dr. Buck looks at dates through a microscope, and disentangles facts with a toothcomb. This is one of those books which go behind all that has been written before on their subject. Such books are always useful; and this one achieves more generally interesting results than some of its kind."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p299 Ap 22 '26 950w

BUCKINGHAM, BURDETTE ROSS. Research for teachers. 386p $2.20 Silver

371 Teaching. Mental tests. Grading and marking (students) 26-6969

The book does not cover administrative problems but confines itself to those of the classroom. It gives the results of educational research on the teaching and learning processes, with chapters on intelligence and other educational tests, and closes with a discussion of the teacher's opportunity as a research worker.

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 18 '26 450w
Educ R 72:74 S '26 950w

"One of the interesting and charming things about the book is the clearness, directness, and informality of the style in which it is written." C. V. Good

+ School R 34:707 N '26 650w

BUCKLEY, ERIC REDE. Lily of old France, Marie Leckzinska, queen of France, and the court of Louis XV. 216p il $3.50 Appleton [10s 6d Witherby]

B or 92 Marie Leszczyńska, queen consort of Louis XV, king of France. Louis XV, king of France [26-14036]

Marie Leckzinska, a penniless and obscure Polish princess, became thru arrangement of Louis XV's chief minister wife of the king of France. The book does not go deeply into the history of her times but tells a human story of a virtuous, unhappy and somewhat colorless queen.

"Mr. Buckley's portrait of Marie is sympathetic and careful; but it adds no new touches to the Queen or to her time. Much of his material comes from contemporary accounts and original sources, so that the present history is a convenient reference book of compiled data, but not an interpretation."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 7 '26 160w

Boston Transcript p2 O 2 '26 820w

"There is a good deal of extremely interesting material about her. Mr. Buckley has used it judiciously, and has written a book which is easy to read and which yet contains a good deal of historical information."

+ Nation and Ath 39:50 Ap 10 '26 100w

"It might very well be doubted, indeed, whether a full-length biography of her was called for. But Mr. Buckley has thought otherwise, and, if the book which he has made is not a very important contribution to history, it contains a story with a good deal of human interest."

New Statesman 27:175 My 29 '26 570w
Times [London] Lit Sup p265 Ap 8 '26 240w

BUDGE, SIR ERNEST ALFRED THOMPSON WALLIS. Babylonian life and history. 296p il $3.75 Revelil [10s 6d R. T. S.]

935.4 Babylonia [26-1764]

"A rewriting of an earlier book of the same title first published forty years ago. This work takes account of the latest discoveries and gives a bird's-eye view of the land and people of ancient Babylon. Sir E. A. Wallis Budge was himself keeper of the Assyrian and Babylonian antiquities in the British Museum. He thus had access to first-hand sources."—J Religion

Reviewed by A. T. Olmstead

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 My 23 '26 950w

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 17 '26 320w
J Religion 6:440 J1 '26 60w

"A brief and very readable account of the country. As is the author's habit in all his books, he quotes considerably from ancient documents and gives a goodly number of illustrations." G. A. Barton

+ Lit R p10 Ap 24 '26 200w
Spec 136:sup589 Mr 27 '26 380w

BUKHARIN, NICOLAI IVANOVICH. Historical materialism; a system of sociology; auth. tr. from the third Russian ed. 318p $3.25 International pub. [12s 6d Allen & U.]

301 Materialism. Sociology 25-23910

The book is devoted to expounding and developing the Marxian theory of historical materialism, or economic determinism. Bukharin treats this theory as a system of sociology and applies it to the explanation of various social and economic phenomena.

Reviewed by W. B. Bodenhafer

Am J Soc 32:153 J1 '26 180w

"A concise and quite adequate application of the materialistic conception of history to problems of sociology."

+ Bookm 63:365 My '26 100w

"He has performed his task so well that he has become the spokesman of communists all over the world." B. J. Stern

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ja 24 '26 780w

"In these parlous days of economic change and political upheaval Bukharin's book comes as a clarifying analysis of the chaos in which we are enmeshed. 'Historical Materialism' is monistic in its interpretation of life, Marxian in its exposition of society. It is lucid and argumentative, brilliant and dogmatic. As a contribution to sociology it is striking and significant." V. F. Calverton

+ Nation 121:520 N 4 '25 850w

"It is an able book, and its thesis is important. English readers will dislike it for at least two reasons; its theological atmosphere and its assumption that a clearly determined, uncompromising philosophy is necessary and possible. It is undeniably aggravating to be subjected to so much doctrinal controversy. The second difficulty lies not in the form, but in the substance. Books like this would compel us to face the suggestion that there is a fundamental antagonism between those who possess property and those who do not, and our industrial difficulties would tend to be decided with the bitterness that comes from an open class conflict." Kingsley Martin

+ Nation and Ath 39:280 Je 12 '26 1450w

"There are numerous corollaries which this volume raises to new significance, and the student who thinks he knows his Marxian doctrine will do well to allow Bukharin to bring him up to date. Unlike most books of its kind, 'Historical Materialism' is written in a style which is rhythmic and highly pleasing even in translation." E: C. Lindeman

BUKHARIN, N. I.—Continued

+ Sat R of Lit 3:89 S 4 '26 380w

BULLETT, GERALD WILLIAM. Baker's cart, and other tales. 301p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Lane]

[26-7451]

Thirteen unusual and well told stories, beginning with a wistful tale of a little child and closing with a gruesome episode on the battlefield. Contents: The baker's cart; Simpson's funeral; The bending sickle; Attitudes; Mrs Pusey's chickens; The renewal of youth; Summers end; Last days of Binnacle; Three Sundays; The sunflowers; Queer's rival; The dark house; Prentice.

"'The Baker's Cart' is not an important volume, but it is a distinctive one. There is little here to nourish you, but there is a great deal to refresh." L: Kronenberger

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 J1 27 '26 460w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 19 '26 280w

Ind 116:696 Je 12 '26 70w

"Bullett is a firm believer in bringing down the curtain immediately after he has sprung his climax; and, since he is not content to offer merely 'slices of life,' his climaxes are sharply defined. In short, he tells a story and he tells it well." W. K. Bradley

+ Int Bk R p487 J1 '26 200w

"In this baker's dozen of short stories Mr. Gerald Bullett has come so near life, or rather grey consciousness . . . that when we have gobbled, to the last crumb, the slight contents of his bread van, we are left with a sharper appetite. Without the emphatic artifice caused by selection, he shows us suddenly in his characters what William James called 'the stream of consciousness.' If he appears to deal with nuances, it is because the ordinary mental phenomena have been obscured by familiarity or have not been regarded as suitable matter for art."

Nation and Ath 38:66 O 10 '25 300w

"Mr. Bullett shows a sensitive and venturesome fancy, insight into emotional significances and a keen ironic sense. It is a pity he should ever be satisfied with mere smartness and pas-sional shoddy. But the high points in the total score carry the average very much above the usual run of short stories."

+ New Repub 47:263 J1 21 '26 130w

"The Baker's Cart contains a baker's dozen of stories, all of them interesting and some very good. Mr. Bullett has many gifts: style, wit, a keen eye for plot and situation. But he seems to work too much from outside; he attributes to his characters a fine sensibility, but it is his own sensibility; it is not inbred in them." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:606 S 12 '25 420w

"The reader of taste who neglects this collection is going to miss some fascinating stories and excellent craft. They are arresting, provocative, camelolike, brittle accounts of hurt sensibilities, odd characters and psychic adventures that contain many a dream of life bruising its glamour in the conflict with realities."

+ N Y Times p8 My 23 '26 750w

"Mr. Bullett's stories are quiet, simple and charming commentaries on life; they are also self-sufficient short stories." H. S.

+ N Y World p5m My 23 '26 250w

"Remarkable short stories. Mr. Bullett's stories seem to be born each of an irresistible impulse to give form to an idea or emotion and he has a quite peculiar gift of heightening the significance of his material by exhibiting it not directly but as mirrored in some ingenuous, imaginative mind."

+ Sat R 140:291 S 12 '25 80w

"With Mr. Bullett, as with how very few others, we are clear of that suggestion of the showman, the conjurer or the juggler which hangs at times about the work of many masters of the short story, even Maupassant having it rather often, while O. Henry has it habitually. Here is a writer who will scarcely ever deal with a subject which has not intimately touched him, but who, if in dealing with it he finds it incapable of being reduced to any of the accepted shapes of the short story, will be loyal to the subject rather than to the presumed requirements of the form. If anyone likes to say that some of Mr. Bullett's successes are not exactly short stories, let him. They are at any rate, literature, and the squabble about labels is irrelevant."

+ Sat R 140:314 S 19 '25 1000w

Sat R of Lit 2:940 J1 17 '26 280w

"Each of his stories seems to be born of some much more urgent impulse; and though they are not all equally successful they all have the stamp of personality that distinguishes art from craft. It is in the fantasies that we may observe what is at present perhaps the chief obstacle to the full development of his gift. He has yet to break away from a certain timidity in the use of words. Deliberation in writing is rare enough to draw attention to itself, but it only ensures, after all, the negative virtues."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p563 S 3 '25 500w

BULLITT, WILLIAM CHRISTIAN. It's not done. 374p $2 Harcourt [7s 6d Brentano's]

26-7440

John is an aristocrat, cultured, snobbish. Since Nina has yielded to him, he cannot marry her; the men of his family do not make wives of their mistresses. He marries Mildred, totally different product of a similar heritage, but their married relation is a failure; he cannot make a mistress of his wife. As the years go on he is tempted to experiment, but remains technically faithful. Their only child dies. Nina re-enters the story and Mildred takes a lover. The situation has reached the inevitable impasse. A depressing but sincere and well written study of marriage and sex relations.

"No one, I think, will mention literary value in the list of merits attributed to 'It's Not Done,' but there are two distinctions which must be granted it by acclaim; it is a triumph of audacity, and it is, in its own way, a tour de force." Emily Clark

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ap 18 '26 1050w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p3 My 15 '26 1300w

"In only one way is this novel unconvincing. The description of society, of the men and the clubs and the dinners smacks of something never quite known on land or sea. Emotionally, humanly, the book is as sound as a dollar. In construction and sustained vigor it is a cumulative and powerful document. Judging by this novel, one may indeed look forward with confidence to fine creative work from his hand."

+ Ind 116:426 Ap 10 '26 280w

"The novel has a few vivid moments and graphic descriptions, and some of its minor characters are well done; but, unfortunately, John Corsey, its protagonist, is a weakling and a bore. He is not, in truth, a decent human being, much less the gentleman he is supposed to represent." L. M. F.

+ Int Bk R p391 My '26 420w

"It is too clever to escape dislike; too well done, too much beneath the skin. Mr. Bullitt has built his novel on conversations, thus giving it fluidity and ease, where he might have encumbered it with the minutely observed phenomena of 'atmosphere.' There is little furniture, little of the weight of over-furnishing a book about a place, and if at times the effect is jerky and reportorial—short sentences, the deformation of form to realize a more plastic technique, scenes suggested rather than described—the observation is discriminating and humorous." F. B. Biddle

+ — Lit R p9 Ap 10 '26 400w

"His dramatic use of conversation is excellent; at least two of the scenes between Corsey and his wife are memorable and poignant; he has more sophistication than most, but not enough to make an artist. It remains a journalist's novel." M. E.

+ — New Repub 47:121 Je 16 '26 250w

"He writes with ability, sometimes even with brilliance; it is obvious that his mind entertains fine sympathies and noble ideas; his novel is not a very good novel." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 28:312 D 18 '26 280w

"Mr. Bullitt has written acutely of an interesting moral problem. It is quite possible that the very fact of his hero's oversexed ratiocinations is intended merely as a symptom of the evil he discusses. The general public, however, will be inclined to wish that the book had a sharper focus and a less propagandist tone."

+ — N Y Times p8 Ap 11 '26 1300w

Outlook 143:257 Je 16 '26 150w

"Unusual talent is necessary to write a book that is so good at the same time that it is so bad. Mr. Bullitt tumbles into every pitfall ever laid for the unwary novelist, but he goes sprawling with such fine abandon, leaps up so blithely, and rushes on so obviously unhurt that the spectacle becomes rather magnificent." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:754 My 1 '26 850w

"Mr. Bullitt handles a difficult theme in an adroit manner, crowds his stage with sharply delineated characters, carries his action by pungent dialog and, in short, does a workmanlike job."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f Ap 18 '26 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p937 D 16 '26 220w

BULLOCK, SHAN F. The Loughsiders. 290p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Harrap]

The story, set in the north of Ireland among Ulster Protestants, is chiefly concerned with the fortunes of the Nixons, a well-to-do family of farmers, and their neighbor Richard Jebb, a canny and knowledgeable bachelor, whose friendly interference in their affairs is redoubled when Henry Nixon dies and the farm begins to run down. Jebb's kindness sometimes appears to verge on self-interest, but in looking out for himself he also serves his neighbors' interests, finishing the good work by marrying the widow Nixon. The book is distinguished as a character study of this simple, yet crafty man, and for the rich and mellow talk that fills its pages.

"It is better than most of the plain, honest books, but still it belongs with them. The only distinction it has is in the dialogue and in an occasional description which achieves marvelous effects by using with everyday words those of stranger connotation. The story is well handled, beautifully smooth, and stays in the background along with style and method."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 Jl 27 '26 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 D '26

"Mr. Bullock may never have left Ireland, for all we know, but his book has the air of being written at a sentimental distance. He has made his Loughside people naively picturesque—at the price of their lives. There is too much kindness, too beautiful a spirit here. To make his people live, the author must show us their vices." Dawn Powell

+ — Lit R p5 F 6 '26 480w

"It is not colorless, and the rapture of nature is too subtly interwoven with every incident for drabness to overtake it. But the hues are reduced by an almost desperate sobriety in presentment. The people who live and move through its pages have their passions under a rigid control that saves them from the tragedy so often associated with peasant life. But one cannot help feeling that the Ulsterman, as presented by Mr. Bullock, pays a rather heavy price for having his feet so firmly set upon the ground."

+ — N Y Times p10 D 6 '25 800w

"If the novel is redundant and dull in spots and lacking contrast, that is partly because the life presented is itself repetitious. The people live and think with almost primitive undifferentiation. Despite this, it is curious how much more humor—indicating a certain mental liveliness—they show than do the country people of the United States, at least in novels."

+ — N Y World p7m Ja 10 '26 280w

"The Loughsiders' is saved from unimportance by undertones of warm humanity and acute understanding, and from mediocrity by its apt delineation of character and its frequent mastery of idiom."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:515 Ja 23 '26 530w

"It is a tale of small things, and tends to be photographic in its faithfulness to real life. But the dialogue is so natural and the characters such good company the narrative does not become wearisome."

Times [London] Lit Sup p632 O 9 '25 150w

BUMPUS, THOMAS FRANCIS. Cathedrals and churches of Italy. 400p il $7.50 Dodd [31s 6d Laurie]

726 Church architecture. Architecture—Italy 26-27428

Bumpus's "Cathedrals and churches" used to be in three volumes. The present edition is compressed into one volume. There are seventy-nine illustrations, eight of which are in color.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 O 17 '26 100w

"The present handsome edition is finely printed and bound, and illustrated with excellent photographs of some of the most interesting churches in Italy from Trent to Otranto. It is a pity that the illustrations also include reproductions in colour of some bad paintings of well-known Italian architectural subjects, and it is to be hoped that future editions will not be disfigured with them."

+ — Nation and Ath 39:106 Ap 24 '26 400w

"The greater part of it might as easily have been written by any Englishman interested in ecclesiastical architecture who happened to have visited the places he described. Anything deeper than description and personal impressions he rarely attempted; his books are in the nature of rambles with architecture, and they flow on inconsequently without any particular objective and without greatly enlightening the reader."

+ — New Statesman 27:392 Jl 17 '26 400w

"For students of architecture this exhaustive study of Italian churches and cathedrals will be interesting and valuable."

+ — N Y Times p22 N 28 '26 180w

"Rather an out-size for the pocket (it weighs 2½ lbs.), the book is indispensable for the study of any person who seeks an informed interpretation of the meaning and the beauty of Italian Church architecture. It is gloriously illustrated."

+ Spec 137:354 S 4 '26 50w

"As a work of reference this book is valuable, but it may prove disappointing to those who value substance only for its spirit, loving, for instance, the stone of a cathedral floor not because it is stone but because of the magic interplay of light and shadow upon it."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Ap 8 '26 350w

BUNIN, IVAN ALEKSIEEVICH. Mitya's love; tr. from the French by Madeline Boyd; with an introd. by Ernest Boyd. 212p $2.50 Holt

26-18389

The story of the love of seventeen-year-old Mitya for Katya is told with beautiful simplicity and a tender understanding of the torments and ecstasies of first love. Mitya and Katya are Russian but their story is universal and as old as time.

BUNIN, IVAN A.—Continued

Reviewed by Alexander Kaun
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 D 26
'26 850w

Boston Transcript p5 D 15 '26 200w

"The story would be banal if it were not told in a convincing sequence, if mood did not follow mood with increasing intensity, if the obsession did not grow logically and inevitably toward its tragic ending. The translation is rather more than competent; one is pleasantly unconscious of the fact that one is reading a translation."

+ — Ind 117:681 D 11 '26 100w

"There is more real psychology in this short novel, for all the simplicity of its terms, than in the larger, more pretentious tomes which reek of the laboratory. This does not mean that Ivan Bunin, who is already known to the English-reading public by his 'Gentleman from San Francisco,' shirks anything in his theme of adolescence and first love; it does mean that he is a consummate artist and can describe intimate emotions frankly yet without arousing our disgust." J: Cournois

+ Lit R p2 N 20 '26 620w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
+ Nation 123:sup612 D 1 '26 480w

"In the form of the French 'nouvelle' this little gem combines exquisitely-cut symmetry with flawless depth of substance. Madelaine Boyd is to be congratulated on the care which has prevented any appreciable dimming of its lustre in translation." D. B. W.

+ New Repub 49:202 Ja 5 '27 80w

"Intense and purely lyrical study of young love... The outstanding quality of the tale is its universality, a lyricism uncluttered with local reference and put in terms of rare beauty."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:334 N 27 '26 280w

BURDETT, OSBERT. William Blake. (English men of letters; new ser.) 193p $1.25 (5s) Macmillan

B or 92 Blake, William 26-18493

This volume in the English men of letters series tells the strange story of Blake's life, showing the nature of the man and his works and their relation to each other.

"Mr. Burdett's study will be found by most people to take up a position, for the first time in the history of Blake's reputation, free from prejudice and passion and admirably just in all essentials. It is certainly an advance in Mr. Burdett's critical powers, and is, with the possible exception of Mr. Nicholson's 'Swinburne,' the best volume that has yet appeared in the new series of 'English Men of Letters.'" Herbert Read

+ Nation and Ath 40:272 N 20 '26 1250w

"The life of Blake by Osbert Burdett is a clear and pleasant retelling of the known facts about the passage of Blake through this world, though interspersed with rather irritating propaganda for Classicism." F. S. Damon

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:358 D 4 '26 300w

"Mr. Burdett is temperate; his criticism is unusually well-balanced."

+ Spec 137:376 N 27 '26 130w

"Mr. Burdett is more illuminating in his treatment of Blake's early days, of the influences which formed and launched him, than in the analysis of the crystallized and complex conditions of his mature inspiration."

Times [London] Lit Sup p791 N 11 '26
1450w

BURGESS, ERNEST WATSON, ed. Urban community. (Univ. of Chicago studies in urban sociology) 268p $2 Univ. of Chicago press
352 Cities and towns 26-19158

Papers read at meetings of the American sociological society during 1925 form the contents of the volume. In them "the attempt is made to present not only from a fundamental point of view, but also from different angles, the present findings of research on the city. In this way perhaps as well as in any other way, are exhibited whatever practical bearings theoretical studies have upon the practical problems of city life." (Preface)

"It will be a most helpful text for teachers of urban sociology and community organization, and will admirably aid all students of these subjects, as well as those interested in urban geography."

+ J Geol 34:adv O '26 240w

"To persons concerned with city planning this volume will be particularly valuable." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p15 D 19 '26 100w

BURKE, THOMAS. East of Mansion house. 270p $2 Doran

26-12320

"Thomas Burke's new book, 'East of Mansion House' contains one dozen short stories, unrelated except that they deal with strange, humble and bewildered human beings who live in Limehouse, Clutterfield, Stewpony, Pennyfields, Stepney and other districts that lie, as the title suggests, east of the centre of the 'City.'"—N Y World

Booklist 23:78 N '26

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 18
'26 150w

"It needs no specially endowed artists to write of happiness, but it needs the seeing eye, the understanding spirit, and a pen dipped in a magic inkwell to picture the tense blacks, the glistening whites, and all the violent colors of this life 'east of Mansion House.' It is significant that Mr. Burke's interest for us increases with each of his volumes." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 23 '26 1200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p109 S '26

Dial 82:73 Ja '27 60w

"The poetry of his style is a little forced, the love a little shoddy, the cruelty more sadistic than before. For all that, he is a man of real parts and one who can write circles around many more respectably classic authors. It may be that familiarity is breeding—not contempt—but a slight disillusion, for I sense in this volume something unpleasant and unsound, something not quite in good health, something twisted almost to the point of perversion."

— + Ind 117:248 Ag 28 '26 170w

"Ever since 'Limehouse Nights' introduced to the reading public a new and interesting author, Thomas Burke has been gaining steadily in the esteem of intelligent American readers, and his new volume, 'East of Mansion House,' will undoubtedly serve to extend his audience." J. L. Ford

+ Int Bk R p640 S '26 880w

"Contrast and color, love and hate, sordidness and those unexpected touches of poetry which sometimes transform slime, as moonlight a mud puddle, make notable this volume by the author of 'Limehouse Nights.'" L. M. Field

+ Lit R p2 Jl 10 '26 550w

"The final impression is that Mr. Burke's vein of inspiration has been pretty completely worked out and that the cost of production in effort is disproportionately high."

— + New Repub 47:263 Jl 21 '26 100w

"Some of the dozen stories fall below the standard of Mr. Burke's 'Limehouse Nights.' At his best he is adept at uncovering with reticent, concluding sentences, an emotional turmoil which his skillful evocations nobtrusively have prepared. At his worst he is guilty of strained, over-reaching language and of forced, sentimentalized effects. 'East of Mansion House,' on the whole is romance vitalized with authentic energy." J: W. Crawford

+ — N Y Times p5 Je 20 '26 1250w

"Burke is always revealing in his approach to abnormals. But his observation is always from the outside and he rarely gives his tales a pathological twist. He is a story-teller, not a diagnostician." Harry Hansen

N Y World p4m Je 20 '26 350w

"Five of the 12 stories are not nearly so good as the others. Perhaps the least satisfactory is 'White Wings,' a tale of servile devotion, but with an unexpected ending that a grammar school student would laugh at. 'The Pash' is another with an absurdly theatrical climax. 'The Purse,' 'The Tablets of the House of Li' and 'Dow' while better than the two just mentioned are mediocre in plot, action and characters. The book is a mixture of good and not so good."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7f S 5 '26 300w

BURKE, THOMAS. Sun in splendour. 329p $2.50
Doran

26-17766

Mr Scollard, proprietor of The Sun in splendour, a pub in the London slums, is a music loving man whose son Chris shows promise of becoming a musician. The promise fails of fulfillment, however, and when the book closes Chris has won his first success not as a composer of classics, but as the writer of popular songs. The story of little Connie, also a child of the slums, parallels that of Christopher with very few intersecting lines. A love affair between them is predicted but does not come off. The environment of the story is inescapably real, as also are the characters, particularly the thwarted family group at The sun in splendour.

Boston Transcript p7 N 10 '26 480w

"It is good to get hold of a mellow, human novel again, in these days of so many brittle episodic stories of straw-stuffed flapperdom. This book of Mr. Burke's is arresting as well as absorbing." H: A. Phillips

+ Lit R p4 O 30 '26 850w

"Considered either from the point of view of episodic development, or of character development, this is a thrilling book. It is rich in human values, varied in its background and exciting in movement. It is the kind of novel which may serve as a meeting ground for the average reader of fiction who seeks flickering successions of events and for that rare reader who wants new glimpses of reality." H. S.

+ N Y World p10m O 31 '26 280w

"In 'The Sun in Splendour' he has attempted too much; he has flown too high. He has sought to portray a young musician with 'a talent—and a half,' and he has not succeeded." Montgomery Beligon

— Sat R of Lit 3:272 N 6 '26 700w

BURLINGAME, ROGER. Susan Shane; a story of success. 411p $2 Scribner

As a very young girl Susan had already so firmly established the idea of financial success for herself that she begrudged staying home from school to nurse a small brother, and later refused the money and care that might have cured her consumptive mother. The struggle to put David out of her life was a long and bitter one, but given a will that could thus early crush inconvenient sentiment, combined with shrewd business talent, the end was certain. Susan Shane is the portrait of a woman who got what she went out for, and did not, in time, regret what she had missed.

Bookm 64:222 O '26 60w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 2 '27 80w

"Mr. Burlingame has given us a fine bit of reading, but he has not given us a great book. His characters, with the exception of Susan, are but puppets in Susan's game, and they are deserving of far better fate. He makes Susan's rise to success so sure and smooth that it verges on the unreal." L. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ag 28 '26 580w

Ind 117:624 N 27 '26 90w

Reviewed by F. A. Goell

Int Bk R p712 O '26 420w

Reviewed by L. M. Field

Lit R p3 Ag 21 '26 480w

"Every phase of Susan Shane's rise is presented with a vivid sense of character, action and event that is a fine achievement in literary mechanics. Where Mr. Burlingame is yet to advance is in the sphere of texture and content. 'Susan Shane' is a little hard, a little arid, a little too mechanical to be a really first-class novel." J: Carter

— + N Y Times p6 Ag 15 '26 1150w

Reviewed by C. H. Gaines

No Am 223:723 D '26 520w

"The author has painstakingly developed a vivid, if unsympathetic, personality. The steps in her career have a mechanical sureness. Susan herself is a humorless exponent of efficiency."

Outlook 144:155 S 29 '26 300w

Springf'd Republican p7f S 26 '26 250w

BURNHAM, MRS CLARA LOUISE (ROOT). Tobey's first case. 236p $2 Houghton

26-15574

Tobey was a young, untried reporter with a leaning toward murder cases and a determination to succeed. Her first case brought her as sleuth into the Adair household to solve the mystery of the murder of Douglas Adair, father of Colin and Duncan. And solve it she did to the manifest gratitude of the sons, especially Colin.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 2 '27 130w

"It is a very pleasant tale and fairly free from blood spots. We cannot understand how people can be so calm on these occasions, but it is a recognized tradition of detective stories that they should be. It keeps them from being too exciting."

Boston Transcript p4 O 20 '26 280w

Ind 117:362 S 25 '26 50w

"It will certainly find many readers of the less exacting type."

Sat R of Lit 3:400 D 4 '26 110w

BURNS, CECIL DELISLE. Philosophy of labour. 126p $1.40 Oxford [3s 6d Allen & U.]

331.01 Labor and laboring classes. Work [26-5401]

"He is the self-appointed interpreter of those who seldom think and who, when they talk, talk incoherently. . . . But can we divide the world like this into workers and thinkers, and discover a different outlook for the worker? Mr. Burns claims that we can, and finds his difference mainly in a different attitude to the importance of work, in a clearer realization of the dignity, necessity, and unity of manual labour. Having then established his social dichotomy, Mr. Burns proceeds to sketch the workers' Utopia."—Nation and Ath

"Whether or not one agrees with all of his dicta, Dr. Burns has given us a stimulating book." C. H.

Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '26 800w

Nation and Ath 33:444 D 19 '25 400w

"Simplicity of style, clarity of thought and directness of approach are natural modes of expression for this thinker, as those of us know who have followed his previous work; the unexpected element in this essay is, however, a warmth of feeling and enthusiasm for this thesis. The prophetic qualities of this volume will appeal, not only to labor leaders and industrialists, but to all who look forward hopefully to a society more civilized, more interesting and more varied than the present." E. C. Lindeman

+ New Repub 48:22 Ag 25 '26 1200w

"This is a thoughtful and careful piece of work by an author who has already produced several original studies of social and economic

BURNS, CECIL DELISLE—Continued
subjects and who writes with persuasiveness and sincerity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p660 O 8 '25
450w

BURNS, WALTER NOBLE. Saga of Billy the kid. 322p $2.50 Doubleday

B or 92 Bonney, William H. (Billy the kid).
Brigands and robbers 26-7890

Against the background of bloody feud in the frontier days of New Mexican history the author gives an account of the short and turbulent life of this youthful outlaw who counted
a man killed for each of his twenty-one years, and tells the parallel story of the sheriff who tracked and killed him, and who in turn, met his death in the same violent fashion. Living persons who knew the Kid or witnessed the scenes of violence recorded contribute to the story.

Booklist 22:416 J1 '26

Reviewed by Edmund Pearson

Bookm 63:488 Je '26 50w

"Mr. Burns does his job with a fine swagger peculiar to himself; he has a consummate mastery of dialogue in the vernacular; he engages the whole passionate attention of the reader.
So he deserves well of the public with a taste for this kind of thing, the more because he propounds no sociological or pietistic views."

C: J. Finger

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Mr
21 '26 1150w

Reviewed by E. H. Shaffer

Int Bk R p461 Je '26 300w

"A most fascinating, brilliant tale of the life of William Bonney, the famous 'Billy the Kid.'" C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p7 My 15 '26 850w

"Mr. Burns wisely neglects to give definite data for a history that, by its very nature, cannot be positively authenticated; and if he occasionally verges on melodramatic tears, his work nevertheless constantly impresses one with its relative aloofness and its lucid sincerity." R. F. Dibble

+ Nation 123:40 J1 14 '26 450w

"Mr. Burns has gone directly to the living tradition. As a journalist of the best Chicago school, the old Interoccean, he has used the tools of his trade. The book is a story in the journalist's sense. A novelist would treat Billy the Kid as a victim of society. Not so the journalist.
To him the Kid remains merely the central figure in a big story, the hero of innumerable exploits to which death gives invariably the last touch of the pathetic or the grotesque." R.
M. Lovett

New Repub 46:202 Ap 7 '26 1150w

"Mr. Burns apparently has gone over all the evidence, and he has written an exciting biography. So far as the facts go, those familiar with the data on the Kid's life will say the story is accurate in the main. Where the evidence conflicts, Mr. Burns gives both sides and indicates his preference. With the principal events of the Kid's life, however, Mr. Burns deals in straightforward fashion, and the narrative is a stirring one." Stanley Walker

+ N Y Times p10 Mr 7 '26 2250w

Reviewed by E. J. Young

N Y World p7m Mr 7 '26 1000w

Outlook 142:571 Ap 14 '26 220w

Pratt p35 autumn '26

St Louis 24:253 S '26

Sat R 142:816 D 25 '26 170w

"Mr. Burns has taken upon himself the task that 'somebody owes to posterity'; and he has performed it without bias, cynicism or hero worship, and with an admirable sense both of drama and proportion."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p710 O 21 '26
1000w

BURR, MRS ANNA ROBESON (BROWN).
West of the moon. 359p $2.50 Duffield
26-19021

Peggy Lake had never forgotten Stephen
Curt, the friend of her father and mother and her own loved playmate. He disappeared suddenly, without trace, thereby causing hurt to his friends and grieving the child sorely. Peggy grew up, and having profited greatly from a manuscript of Stephen's entrusted to her, determined to find him and render an account.
A few veiled references in an old notebook are her only guides to his possible whereabouts, and armed with these she proceeds to the continent on her high-hearted quest. The book is the semi-detective story of her search and its result.

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p29 D 5
'26 750w

"Entirely apart from the moralities and mortalities of the story, is the sheer fascination of the tale itself. You admire all its intricate fantasies. It is absolutely new and different, yet without the unpleasantness one finds in a frenzied attempt at difference." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 15 '26 500w

"The author creates a sustained atmosphere which prevents her plot from seeming either melodramatic or improbable. The book is written from a sophisticated viewpoint, with a hint of symbolism, and is a welcome escape from the too plausible realities of every day."

E. H. W.

+ New Repub 49:202 Ja 5 '27 150w

"She manages to combine with her essential love story a tale of mystery and intrigue, the narrative interest of an unusual quest and the color and glamour of high adventure. She does this, moreover, with a charm of style, an ease of ready simile and an urbanity of manner which lift her novel out of the general run."

+ N Y Times p9 Ja 9 '27 420w

BURT, CYRIL LODOWIC. Young delinquent.
(Sub-normal school-child) 619p il $5 Appleton
[17s 6d Univ. of London press]

136.76 Juvenile delinquency. Psychology,
Pathological 25-24857

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"While the writer has written in a popular rather than a technical style he has consistently maintained a scientific point of view and restraint in the handling of his subject. For the scientific reader copious footnotes supply a wealth of technical data and materials. . . This carefully written and well organized book should be of great value to all workers with children, delinquent or otherwise." E. N. Ferriss

+ Am J Psychol 37:611 O '26 500w

Reviewed by E. W. Burgess

Am J Soc 32:315 S '26 480w

Booklist 22:230 Mr '26

Reviewed by Joseph Collins

Bookm 63:653 Ag '26 120w

"There are few books on the young delinquent which possess the extraordinary quality of being both comprehensive and exhaustive. The problem has so many angles and is so vast that more than one viewpoint is needed to reach to its understanding. Cyril Burt's book has the advantage of touching all these points. It is excellent because it is undogmatic." Dr. L.
Grimberg

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 O
24 '26 650w

Reviewed by Clara Schmitt

El School J 27:229 N '26 1300w

"Although written in an easy style, the book is none the less the presentation of a piece of scientific research, and its findings have the value which scientific analysis alone can bestow." Beatrice Edyell

+ Int J Ethics 36:424 J1 '26 2350w

"The Young Delinquent" should receive a wide attention in this country. It is doubtless less 'advanced' in viewpoint or technique for America than for Great Britain, and the author's use of instinct would be questioned by many American psychologists, but in breadth of understanding and in sympathetic and skilled approach it represents an important contribution to its subject." Lorine Pruette

+ Lit R p2 Mr 13 '26 1100w

Reviewed by W. D. Lane

Nation 122:456 Ap 21 '26 720w

"Prof. Burt's practical advice is based upon an exact and scientific study of data collected by himself in the course of his work in connexion with the schools of the London County Council, and he brings to bear upon the treatment of his problems a breadth of outlook very rare in the previous studies of the etiology of crime." Morris Ginsberg

+ Nature 117:76 Ja 16 '26 1250w

N Y Times p26 F 7 '26 320w

St Louis 24:51 Mr '26

"The volume is a distinct contribution to both psychology and sociology. It should prove helpful and suggestive to teachers, social workers, ministers, and parents." A. J. Brumbaugh

+ School R 34:397 My '26 460w

"On the whole this book is the most significant work in delinquency that has appeared in England. It is careful, complete and thoroughly humanistic. The point of view of the child is stressed and much of it is written with charm and insight. We might wish that the author was entirely free of the terminology and attitude of the penal court." Miriam Van Waters

+ — Survey 56:104 Ap 15 '26 950w

Wis Lib Bul 22:169 My '26

BUTLER, CASPAR. Newer dispensation. 280p $2 Newer dispensation pub. co., Kokomo, Ind.

209 Religion

26-14691

From the point of view that religion conforms to the universal law of progress from one definitely marked epoch to another, the author makes a study of two such epochs and visions a third. Part I contains a résumé of Jewish history and the religious contributions of Judaism. Part II surveys the life and teachings of Jesus and the progress of other religious movements during the Christian era. Part III describes the Newer dispensation of religious thought, the epoch the world is now entering.

"A vital book, by a forward-looking mind. More careful proof reading would have improved it, but the importance of the subject-matter raises it above the plane of such considerations."

+ — Christian Register S 23 '26 170w

J Religion 6:549 S '26 30w

Times [London] Lit Sup p583 S 2 '26 80w

"Caspar Butler has studied his subject. In his book he gives a thoughtful discussion of the progress of Christianity, prefaced by an extended historical setting. His discussion gains interest from apt comparisons of one religion with another, of the scientific and religious aspects of societies, of eras and civilizations. Caspar Butler writes with dignity but with earnest simplicity. His book is a finished piece of work, a sincere consideration of problems which have been timely for several hundred years. It deserves sincere readers, and it will have them." William Allen White in Emporia (Kan.) Gazette

BUTLER, WILLIAM FRANCIS THOMAS. Gleanings from Irish history. 335p $4.50 (12s 6d) Longmans

941.5 Ireland—History

25-25300

From sources since destroyed the author has written this account of Ireland's history before the days of British rule. He studies four periods: The Lordship of Mac Carthy Mór, The Lordship of Mac Carthy Reagh, The policy of surrender and regrant, and The Cromwellian confiscation in Muskerry. There are maps, appendices, and an index.

"Mr. Butler is content to describe himself as a gleaner, but the job he set himself has more in keeping with that of a quarryman. Not least of the merits of Mr. Butler's method is that instead of generalising at large about abstract principles he builds concrete facts into a compact structure."

+ New Statesman 26:585 F 20 '26 900w

Springfd Republican p5a F 14 '26 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p871 D 17 '25 600w

BUTTS, MARY. Ashe of Rings. 296p $2.50 A. & C. Boni

26-10199

"'Ashe of Rings' tells the story of a family, inheritors of a strange and mystic estate in Sussex, whose modern lives are lived in all their immediacy and directness beneath the shadow of a mystic ritual. In her early chapters, which take place at Rings, Miss Butts establishes her atmosphere. There is the estate itself, there is brilliant and rather malevolent old Anthony Ashe, there is the woman Melitta whom he marries in order to have an heir. First a daughter Vanna is born, then his wife is detected in an affair with her neighbor, then old Anthony dies and his son Valentine is born posthumously. A gap of years follows, and we are in wartime London watching a triangular affair composed of Vanna, a Russian named Serge, and Judy Marston. The story returns at length to Rings. There it dissolves itself in a series of scenes, some of them having a naked candor between people that is far more than ordinary 'reality,' others appearing almost meaningless—inchoate and bewildering."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by E. F. Hall

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 8 '26 500w

"The sentences are choppy. They lack vitality and often they disregard sense. The novel seems to us to be interesting only in so far as it is an attempt to depart from the ordinary and the mundane."

— Boston Transcript p4 Je 2 '26 270w

"The author's staccato style is occasionally happy, but more often than not confusing and tedious."

— + Ind 117:164 Ag 7 '26 40w

"'Ashe of Rings' is a work of highly poised emotional intensity, peculiarly English, which, without the restraint imposed on it, would amount to loose hysteria. The author's grasp is strong with the strength of fine steel; her words walk surely, lightly, fantastically, stepping in a rhythm that charges its way to curious paths." Cecil Boulton

Lit R p5 Je 5 '26 600w

"Miss Butts understands the pattern of words, she has fine insights, and there is a certain rigorousness in her style which makes one regret that it has been expended on what is, after all, to the contemporary habit of thought, a decadent literary convention. For when all is said and done, places cannot live for us today as they did for the excited imaginations of Scott and Poe." C. P. Fadiman

+ — Nation 122:701 Je 23 '26 620w

"It is a most curious piece of work. On the surface, not quite sane, and certainly not clear, a book done from the inside of a writer's mind out, in widening ripples of which the one nearest its creator is probably full of meaning, and the one furthest from him, on paper and therefore nearest us, almost incomprehensible. One puts it down wondering what was the point of it, sure that it had none at all, and yet equally sure that one has come near to something unusual."

New Repub 44:52 S 2 '26 250w

BUTTS, MARY—Continued

"Ashe of Rings" sometimes suggests the Lawrence of 'Women in Love.' There is the same lyrical writing and consciousness of beauty; there is the same stripped reality side by side with a turbid guesswork of motive and action, there is something of the same perverted types of humanity. But 'Ashe of Rings' has also the unique element of Rings. For the architectonics of the novel as a whole, Miss Butts does not seem quite ready. Her fragments, beautiful, eerie, and vivid by turn, do not cohere. But as fragments they are unquestionably fine."

— + Sat R of Lit 3:37 Ag 14 '26 530w

Spring'd Republican p7f Je 27 '26
350w

BYNE, MRS MILDRED (STAPLEY). Forgotten shrines of Spain. 312p il $5 Lippincott
726.7 Spain—Description and travel. Monasteries

During the Middle ages as bit by bit Spanish soil was recovered from the Mohammedan invader, Christian shrines were built to mark the advance and to serve as mission centers for the regained territory. Mrs Byne visits these forgotten shrines and cloisters and describes their artistic and historic significance. The book is well illustrated and also contains a map of Spain with the shrines marked upon it.

"Something new in travel books of Spain is offered in this copiously illustrated volume. Old forgotten cloisters are vividly described in a manner that tempts one to start a-roving among these lovely shrines of the past. Explicit directions are given for such a journey, and mingled with descriptions of the shrines themselves are some delightfully frank and naive glimpses of the native life centering about them... The illustrations of this fascinating narrative are unusually good."

Boston Transcript p8 N 13 '26 320w

"The author's style is pleasingly tinged with the Spanish. She speaks of feeling 'tristful,' of 'clamorous' miracles. Her keen appreciation of great architecture is conveyed to the reader, stirring a longing to journey as she did along untraveled old roads, to discover that 'the whole land is a museum.'" Marian Storm

+ Lit R p9 D 13 '26 500w

R of Rs 74:669 D '26 120w

"Her book certainly leaves the impression that it was written (as it was) by one who knows her Spain thoroughly and who is in complete sympathy not only with its art and history but with its people as well. The illustrations, most of them from well-chosen photographs by Mr. Byne, are beautiful." E. C. Peixotto

+ Sat R of Lit 3:296 N 13 '26 700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p911 D 9 '26
420w

BYNNER, WITTER. Cake, an indulgence. 169p
$2 (6s) Knopf

812

26-16597

"Bynner has concocted a morality play in rhymed couplets of cleverly conversational verse, which hides its seriousness under ribald laughter and cloaks its symbolism in satiric jazz. Borrowing a bit from the technique of 'The Yellow Jacket,' as well as from the mediaeval moralities, the play's capacity to stimulate and amuse a shrewd audience by its sheer technical processes is apparently no inconsiderable asset. So is its verbal felicity and wit. So is the theme, which is the search of an unutterably bored rich female for 'experience,' which takes her to Hell, the Congo jungle, China, and India."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"Certainly, it is brilliant, and often it is funny with a full-bodied mirth. It jizzes the vanities of human life with an almost intolerable wit and a shocking insistence on the absurdity of our stateliest emotions. Beautiful or not—it is wickedly clever, and it may be read without unhappiness and even with great amusement by people who are quite convinced that they are not in the least like its leading character, the Lady."

+ Ind 117:364 S 25 '26 150w

"There is total lack of such imagination as, let us say, Jacinto Benavente applies to the modern scene in 'Saturday Night.' Satire should scorch and sear, it should leave one flayed and quivering. Of this Mr. Bynner is as incapable now as he has ever been. On the other hand, to temper severity somewhat, 'Cake' moderately succeeds in reproducing the helter-skelter of the most superficial aspects of present day existence." P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p7 D 26 '26 450w

"Mr. Bynner's fantastical symbolical-satirical-poetic burlesque has moments that are as witty and as riotous as the mood requires, though it does not continuously sustain that happy temper... It has all the charm of the unpatterned, the refreshment and surprise of the unexpected."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 10:874 D '26 270w

BYNNER, WITTER. Grenstone poems; a sequence; with an introd. note by Edgar Lee Masters. rev ed 307p $2.50 (10s 6d) Knopf

811

26-27430

"'Grenstone Poems,' now appearing in revised edition with an introduction by Masters, amalgamates an awakening American twentieth-century art with reverberations of Whitman. The poems are instinct with the higher, democratic spirit, an unlimited love for everything gross and subtle, urbane and bucolic."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"If a mood of animality and ingenuous love for the world detracts from the significance of these poems it is still valuable as a monument to an era buried under liberalism. Technically, however, the poems are rarely satisfying; with few exceptions, even the best of them are diluted by too regular and too rapid a beat."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 S 5
'26 220w

"One of the most beautiful and refreshing of the poetical oases of the Sahara of modern pseudo-poetry." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 J 17 '26 450w

"Read separately, the poems might disappoint with their perhaps too facile handling, which gives a first impression of superficiality. But no one who reads from the beginning to the end can fail to feel the underlying depths, the slow growth of meaning which could have roots in no less a soil than life itself." R. W. Thompson

+ — Lit R p4 J 13 '26 120w

"In the three hundred pages of Grenstone Poems there are a few moments of poetry in the essential voice of Witter Bynner. When the reader comes upon these moments, they are recognizable by the delicate life trembling in them. It is a misfortune for Mr. Bynner's reputation as a poet, which is slender but genuine, that these fresh notes of selfness are drowned out by many pages of more pretentious and empty verse." L. S. Morris

+ — New Repub 48:227 O 13 '26 500w

"His work varies greatly in quality since he is always an impetuous writer and does not discriminate between trivial and profound experience. But being free of all inhibition he constantly draws deep on life and pours his whole personality into his verse. This book is full of the beauty which is not consciously sought and of simple human understanding."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p599 S 9 '26
250w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 O 3
'26 550w

BYRDE, ELSIE, tr. Polish fairy book; tr. and adapted from the Polish. 231p il $2.50 Stokes [6s Unwin]

398 Fairy tales. Folklore—Poland 26-26142

These delightful fairy tales, illustrated in color by Livia Kádár, have been translated from many sources now out of print, and changed slightly to meet their new, English speaking readers.

Booklist 22:254 Mr '26

"These Polish stories are rendered into English with unexpected freshness and intimacy." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 63:206 Ap '26 550w

"The Polish Fairy Book' will add to the gaiety of any summer holiday at home or around camp fire. It should have had pictures more in the spirit of the stories than the half dozen lifeless conventionalized illustrations in color." A. C. Moore

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 My 2 '26 520w

"Charmingly rendered into simple fluent English with no attempt at a slavish literalness. Many of them enforce the teaching of kindness, and even when there is savage killing, the dead are generally revived; most of them end happily and they are wholesome, fresh and lively."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 9 '26 500w

"A perfect fairy-book. Every parent will find in it just what they exulted in when they read their favorite fairy-books as children, and children will automatically respond to it. It is not that the stories are so familiar, but that their quality is so essentially right." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p136 Ja '26 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:106 F '26

Wis Lib Bul 22:142 Ap '26

BYRNE, DONN. Hangman's house. 466p il $2.50 Century [7s 6d S. Low]

26-9264

This tender Irish love story offers welcome respite from the sex and problem novel. Not that its hero and heroine have no problems; they have many and grievous ones, but none that darkens their love. Dermot went to Connaught's father just too late. For Jimmy the hangman, as he was not affectionately called, had already sent for Dermot's cousin and pledged his daughter to him. Now Dermot's cousin was an evil man and would bring only shame to Connaught. But she was married to him and her father in his grave before she knew that truth, or the other, that Dermot had her heart. This is the story of their gallant love and its proving.

Booklist 22:376 Je '26

Reviewed by Frances Newman

Bookm 63:481 Je '26 380w

"Such simplicity is restful and refreshing, and the reader's critical faculties once lulled to sleep, he is carried along easily by the gusto and smoothness of Mr. Byrne's telling, and the real, if obvious, suspense of the story. Mr. Byrne will not, as he himself declares in the foreword, write a 'Vicar of Wakefield' or create an Uncle Toby or Corporal Tim, but he can spin a good yarn." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 My 2 '26 920w

"This is a good story. It is told in an interesting manner. The style of description is melodious, the author is never at loss for a word or phrase, vying at hand an immense fund of the Irish vernacular." J. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 23 '26 300w

Reviewed by Katherine Buxbaum

Int Bk R p524 Jl '26 360w

"Delightful story. It is as clean as a hound's tooth and as refreshing as a draught of Dublin stout after a Dublin tea party." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p3 Ap 24 '26 780w

"Needless to say, the Irish aren't the only people to like horses, and the whole story might just as easily have been placed in Kentucky as in Ireland. Donn Byrne, however, knows the tricks of romantic writing, and has a melodious style that is persuasive. Once one gives way to his ideas and accepts his plot, one can find charm in such writing."

+ — N Y Times p8 My 9 '26 680w

Outlook 143:184 Je 2 '26 250w

"What if the themes be slightly threadbare and commonplace, and the telling less lilting and flavorful than Donn Byrne at his best? Here one may find love and adventure in the very home of love and adventure, a spirit and phrase engagingly Irish." Grace Frank

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:807 My 22 '26 500w

"He embodies his people if he does not endow them with souls. He has the gift of inventing incident; he is eloquent, vigorous, racy; his chapters end like 'curtains' on the first night of a successful play; and his emotional energy rises to real poetic feeling, at any rate whenever he mentions the Holyhead boat. Cease to criticize, yield to Mr. Byrne, and you will find yourself enjoying this world."

+ — Spec 136:729 Ap 17 '26 360w

"The actual and high merits of the novel are in the incidental description of traditional life and rapid character sketches. Race meetings at Fairyhouse and the Curragh, crowded glimpses of life in Dublin and islands of Donegal, the mountains of Wicklow under the soft light of a perpetual June, the interweaving of historical and Continental associations, give vivid and authentic variety to this many-coloured picture of a forgotten Ireland of twenty years ago."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p180 Mr 11 '26 330w

Wis Lib Bul 22:172 My '26

BYRNE, MURIEL ST CLARE. Elizabethan life in town and country. 294p il $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Methuen]

914.2 England—Social life and customs

26-26564

"Miss Byrne knows the literature of the Elizabethan age intimately and uses it to make a picture of Everyman in the sixteenth century. With the help of plays, satires, pamphlets, ballads, and historical sources, such as inventories and accounts, she covers subjects so varied as the Elizabethan at home (one of the best chapters of the book), London town, the Queen's highway, country life in all its aspects, master and man and masterless men, religion, childhood and education, the university, 'young and old come forth to play,' the theatre, and wonder books and old wives' tales."—Nation and Ath

"Miss Byrne's volume is a delightfully written essay on Elizabethan life, intended for the popular reader rather than for the scholar. The volume makes some contribution to the ordinarily current information on the subject, but for the most part it undertakes only to present current information in an attractive form."

+ Am Hist R 32:354 Ja '27 420w

Booklist 22:413 Jl '26

Bookm 63:607 Jl '26 150w

"Miss Byrne knows her period and her documents thoroughly, and she has assembled her evidence in admirable fashion. Her object has been to try to revitalize this far-off time, and if in this she has been but partially successful it may be because she possesses rather more of the antiquarian's enthusiasm for research than of the creative artist's vitalizing imagination. Her work is a handy compendium, which students of the period will find useful for consultation." S: C. Chew

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 Ag 22 '26 630w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 26 '26 280w

Dial 81:355 O '26 170w

BYRNE, M. S.—Continued

"The book will be full of interest to the general reader, and the student of Elizabethan drama will welcome in it a useful background to his subject."

+ Nation and Ath 38:654 F 6 '26 260w

"The bibliography at the end of the volume gives an idea of the amount of research that this task has required. The references to the literary material alone suggest years of labor. The result is a faithful chronicle of Everyman, stripped of the glamour with which tradition has surrounded him, yet none the less absorbing because he emerges a real person with many amusing foibles and with about as many virtues as his prototype today."

+ N Y Times p20 My 16 '26 420w

Sat R 140:710 D 12 '25 200w

"Miss Byrne is a well-known authority on certain aspects of Elizabethan literature, and from her intimate knowledge of the period has built up this picture of life in Elizabeth's England. It makes excellent reading."

+ Spec 136:230 F 6 '26 120w

"It is compiled from good sources, and it is written pleasantly and with due sense of proportion; the wood is never lost in the trees."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p315 Ap 29 '26 280w

BYRNE, PATRICK EDWARD. Soldiers of the plains. 260p $2.50 Minton, Balch & co.

970.1 Indians of North America—Wars, 1866-1895 26-16114

In retelling the story of the Indian wars from 1866 to 1877, leading up to and including Custer's charge on the Little Big Horn, the author presents an impartial statement of the red man's case against the white, and pays tribute to his high qualities as a soldier.

"His narrative is sometimes confused, but he is admirably clear in his treatment of the Custer campaign. Despite a tendency toward special pleading, the book is a fine document and intensely interesting."

+ — Ind 117:303 S 11 '26 110w

"Much of his narrative and argument is quoted from authorities upon the campaigns, battles and Indian leaders of that struggle, but he has done something very much worth while in thus bringing together such an imposing body of testimony to the martial qualities of the Indian. His work helps to put the Indian into the light in which he is entitled to be studied, his own view of the situation, and to show with justice to him his reaction to its demands."

+ N Y Times p10 D 19 '26 380w

"The book is over-laudatory of the Indian, and it is unjustly censorious of Custer. Nevertheless it is not a book lightly to be dismissed. It is one of those controversial works with which one may wholly disagree and yet read and remember with interest and a certain appreciation."

+ — Outlook 144:154 S 29 '26 340w

C

CABELL, JAMES BRANCH. Music from behind the moon; an epitome. ltd ed 54p 1l $6 Day

26-16524

"The Music From Behind the Moon' recounts the wanderings and adventures of a poet, one Madoc, whose songs please all but himself and who is moved to seek that ultimate expression which sounds its tantalizing challenge to him in the land from behind the moon. His quest, discovery and resumption of his quest may be taken allegorically, as symbolizing the poet's search for perfection."—N Y World

Reviewed by Carl Van Doren

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 N 14 '26 540w

Boston Transcript p4 O 23 '26 1050w

"Altogether, an attractive volume from every standpoint."

+ Ind 117:361 S 25 '26 100w

Reviewed by Abbe Niles

Nation 124:18 Ja 5 '27 190w

"The poetic note is dominant and the refinements of the format combine with the substance of the tale to make the book harmonious and satisfying—an artistic achievement for publisher as well as author." D. B. W.

+ New Repub 48:128 S 22 '26 230w

"Dignity, beauty and a certain Macabersque touch in binding and illustrating make this book a perfect setting for the fifty-four-page story by the master-magician of the English-reading literary world." B. de Casseres

+ N Y Times p2 O 3 '26 1100w

"That it will add a cubit to Cabell's stature we doubt. There is not a new note in it. The book is presented as a collector's item rather than as a contribution to contemporary literature." H. S.

N Y World p4m S 5 '26 400w

CABELL, JAMES BRANCH. Silver stallion; a comedy of redemption. 358p $2.50 McBride [7s 6d Lane]

26-10315

Being the adventures of the followers of Dom Manuel of Poictesme under the standard of the Silver stallion. Each man goes his way to his appointed destiny, adventuring along the paths of philosophy and love.

Booklist 23:78 N '26

Reviewed by Frances Newman

Bookm 63:481 Je '26 380w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 9 '26 1200w

"The style of 'The Silver Stallion' is not less beautifully wrought than that of his other writings. All the auctorial virtues Cabell has set for his own standards, distinction and clarity, beauty and symmetry, tenderness and truth and urbanity, the book displays in full measure. There is perhaps too much reference to earlier volumes to make it a good book with which to begin reading Cabell. Those who have already succumbed to his attraction will welcome a volume hardly inferior to his best." E. B. Schrieffgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 1 '26 2000w

"The author gives evidence of his old mastery over a racy, readable, elegant English prose style. Other than this there can be no favorable criticism that can be squared with anything like a conscientious adherence to the canons of good taste or good morals, for this romance sins grievously against both." F. J. M.

+ Cath World 123:712 Ag '26 460w

"Some readers may feel that Mr Cabell is again rather over-biblically broad in his humour (perhaps he is); others that he is not sufficiently respectful to our leading human dogmas (perhaps he is not); but not even the most carping can deny the sovereignty of his imagination."

Dial 81:171 Ag '26 120w

Ind 116:639 My 29 '26 100w

Reviewed by L. Moore

Int Bk R p451 Je '26 800w

Reviewed by J. T. Shipley

Lit R p3 My 15 '26 820w

Reviewed by E. S. Bates

Nation 122:559 My 19 '26 900w

Nation and Ath 39:362 Je 26 '26 180w

New Repub 47:717 Ag 4 '26 120w

"I fancy his popularity depends upon his power to make his readers feel clever. He gives, to a crudely cynical story of fantastic mythology, the setting of French mediaevalism; he uses a lot of big words, and is very arch and naughty. If you like this sort of thing, you like it (I gather) exceedingly: it is my misfortune that I do not like it at all." P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 27:444 J1 31 '26 260w

"An entertaining fable, organically joined to a supple and resourceful prose, a dryly wistful vision of life, and a brilliantly paradoxical philosophy are united in 'The Silver Stallion' to form the most persuasive account James Branch Cabell has yet given of that pleasantly impossible country of Poictesme." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 25 '26 1800w

"This legend is crammed with incidents and reveals no trace of any decline in its author's marvelous fertility of invention." J. W. Krutch

+ Sat R of Lit 2:769 My 8 '26 820w

"Mr. Cabell is indeed, an acquired taste, and in his Jurgenesque vein provides literature which formerly would have sheltered itself beneath the sofa-cushion. Talented he certainly is: a brilliant seeker after effects, but not, eminently wholly an agreeable one. And the number of characters in this latest volume is positively confusing."

+ Spec 136:1012 Je 12 '26 160w

Spring'd Republican p7f Je 27 '26 700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p412 Je 17 '26 350w

CABLE, BOYD, pseud. (E. A. EWART). British battles of destiny. 341p $2 (6s) Nelson

942 Great Britain—History. Battles

"In the passage of English history Mr. Boyd Cable thinks that twelve battles (in one case a group of battles) have been decisive in shaping the destiny of the race. He sees odd sequences in the dates of great battles, such as 1213 (Dunbar), 1314 (Bannockburn), and 1415 (Agincourt). His battles of destiny begin with the landing of Caesar and end with Waterloo. All are well known save Dunbar, which has never been regarded as an action of paramount importance."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Mr. Cable's book is well worth reading by both Britons and Americans."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 29 '26 250w

"There is no better reading than an account of a battle written up by a journalist with a good knowledge of the uniform of the period, the kind of arms, tactics, and strategy employed. Mr. Boyd Cable has the right spirit in him. He can 'put it across.' He has a feeling for the 'atmosphere' of an age long past, which a better-read historian might lack entirely."

+ Sat R 142:346 S 25 '26 280w

Times [London] Lit Sup p857 N 25 '26 70w

CABOT, JOHN MOORS. Racial conflict in Transylvania; a discussion of the conflicting claims of Rumania and Hungary to Transylvania, the Banat and the eastern section of the Hungarian plain. 206p $2 Am Unitar.

943.92 Transylvania—History. Rumanians in Hungary. European war, 1914-1918—Territorial questions 26-10939

The book discusses a problem which had its beginnings in the eighteenth century: the dispute between Rumania and Hungary over the territory known as Transylvania. The author has studied the controversial sources on both sides of the question and has made a nearer canvas of racial feeling in Transylvania itself. He here sets down his findings as impartially as may be, and suggests the basis for a possible settlement of the dispute.

"Mr. Cabot performed a great service by calling attention, in an exemplarily unbiased and dispassionate way, to Transylvania and the dangerous possibilities it presents to the peace of Europe." Emil Lengyel

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 15 '26 920w

"The book is very readable, for Mr. Cabot has an easy and graphic way of writing. He has consulted not only the most eminent written authorities, but, fearing that much of this evidence is untrustworthy, many living ones, among them Count Teleki, Count Szechenyi, Prince Bibesco and others." G. B.

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 4 '26 750w

"To this highly controversial subject the author has contributed a certain amount of historical material, presented in useful form, combined with a number of deductions and personal judgments which are at least provocative of reflection."

+ Survey 56:645 S 15 '26 70w

"Mr. Cabot's book is remarkable for its detachment and impartiality. It is a pity that so scholarly and impartial a survey of a vexed question should have come too late to save the treaty-makers from some of their geographical and ethnological mistakes in that part of the world."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p683 O 14 '26 980w

CABOT, RICHARD CLARKE. Adventures on the borderlands of ethics. 152p $2 Harper

170 Ethics

"As a physician and as professor of social ethics in Harvard University, Dr. Cabot has had ample opportunity to test his theories, and his conclusions are something more than disembodied ethical statements. He relates his findings as they apply to business, to the medical profession, to education and to social work."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 2 '27 170w

"Covers a great deal of ground hitherto grossly neglected." S. S. G.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 11 '26 280w

"As always, Dr. Cabot writes directly, sincerely, with the driving force of profound conviction."

+ N Y Times p7 D 26 '26 230w

CADMAN, SAMUEL PARKES. Imagination and religion. (Cole lectures for 1924) 208p $1.50 (6s 6d) Macmillan

201 Imagination. Christianity. Religion 26-8558

A series of six lectures delivered by Dr Cadman at Vanderbilt university.

Booklist 23:5 O '26

"The text is a model of rhetorical grace and effectiveness, as well as a liberal education in the points of contact between religion and recent movements in many other fields."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 29 '26 130w

"When Dr. Hillis was at the height of his career one comment often made was 'His sermons read well.' Many preachers' oratory reduced to print pales perceptibly. Not so with S. Parkes Cadman. He stands the test of type as well as of the limelight."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 5 '26 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p100 S '26

"As the style of 'Imagination and Religion' is not always pellucidly clear, it is by no means easy reading. But taking the book in its entirety it is original, thought-provoking and vital. In the field of religious literature such books can not appear too frequently." L. H. Chrisman

+ Int Bk R p528 J1 '26 500w

"A suggestive book indicating in fresh and vigorous fashion the important place of imagination in experience, and discussing wholesome ways in which religious leaders may cultivate and use imagination."

+ J Religion 6:546 S '26 30w

CADMAN, SAMUEL PARKES—Continued

"The work shows clear thought, a wide acquaintance with modern literature, and a keen understanding of modern movements."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p599 S 9 '26
100w

CAINE, WILLIAM RALPH HALL. Annals of the magic isle. 356p $4 Stokes [10s 6d C. Palmer]

398.2 Legends—Isle of man. Mythology, Celtic

In 1570 a political refugee flees from England to the Calf of Man, an islet lying to the south of the Isle of Man. There he meets the patron deities of the so-called magic isle, Faith, Simplicity, Innocence, and their sisters, and learns from them the Celtic folk-lore and myths which fill the bulk of the volume.

"A bulky volume of material which is rather obtuse and wandering. The book is upheld by a beauty of spirit that is ever perceptible, but it is clouded by an incomprehensibility that irritates and yet at the same time leads the reader on."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 3 '26 280w

"The book is discouraging to the general reader, for in order to enjoy many of the colorful, engrossing legends he must grope through a maze of mythological data." Madeleine Thayer

Lit R p12 D 4 '26 300w

"The author, who uses the word 'magic' in his title and with glamorous repetition in his text, seems completely to have missed all suggestion of magic. He also stands wilfully in his own light. It is admittedly possible to combine harmoniously science and myth, but the author has overrated his capacity in trying to do it."

— Nation and Ath 39:480 J1 24 '26 240w

Sat R 141:718 Je 12 '26 40w

Sat R of Lit 3:263 O 30 '26 60w

Times [London] Lit Sup p498 J1 22 '26 250w

CALDWELL, ROBERT GRANVILLE. Short history of the American people. v 1 530p $3.75 (12s 6d) Putnam

973 United States—History (25-16302)

"The Professor of American History, the Rico Institute, here gives us the first volume of a history of the American people from the time of Columbus and earlier discoverers of the American Continent to the days preceding the Civil War, the causes of which are covered in this volume. A further volume dealing with the more recent period is in course of preparation."

—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The problem of balance and proportion is always a serious one for the author of such a work as this, and indeed the proper solution is largely a matter of opinion and purpose. In general, diplomatic affairs do not seem to have secured their proper share of recognition. Unusual care appears to have been exercised in the accuracy of details. . . . But the work as a whole is so free from errors that one can write only praise for the author. His literary style is admirably dignified yet his story absorbs the attention of the reader." F. F. Stephens

+ Am Hist R 31:528 Ap '26 580w

Booklist 22:324 My '26

"Considerably more than the careful competence demanded nowadays from the respectable historian marks 'A Short History of the American People.' His study of social and economic forces in their relation to political and constitutional growth is everywhere illuminated by a complementary treatment of the more imperious elements of popular feeling and emotion."

+ Bookm 62:616 Ja '26 200w

"What Professor Caldwell has given us is a well written narrative framed on conventional lines, reasonably up to date in most of its statements and fair in its presentation of opposing views, but without novelty. It is a sincere and honest piece of work and as such may be commended, even though it meets no obvious needs." W: MacDonald

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 13 '26 500w

"A second volume of this work, carrying the narrative from the Civil War to the Coolidge Administration, is in preparation. If it reveals the same thorough scholarship, careful organization and interesting style, it will be a notable addition to the literature of recent American history." J: A. Krout

+ Hist Outlook 17:135 Mr '26 520w

"Dr. Caldwell has a straightforward style and a useful gift for summary statement. His history should be serviceable for the English student."

+ New Statesman 26:122 N 7 '25 120w

Reviewed by A. S. Will

N Y Times p15 Ja 3 '26 2150w

"Twice in the book, once in the summary of the Lincoln-Douglas debates, and again in the analysis of the figures for the presidential election of 1860, the author puts old material in a new light. But the volume as a whole lacks character. It will give the reader no information that he cannot get just as easily, and more entertainingly, somewhere else; it will not stir his emotions, nor arouse his enthusiasm. It is an example of mediocrity, not distressing, but of little real worth, not vivid enough for the general reader, and not informing enough for the scholar." R. V. Harlow

— Sat R of Lit 2:431 D 19 '25 620w

Times [London] Lit Sup p722 O 29 '25 60w

CALHOUN, GEORGE MILLER. Ancient Greeks and the evolution of standards in business. (Barbara Weinstock lectures on the morals of trade) 103p $1 Houghton

913.38 Greece—Economic conditions. Business ethics 26-9474

An essay on the contribution of the ancient Greeks to modern business ethics, first delivered at the University of California on the Weinstock foundation.

"The work is, and the author claims no more for it, little more than a suggestive essay." E. C. Hughes

Am J Soc 32:321 S '26 60w

N Y Times p5 Je 13 '26 320w

Reviewed by Douglas Fryer

Sat R of Lit 2:805 My 22 '26 1050w

CALHOUN, GEORGE MILLER. Business life of ancient Athens; with an introd. by Wiggington E. Creed. 175p $2 Univ. of Chicago press

913.38 Athens—Commerce. Finance—Athens. Greece—Economic conditions 26-19374

In an earlier book, "The ancient Greeks and the evolution of standards in business" Mr Calhoun dealt with the general principles underlying the economic life of the Greeks. In his second book he gives an account of the way in which business and finance were carried on in Athens in the fourth century before Christ, the types of men who controlled trade and finance, their aims, ideals, and standards of honesty. Contents: Part I, The course of economic evolution in Greece; Part II, The Athenian grain trade; Part III, Banks and bankers; Part IV, Mines and mining.

Booklist 23:168 Ja '27

"How the revenues from the silver mines at Laurium made possible Athenian resistance to Persian aggression and consequently modified all subsequent European history is set forth in a dramatic manner, and here, as in the rest of the book, it is not only the business man but also the historian and the general reader who will be impressed by the moral as well as the economic suggestiveness of what Mr. Calhoun has to say." A. S. Pease

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p26 N 7 '26 200w

"The book before us is a successful attempt to fill one of the cavernous omissions of history. In spite of the scarcity of original material on the subject (the scholar must build his deductions on an occasional reference from Greek writers) the result obtained is satisfying, and Dr. Calhoun deserves the thanks of every student of history." R. W. Thompson

+ Lit R p13 O 2 '26 200w

"Well written and interesting, if rather slight."

+ — New Statesman 28:56 O 23 '26 280w

"The author carries us along to the usually dry matter of banks and mining with a pleasant lightness which proves him perfect master of his subject. He is an artist in words. Seldom does one come across so small a volume containing so much wealth."

+ N Y Times p30 D 12 '26 240w

"The book makes a distinct contribution to economic evolution. . . The volume is evidently a by-product of classical scholarship. But to the business man it is even more interesting than the main product of archeological research."

J. M. Lee

+ N Y World p9m O 24 '26 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p657 S 30 '26 280w

CALLCOTT, WILFRID HARDY. Church and state in Mexico, 1822-1857. (Publications) 357p $4 Duke univ. press

972 Church and state in Mexico. Mexico—Politics and government. Mexico. Constitution 26-18005

"Professor Callcott presents the historical process in Mexico from the establishment of the republic to the promulgation of the Constitution of 1857, finding his unity in the struggle for the emergence of the democratic principle in government against the reactionary influences within the Church, the landholding class, and the army. He points out repeatedly in the course of his narrative that the continuous disorganization of public finance and neglect of the public debt was responsible for the successive political crises through which Mexico passed during the period under review."—Am Hist R

"The whole work is written in clear style and in judicial tone and manner; it fills the need for a work on the earlier background of the current religious situation. The format of the book is attractive, and creditable to Duke University Press." H. I. Priestley

+ Am Hist R 32:349 Ja '27 60w

Reviewed by H. I. Priestley

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ja 9 '27 700w

Boston Transcript p5 D 4 '26 270w

"This volume appears at a propitious time and a careful reading of its pages will repay one who wishes to understand in a measure the present situation in Mexico. And to those particular students of Mexican history, it will be found indispensable and will undoubtedly rank as a distinct and welcome contribution in their field of study." A. C. Wilgus

+ Hist Outlook 18:38 Ja '27 390w

"Professor Callcott's book will not prove of great value to many who have followed the controversy of the last six months between those two agencies. While this work is a fine piece of scholarship, and much more reliable than George Creel's history, it is a little too technical to interest any but the professional student. He will find in it a quantity of valuable original research, a broad and inclusive treatment of Mexican life from the year of independence down to the adoption of the Constitution of 1857, and the exercise of sound historical judgment." H. S.

+ — Lit R p5 D 18 '26 120w

"A scholarly and occasionally vivid account." Carleton Beals

+ Nation 123:sup615 D 1 '26 450w

"A coherent account of conditions in Mexico during the thirty-five years preceding the Constitution of 1857. Heretofore, such a statement has been exceedingly difficult to find either in English or Spanish."

+ R of Rs 74:557 N '26 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p756 N 4 '26 950w

CALVERTON, V. F. Sex expression in literature; with an introd. by Harry Elmer Barnes. 337p $2.50 Boni & Liveright

820.9 English literature—History and criticism. Sexual ethics 27-900

The author has sought the origin and explanation of the sex expression in successive periods of English literature in the social and economic trends of that period. Thus he finds the freedom of Restoration literature reflecting the social attitude of the times as did the repression which accompanied the rise of Puritanism, and as does the growing tendency toward frank expression in the literature of today.

"It is a shame if this book is to be the storm center of a new battle, that there should be so many weak points in its armour. In his preface Mr. Calverton modestly says that his book 'is a pioneer and not a final attempt,' that 'it will open the way to more extensive studies in the sociological method.' Let us hope that these succeeding studies may be not merely more extensive but also more solid and better able to withstand the 'fierce conflict that is to come,' and that the successor to whom Mr. Calverton looks forward may prove to be Mr. Calverton himself." H. W. L.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ja 9 '27 950w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 8 '27 1150w

"Mr. Calverton's book is a history of the dominance of literature by the conventions of middle-class morality. Very neatly, I think, he establishes his point." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 117:741 D 25 '26 750w

"Mr. Calverton's method is too muddled to be valid and too shopworn to be new." Allen Tate

— Nation 123:694 D 29 '26 340w

Reviewed by C. K. Ogden

Sat R of Lit 3:358 D 4 '26 240w

"Mr Calverton is a writer of intelligence and accomplished technic, both of which he persistently employs in the pursuit of fixed ideas. The historical part of his book discloses a real understanding of the uses of background and an alert if not always profound treatment of details. So when he laboriously surveys all the literature of the past to find evidence regarding the attitude toward sex he supplies a sprightly and rational but by no means thoroughgoing narrative."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 N 20 '26 700w

CAMBREY, LEONNE de, pseud. See Hertzman, A.

CAMBRIDGE ancient history; ed. by J. B. Bury, S. A. Cook, F. E. Adcock. 8v v 3-4 821, 698p ea $9.50 Macmillan [ca 35s Cambridge univ. press]

930 History, Ancient

Volume three of this eight-volume work by various English scholars deals with the five centuries, 1000-500 B.C., and particularly with the rise and fall of the Assyrian empire. Volume four is devoted to the rise and spread of the Persian empire, and the history of the Greeks in the eastern and western Mediterranean.

CAMBRIDGE ancient history—Continued

"The final judgment of this big book as a whole must be and should be that it is nobly worthy of its great purpose." R. W. Rogers

+ — Am Hist R 81:755 J1 '26 1350w (Review of v 3)

Reviewed by R. W. Rogers

Am Hist R 32:83 O '26 1250w (Review of v 4)

Booklist 22:324 My '26 (Review of v 3)

Booklist 23:71 N '26 (Review of v 4)

Reviewed by A. T. Olmstead

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 16 '26 1200w (Review of v 3)

Reviewed by A. T. Olmstead

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 S 19 '26 1350w (Review of v 4)

"The volume, in addition to its importance for history, is a highly valuable contribution to our knowledge of ancient religion, art, folklore and language."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 7 '26 500w (Review of v 3)

Cath World 123:855 S '26 630w (Review of v 3)

"Each section of this great history is written by an acknowledged expert in his own subject. Each of these experts therefore gives a complete account of the nation or period assigned to him. But this results in a certain amount of duplication. It is also a loss to the reader to be compelled to study each people or country in watertight compartments. The printing is excellent; but a couple of misprints may be noticed. These slight blemishes, however, do not detract from the value of the work. It is safe to say that nowhere is it possible to obtain so full, so trustworthy, and so readable an account of the ancient history of the Near East." G. R. Driver

+ — Eng Hist R 41:424 J1 '26 2000w (Review of v 3)

Reviewed by A. J. Toynbee

Nation and Ath 38:555 Ja 16 '26 1300w (Review of v 3)

Reviewed by A. J. Toynbee

Nation and Ath 39:356 Je 26 '26 1000w (Review of v 4)

New Statesman 26:714 Mr 20 '26 1000w (Review of v 3)

N Y Times p5 Ag 1 '26 320w (Review of v 4)

"What unity has been attained in this volume centers about the 'reapse' of the Assyrian Empire and its 'reestablishment' in the three centuries from 900 B. C. to the fall of Nineveh in 612 B. C. This has been done in five chapters by Mr. Sidney Smith of the British Museum. To me these five chapters stand out as the most brilliant single achievement which has so far appeared in the series. The outstanding weakness that one feels in this, as in the two preceding volumes of the Cambridge enterprise, lies in the failure to give to the economic life of antiquity its due measure of attention." W. L. Westerman

+ — Pol Sci Q 41:615 D '26 1300w (Review of v 3)

"The Cambridge Modern History has had its detractors and has here and there deserved severe criticism. The same is equally true of the Ancient and Medieval Histories. But, when we consider the scope of these works, we must admit that they cover the ground admirably. When the three parts are all completed, it will certainly be found that some of the earliest written portions are already out of date. But it will be a long time before anyone in this country attempts to supersede on any similar plan this majestic repository of knowledge, which will be an achievement worthy of a great University." E. Shanks

+ — Sat R 140:770 D 26 '25 1200w (Review of v 3)

"The book is, as it stands, a great help to scholars, to teachers, to advanced students in ancient history, not to beginners. It is an excellent summary of the achievements of the last decades in the field of ancient history and of the problems which arise from our increased material." M. Rostovtzeff

+ Sat R of Lit 3:5 J1 31 '26 1400w (Review of v 3)

"The topics are discussed with much learning and ability by well-known English scholars in this section of an invaluable work."

+ Spec 136:332 F 20 '26 200w (Review of v 3)

"There is a tendency, probably inevitable in the present state of knowledge, to treat history as a record of events principally military and political. We should have preferred to have more details of the economic, social, intellectual and artistic life of the peoples and monarchs who pass before us. These criticisms, however, apply only to the plan of this volume and not to its contents, which maintain the high standard of its predecessors."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p129 F 25 '26 1900w (Review of v 3)

"This is a feast of good things and good writing to which we can return again and again without surfeit."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p544 Ag 19 '26 2050w (Review of v 4)

CAMBRIDGE medieval history; planned by J. B. Bury, ed. by J. R. Tanner, C. W. Previté-Orton, and Z. W. Brooke; 8v v 5, Contest of empire and papacy. 1005p $13.50 Macmillan [50s Cambridge univ. press]

940.1 Middle ages—History

"The seventeen contributors to the present volume are almost wholly British. The period here covered, ca. 1050-1200, is one of the most important in the whole series, comprising the struggle between Empire and Papacy, the Crusades, the Norman Conquest of England and Sicily, the Angevin Empire, the rise of towns and the spread of commerce, the twelfth-century revival of learning, the emergence of French poetry, the great epoch of Romanesque architecture and the beginnings of Gothic." — Sat R of Lit

"This volume well maintains the standard of the series as an indispensable work of reference. The bibliographies are particularly full and useful."

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:919 N '26 60w

Booklist 23:71 N '26

"The fifth volume of the Cambridge Medieval History is worthy of its predecessors. There are full and admirable bibliographies and excellent maps. The scholars who have waited for this work will not be disappointed."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 25 '26 200w

"With some eighteen individual writers represented in the volume's twenty-three chapters absolute unity of style is out of the question. But content is more important than style, and what may be lost in a stylistic sense is compensated for by variety and freshness of outlook in an admirably over-lapping scheme of chapter division." F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p16 O 30 '26 650w

"Professor Hamilton Thompson's 'The Monastic Orders' is a model of compressed, orderly, and balanced information. The chapter, as it stands, is far more complete, accurate, and interesting than anything to which a reader could have been referred until now and it is one of the most remarkable in a remarkable volume." G. G. Coulton

+ Nation and Ath 39:505 J1 31 '26 1100w

"The most valuable contribution to medieval scholarship of our times." R. S.

+ Sat R 141:654 My 29 '26 950w

"It is written for scholarly reference rather than for popular or even continuous reading, and in general its aim is well fulfilled. Nowhere else in English can we find a better summary of present-day knowledge of the Middle Ages set forth soberly and compactly, without flourish but without needless dryness." C: H. Haskins

+ Sat R of Lit 3:51 Ag 21 '26 1100w
Spring'd Republican p6 O 11 '26 280w

"We have been waiting a very long time for this volume of the Medieval History, but it was well worth waiting for. It has all the solid merits of its predecessors. It is full and yet concise. No words are wasted, but no important event is omitted, no influential principle neglected. Throughout, the book is the work of experts, and represents the scholarship of students, both young and mature, from Cambridge, Oxford and other Universities."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p351 My 27
'26 1450w

CAMERON, MARGARET (MRS HARRISON
CASS LEWIS). Sporting chance. 279p $2
Harper

26-7763

Piggy Brazenose had a talent for figuring in the news. This was a great cross to Piggy's father who finally threatened him with disinheritance if it happened again. And promptly Piggy went out to help a beautiful unknown kidnap a younger sister from their stern parental home where she was locked away from her lover. The father of the beautiful unknown—her name was Roberta—and Piggy's father were business associates and sometimes rivals. In the matter of the kidnapping, however, they were of one mind—to destroy Piggy. And they might have accomplished their purpose, but for Roberta.

Booklist 22:420 J1 '26

"Miss Cameron here swings a discreetly adventurous tale of young love and miscellaneous excitement with much competence and a quiet sense of fun."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 My
23 '26 200w

Boston Transcript p5 My 22 '26 280w

"A perfectly impossible, perfectly irresponsible, albeit a most attractive novel of youth and love and laughter."

+ N Y Times p22 My 2 '26 580w

"In general the narrative is not unbelievable; the characters often come alive. Although the novel never rises above a comfortable mediocrity, it may be recommended for warm weather reading or for one who wishes to give his brain a rest. Books of this type have their honorable and useful stations at the outposts of genuine literature."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:828 My 29 '26 200w

"It is a very entertaining but very light tale."
+ Spring'd Republican p7f My 16 '26
300w

Wis Lib Bul 22:172 My '26

CAMMAERTS, EMILE. Poetry of nonsense.
86p il $1.75 Dutton [3s 6d Routledge]

827 Nonsense verses [26-14639]

Five essays on the spirit of nonsense and its expression in poetry and in art. Contents: The meaning of nonsense; Nonsense and the child; Nonsense and poetry; Nonsense in art; Nonsense and England.

Booklist 23:164 Ja '27

New Statesman 26:386 Ja 9 '26 700w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey
N Y Times p14 F 7 '26 1400w

"M. Cammaerts, the Belgian poet, has been attracted to the study of nonsense in verse, prose, and graphic illustration. He expands a lecture into a pleasant little treatise that may count as a chapter of philosophy at large."

Sat R 141:164 F 6 '26 360w

"His little book, if for no more than its borrowed illustrations and quotations, is good reading."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:434 D 11 '26 280w

Spec 136:50 Ja 9 '26 240w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey
Spec 136:274 F 13 '26 1500w

"His little book is a very pleasant and entertaining commentary on a neglected literary topic. The reproduction of a few of Lear's original illustrations together with others by Tenniel, Mr. Chesterton, and Mr. Lofting makes it additionally welcome."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p95 F 11 '26
480w

CAMPBELL, ARCHIBALD Y. Poems. 118p
2 $2.75 (7s 6d) Longmans

821

"Precise, rhythmic, nervous language, loaded or clarified as occasion may demand, but always musical; rhyme, rhyme everywhere, naked and unashamed; appreciable sense throughout, logic never conspicuous either by its presence or its absence, and, above all things, point; these, or rather the fusion of them into a single entity, make and have always made for me the enjoyment peculiar to lyric." This from the author's preface will explain the aim and form of the lyrics contained in this small volume of selections from his early and mature work.

"His rhythmical quality leaves much to be desired, while some of his rhymes have never before, even by Browning, been matched in earth or heaven. He is most successful in his simplest verse."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 29 '26 360w

"We find in his verse neither lyrical intensity nor lyrical extravagance. It is tasteful, equable, shrewd."

Times [London] Lit Sup p814 N 18 '26
500w

CAMPBELL, CHARLES MACFIE. Delusion
2 and belief. 79p $1.50 Harvard univ. press [6s
6d Oxford]

133 Psychology, Pathological. Hallucinations and illusions 26-16158

"This monograph is a series of case studies, which are significant in relation to the general problem of the rôle of belief in human life. The book opens with a thesis asserting the biological indispensability of belief. Then are set forth the various situations which compel human beings to construct elaborate systematized delusions in order to give substantial fulfillment to their need for a certain belief-object. Each of these situations is illustrated by the study of individual cases. On the one hand Dr. Campbell is interested in suggesting hygienic measures for meeting these situations, on the other he enjoys indicating that philosophy and science as processes of rationalization are very similar to other delusions that satisfy the biological desire to believe."—Lit R

"The book leaves us aroused by its penetrating thought."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 30 '26 280w

Lit R p9 D 11 '26 150w

Reviewed by Geddes Smith
Survey 57:232 N 15 '26 180w

CAMPBELL, DONALD. Arabian medicine, and its influence on the Middle ages. (Trubner's oriental ser.) 2v 208;235p $8 Dutton [21s K. Paul]

610.9 Medicine, Arabic. Medicine, Arabic—
Bibliography. Medicine, Medieval. Galenus
—Bibliography [26-14451]

The history of European medicine in the later Middle ages is the history of the influence of the Arabians. Dr Campbell treats the origin and development of Arabian medicine and its later cultivation in the West. Volume II consists of two appendices: first, a list of the Latin translations of the medical and philosophical works of the Arabians; second, a catalog of the Latin versions of the works of Galen, with their dates.

CAMPBELL, DONALD—Continued

"The two volumes of Dr. Campbell's work represent an original contribution to a difficult branch of historical study. They are the first and only work showing a comprehensive and detailed investigation of Arabian culture and the influence it exerted on the Latin West."

Boston Transcript p5 J1 31 '26 530w

"The book will have a certain value for readers who have not access to the volumes from which it has been compiled, but it is ill-digested, repeats itself often, and has the air of a hasty compilation from sources not always understood; witness the curious way in which the MSS. are described. Dr. Campbell ought to have given much more work to his book, or have left it unpublished."

— Sat R 141:236 F 20 '26 180w

Spec 137:288 Ag 21 '26 120w

"Both volumes contain an undue number of misprints or misreadings of Latin works. On the other hand, they contain a great deal of industrious compilation, and may well be of use in saving the labour of those that are subsequent investigators of this literature."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p202 Mr 18 '26 560w

CAMPBELL, MRS HARRIETTE (RUSSELL).

² Patsy's brother. 344p il $1.75 Harper

26-16268

Patsy is a friend of Renée, the heroine of The little great lady. (Book Review Digest, 1925) The children meet unconventionally near the English country house where Renée is staying, and might never have met again but for a runaway pony named Brown Sugar. Patsy hates school and her studies and behavior suitable for a little girl; but she loves her brother Michael dearly and for his sake does her best at all these things. Many surprising things happen, but none so astonishing as the discovery that Michael is really a Russian prince and that he prefers to remain, for the time at least, just Patsy's brother.

"A swiftly moving and competently executed story which girls capable of enjoying much better things are likely to gobble if they can get it."

Outlook 144:409 N 24 '26 80w

"All the chapters are well written, and will be found interesting—especially the typically English scenes to an American child."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:432 D 11 '26 110w

Spring'd Republican p7f D 12 '26 110w

CANBY, HENRY SEIDEL. Better writing. 141p $1.35 Harcourt

808 Authorship

26-10353

The rule seems to be this: first lay hold of your idea; then turn it over in your mind until suddenly it lays hold of you. You will probably then begin to write. The purpose of the book is to offer reasoned suggestions on how to put into that writing the most and the best that you can.

Booklist 23:4 O '26

"Here is a book that is all meat for the already educated person who wishes to put his education to use in writing. It is, perhaps, almost too condensed to be agreeable reading, though by its very packed style it gains emphasis and intensity that will carry conviction. Mr. Canby is to be congratulated upon having accomplished the almost impossible; competing with innumerable textbooks on rhetoric with which commercial publishers flood the market, he has said something new about how to write, and he has said it interestingly." Stanley Alden

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 S 26 '26 550w

"Anyone who has to write more than his signature will find the book invaluable." F. E. J.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 5 '26 520w

"Excellent little manual." Simeon Strunsky
+ N Y Times p4 My 9 '26 400w

Outlook 143:449 J1 28 '26 120w

"It exemplifies in thought, style and tone the precepts it has laid down, and these virtues, to which must be added the lively spirit which pervades the pages, make it the best current text on composition for college sophomores and juniors." G. C. Knight

Sat R of Lit 3:3 J1 31 '26 760w

Wis Lib Bul 22:196 Je '26

CANDLER, EDMUND. Dinosaur's egg. 312p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d W. Blackwood]

26-12532

"Uncle Bliss" is a creature of fabulous interest to the children. He has traveled far and wide and has an exciting museum of his own. He dashes off on sudden expeditions to hunt for a pterodactyl, or to buy a dinosaur's egg in New York. Between whiles he visits his pseudo relatives in their quiet country home in England, where his extraordinary doings rival the magic of the antelope's horn—witch doctor magic called Chimbashi—in their shattering effect on the family tranquillity. The children's father tells the story.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ap 26 '26 180w

Reviewed by L. G. Short

Lit R p4 My 1 '26 230w

Nation and Ath 38:154 O 24 '25 80w

"Mr. Candler has given us a delightful book, but one which it is difficult to classify. The narrator tells his story admirably and leaves us a picture too familiar in these days of the anxieties of the man of small property."

+ Sat R 140:378 O 3 '25 150w

"It begins nowhere, travels along at a jog trot for a while, and ends where it began. Readers who enjoy a literary round trip with few thrills and no dangers will enjoy the excursion."

Sat R of Lit 2:725 Ap 17 '26 200w

"The freshness of Mr. Candler's humour and the restraint and delicacy of his characterization make 'The Dinosaur's Egg' a delightful achievement."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p654 O 8 '25 420w

CANE, MELVILLE. January garden. 70p $2 Harcourt

811

26-4008

Poems of nature in rhyme and free verse.

"Melville Cane shows a talent for delicate and original imagery and an ability to catch the subtle moods of nature. However, the poems lack intensity, perhaps because of a certain diffuseness in their form." Margery Swett

+ — Bookm 63:487 Je '26 100w

"Melville Cane is not just another nature poet. He possesses distinct originality of feeling and observation. Out of the same material we all have access to he distills perfumes peculiarly his own." Garetta Busey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 16 '26 400w

Reviewed by Marianne Moore

Dial 81:69 J1 '26 250w

"Mr. Cane is most comfortable in those poems that are direct impressions from Nature. There he is swift, electric almost—he is a poet excellent in the manipulation of motor images. The epigrammatic, ironic poem ('Cows') is hardly his forte, and hardly worth the expenditure of his images. Nor is he, I think successful in his urban poems ('City Sounds'). H. A. Potamkin

+ — Lit R p9 Mr 27 '26 230w

"No single piece in this book achieves the miracle of being poetry, and yet most of the inclusions show an awareness of the sensuous world which is one of poetry's strongest roots. The rhymes are obtrusive. The feeling for rhythm is poor, and most of the lyrics jerk like marionettes in unskilful hands."

— + Nation 122:457 Ap 21 '26 50w

Reviewed by Emanuel Eisenberg

N Y World p6m My 2 '26 100w

"This is an unusual book of verse. It looks enough like many others to deceive the casual glance, but the reader who loves poetry will recognize in these seventy pages something rare. A rare spirit, first of all. I think him a true poet because I find in his work not the meaning nature may have for him, but the meaning it has for me—and I suspect that others too will find their portrait here." J. Erskine

+ Sat R of Lit 2:644 Mr 20 '26 850w

Springf'd Republican p7f My 2 '26 200w

CANFIELD, MRS FLAVIA A. (CAMP). Around the world at eighty; with introd. by her daughter, Dorothy Canfield Fisher. 213p il $2.50 Tuttle

910 Voyages and travels 26-467

"Dorothy Canfield Fisher's mother took a notion last year at the age of eighty to circumnavigate the globe. What's more, she did it, and this book consists of the 'round robins' she sent home from Java or Jerusalem or wherever she happened to be at the moment."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"They make pleasant reading because they are natural and unstudied, an example of what a clear, observant mind, despite the supposed handicap of fourscore years, can do."

+ Bookm 63:xxvi Ap '26 170w

"She enjoyed it all hugely and wrote of it with heart-warming humanity, a most charming humor and excellent grace of style and thought."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 F 21 '26 250w

"As letters these of Mrs. Canfield are delightful, and as inspiration to octogenarians they give us pause!" D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 13 '26 1000w

"She went on her trip alone, and lagged no whit behind her companions in the energy with which she took in the sights her extended itinerary provided. Her narrative ought to fill the hearts of the ageing with courage."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:654 Mr 20 '26 120w

CANNON, CORNELIA JAMES. Pueblo boy; a story of Coronado's search for the seven cities of Cibola. 197p il $2 Houghton

Indians of North America—Fiction 26-18498

The story of a twelve year old Indian boy, Tyami, the Eagle. When in 1540 the dreaded Spaniard Coronado crossed the desert with his party of explorers and penetrated that part of Indian country later to be called New Mexico, Tyami won the white man's friendship and saved his tribe from death.

"More than a good story, for the reader will absorb from it a friendly and accurate picture of Pueblo life and custom." H: Boston

+ Ind 117:550 N 13 '26 70w

"This romantic period of American history is so little worked that any tolerable account of it should have a cordial welcome. Miss Cannon's story has much to commend it for general veracity not only to the historical occasion, but to pueblo life so far as it has come down to us, and should prove valuable to schools."

Mary Austin

+ New Repub 48:348 N 10 '26 380w

CARHART, GEORGE SAND, and MCGHEE, PAUL A., comps. Magic casements. 727p $2 Macmillan

821.08 English poetry—Collections. American poetry—Collections 26-6995

An anthology of English verse for high school boys and girls. "Poems from classical and contemporary fields have been chosen, regardless of chronological periods and of schools of poetry; the main consideration has been the poem itself and the appeal that it makes." (Preface) There is also a trade edition with the title "Through magic casements" published at $2.50.

Booklist 22:408 J1 '26

Boston Transcript p4 J1 24 '26 120w

"Some of the best poems of our language are gathered here. They vary extensively, as they should, and they represent the romance and the dreams that for centuries have stirred our race to song. The volume is truly a magic casement that opens on unforgettable seas."

+ Ind 116:533 My 1 '26 50w

St Louis 24:317 N '26

CARLETON, MRS MARJORIE CHALMERS. Swinging goddess. 338p $2 Small

26-9566

"Helga, the Goddess, is a Junoesque trapeze and tight-rope artiste. She has strong leanings toward a gentility alien to her people and environment, the ambition to break with her uncouth relatives and become a 'lady.' With this aim in view, she goes partially through college concealing the nature of her kin and past; then, still in disguise she is engaged as the hired companion, and is soon the wife, (in name only) of a wealthy young, war-wrecked aristocrat. They grow to love each other, though the course of their affections' flowering is fraught with the usual difficulties, due chiefly to Helga's persistent refusal to disclose her identity and to her husband's natural indignation when her deception is unmasked."

—Sat R of Lit

"This is a very entertaining book. It is written not with polish but with forceful charm, and its characters have enough intelligence to make them completely interesting." Elizabeth Todd

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 My 30 '26 560w

Boston Transcript p4 My 12 '26 320w

N Y Times p27 My 30 '26 480w

"It is all very simple, lively, and not the least bit real, but spiritedly written and generously supplied with conventional theatricals."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:792 My 15 '26 160w

CARMAN, MRS DOROTHY (WALWORTH). Pride of the town. 365p $2 Harper

26-7268

The Christopher Kelloggs have their idea of what is worth while in life and the town has a different one. Christopher is the first to conform. He joins a lodge and the ranks of the commuters as the town expects him to do, gives up his music, and for a time at any rate is a model business man. Hypatia is made of sterner stuff. She holds out uncompromisingly for her ideals, taking time from house-keeping to cultivate her poetic gift. The story tells with humor how the snubbed young couple came to be the pride of the town.

"Mrs. Carman has a point to make and she makes it with all the strength she can gather into words, and her point is well worth making. The fact remains, however, that the people that animate her idea are merely stalking horses, so roughly are they pulled out of shape so as to fit the pattern."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 2 '26 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 D '26

"Mrs. Carman has written an entertaining book, as well as a clever exposition of the evils of over-organization and an appeal for the rights of the individual." M. B. B.

Int Bk R p584 Ag '26 350w

"This New England Main Street, often pictured with buffoonish exaggeration, is too reminiscent of a witch-burning epoch to be plausible in the present decade." J. R.

CARMAN, DOROTHY—Continued

— New Repub 47:122 Je 16 '26 150w

"Spirited and somewhat daring figures of speech were a delightful part of 'Faith of Our Fathers.' Mrs. Carman has become somewhat mannered, almost self-conscious, in the new book. She has written a light-weight book in which her beautiful wrath has simmered down to common scolding."

— N Y Times p8 Ap 11 '26 680w

"It is a distinct falling off from Mrs. Carman's delightful first novel, 'Faith of Our Fathers.'"

— N Y World p7m Ap 18 '26 220w

"Except for the fault of unrestraint the novel is competent, entertaining, moderately humorous and thoughtful."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:793 My 15 '26 160w

Wis Lib Bul 22:141 Ap '26

CARNCROSS, HORACE LEEDOM. Escape from the primitive. 348p $2.50 Scribner

130 Psychoanalysis. Social psychology 26-19466

Dr Carncross surveys the path over which, biologically and psychologically, man has come, marks the load of motives he has picked up on the way and stored into his "Unconscious"—or as the author terms it, the Primitive—and explains what an examination and understanding of these stored motives may mean to man in the future development of body and spirit.

"With pertinent observations the book is filled; and because of such observations it is to be recommended as thoughtful and stimulating as well as popular in its methods and scientific in its basis." S. A. Coblenz

+ Lit R p6 N 6 '26 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p727 O 21 '26 150w

CARPENTIER, GEORGES. Art of boxing. 172p il $1.50 Doran [3s 6d Harrap]

796 Boxing 26-10997

The French champion looks back over the route he has traveled and points out notable features along the way. The carefully posed illustrations illustrate his methods of defense and attack.

Booklist 23:18 O '26

Ind 117:85 Jl 17 '26 80w

"It is exactly what it professes to be a textbook on the art of boxing, in which Mr. Carpentier has displayed notable proficiency. Unless it be regarded as tainted by occasional reminiscences from Mr. Carpentier's professional experience, it could well find a place on the shelves of a Y.M.C.A. library. The boy who wants to raise himself to be a champion will read it with absorbed technical interest and doubtless derive much of value even though Mr. Carpentier's exposition of his art is so orthodox as to verge on the platitudinous." Elmer Davis

+ — N Y Times p1 Je 27 '26 450w

N Y World p4m My 23 '26 350w

"Although it is primarily concerned with the technical aspect of the art, the writer has liberally sprinkled his text with personal recollections which serve ostensibly the purpose of illustration, but are incidentally an enlightening self-commentary. The young boxer, whether professional or amateur, will find his book of great practical value, wonderfully lucid and sane."

+ Sat R 141:690 Je 5 '26 150w

Sat R of Lit 2:923 Jl 10 '26 220w

Spec 136:673 Ap 10 '26 50w

"Perhaps one would have preferred a fuller and more truly autobiographical study of the man who did more to make France into one of the leading sporting nations than any other person. No doubt the troubles of translation have helped to deprive us of that privilege. Still, there are faint traces of a personal revelation in the book, and all those who have seen Carpentier in action can safely buy this book to help refresh their memories of and interest in a fairly interesting period in boxing—that part previous to and that immediately after the war."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p267 Ap 8 '26 220w

CARR-SAUNDERS, ALEXANDER MORRIS.

Eugenics. (Home univ. lib. of modern knowledge) 256p $1 Holt [2s 6d Williams & N.]

575.1 Eugenics 26-15565

A brief, elementary treatment of eugenics which makes clear in its opening chapter the distinction between the science of eugenics, which the author defines as "the study of the part played by inheritance in human affairs," and applied eugenics. It is to eugenics as a science that most of the book is devoted, with a concluding chapter on the desirability of taking measures to control racial change.

Booklist 23:115 D '26

"Very clear and reasonable volume." H. M. Parshley

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 S 12 '26 120w

"The reader will find all known data collected here, and careful deductions drawn; so he may get a very clear idea of a present knowledge of eugenics. The work is well done, and accuracy is evident, except in a few places where the inaccuracy seems to be due to careless proofreading."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ja 8 '27 350w

Nation and Ath 39:676 S 11 '26 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p817 N 18 '26 520w

Wis Lib Bul 22:271 O '26

CARRERE, JEAN. The pope; tr. by Arthur Chambers. 265p $3 Holt

282 Papacy 26-16615

Written by a French layman who knows and loves Rome and the church, this study of papal Rome begins with a sketch of Peter, the founder of the church. A chapter entitled Peter and Caesar, which takes up more than a third of the book, interprets the long struggle between the spiritual and temporal power of Rome, between the successors of Peter and the successors of the Caesars. The last chapter is devoted to the Roman question—the right of the papacy to maintain in Rome the power it has so long exercised there.

Booklist 23:108 D '26

Reviewed by Martyn Hemphill

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Jl 25 '26 750w

Boston Transcript p2 My 15 '26 480w

"The lively, brilliant, and alluring way in which the thesis is developed evokes in the reader an avidity such as he would experience in the perusal of a masterpiece of fiction. The book holds the mind enchanted and convinced." T. F. B.

+ Cath World 122:275 N '25 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p91 Jl '26

"Though written first of all for a French audience, American Catholics who wish to watch the development of the international affairs of the Holy See will find this book of interest. It is not, however, fully abreast of the times, as events since the latter months of 1923 find no mention."

+ — Living Age 329:602 Je 12 '26 130w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 Ap 18 '26 2800w

"A charming picture of Peter himself prefaces this story of the mighty struggle. The best of a well written book, it breathes life into the saint, resurrecting his humanity, his impetuosity, his love of the Master. . . M. Carrere distinguishes carefully between the efforts of Caesars to dominate the Papacy and the unification of Italy under the House of Savoy. Here the author is guided by affection for both and the result is the most intelligent explanation of the Roman question ever written."

+ N Y World p6m Ap 25 '26 750w

Sat R of Lit 2:956 J1 24 '26 180w

"It is the atmosphere with which the book surrounds its subject matter that makes its final appeal. The argument is presented in a spirit of devotion and loyalty and is enlivened by engaging selections from history. From its description of ancient splendor to its forecast of future glory it is consistently colorful. The translation has retained the vividness of the style of the original." J. S. B.

+ Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 1 '26 1250w

Wis Lib Bul 22:292 N '26

CARRICK, ALICE VAN LEER. Collector's luck in England. 229p il $3 Little

749 Collectors and collecting 26-18699

In the form of letters to friends at home Mrs Carrick writes enthusiastically of her collector's finds in England, giving definite information about the places where she found them and the prices she paid. In the appendix a list of recommended antique shops is given; with notes about prices and treatment received.

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 D 12 '26 80w

"Along with the story of her adventures she has managed to give her real or suppositious correspondents some good advice about collecting antiques in England. For one thing she tells the lady who is about to visit England to 'read up' on the history, the customs and the traditions of the country she is about to see. Pack the mind to overflowing before leaving home. No one takes much out of travel, foreign or domestic, unless he takes something where he goes. And so the hints about good places to eat or to dwell or to shop are things that one should take abroad, and of these Mrs. Carrick is prodigal." G. H. S.

Boston Transcript p8 N 13 '26 450w

"Pleasantly intimate, and chatty in style, but occasionally lapsing into strained and uncritical enthusiasm over mere trifles which one is disposed to call 'junk.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 3:474 D 25 '26 310w

Springf'd Republican p6f D 12 '26 450w

CARROLL, LEWIS, pseud. (CHARLES LUTWIDGE DODGSON). Further nonsense verse and prose; ed. by Langford Reed. 119p il $2 Appleton [7s 6d Unwin]

827 Nonsense verses 26-19905

"Forgotten or hitherto unpublished specimens of the work of Lewis Carroll. Many of the selections are skits and verses written during the author's boyhood and young manhood, before his wonderful talent for writing real nonsense verse and prose had reached its full development. A number of the selections in Mr. Reed's book are from letters written by Lewis Carroll to his young friends, and many of these are delightful."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p8 N 10 '26 750w

"These scraps, collected from magazines and the less-known books of Lewis Carroll, would none of them have made him the immortal author that he is. They have all of his faults, few those may be, together, with only a fair share of his supreme virtue."

— Nation 123:512 N 17 '26 40w

N Y Times p2 D 12 '26 650w

"In a golden age of literature his star sparkled inimitably apart. But his 'Further Verse and Prose' does not add to its lustre. The contents are gleaned from old magazines and old letters to children. They are only mildly entertaining. Very mildly so. They are but odds and ends and scraps and snippets that hardly warrant book-covers save for the avid collector of the worst with the best."

— Sat R of Lit 3:436 D 11 '26 200w

"A bad example of the growing practice of making indifferent books at the expense of great writers no longer able to defend themselves. Mr. Langford Reed adds nothing to our knowledge or appreciation of the immortal author of Alice by quoting childish verse from the Rectory Umbrella and silly little stories from The Whitby Gazette. As private curiosities, and as an amusement for collectors no doubt these pieces have interest. But to the world at large they can have no meaning and there seems no reason why a large book on thick paper should be devoted to their exploitation." Humbert Wolfe

— Spec 137:822 N 6 '26 150w

CARTER, HUNTLY. New spirit in the European theatre, 1914-1924; a comparative study of the changes affected by the war and revolution. 292p il $7.50 Doran [25s Benn]

792 Theater—Europe 26-3911

The author's thesis is that "the war has produced a new spirit in those theaters directly affected by it." The three parts into which the book is divided trace the influence of the war, the influence of the Russian revolution, and the influence of peace on the theaters of France, England and Germany.

Booklist 23:19 O '26

"Huntly Carter, who apparently spends his life trotting around Europe and going to the theater, has compiled a new book, no better written than his others, but containing material of great interest." W. P. Eaton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 F 21 '26 420w

"The argument is as weak as the metaphor is mixed. Mr Carter doesn't really know workers. They are not after purity but for just what the other fellow has."

— Dial 81:174 Ag '26 200w

Nation and Ath 38:362 D 5 '25 240w

"Mr. Huntly Carter's account of the lurid lubricity of the theatre during the war strikes me, who also survived those years, as rather exaggerated. When I read the pages referring to that time, I could hardly believe that I had, indeed, lived through such a prolonged saturnalia. I think the social historian of the future, if he takes Mr. Huntly Carter as his guide, will write a too exciting chapter on those years."

— New Statesman 26:272 D 12 '25 200w

"The author's innocence of what the public wants does not prevent the informative parts of his book from being extremely useful. He has inspected the post-war European theatre in all its phases of vigorous unrest and creative adventure, and he has a particularly interesting chapter on the foreign theatrical reactions to the domination of the machine in modern life."

+ Sat R 140:664 D 5 '25 230w

"There are times in reading this book when one feels that perhaps the author is too much a puritan. I am sure he would be accused of this by many theatrical folk. But after all, one does not need to be a puritan to be revolted by wholesale corruption, and it is with just that that Mr. Carter is dealing." Glenn Hughes

+ Sat R of Lit 2:784 My 15 '26 1050w

"The faults tend to obscure what is valuable in Mr. Carter's exceedingly comprehensive summary, and to convert his hope of a regenerated theatre into an idle dissatisfaction with what the theatre offers."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p833 D 3 '25 400w

CARTER, HUNTLY. New theatre and cinema of soviet Russia. 278p il $6 International pub. [25s Chapman & Dodd]

792 Theater—Russia [24-14402]

At his own expense the author made a difficult journey thru soviet Russia gathering the material for this book. Since the Revolution of 1917, and as a direct outgrowth of it, a new theatre has been established in Russia. The author analyzes the three distinct groups which form this new theatre movement.

"Some innovations he tells about sound quite mad. Others sound mediæval, as if the Russian workers were evolving a theater at times not unlike the pre-Shakespearean stage. But it all sounds fascinating and tremendously alive." W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 O 18 '25 250w

"A most important book on the theater. Of all phases of the Russian stage and cinema, Mr. Carter's book is a thorough and comprehensive analysis. It is exceedingly well documented with photographs and drawings. The author has obviously gone to a tremendous amount of trouble in the cause of accuracy. Mr. Carter's style is, however, unhappily tiresome. In his anxiety to prove his various theses, he is repetitious to an exasperating degree." Arthur Moss
+ — Nation 119:53 J1 9 '24 680w

"Though highly informing, it is written from the standpoint of a passionate doctrinaire whose judgments will be taken with a grain of salt by those who do not share his contempt for all the literature created under 'bourgeois' or 'intellectual' influence."

+ — Nation 122:586 My 26 '26 50w

"One cannot help admiring the detached way in which Mr. Carter, throughout the whole book, has avoided the least political prejudice in his criticism. In a country where the drama is considered by the Government as primarily a medium for political propaganda, and every play that is allowed upon the stage must have its political significance, this can have been no easy task."

New Statesman 23:356 Je 28 '24 1100w

"If one is willing to sift out Carter's facts from his obtruded and biased opinions and to place not too great credence in his minor details, he will obtain the first comprehensive panorama of what has happened on and to the Russian stage in the last seven years." O. M. Saylor

+ — N Y Times p23 D 28 '25 1500w

Spec 132:130 J1 26 '24 900w

"Contains a good deal of ill-defined theorizing and much inaccuracy."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p398 Je 26 '24 1000w

CARTER, JOHN FRANKLIN. Man is war. 398p $3.50 Bobbs

341 War. World politics. International law and relations 26-19349

A discussion and summary of international affairs forms the background for the author's thesis that as man is a fighting animal, so long as man survives there will be wars. Of these Mr Carter predicts for the more immediate future a not impossible three.

"Mr. John Carter's new book, 'Man Is War,' is an excellent study of international affairs, to which its title does something less than justice." J. Bakeless

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 O 24 '26 800w

Boston Transcript p2 N 13 '26 500w

"His observations on the political effects of various world religions are extraordinarily acute; his description of the means by which the Roman Catholic Church holds its unique place in the world is an excellent piece of reporting and gains credence from its very conciseness and restraint. Nevertheless, his book is, fundamentally, an overstatement. Some men are war, and some men are peace; and the peace men are gaining ground." Arthur Pound

+ — Ind 117:595 N 20 '26 400w

"Mr. Carter's thesis is fundamentally biological, although, based as he says on his own experience, his argument is largely political." R. M. Lovett

New Repub 48:380 N 17 '26 1300w

"The argument is carried on with a sure touch, and very often brilliantly. Mr. Carter is far more civilized, far more sophisticated, far more gifted in a literary way, than the majority of those who advance this kind of argument. He has earned the right to be disenchanted and makes it good with a shrewd lance. Yet it is as a personal document, representative of the intellectual and emotional experiences of a large number of young men of his generation, that the book seems most important. In that respect it may even be classed with the much more fantastical efforts of such writers as Aldous Huxley and T. S. Eliot."

R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p1 O 17 '26 2050w

Reviewed by Elmer Davis

Sat R of Lit 3:290 N 13 '26 1950w

CARTER, MORRIS. Isabella Stewart Gardner and Fenway court. 254p il $6 Houghton [25s Heinemann]

B or 92 Gardner, Isabella (Stewart) (Mrs Jack Gardner). Isabella Stewart Gardner museum, Boston 25-22125

"The life of Mrs. Jack Gardner and the history of the museum of art which she bequeathed to the public. Her temper, her whimsicalities, her insolences, and her benefactions are all given some mention in this book; there are portraits of her by great artists and photographs of the inside of the museum."—Outlook

Booklist 22:207 F '26

Reviewed by L: Mumford

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ja 17 '26 600w

Reviewed by J: H. Sedgwick

Boston Transcript p1 O 31 '25 3700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p66 My '26

"The biography is a good one. Nothing is held back. She is all there. Read it."

+ Dial 80:162 F '26 160w

Nation 122:560 My 19 '26 120w

Outlook 142:30 Ja 6 '26 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:151 Mr '26

"Presumably this is not a full representation of Mrs Gardner's character any more than it is a complete record of her life. But it is no stupid attempt at flattery or apology. It is the work of a man who knows how to discriminate in the selection of details and who has the power of composing a vivid, vivacious and vital picture."

+ Springfd Republican p7a N 8 '25 2150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p153 Mr 4 '26

950w

CARTER, ROBERT GOLDTHWAITE, ed. See Charlton, J: B.

CASE, JOHN. Strength of materials; a treatise on the theory of stress calculations for engineers. 558p $10 Longmans [30s E. Arnold]
620.1 Strength of materials 26-1893

"Mathematical treatment for advanced students, presenting also elementary principles and considering a number of topics not usually found in textbooks. Does not deal with methods of testing, testing machines, or metallurgical aspects."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"The whole is a welcome contribution to engineering literature. The numerous references to various authorities contained in the footnotes are not the least valuable feature of the book, and, in addition to sets of good examples at the ends of the chapters, a large variety of interesting and instructive practical examples are worked out in the text." E. H. L.

+ — Nature 117:11 Ja 2 '26 250w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:48 O '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:138 Mr '26

Times [London] Lit Sup p676 O 15 '25 40w

CASSEL, GUSTAV. Fundamental thoughts in economics. 153p $1.50 Harcourt [6s Unwin]

330.1 Economics

Agr26-929

Into this small volume the author has compressed the basic ideas contained in his many works on economics. Contents: Aims and methods of economic theory; Economics as a theory of price; The principle of scarcity and the conception of cost; The scarcity theory of money.

"Readers of Cassel's Theory of Social Economy will welcome this compact and lucid exposition of his system of thought. Those not familiar with the larger work will find this an excellent prelude to it." A. B. Wolfe

+ Am Econ R 16:461 S '26 270w

"The present book is welcome, for it offers to the readers, in brief space and at moderate cost, Professor Cassel's own summary of what he chooses to call his fundamental thoughts in economics. As a matter of fact, the success which has attended the distinguished writer's effort to compress the basic tenets of his theoretical system into briefest compass and to exhibit those tenets in logical correlation with each other is noteworthy. No less so is the lucidity with which he has in general managed to express himself in a foreign language." K: W. Bigelow

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Mr 21 '26 1000w

Int J Ethics 36:442 Jl '26 100w

Nation 123:227 S 8 '26 50w

New Statesman 26:338 D 26 '25 600w

Spring'd Republican p16 Ap 14 '26 250w

CATHER, WILLA SIBERT. My mortal enemy. 122p il $2.50 Knopf

26-18508

In Myra Henshaw, Miss Cather has painted another portrait of a lady seen, like Marian Forrester, thru the eyes of an admiring yet clear-sighted friend of a younger generation. Myra Driscoll was an orphan brought up by her rich great-uncle in the fine old Driscoll home in Parthia, Illinois. The price the wilful, high-spirited girl paid for her runaway marriage was the omission of her name in her uncle's will and a lifelong discontent. Love was not enough. Myra was, by her own confession, a greedy, selfish, worldly woman who wanted success and a place in the world. The young girl who narrates the story saw her on three occasions, once when Myra was visiting in Parthia, a woman of forty-five with a strange fascination about her, again in New York and finally, ten years later, in a shabby West coast hotel where, ministered to by her devoted, if ineffectual husband, she was dying alone with her "mortal enemy," her inescapable, turbulent self.

"My Mortal Enemy is a brilliant study of temperament. Nothing that Miss Cather has written—not even A Lost Lady—has more vitality; and nothing is more relentless." E. W. Hawkins

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '26 270w

Booklist 23:132 D '26

"If this story—it is only a longish short story, not a novel, and to present it as such is to raise unwarranted expectations—were the work of any less distinguished author, one would call it admirable, but rather as promise than performance. It recalls Miss Cather's first little novel, 'Alexander's Bridge,' rather than the glowing pages of 'My Antonia.' To be sure, the easy and lucent prose is superior to that of the earlier work; but there is the same discrepancy between the author's apparent intention and the actual effect produced." Isabel Paterson

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 O 24 '26 900w

"Miss Cather's story can by no stretch of the imagination be called a novel. It is so short that it is truly a soul portrait and an incomplete one at that. She develops her story by incident rather than by analysis of situation. What results is something resembling a pencil sketch that an artist makes and in which he roughly marks out the outlines of his subject, vaguely hinting at the general form that the finished painting on canvas will take." Sidney Homer

— Boston Transcript p6 D 11 '26 600w

"A character study of such severity that even its rightful emotional quality has been denied it; it is presented with a creative tautness which robs it of warmth. The story is set down with unquestioned economy and skill; it has touches of swift discernment, but it would be a better work of art if the mind could fasten upon an occasional moment of relaxation in its unfolding. Although a work of imagination, it has the surface of glazed pottery."

+ — Dial 82:73 Ja '27 80w

"Critics have pointed out that each of Miss Cather's succeeding novels is shorter than the last. The instrument of her technique grows sharper at each trial, so that 'My Mortal Enemy,' though a full-length portrait, is only twenty thousand words long. One can hardly find a fault in the perfection of the author's technique, or complain that it is inadequate to her subject; but now and then one is led to wish perhaps ungraciously that she had used another instrument occasionally or chosen a subject that required one."

+ — Ind 117:568 N 13 '26 380w

"Miss Cather's slender volume is an exceptionally fine piece of work, a book which it would perhaps not be unduly extravagant to call a little masterpiece." L. M. Field

+ — Int Bk R p761 N '26 450w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

Lit R p3 O 30 '26 400w

"This method of Miss Cather's—and she has never, I think, been entirely successful except when adhering to it—has its obvious limitations. It does not stir deep passions and it is, as Nietzsche would have said, to the last degree Apollonian. The mood is a minor mood, brooding and faintly melancholic, with an eye turned always backward. But in the midst of our strident literature its graceful ease has a charm not easy to overestimate. Whenever Miss Cather evokes memory there comes with it a lingering fragrance." J. W. Krutch

Nation 123:484 N 10 '26 680w

New Repub 49:22 N 24 '26 420w

"For several reasons Miss Cather's latest story will doubtless be compared with 'A Lost Lady.' Both books are short. Both have something of the same framework, the same approach. And both have to do, though only one of them makes the fact explicit, with a lost lady. But this time, unfortunately, though it is only fair to suppose that her exact aims are different, Miss Cather has fallen short, rather far short, of her earlier level. Her lost lady, is not so real, not so moving, not so delightful. Her background, if less ambitiously attempted, is much less significantly achieved. Her approach, through the eyes of a second person, is by no means as sensitive and significant as Neil's to Mrs. Forrester in 'A Lost Lady.' And 'My Mortal Enemy' is dangerously, destructively briefer." L: Kronenberger

+ — N Y Times p2 O 24 '26 1000w

N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 50w

"The art of this book is austere, a fabric of true renunciations, aristocratic, disdainful—perhaps even too disdainful of that slack-

CATHER, WILLA SIBERT—Continued
 slipped, unblushing gossip who lurks at the heart of every born novel reader. I, for one, should have liked to know more of Oswald and Myra. One thing is certain. Miss Cather has given us neither more nor less than she meant to give; and, doubtless, if we still crave more, that too was thoughtfully foreseen and un pityingly ignored." L. W. Dodd
 + Sat R of Lit 3:234 O 23 '26 560w

CATULLUS, GAIUS. VALERIUS. Catullus, the complete poems; tr. and ed. by F. A. Wright; with an introd. (Broadway translations) 249p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

874.2 26-12055

Introductory essays on Catullus, and his contemporaries, his Lesbia, and his poems are followed by a translation of all the poems arranged largely in chronological order. In some instances other versions are added, "As a palliative," the translator modestly explains, "and to hide, at least in part, the imperfections of my own work."

Reviewed by E. S. Duckett
 Class Philol 21:312 O '26 250w

Reviewed by P. A. Hutchison
 N Y Times p13 J1 4 '26 1400w

"For readers interested in a great poet and one of the great love stories of all time, who lack the scholarship or the dogged industry that is required to labor through the volumes of Robinson Ellis and Munro, this book deserves its place even on the cramped shelves of a small apartment." Elmer Davis

Sat R of Lit 2:817 My 29 '26 2700w

CAVE, CHARLES JOHN PHILIP. Clouds and weather phenomena; for artists and other lovers of nature. 29p il $2 Macmillan [5s Cambridge univ. press]

551.5 Clouds [26-26718]

"Mr. Cave writes about the causes of the colors of the sky and the sunset, about rainbows and sun and moon halos and coronae, about Brocken spectres and mirages and the moon, and, of course, a great deal about clouds, and the causes and significance of their forms. The small volume is beautifully illustrated."—N Y Times

Booklist 23:14 O '26

Boston Transcript p3 J1 3 '26 100w

"While a work on clouds by Mr. Cave will undoubtedly be read by most meteorologists, the book is not intended for those engaged in the study of the weather but for the general public, and more particularly for artists, whose knowledge of cloud forms is often shown by their works to be very slight. In accordance with this object, the book is written in the simplest manner and contains scarcely any reference to meteorological theory." J. S. D.

+ Nature 118:369 S 11 '26 280w

"It is all done in a style remarkable for its non-technical character and for the simplicity and clearness with which the author has put all his scientific information into concise and brief explanation."

+ N Y Times p12 J1 18 '26 550w

CENDRARS, BLAISE. Sutter's gold; tr. from the French by Henry Longan Stuart. 179p il $2.50 Harper

B or 92 Sutter, Johann August. California—Gold discoveries 26-16117

It has remained for a Frenchman to write the story of Johann August Sutter, Swiss pioneer, who emigrated to America in 1834, established a settlement called New Helvetia on the site of the present city of Sacramento and became for a time the largest landowner in America. Then the gold fever came. Gold was discovered on Sutter's property. Gold diggers swarmed over it, burned his mills, ravaged his land and ruined his immense enterprise. He received no protection from the law. For years the Sutter case followed its course thru the courts and in the end all that was left to remind him of his great enterprise was a pension of $3000 granted by the California legislature.

Booklist 23:166 Ja '27

"The story itself is so interesting that I have said very little of the manner in which it is written. It may be well to add that it is worthy of its subject and that Mr. Stuart's translation is more than competent." Harrison Smith

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 S 19 '26 1400w

Boston Transcript p5 O 30 '26 360w

Cleveland Open Shelf p131 D '26

Reviewed by Landon Robinson

Lit R p4 O 30 '26 560w

Living Age 331:375 N 15 '26 130w

"He manages to express the spirit and life of the country during that period of unparalleled expansion and exploitation with almost uniform fidelity." Faith Maris

New Repub 48:227 O 13 '26 520w

"After all, the Frenchman's way of telling the story has its points. The story itself is one of the most extraordinary in the annals of the making of this country. It is not often that we get our sagas told by a foreigner, and they gain a certain flavor in the alien telling." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p4 O 3 '26 1200w

"'Sutter's Gold' is a swiftly moving, dramatic story, told with severe economy and astonishing skill. The effects are achieved by a skilful combination of historic fact and imaginative detail." C. H. Grattan

+ N Y World p9m O 10 '26 280w

Outlook 144:216 O 13 '26 170w

"A superb book." M. R. Werner

+ Sat R of Lit 3:253 O 30 '26 1600w

Wis Lib Bul 22:332 D '26

CERF, BARRY. Anatole France; the degeneration of a great artist. 303p $4 Dial

B or 92 France, Anatole 26-22428

"Here is a book by a college professor on the Pacific Coast which undertakes to reveal the man by the analysis of his art. France, it seems to this writer, was not a serious artist—or quite a great artist—because he was not a serious man. He degenerated from a genial ironist, with certain kinship to Dickens, into a cynic who set himself 'seriously to work to extinguish the fires of our faith both in God and man.'"—N Y Times

"That a great many people feel as Professor Cerf does is probably true, and it is right that they should have a spokesman to tell them exactly what is what about Anatole France. This has not been done in English before. Therefore this volume will possibly fill a long felt want. Its interest for the kind of readers Anatole France addressed and deserves, however, is negligible." Ernest Boyd

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 D 26 '26 1100w

"His book is virtually an attack not only on France the writer but also on France the man, and it will doubtless seem to most of its readers rather an unnecessary one."

— Boston Transcript p6 D 22 '26 340w

"Here is a book which, as the first serious study of Anatole France in English, will have a wide reading and influence. This is unfortunate because the book does not convey the truth about its subject."

— Ind 118:52 Ja 8 '27 230w

"No one should object to the expression of an opinion sanely conceived and sincerely given. But in this case one feels as annoyed by so obstinate a desire to destroy as one does by the persistent buzzing of a mosquito. It is obvious that the author has read the writings of Anatole France carefully, diligently and extensively, and that he has pondered his most startling statements. Unable to make up his mind just how to accept them, he decided to use and quote only those that would prove his point; starting with a ready-made opinion, he has proceeded to substantiate it by extracts from France's writings. Of a literal turn of mind, he takes everything to the letter, all the while reproaching France for not being 'serious.' If Mr. Cerf's book is a model of what he conceives to be seriousness, many readers will be thankful to Anatole France for showing the charm of 'heavy lightness and vanity.' J. C.

— Lit R p2 D 18 '26 620w

"The greatness of the Frenchman, who was the very flower of Paris as three generations of us have known Paris, consists—if it is greatness—in precisely those qualities which in Professor Cerf's view subtract from greatness. If he had the qualities which Professor Cerf devotes so much learning and dialectic to proving the lack of in him, he might be great, but he would not be Anatole France." H. I. Brock
N Y Times p5 D 26 '26 1250w

CHADDOCK, ROBERT EMMET. Principles and methods of statistics. 471p $3.75 Houghton

311 Statistics 25-16733

"This book is an introductory text for general use in colleges and universities. The purpose is rather to introduce the subject to beginners by the use of simple illustrative materials, to present the elementary principles of statistics in such manner as to appeal to the logical faculties of the reader, and to foster a healthy skepticism toward the results of quantitative investigations."—Preface

"Because of its wealth of illustrative data, its theoretical approach, its completeness in detail, and its skepticism, it is the most satisfactory textbook now available for use in introductory courses in statistics where the aim is not to train statistical technicians, but to teach the student to understand and appreciate statistical methods wherever he finds them used in the social sciences." E. R. Mowrer
+ Am J Soc 31:834 My '26 60w

"Unusual interest attaches to this work since its writer, the President of the American Statistical Association, has had rare opportunities not only in the teaching of statistics but in its application to almost every sphere of human endeavor. As professor of statistics in Columbia University he has had ample opportunity to test the statistical procedure set forth in this volume." Hugh Carter
+ Ann Am Acad 123:229 Ja '26 520w

"Presents the subject to beginners by use of simple illustrative materials, developing elementary principles of statistics so as to logically appeal to the student."

Management and Adm 10:291 N '25 70w

CHALLIS, GEORGE. Monsieur. 312p $2 Bobbs
* [7s 6d Cassell]

26-20415

On his huge estate in northwestern Canada "Monsieur" François Limousin ruled with the absolutism of a feudal lord. His frail delicate wife and his small son were the particular objects of Monsieur's cruelty. All his life Jean had to stand his father's taunts until the day of the fearful quarrel which resulted in his mother's death. Then Jean left home. Later, when Monsieur humbled himself to beg Jean to return home, Jean did return, never suspecting his father's latest diabolical scheme. But here fate intervened and Jean at last came into his own.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 9 '27 70w

"It is a brilliant piece of work, and absorbingly interesting."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 15 '26 300w

"Monsieur, the character, is thoroughly artificial; he dramatizes all his occasions in a fashion that would gratify any novelist. 'Monsieur,' the novel, none the less, is diverting, though perhaps a hardened reader should be ashamed to admit it."

— + N Y Times p33 N 28 '26 420w

"The story, for the kind of out-moded fiction which it represents, is an uncommonly substantial and well written production."

Sat R of Lit 3:471 D 25 '26 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p701 O 14 '26 170w

CHALLIS, GEORGE. Splendid rascal. 315p $2.50 Bobbs

26-11039

The story has two distinct phases. There are first the wild adventures of the Careless, an English privateer to which that splendid rascal, Sir Louis Madelin, comes as captain under extraordinary circumstances. The Careless attacks a Spanish galleon and is victor in a bloody fight. Among the prisoners taken by Sir Louis is the woman who is evermore to haunt his dreams. She is Mary Winton, reluctant captive of a Spanish grandee who is honorably too desperately in love with her. With Sir Louis' consent de la Vega takes Mary to his ancestral home in Peru, hoping to win her love in time. There in Peru amid the terrifying scenes of the Inquisition the second phase of the story opens.

"Never, never (and we make no Pinaforean reservation) did we make a cruise so continuously and luridly thrilling as this, filled with a hair-raising adventure which proves that the author's imagination is of that type which 'rules the world'—certainly that of fiction."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 23 '26 700w

"There is a pleasant flavor of Kingsley's 'Westward Ho!' and all who like vivid hemanry flashing the busy blade, moonlit moments touching the swift course of blooded action with tender romance, will enjoy the story." F. H. Martens

Lit R p6 Je 26 '26 250w

"When the crew arrive in Peru they are captured by the forces of the Inquisition. The use of such a situation in an out-and-out thriller is questionable. Certainly it is arbitrary in treatment. It is generally understood that such subjects do not belong in popular fiction. The inclusion of it here was unnecessary to the melodramatic plot and in poor taste."

N Y Times p9 Je 6 '26 650w

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE AGNEW. Lost (a play in seven settings). 239p $2 Putnam

812 26-3453

Alan is a thorn in the side of the three families so closely united by ties of friendship and marriage. Gerald, on the contrary, despite an occasional lapse, is the rock on which they build. Having started a flirtation with Alix, Gerald's wife, which only separation can end, Alan is leaving for South America when an angry taunt of Gerald's sends Alix after her departing lover. Gerry knows that Alix has started, but not that she turns back. He follows to South America where in tropical scenes the rest of the drama is played out.

"Obviously written for the stage and as obviously isn't ready yet for presentation. It has, however, one merit which it shares with nearly all our current drama—a copious use of profanity." W. P. Eaton

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 F 21 '26 80w

"What humor the play carries is largely of the unconscious variety, but the excitement is intense, the moral effect elevating and the action cut short at just the right point." R. W. Thompson

— + Lit R p8 Mr 6 '26 250w

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE AGNEW. Man alone. 349p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam

26-4706

Embittered by his wife's desertion, Thomas Strayton taught his small son a bitter creed. "Rotten at the core women are. . . Trust 'em and they'll leave you if they can." Torquay accepted the statement without question. The boy grew and married, and the shadow of his father's teaching fell across his married life. Only indirectly thru his jealous moods the realization that he loved her came to make his wife happy before she died. Torquay turned from the little daughter she left behind. He gave all his time and energy to the glass works built by his father, out of nothing, on business wrested from his rival. As the daughter grew older, and herself fell in love, Torquay's iron resistance to his affection for her broke down at last, and carried with it the harsh creed on which he had built his life.

"'Man Alone' is a great conception, not always completely realized." Lorraine Pruette

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Mr 28 '26 1050w

Ind 117:362 S 25 '26 120w

"Here we are dealing with the borderland of the human mind, with an unfamiliar realm that needs elucidation for most readers; and elucidation is precisely what the author fails to supply. One feels that a character may conceivably have acted as did Torquay Strayton, but one does not feel that he must have acted so, and much less does one understand the motives that dominated him. With the skilful omission of some superfluous material and the skilful addition of much that is necessary, the book might have been outstanding; as it is, it is interesting and provocative, and yet more than a little unreal."

S. A. C.

+ — Int Bk R p392 My '26 380w

Reviewed by L. G. Short

Lit R p3 My 29 '26 300w

"It cannot be said that George Agnew Chamberlain's new novel, 'Man Alone,' is a particularly inspiring book. One closes it with a feeling of utter indifference. Yet it is by no means badly done; the two leading characters, Thomas Strayton and his son, Torquay, have been carefully studied, and give the impression of hardness, ruthlessness and ruggedness the author has evidently intended to produce, while the background against which they are presented is one not very often used in fiction—that of the glass-blowing industry."

+ — N Y Times p22 Mr 21 '26 750w

"'Man Alone' is loaded with flashing pictures of a man's life and his work. It is obedient, exclusively, to its own inner, emotional logic until the very last few pages. That is enough to keep it from being a very great book, but not enough to spoil an absorbingly entertaining novel."

+ — N Y World p7m Ap 4 '26 450w

"The book is hard as nails, but it holds like iron. Incidentally, it has a remarkable descriptive account of the glass-making industry. This story has immense power but absolutely no charm." R. D. Townsend

+ — Outlook 142:614 Ap 21 '26 130w

Sat R of Lit 2:736 Ap 24 '26 580w

Spring'd Republican p7f Ag 8 '26 300w

"There is no lack of energy about this novel, but its violent protagonists are too crudely drawn to carry much conviction."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p799 N 11 '26 180w

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE AGNEW. ... Mr Trumper Bromleigh presents No ugly ducklings. 347p $2 Putnam

26-17806

A series of stories reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post, in each of which Trumper Bromleigh finds a dazzling but unappreciated beauty and makes a howling success of her by clothing her in gorgeous raiment—designed by himself, executed by Binotinielli—and exhibiting her before a select and astonished few. The last of his successes, and the only personal one, is his estranged young wife.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p26 D 5 '26 170w

"Too many lovely ladies are apt to become palling, but a clever ingenuity of plot now and then helps to save the situation and to make the book readable."

Boston Transcript p5 D 18 '26 240w

"Mr. Chamberlain is a skillful story teller and he has built up his farce comedy with a light and sure touch."

+ N Y Times p7 N 21 '26 570w

"At times, due to slightness of story, and sameness of episode, this latest bit of fiction by Mr. Chamberlain flags in interest, but on the whole it is very good entertainment, smartly written, and highly amusing."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:400 D 4 '26 220w

CHAMBERLAIN, JOSEPH SCUDDER, and BROWNE, CHARLES ALBERT, eds. Chemistry in agriculture, a coöperative work intended to give examples of the contributions made to agriculture by chemistry. 384p il $1 Chemical foundation

630.24 Agricultural chemistry 26-10033

"Papers on various phases of the subject, those of special interest to home economists including: Sugar and sugar crops, by C. A. Browne; Fruit and vegetables, by E. M. Chace; Agriculture and the evolution of our diet, by C. F. Langworthy; Vitamins in human and animal nutrition, by R. Adams Dutcher; The chemistry of milk and its products, by L. L. Van Slyke; The chemist as detective and policeman, or fertilizer, feed, and insecticide control, by B. B. Ross."—J Home Econ

"The present popular book, written by a group of specialists, shows the remarkable progress made in the study of soils, fruits, fermentation processes, biochemistry, animal nutrition, dairying and insect control."

+ Chem & Met Eng 33:367 Je '26 80w

"The book is written in popular style, easily understood by the general reader as well as the student. At the same time, it is accurate and scientific." A. F. Woods

+ Ind & Eng Chem 18:655 Je '26 300w

J Home Econ 18:465 Ag '26 80w

Reviewed by H. W. Wiley

Science 63:637 Je 25 '26 1050w

CHAMBERS, RAYMOND WILSON. England before the Norman conquest; with a foreword on Roman Britain, by M. Cary. (Univ. of London intermediate sourcebooks of history) 334p $3.50 (10s 6d) Longmans

942.01 Great Britain—History—To 1066

[26-13042]

This textbook of English history begins with the coming of the Romans to Britain and follows events up to the Norman conquest. The work is indexed, and included in the body of the book there are notes on sources.

"Of authoritative value to those who wish to study pre-Norman Britain at first hand."

+ Bookm 64:241 O '26 80w

"To the serious student such a collection is invaluable. He is faced, however, with a serious problem. There are numerous copies of what purport to be the same document, and in very many cases the readings vary."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p482 J1 15 '26 300w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Man they hanged. 416p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

Kidd, William—Fiction

26-14624

A sympathetic rendering of the story of Captain Kidd which pictures him a brave and kindly soul, a man of charm no less than force who had made his wealth in commerce, and who lived an honored figure in old New York.

The atmosphere of the city in the turbulent last quarter of the seventeenth century is successfully evoked. Dirck Hazlett, youthful friend of Captain Kidd and companion in his misfortunes tells the story of the British conspiracy against his hero and of its shameful ending, weaving into the narrative the brighter strands of the Captain's happy love affair, and his (Dirck's) own.

Booklist 23:175 Ja '27

"Set forth in romantic dress, all very lively and readable stuff done with graphic power, all very ingenious and pleasantly individual."

C: J. Finger

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 19 '26 650w

"The Man They Hanged" is an entirely readable yarn, written well and always in good taste." Berthold Edwards

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 14 '26 1200w

"For all its footnotes and elaborate accuracy, this romance of early New York is carelessly and hastily written, but it moves with Mr. Chambers' usual vigor and the hero is brave and the heroine fair."

+ Ind 117:332 S 18 '26 60w

"The Man They Hanged" leaves one somehow unconvinced. But as a story it is thoroughly readable, and if stiff at times in its antiquated language attractive at others. Many readers will find the book worth the price if for nothing but its pictures of New York at the close of the seventeenth century. They are truly well done, having, besides accuracy, many moments of charm. For the characters one can not say by any means as much. Dirck is an unsufferable product of fiction, and San-cia, tho she begins promisingly, somehow loses her appeal before the end. And Captain Kidd is too good to be human." L. Kronenberger

+ Int Bk R p708 O '26 520w

Reviewed by L. G. Short

Lit R p4 S 4 '26 570w

Reviewed by Edwin Muir

Nation and Ath 40:89 O 16 '26 30w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 27:740 O 9 '26 50w

"The dialogue is stilted beyond even eighteenth century formality. However, he is an old hand at story-telling and his novel is facily written. Though the story is involved it has attractive movement."

+ N Y Times p7 S 5 '26 520w

"Mr. Chambers has made of The Man They Hanged an absolutely first-rate historical romance, glowing and full of conviction, and miraculously free from even a suspicion of tedium anywhere. It makes the most delightful reading imaginable."

+ Spec 137:493 S 25 '26 350w

"The story is told in Mr Chambers's customary engaging narrative style and usual choice of entertaining incidents. Not the least interesting are the vividly recreated scenes, personalities and political currents of colonial New York."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f S 19 '26 520w

CHANDLER, CHARLES DE FOREST, and DIEHL, WALTER STUART. Balloon and airship gases; pt. 1, Hydrogen and helium production processes, the compression and storage of gases; pt. 2, Physics of gases. (Ronald aeronautic lib.) 226p il. $4 Ronald

661 Balloon gases. Hydrogen. Helium. Gases 26-7570

"Part 1 is mainly descriptive, but indicates chemical reactions occurring in various manufacturing processes. Part 2 is concerned with theoretical presentation of physical laws, but includes tables in a form for use by operating engineers."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 23:115 D '26

N Y New Tech Bks 11:20 Ap '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:564 N '26

CHAPLIN, HEMAN WHITE. Five hundred dollars, and other stories of New England life. 305p $2 Little

The fifteenth edition of a collection of humorous stories of New England life, first appearing in the Century magazine and first published in book form in 1887. In the present edition two stories are added to the original group. Contents: Five hundred dollars; The village convict; Saint Patrick; Eli; By the sea; In Madeira Place; The new minister's great opportunity.

"Thirty-nine years after its original publication it retains a vitality which goes far to confirm his judgment. Of that New England where life and death alike were conditioned by man's struggle with the friendly, fertile, fatal sea, it is a vivid and enduring record. These sharp, deft etchings of New England men and women have been compared with Hawthorne, and bear the comparison. Only in place of that 'miasmatic conscience' which made Hawthorne sombre, there is here a play of humor as bright as sunlight on a burnished sea, a humor more truly New England's than its fabled gloom." Shaemas O'Sheal

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 7 '26 650w

"They are the almost plotless tales which only writers with a touch of genius can write, for the lesser talent must invent and contrive drama and wrest plot and character to preconceived ends, till artifice colors all. Had Mr. Chaplin continued writing, the accelerating crescendo of sensationalism in modern fiction would have left him out of its current; and we can fancy how his wit would have had its revenge. But—how his people live!—how his New England shines through!"

+ Sat R of Lit 3:24 Ag 7 '26 480w

Springf'd Republican p7f D 12 '26 230w

CHAPMAN, ARTHUR. John Crews. 303p $2 Houghton

26-4271

The romance of frontier days at old Fort Laramie tells of the rescue of beautiful Annabel Drayton from a Mormon emigrant camp. Her rescuers are John Crews, free trapper, and his friend and partner, Baptiste Boucard. The trio have stirring adventures—fights with Indians as well as help from friendly ones, a mighty snowstorm and many other perils and hardships—before making their safe return to Fort Laramie.

"A lively and continuously readable yarn."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Mr 28 '26 250w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 10 '26 450w

"Mr. Chapman's tale of the days of the buffalo, Mormons, Danites, trappers, Indians and the young lieutenant differs only in detail and form of narrative from those thrilling old 'Beadle's Dime Novels' we used to shudder over in the loft of the old barn." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p8 Mr 6 '26 100w

"The author apparently knows his subject well, and his accounts of the rigid law prohibiting stealing within the tribe and of the Indian dances and ceremonials are really entertaining. Slow, even ponderous, at the beginning, the narrative quickens after a time, and the fight at the end is quite well done."

+ N Y Times p24 F 28 '26 650w

CHAPMAN, EDWARD MORTIMER. Modernist and his creed. 393p $2.50 Houghton

230 Religion. Modernism 26-3288

A Congregationalist minister records the spiritual experience thru which he has come to his present religious belief—the background of his New England farm home, the influences that were brought to bear on his boyhood life, the doubts thru which he passed and the conclusions to which his growing experience led him. Contents: The frame of the picture; Youth, faith, and doubt; Has religion any reality? The idea of God; The Bible; Who was Jesus Christ? Is there any Holy ghost? The church and its claims; The church and its history; Creeds: a staff or a burden? Conversion: an experience or a delusion? Salvation: a reality or a superstition? Truth and goodness; As to parsons; Why is a missionary? Pecksniff, Chadband and company; The future world of men; Death—and then? Index.

CHAPMAN, EDWARD M.—Continued

"It is all sane, wholesome, stimulating and reassuring. To read this book is to feel a clean wind blowing freshly through the mind." J. H. Holmes

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Ap 26 '26 350w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 12 '26 500w

"In the midst of all the bitterness, narrowness and crudity of present-day religious controversies, it is refreshing to come upon a treatment of the subject so equable, so wholesome, so sincere and at the same time so gentle and catholic in spirit as Mr. Chapman's in this book."

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 7 '26 450w

"One lays down this book feeling that amid 'the clamor of the times' he has listened to one of the clearest and most persuasive of the voices which have expressed the finer spirit of religion as it bears upon modern habits and thoughts." C. A. Dinsmore

+ Sat R of Lit 2:662 Mr 27 '26 820w

"Though the author is hardly a theological pioneer, his moderation and urbanity make him an excellent interpreter of the older generation to the newer as well as a conciliatory expounder of modern religious thought."

Springf'd Republican p10 F 16 '26 750w

CHARLTON, JOHN B. Old sergeant's story; winning the West from the Indians and bad men in 1870 to 1876, ed. by Robert G. Carter. 220p il $3 Hitchcock

970.1 Indians of North America—Wars. Frontier and pioneer life—Texas 26-13327

"In 1919-1920, Captain Carter (U. S. A., retired, late of the Fourth U. S. Cavalry) wrote several sketches describing his army adventures. In one of these he spoke of the bravery and faithfulness of a young corporal in his company, of whom as it chanced he had never heard during the fifty years intervening. The story came to the attention of Sergeant John B. Charlton, then a ranchman in Uvalde, Tex., but once that very corporal of the Fourth U. S. Cavalry whose valor Captain Carter had recalled. He at once wrote to the latter, and that correspondence was begun which Captain Carter has put into permanent form. . . . During the two years this correspondence lasted, the 'Old Sergeant,' as Captain Carter calls him, wrote very freely not only of his army experiences but of traveling far and wide over the West and in Alaska, Mexico, South America and Australia, before he took up ranching in Texas."—Boston Transcript

Reviewed by C: J. Finger

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ag 8 '26 350w

"An old Indian War veteran, Sergeant Charlton's reminiscences of those campaigns read more thrillingly than any 'Wild West' story ever written. And these are all true. The illustrations are interesting, and to older readers will bring back far more than the places and people they visualize."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 11 '26 650w

"Charlton knew most of the famous scouts of frontier days and his letters carry interesting incidents of meetings with them. His intimate stories of various battles with the Indians in which he had a part are thrillingly told."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f S 12 '26 380w

CHARNWOOD, GODFREY RATHBONE BEN-SON, 1st baron. According to Saint John. 323p $3.50 Little [10s 6d Hodder & S.]

226.5 Bible. New Testament—Gospels—St John 25-22275

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"Interesting, and even illuminating here and there, as Lord Charnwood's book is, it must be pronounced a failure on the main issue. The Gospel according to Saint John still remains an unsolved riddle." S: McComb

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Ja '26 620w

Booklist 22:230 Mr '26

Int Bk R p327 Ap '26 300w

"It is only as to comparatively unimportant details that the author's position is unfortunate. On the great religious problems of the New Testament his position is sound." G: A. Barton

+ Lit R p4 F 20 '26 400w

"This is a thoughtful and suggestive study of the Fourth Gospel. The interest of Lord Charnwood's book is rather literary and aesthetic than critical."

+ Nation and Ath 38:624 Ja 30 '26 300w

"This volume is an illustration of the best English writing. A meandering urbanity is enwrapped in reverence. According to Saint John is a novel defense of the fourth Gospel and at the same time a keen yet reticent attempt to present the secret of Christ." A. W. Vernon

+ New Repub 45:333 F 10 '26 400w

Pratt p9 spring '26

Spec 136:178 Ja 30 '26 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p4 Ja 7 '26 1450w

CHARRIERE, ISABELLA AGNETA (VAN TUYLL) (ZELIDE, pseud.). Four tales; tr. by S. M. S.; with an introd. by Geoffrey Scott. 263p il $3.75 Scribner [12s Constable]

26-26401

These four stories, excellently translated, form a pendant to Mr Geoffrey Scott's "Portrait of Zélide." (Book Review Digest, 1925) Contents: The nobleman; Mistress Henley; Letters from Lausanne; Caliste.

Booklist 22:376 Je '26

"Charming, thoroughly quaint and exquisitely phrased." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:349 My '26 150w

"Perhaps if we did not know the life of Mme. de Charrière we should not be greatly affected by these stories. They are all very much dominated by a thesis. Their moral intention is too evident and their manner is outmoded. Though conceived as a plea for the emotions, they are written with the brain more than with the heart or imagination. They have, however, the virtue of intelligent writing—truth in the observation of details and precision in phrasing. Though not often exciting, they are at no time merely dull." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 F 28 '26 780w

"They reveal a gift for quiet satire, pathos and psychological insight."

+ Cleveland Open Shelf p122 N '26

"The 'Four Tales' place Madame de Charrière, I think, in a safe place between Miss Austen and Madame de Staël." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 122:289 Mr 17 '26 270w

"In reading these excellent translations of Mme. de Charrière's tales, one comes a little sadly to the conclusion that they were scarcely worth the expense of so much talent. Mr. Scott's witticisms and Sainte-Beuve's cunning extracts had prepared us for something more impressive; and the truth is that these tales are mediocre, except in passages." R: Aldington

+ Nation and Ath 38:526 Ja 9 '26 1000w

New Statesman 26:supxxiv D 12 '25
60w

"Lady Sybil has done the work of translation, and done it so excellently that in reading her English one catches the very accent of that eighteenth-century French which made up in grace and nuance for what it lacked in colour and vigour. Zélide was told that she wrote better than Voltaire, and though that was the hyperbole of a man who loved her, she certainly wrote very well indeed. She had, moreover, something to say."

+ New Statesman 26:336 D 26 '25 870w

"Mr. Scott in his exquisite miniature of Zélide, which he coldly calls an 'Introduction,' is, I feel, hardly generous enough in his praise of the 'Four Tales,' though praise he does, and very highly. Even judged only by themselves, the stories' hearts still beat. If considered in relation to the author's own life and character, they have an overwhelming poignancy." J. St L. Strachey

+ N Y Times p18 F 14 '26 1600w

+ Sat R 140:662 D 5 '25 70w

Reviewed by L. P. Hartley

Sat R 140:773 D 26 '25 350w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

Spec 136:324 F 20 '26 1600w (Reprinted from N Y Times)

"None of these tales is a masterpiece, but then [Mr. Scott] did not promise us that we should find them such. He did promise us skill in telling a story, a considerable sense of character, a judicious restraint, and a strong sense of humour; and all of these we do find. They vary in quality, 'The Nobleman' being an amusing trifle and 'Caliste' a somewhat unfortunate incursion into the field of romanticism."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p879 D 17 '25
420w

CHARSKAYA, LIDIYA ALEKSEIEVNA.
Fledglings; as told by Lida, chum of little princess Nina; tr. and adapted by Hana Musková Shaw. 277p $1.75 Holt

26-9571

This story was written for Russian school-girls. It recounts the adventures of Lida Vlasovska, friend of the Princess Nina of an earlier story, who at the end of her school-days becomes governess to the little granddaughter of Prince Kashidze and undergoes some unusual experiences in her new home in the Caucasus.

Booklist 22:425 J1 '26

"'Fledglings' lends itself less readily to translation than the earlier volume [Little Princess Nina]; it is particularly difficult to render schoolgirl dialect with real native conviction. The translator has, however, done her task fairly well and gone far in preserving the reality. The only flaw is a constant use of French phrases, accompanied by their translation, which weakens the effect of the dialogue and is irritating." M. W. Bianco

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 J1 27
'26 470w

"A book for girls it may be, but in such a story as this, clearly written and vibrant with young life, older folk may gain a knowledge of other countries that seems keener than that derived from able editorials or illustrated travelogues."

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 11 '26 110w

CHASE, CLEVELAND BRUCE. Young Voltaire.
253p il $3 (12s 6d) Longmans

B or 92 Voltaire, François Marie Arouet de
26-20280

Following an unfortunate remark and a still more unfortunate incident, the youthful Voltaire, but recently the idol of society, found all Paris turned against him. Virtually laughed into exile, he turned to England and spent there the years from 1726 to 1729. The present work is the story of those years in England, and a gauge of their effect on Voltaire's future life and work.

"For all that has been said about Voltaire, there remained one job not quite done. Mr. Churton Collins had essayed it in his 'Voltaire in England,' though not to complete satisfaction, for, scholar-wise, he had dwelt patiently with 'minute details.' There remained to acquaint us with 'the general characteristics of that period' and with 'the exact influence of his (Voltaire's) exile upon the formation of his character,' and that is what Mr. Chase has done." Gerald Carson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 D 5
'26 650w

Boston Transcript p6 D 22 '26 840w

"There is a great deal of interesting and significant material collected in The Young Voltaire, and a very reasonable presentation of its thesis." J. B. B.

+ Hist Outlook 18:42 Ja '27 310w

"The Young Voltaire' not only brings together in a convenient form all that is to be known on the subject, but it is also the work of a young critic who uses English without pedantry and with a sense of style. This is very far from being the original piece of pioneering work which the author in his innocence imagines, but it is well written and has the marks of scholarship upon it." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 117:622 N 27 '26 1300w

"Mr. Chase has not fallen short of his job in the letter, though the spirit seems to have eluded him at times." J. C.

+ Lit R p4 Ja 8 '27 1000w

"Mr. Chase's book is obviously intended rather for the casual reader than for the serious student. It would, however, have been of greater value had he given chapter and verse for his more debatable statements. His quotations from Voltaire's recently discovered notebook are full of interest, but he wastes overmuch space in defending Voltaire against the slander which followed upon the English visit. The book is valuable for its excellent bibliography and its many interesting illustrations."

+ New Statesman 28:278 D 11 '26 1150w

"Blessed with a bright, easily flowing style that carries him safely by the ominous rocks of heaviness, dullness and complicated speculation, Mr. Chase entirely vindicates his purpose in this book. He fills a gap that really existed and he brings original thought to bear upon his subject. 'The Young Voltaire,' therefore, is a book to be placed on the shelf with the rest of one's treasured Voltairiana." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p9 O 31 '26 1450w

Sat R 142:811 D 25 '26 430w

"Mr. Chase's is not a brilliant or in any way and extraordinary book. It is a good bit of useful work."

Sat R of Lit 3:471 D 25 '26 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p931 D 16 '26
1200w

CHASE, DANIEL. Hardy rye. 327p $2.50 Bobbs

26-19679

Thru four generations of Wheelock men and women the clash between inclination and duty persisted, a longing for new pastures warring incessantly with the stern inborn sense of duty toward the home acres. When Wes Wheelock was a little boy, inclination won in the case of his Aunt Thyrsa, and she ran off to the West. When his time came Wes too felt the urge to leave home, but his brothers had already anticipated him and it was his lot to stay behind. Later his son, facing the same conflict, left the old farm for the town. Again Wes stayed behind. He was at last too old to carry the burden of farming any longer, and when that time came the hereditary struggle between duty and desire had reached his grandson. "We

CHASE, DANIEL—Continued

Wheellocks are like winter rye," the old man explained. "Turned in, plowed under, to make the soil rich for the next crop."

"The dialogue is very poignant, and has the rare quality of terseness. 'Hardy Rye' is sound, competent, and has an occasionally genuine flare, like smoldering fires breaking through."

L. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 13 '26 600w

"The story has vigor and action, though at times it makes one just a little bit breathless racing with it down the hectic years."

+ Ind 117:716 D 18 '26 120w

"Daniel Chase has written an austere yet warm and moving novel. 'Hardy Rye' has something to offer the discriminating reader, and offers it with a good deal of felicity and appeal."

+ N Y Times p9 D 5 '26 950w

CHASE, MARY ELLEN. Mary Christmas. 142p $1.50 Little

26-8948

Mary Christmas, Armenian exile in New England, is a person of rare beauty and fire. She is only a peddler of laces and knick-knacks dressed in gypsy finery, yet her coming to the Westcotts is like the coming of a prophet and she becomes, almost, their priest.

Booklist 23:79 N '26

"Told with delightful sympathy and gentle humor by one who never hesitates to emphasize the emotional values of her material."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 My 9 '26 120w

"A wistful charm of personality and a mellow appreciation of living combine to make her little chronicle unusual." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 12 '26 420w
Cleveland Open Shelf p77 Je '26

"Prettily written little sketch."

N Y Times p24 My 16 '26 500w

Wis Lib Bul 22:193 Je '26

CHATFIELD-TAYLOR, HOBART CHATFIELD. Cities of many men; a wanderer's memories of London, Paris, New York, and Chicago during half a century. 313p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 London. Paris. New York (city). Chicago 25-20311

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"A series of sketches in which the author vividly portrays the outstanding figures in the life of these cities during almost half a century. All the chapters are brilliantly written."

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:235 F '26 60w

Booklist 22:204 F '26

Bookm 63:xxi Je '26 80w

Reviewed by Blair Niles

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 F 28 '26 280w

"A book of delight to all who fancy good old days" S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 19 '26 320w

Cath World 123:571 J1 '26 280w

"Altho his style and his thought are in the Victorian cadence, the volume has a surprising quality of life. In spite of such expressions as 'veritable palace,' in spite of a too copious sprinkling of quotations, you feel the march of life in its pages." Blair Niles

+ Int Bk R p157 F '26 200w

"One cannot help suspecting that Mr. Chatfield-Taylor has to a certain extent been choked by that state of life into which it has pleased God to call him. As we read these pages so packed with inoffensive stereotyped reactions we can almost watch the gradual stifling of his youthful enthusiasm." Llewelyn Powys

+ N Y Times p15 F 28 '26 1150w

"A chatty, florid, somewhat amusing, somewhat absurd chronicle of little yesterdays."

+ Outlook 142:117 Ja 20 '26 250w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Chats on naval prints. 205p il $4 Stokes [7s 6d Unwin] 760 Engravings. Ships 26-27542

To his many books on ships and sailors Mr Chatterton adds this volume dealing with the navy in art—contemporary prints depicting naval actions, men of war, East Indiamen, clipper ships, old-time shipping and portraits of admirals, captains and seafaring life.

Booklist 23:120 D '26

"No one could put up a better case for the romantic side of naval print collecting than the author, and his efforts to interest rather than to instruct should give the book a wide public. The illustrations are admirably reproduced."

+ New Statesman 27:394 J1 17 '26 180w

Sat R 142:265 S 4 '26 100w

Sat R of Lit 3:160 O 2 '26 70w

Times [London] Lit Sup p424 Je 24 '26 550w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Ship under sail. 224p il $4.50 Lippincott [10s Unwin]

623.8 Ships 26-14365

Early in the year "Whalers and whaling" by the same author was published. In the present volume the author who has written several volumes of sea lore, turns from the whaler to the sailing ship and tells the story of its evolution from the dug-out to the five-masted barque of the twentieth century. The illustrations are from paintings and pictures both ancient and modern.

Reviewed by Arthur Warner

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 S 12 '26 500w

"It is a work that will prove of absorbing interest alike to landmen and sea-farers."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 7 '26 270w

"Mr. Chatterton loves the sea and all its men and ships, but he makes the mistake of weighing down his romantic flights with too many ill-chosen facts. He cannot see the ships for the rigging. He tells us that his ships are beautiful, his seamen brave and his captains daring, when all he need do is assume these things and tell us stories built on the assumptions."

N Y Times p5 Ag 22 '26 900w

Sat R of Lit 3:160 O 2 '26 100w

"Mr. Keble Chatterton's admirable work enables even the landsman clearly to understand the fascinating process of the evolution of the various types of craft in which the men of all ages carried their wealth, and fought for it, and so made civilisation."

+ Spec 136:849 My 15 '26 160w

"In his preface the author tells us that he has aimed at 'a clear, vivid idea in accordance with the latest knowledge.' He has not quite hit that mark, except in his illustrations, which are admirable both in choice and presentation."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p364 Je 3 '26 450w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Whalers and whaling; the story of the whaling ships up to the present day. 248p il $4.50 Lippincott [12s 6d Unwin]

639.2 Whaling 26-8699

This lively account of whalers and whaling is based on contemporary records and copiously illustrated with reproductions from old prints as well as from modern photographs. It tells the story of a hazardous occupation from the day of the sailing ship to the steam whaler of the present.

Booklist 22:317 My '26

"Although it is solid maritime history, drawn from the records of innumerable expeditions to the waters of the giant mammals, the book has the fascination of romance."

+ Bookm 63:368 My '26 100w

"It is easily written, it is historically and nautically sound, and the whaling legend is played up for all it is worth. If you want a readable history of the industry, you will probably get as much out of this book as out of any other tale." H: Beston

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ap 18 '26 500w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 20 '26 1800w

Reviewed by I. N. Leonard

Int Bk R p563 Ag '26 400w

"Altogether, this is the sort of book which a collector will wish to own even if he does not read it and one which an authority on the subject it treats can hardly afford to be without." L. R.

+ Lit R p7 Mr 27 '26 160w

"It is not to be recommended for its excellence of style. In fact, there are many pages of fairly blundering English. But when one wishes the story of whaling, in all the splendor of which the story is capable, one goes not to a writer like Chatterton, but to Melville's 'Moby Dick.' And Chatterton has put together a book which builds a background for 'Moby Dick.' And in spite of the blundering, the book has many stirring pages of its own." P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p5 F 21 '26 2850w

Pratt p19 summer '26

"Commander Chatterton writes easily, lightly, pleasantly. He is determined to extract all possible romance from whale-hunting, and to avoid the smell of actuality. His book is a library book; that is, made out of other books. As such, it is excellent. . . In his desire to encourage 'the deep-sea call,' he mixes up the tall stories with the true. The mixture has punch, but the elation does not last."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:670 Mr 27 '26 220w

Spec 136:sup1004 Je 12 '26 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p803 N 26 '25 150w

CHEEVER, EZEKIEL, pseud. See Buchholz, H. E.

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. Letters to Olga Leonardovna Knipper; tr. from the Russian by Constance Garnett. 387p $6 Doran B or 92 [26-26139]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:250 Mr '26

"Filching a motion-picture term, the 'projection' from these 400 pages of Tchekhovian correspondence is perhaps clearer of the actress than of the author. Her portrait emerges furtively, but no less startlingly. There will be little or nothing, however, for any reader who fails to combine a rugged patience with alert sensitiveness to the significance of the trivial." Stanley Olmstead

— Lit R p4 Ja 30 '26 620w

"These intimate messages abound in such humor and tenderness as serve to accentuate their essential pathos."

+ Nation 122:614 Je 2 '26 130w

Reviewed by Bonamy Dobrée

Nation and Ath 38:814 Mr 13 '26 300w

"These letters to his wife, both before and after their marriage, are not merely literary history. They form a human document touching as few and more absorbing than most." H: J. Forman

+ N Y Times p2 Ja 17 '26 1600w

"One might suggest that some of the letters could have done with a little pruning and that others might have been omitted; but this is a different, more debatable matter. This inflation, however, while it is tiresome and wasteful, does not really impair the interest of the book. [The letters] on the whole contribute to the impression of a married life which was very happy though it was carried on in singularly unfavourable circumstances." E: Shanks

+ — Sat R 141:125 Ja 30 '26 1200w

"The present volume of letters is less interesting than previously published notebooks and general correspondence, though it does contain indications about the production and meaning of several of his plays which are of peculiar topical interest now. But on the whole his letters to his wife are concerned with questions of health and domestic detail."

— + Spec 136:428 Mr 6 '26 520w

"Far more vividly than any comment or description, these letters reflect the savor and charm, the wit, as well as the deep wisdom and insight, of an unusual personality." Rosamond Gilder

+ Theatre Arts Mo 10:277 Ap '26 480w

Times [London] Lit Sup p206 Mr 18 '26 1100w

CHENEY, RALPH HOLT. Coffee: a monograph of the economic species of the genus Coffea L. 244p il $5 N.Y. univ. press

633.73 Coffee 26-6452

"An advanced work of pronounced textbook character, rather than a trade or merchandising compilation; although it contains much information for the reader whose business or inclination interests him in knowing about coffee.' (Tea and Coffee Trade J)"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Boston Transcript p8 Jl 25 '25 500w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:87 F '26

CHESTERTON, ADA E. (JONES) (MRS CECIL EDWARD CHESTERTON.) (JOHN KEITH PROTHERO, pseud.). In darkest London. 255p $1.75 Macmillan [5s S. Paul]

396 Woman—Employment. London—Social conditions 26-16587

"Mrs. Cecil Chesterton has spent days and nights out in the streets of London as an out-cast woman, trying what it really means to be without money, friends, or written character, in the midst of our Christian civilization. Evidently her heart guided her pen, and her experience was rather more than mere copy as we understand it. 'In Darkest London' tells an intimate story of the drab, from whose huddled form we avert our eyes in the daylight hours; of the trolloping match-seller, the used-up prostitute, the young park harlot, the respectable but not respected cast-out unmarried mother, and the rest, who for the time being or for the rest of their lives have no homes."—Nation and Ath

Reviewed by A. B. Parsons

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 27 '26 1050w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 19 '26 300w

J Home Econ 19:45 Ja '27 130w

"The conditions shown as existing make terrible reading in this twentieth century, but it is good to know that as a result of the publication of this book some of the abuses have been stopped. For those interested in social welfare work Mrs. Chesterton's story will be very helpful and illuminating." W. O. T.

Lit R p6 Je 26 '26 200w

"Mrs. Chesterton's book is one which ought to be put into the hands of hundreds, nay, thousands. It is revealing and educative, and it is sincere and genuine. Unlike other books of the kind, it is very well written. There is no padding, no verbal gloom; in fact, the book can be read from end to end as easily as a good novel." Stephen Graham

+ Nation and Ath 39:180 My 22 '26 1050w

"Mrs. Chesterton's book is in itself a wonderfully fascinating account of the underworld of flower-sellers and match-sellers and fifth-rate prostitutes; but beyond that it presents a most powerful plea for real charity and for the provision of decent sleeping places for destitute women."

CHESTERTON, ADA E.—Continued

+ New Statesman 26:752 Mr 27 '26 800w

"The author's vivid and realistic pictures of places and individuals and her accounts of her doings are very fascinating. One feels that here is the real stuff of life as it is lived by those who have sunk to the dregs portrayed by one who never lost for her associates the sympathetic understanding of their common humanity."

+ N Y Times p26 Je 13 '26 420w

"It appears to be based on ample and courageous investigation, and the more telling for the absence, in such passages as we have yet examined, of sentimentality and special pleading."

+ Sat R 141:371 Mr 20 '26 40w

Sat R of Lit 2:955 Jl 24 '26 320w

"Mrs. Chesterton is a crusader of high and militant courage who determined to investigate at first hand the conditions under which her less fortunate sisters live. Her book makes grim and poignant reading."

+ Spec 136:726 Ap 17 '26 250w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Incredulity of Father Brown. 270p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Cassell]

26-13797

"Just as the earlier Father Brown stories followed in the general direction if not the immediate footsteps of the noblest sleuth of them all, so this new volume, 'The Incredulity of Father Brown,' repeats literary history already made by the most famous resident of Baker Street." (N Y Times) Contents: The resurrection of Father Brown; The arrow of heaven; The oracle of the dog; The miracle of Moon crescent; The curse of the golden cross; The dagger with wings; The doom of the Darnaways; The ghost of Gideon Wise.

Booklist 23:79 N '26

"If I've ever read a better short mystery than 'The Doom of the Darnaways' or 'The Curse of the Golden Cross,' I have forgotten it. Perhaps it was a 'Father Brown' story of older vintage. Anyway, Chesterton, when he turns to these yarns, is always magnificent." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:92 S '26 250w

Boston Transcript p6 S 1 '26 340w

"At times Father Brown is not only brilliant in his hard common sense, but is also convincing. As a rule, however, the stories are more ingenious than real, and the author drives too gladly into the tempting waves of fine writing and lush, journalistic effects."

+ Ind 117:248 Ag 28 '26 150w

"This volume seems to us weaker and more conspicuously shallow than its forerunners. An echoing monotony pervades the present collection of eight tales, a suggestion of sameness attributable to their exclusive concern with the obscurely fabulous, the pseudo-supernatural and the utterly improbable." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p4 Jl 17 '26 350w

"The crimes that he dealt with in the Innocence and the Wisdom contrived to convey a little conviction. The crimes with which he deals in the latest collection of adventures are fundamentally unreal or unwholesome. In fine, none of these crime stories is of any real interest to the reader because they are of no real interest to Mr. Chesterton."

+ Living Age 330:648 S 18 '26 600w (Reprinted from Westminster Gazette)

"Fortunately for those who enjoyed 'The Innocence of Father Brown' and 'The Wisdom of Father Brown,' G. K. C. has now compiled another series of tales on this entertaining and energetic ecclesiastic."

+ N Y Times p13 Jl 18 '26 950w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p4m Jl 18 '26 860w

"'The Incredulity of Father Brown' provides a rich entertainment. One likes the stories none the worse for the circumstance that in each the solution is not only a feather in the cap of the good father; it also redounds to the credit of the Roman Catholic Church." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 142:18 Jl 3 '26 90w

"These tales are highly-colored, dramatic, and in all of them the characters approach fantastic beings, as do the characters in all of Chesterton's fiction. But that does not make them less entertaining."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:950 Jl 24 '26 600w

"Mr. Chesterton's new stories are full of interest. There is nothing really gruesome about them; but Mr. Chesterton always writes with an ingenuity and a fine cheerfulness which warm the heart. But there is one reproach we would give to Father Brown. It seems too frequently to be his method, when he is warned that evil business is in hand, to wait till the murder is accomplished before he sets to work; a method which is a trifle unkind."

+ Spec 137:105 Jl 17 '26 380w

"Compared with the two preceding volumes 'The Incredulity of Father Brown' is more even in workmanship and certainly it is more fantastic in most of its plots; but one turns back to 'The Innocence of Father Brown' in preference nevertheless, partly because in it Father Brown made his first and most spectacular appearance."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 2 '26 560w

Times [London] Lit Sup p449 Jl 1 '26 280w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. William Cobbett. 254p $2 Dodd [6s Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Cobbett, William

26-4709

The story of the life of William Cobbett and an appreciation of his work is written with an enthusiasm calculated to arouse fresh interest in this vigorous and rebellious personality.

Booklist 22:326 My '26

Bookm 63:495 Je '26 100w

"Chesterton has, as on other occasions, written a clever and entertaining book about G. K. Chesterton, but if any one is in search of the truth about William Cobbett he must first make a liberal allowance for the doctrinal bias of the author." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Mr 14 '26 1150w

"The picture of Cobbett the man is beautifully built up; when we close the book we are full of a sympathy that is independent of whether we agree with his ideas." R. B. Macdougall

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 3 '26 1850w

Cath World 123:426 Je '26 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p84 Jl '26

"He calls his book a 'biography'; but readers who want that had better stick to Mr. Cole. As a serious criticism of Cobbett and his times, Mr. Chesterton's volume has small value. . . Mr. Chesterton, whose poetical flights will be read with joy, if not with credulity, by all lovers of the English countryside, ventures upon the implied prophecy that by the thirtieth century Cobbett's horse-hoofs will indeed have returned."

+ Nation and Ath 38:472 D 26 '25 580w

Reviewed by J: Langdon-Davies

New Repub 47:368 Ag 18 '26 200w

"There are things in Cobbett which none is better fitted than Mr. Chesterton to understand and to interpret, and it is therefore out of the question that his book on Cobbett should be altogether bad. This, then, is a bad book; but embedded in it is an excellent essay. For Mr. Chesterton goes, every now and then, right to the heart of the truth—for example, when he calls the story of Cobbett 'the disillusionment of a patriot.'" G. D. H. C.

+ New Statesman 26:552 F 13 '26 800w

N Y Times p7 Je 13 '26 750w

Reviewed by D: Loth

N Y World p6m F 28 '26 700w

Outlook 143:184 Je 2 '26 250w

Sat R 140:662 D 5 '25 100w

"There is more to be said of Cobbett than Mr. Chesterton tells us. His actions, recorded in profusion by himself as well as by others, lend themselves to criticism. But, though pedants may criticize, Mr. Chesterton has extracted at any rate what was essential to his own purpose." E: Shanks

+ — Sat R 141:36 Ja 9 '26 1150w

"It is an excellent book, all the better for being serious and constructive underneath its liveliness and wit."

+ Spec 135:1044 D 5 '25 120w

"With such a man Mr. Chesterton's sympathies are both obvious and charming. He could hardly have chosen a subject more admirably suited to his pen. A book that is as much Chesterton as Cobbett, stimulating, paradoxical, poetical, and full of gusto."

+ Spec 136:372 F 27 '26 800w

"If this biographical fantasy is irritating sometimes when Mr. Chesterton is considering the things that Cobbett hated, it is delightful always when he is considering the things that Cobbett loved. Therein, no doubt, it resembles Cobbett himself. It would be hard to tell the beautiful story of his wooing and marriage better than is done here, and in another region of thought Mr. Chesterton is right in the tribute he pays to the keen-sightedness of this self-educated peasant."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p844 D 10 '25 650w

CHEYNEY, EDWARD POTTS. History of England from the defeat of the Armada to the death of Elizabeth; with an account of English institutions during the later sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries. 2v v 2 589p $6.50 (30s) Longmans

942.05 Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603

The first volume of this history was published in 1914. The second volume completes a sound and interesting narrative of the last fifteen years of Elizabeth's reign, giving a most complete account of the administrative system of England during these years and a valuable description of English local government. It is rich in quotations from records of state and from personal documents.

"Twelve years have elapsed since the publication of the first installment of Professor Cheyney's magnum opus, but his readers are now richly rewarded for their long wait. We possess at last a standard history of fifteen of the most difficult years of English history, by a recognized master of the period; we have seen the gap between Froude and Gardiner bridged. The volume is marred by a few minor inaccuracies." R. B. Merriman

+ — Am Hist R 31:769 Jl '26 1600w

Booklist 22:324 My '26

"Both excellent textbook and excellent story."

+ Bookm 63:367 My '26 120w

"If Professor Cheyney had provided only his plain tale of events he would have justified the publication of his two volumes. The story has been scattered about in printed and unprinted source materials, in monographs of varying authority, or scantily treated in general histories. Now it is unemotionally but attractively presented almost in the vein of a chronicle." Bartlett Brebner

Hist Outlook 17:299 O '26 650w

"Professor Cheyney's concluding volume more than fulfils the promise of its predecessor. There is still the same happy combination of sound learning and charming style. The whole book overflows with clever characterizations, striking comparisons, and thought-provoking statements. It will take its place on the library shelf between Froude and Gardiner, not because of its chronological limits but by right of its unmistakable merit." S. R. Packard

+ Nation 122:702 Je 23 '26 250w

New Statesman 27:678 S 25 '26 750w

Outlook 143:419 Jl 21 '26 180w

R of Rs 73:557 My '26 60w

Reviewed by Wallace Notestein

Sat R of Lit 2:752 My 1 '26 1000w

Spec 136:1090 Je 26 '26 200w

"Professor Cheyney's two volumes claim a place in every respectable historical library, both on account of their merits and of the absence of other attempts to deal with the period, as a whole, on an adequate scale. We may say at once that they represent a great deal of patient industry, careful research, and calm judgment; Englishmen may find Professor Cheyney a little too detached for their taste, but an antidote to Froude is not out of place."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p244 Ap 1 '26 1600w

Wis Lib Bul 22:229 Jl '26

CHILD, MRS MAUDE (PARKER). Social side of diplomatic life. 306p il $4 Bobbs

B or 92 Diplomacy 26-8952

The author's husband was ambassador to Italy during the Harding administration. To her account of her three years' experience in Rome are added some general observations on diplomatic life, particularly women's relation to it and many anecdotes of personalities abroad and at home.

Booklist 23:34 O '26

"It is a discursive, unimportant, yet amiably readable account."

Bookm 63:xxviii My '26 150w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 23 '26 250w

"The book not only pleases but has historical value. As keenly observant as she is sympathetic, Mrs. Child's pictures of famous people, and her analyses and interpretations of European customs are equally shrewd and engaging."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 21 '26 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p84 Jl '26

"Entertaining book. We were much taken with the first half of it wherein she tells of her experiences in official Rome and elsewhere in Europe." W. O. Tewson

+ Lit R p1 Ap 17 '26 750w

St Louis 24:171 Je '26

CHILD, RICHARD WASHBURN. Battling the criminal. 290p $2.50 Doubleday

364 Crime and criminals. Justice, Administration of 26-1170

The book is an analysis of the present crime situation in the United States, its cause and cure, resulting from the author's investigation of the far from palatable facts. He finds among the chief causes of the startling growth of crime, immigration, too many laws and the inability to enforce them, and the prevalent sentimental feeling toward criminals.

Reviewed by E. W. Burgess

Am J Soc 32:309 S '26 70w

Booklist 22:314 My '26

"Mr. Child could have said all this in two articles. He repeats himself constantly, assuring us that he must not 'give away' either law breakers or detectives who have given confidences to him. This is a sample of splendid journalism. It will not benefit the social worker, the man who is held up at the point of the gun or the average citizen."

— Boston Transcript p6 D 16 '25 450w

"This is a flashy and inaccurate book. Mr. Child makes some good points in regard to the extraordinary defects of our criminal law and

CHILD, RICHARD WASHBURN—Continued
our methods of trial. But the spirit of the whole book is cocksure and misleading." W. D. Lane

— Nation 122:210 F 24 '26 420w

Reviewed by Harold Callender
N Y Times p10 Ja 17 '26 1500w

Springf'd Republican p16 Mr 18 '26 560w

CHILDE, VERE GORDON. Dawn of European civilization. (History of civilization) 328p il $6 Knopf [16s K. Paul]

571 Europe—History. Europe—Civilization. Archeology. Man, Prehistoric 25-18891

"In this work the author has undertaken a study of the re-population and colonization of Europe after the ice ages had finally passed and the palæolithic culture had died out. A miserable remnant of epipalæolithic peoples was to be found here and there, incapable of any progress. Civilization came from the East; from Mesopotamia and Egypt to Crete; from Crete to the mainland and westward up the river pathways. It is a comprehensive study of what we know of neolithic life and peoples, and it gives us, in particular, an account of the migrations of primitive races of which we know not even the name, showing how they may be traced from place to place by their arms and implements and pottery, and how, by a skilful comparison, the actual dates can be arrived at with comparative certainty."—Sat R

"Mr. Childe has travelled far and wide, he knows all the areas of which he is talking, he is an excellent linguist, he can read books and articles—as far as we can judge from the contents of his book—in almost all the European languages including the Slavonic, and has acquired during his travels a wide personal knowledge of the leading archaeologists. His book is one of the best books which have been written on the difficult and thorny questions of prehistoric archaeology, a book free from racial prejudices." M. Rostovtzeff

+ Am Hist R 31:499 Ap '26 820w

Booklist 23:26 O '26

"Mr. Gordon Childe has done a great service to learning. He has given a clear and reliable outline of the story of the earliest civilization of Europe. He is well equipped for the task, for not only has he studied the contents of many Continental museums, but he has command of an impressive array of European languages. His book 'fills a gap' indeed. It contains errors, both in fact and interpretation, but these do not weigh in the scale against its great value as a convenient guide to the subject as a whole." W. J. Perry

+ Nation and Ath 37:709 S 12 '25 900w

"Its extraordinary and, indeed, almost marvellous grasp of an enormous mass of detail and its breadth and sanity of view in dealing with the larger problems, as well as the acute and critical judgment of the author, combine to make the 'Dawn of European Civilisation' a contribution to prehistoric archaeology of first-rate importance which will have a profound effect on future lines of study and research."

+ Nature 118:401 S 18 '26 1950w

Reviewed by A. S. Will

N Y Times p12 D 27 '25 420w

Pratt p16 summer '26

St Louis 24:85 Ap '26

"The importance of the Danube culture as the civilizing element of Western Europe is well brought out, and the question as to Nordic influences acting through Russia is left in suspense till further discoveries are made. It is an excellent piece of work."

+ Sat R 140:218 Ag 22 '25 200w

"Mr. Childe, who never lets his feelings interfere with the work in hand, has done full justice to the archaeology of proto-historic Europe, dealing with it faithfully region by region so that the reader obtains here as accurate a conspectus of the facts as is anywhere to be obtained at present. But the book is none the worse—in fact positively gains in dramatic unity—because there lurks in it a little honest prejudice that one might venture to call 'pro-European.'"

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p756 S 10 '25 1500w

CHIPPERFIELD, ROBERT ORR, pseud. See Ostrander, I. E.

CHIROL, SIR VALENTINE. India; with an introd. by H. A. L. Fisher. (Modern world; a survey of historical forces) 352p $3 Scribner [16s Benn]

954 India—History

[26-5419]

An eminent authority on Indian affairs traces the growth and reactions of the great forces, spiritual and material, ancient and modern, which have made India what she is today. Among these forces are the religious and social system of Hinduism which is the foundation of Indian civilization, the principles of British rule, the tide of western influence, the Great war, the non-cooperation movement, the new Indian constitution and the growth of the militant Swarajist party.

Reviewed by H. L. Hoskins

Am Hist R 32:166 O '26 450w

Reviewed by R. E. Park

Am J Soc 32:303 S '26 250w

Booklist 22:412 Jl '26

Bookm 63:xxx1 My '26 80w

"No one is better fitted than Sir Valentine Chirol to write wisely and temperately upon India. If you want to understand what the problems of India, and of England in India, really are, this volume gives you an unexampled chance." H: W. Nevinson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ap 4 26 1350w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 5 '26 220w

"Of the political and social shifts which have changed India's tolerance of the British to the rebellious attitude of these latter years, of the stirring of Indian consciousness as it grew more and more articulate, this book is a revealing narrative. No better short book on Anglo-Indian relations is likely to appear in our day." Arthur Pound

+ Ind 116:398 Ap 3 '26 1000w

"Sir Valentine tells his story beautifully, of course, from the English point of view, but to his great credit I must say that at times he has spoken as an impartial spectator. The book is virile, dramatic, full of information. He speaks very highly of the civilization of India." Harendranath Maitra

+ Lit R p12 Mr 20 '26 460w

"The book is marked by a lack of understanding of the achievements of Indian intellect—a lack that has marked many British opinions of the past and is responsible for much of the present misunderstanding. The merit of Sir Valentine's book lies in its clear, unheated presentation of those surface facts that most readily present themselves to an observant stranger." W. N. Brown

— + Nation 122:481 Ap 28 '25 580w

"The book is excellent reading, packed with relevant record and illuminative comment. . . Indian Nationalists may read it with profit to the practical furtherance of their cause."

+ Nation and Ath 38:616 Ja 30 '26 1150w

Reviewed by Lyman Bryson

New Repub 48:78 S 8 '26 370w

"On the whole vast question of the reforms, and of the constitutional status of India within the Empire, Sir Valentine Chirol has much to say that is both informing and provocative."

New Statesman 26:782 Ap 3 '26 1150w

N Y Times p3 Mr 7 '26 1050w

"He gives us a valuable and lucid history." C: Johnston

No Am 223:731 D '26 130w

Outlook 143:354 Jl 7 '26 100w

St Louis 24:174 Je '26

"Sir Valentine Chirol has given us a book both valuable and disappointing. As an exposition of political, social and economic conditions in India it is accurate in statement and judicious in commentary; but it does a good deal less than we have the right to expect, from a work by so distinguished an authority, towards indicating the probable future course of events in that sub-continent."

+ — Sat R 141:126 Ja 30 '26 1200w

"He has written a profound book, neither patriotic nor partisan." Howard Swiggett

Sat R of Lit 2:768 My 8 '26 850w

"It is good to have so serious and responsible a book upon questions that are too often treated in a prejudiced and partisan fashion."

+ Spec 136:91 Ja 16 '26 120w

Reviewed by Sydney Greenbie

Springf'd Republican p7f My 30 '26 800w

"Those who are trying to see into the future, to estimate the attitude of the 'silent masses,' to study the reaction of world forces on India or to realize the changes threatened by the new advance of industrialism, cannot do better than read this admirable survey. It is one of the best books of the kind that has yet appeared, and is the more valuable because of its evident desire to be impartial."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p89 F 11 '26 1600w

Wis Lib Bul 22:229 J1 '26

CHISHOLM, ARCHIBALD. High roads and cross roads. 87p $1 (2s 6d) Longmans

248 Christian life 26-15630

A little book of addresses which seeks to inspire the application of Christian principles to daily living.

"There is a fine combination of New Testament interpretation and illustration and the questions of everyday life. Withal the writer brings his rich store of literature, prose and poetry to illuminate his theme and enrich his style."

Boston Transcript p5 N 24 '26 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p659 S 30 '26 50w

CHRISTIE, MRS AGATHA (MILLER). Murder of Roger Ackroyd. 306p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Collins]

26-13795

"The story is told in the first person by Dr. Sheppard the physician in a small English village called King's Abbott. Roger Ackroyd is murdered one night under particularly perplexing circumstances. Strong suspicions centre on his stepson, Ralph Payton, who had not only the best of motives, but also disappeared immediately following the murder. The case is taken over by Hercule Poirot. Matters become more and more complicated, till one surprising fact after another begins to reveal itself. It would most certainly not be fair in the present case to reveal the outcome of 'The Murder of Roger Ackroyd.'"—N Y Times

Booklist 23:79 N '26

"The truly startling denouement is uncommonly original and will restore a thrill to the most jaded reader of detective stories. It is obtained, however, at a slight sacrifice of plausible character portrayal." H. T. Baker

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 J1 25 '26 450w

Boston Transcript p6 J1 28 '26 450w

"The solution is perfectly rational and simple, which always makes for an interesting story, and this tale is no exception to that rule. It is well worth reading and holds the interest to the end."

+ Lit R p6 J1 31 '26 150w

"She plays fair, as always, concealing from the reader no facts known to the incomparable Poirot; and as always she contrives to keep her secret just so long as she wishes—which is until the very end. But this time the secret is more than usually original and ingenious, and is a device which no other writer could have employed without mishap. The plot is disclosed with detached exactitude, but at the same time the characters are entertaining, and the human interest never flags."

+ Nation and Ath 39:390 J1 3 '26 200w

"There are doubtless many detective stories more exciting and blood-curdling than 'The Murder of Roger Ackroyd,' but this reviewer has recently read very few which provide greater analytical stimulation. This story, though it is inferior to them at their best, is in the tradition of Poe's analytical tales and the Sherlock Holmes stories. The author does not devote her talents to the creation of thrills and shocks, but to the orderly solution of a single murder, conventional at that, instead."

+ N Y Times p18 J1 13 '26 320w

"Miss Christie's dedication of the book is to one 'who likes an orthodox detective story, murder, inquest, and suspicion falling on every one in turn!' So she set herself to write such an orthodox story, with the strange result that she has succeeded in producing one of the few notable for originality." W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 2:951 J1 24 '26 600w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 22 '26 200w

"This is a well-written detective story of which the only criticism might perhaps be that there are too many curious incidents not really connected with the crime which have to be elucidated before the true criminal can be discovered."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p397 Je 10 '26 150w

CHRISTIE, ELLA ROBERTSON. Through Khiva to golden Samarkand. 280p il $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

915.8 West Turkestan—Description and travel. Asia, Central—Description and travel 26-5205

"This is the story of a woman's journey alone through the deserts of Central Asia to the heart of Turkestan. Miss Christie is the only woman to have made this difficult journey, and in narrating her experiences she reveals a keen zest for adventure."—R of Rs

"The entire book should have been rewritten in the past tense or it should have been published as the actual transcript of a diary with accurate dates. Barring this fundamental defect, Miss Christie has written a most entertaining book." Marguerite Harrison

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ja 24 '26 1150w

"The route is through a magic country and Miss Christie tells her story with extraordinary appreciation of its fine points."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 16 '26 300w

"The author has done an honest, straightforward book when she might easily have represented herself as the 'first white woman' sort of thing." Blair Niles

+ Int Bk R p158 F '26 70w

"Through Khiva to Golden Samarkand" is worth reading for not-too-busy people. Being a spinster, Ella Christie excludes from her book any information on the morals and real manners of the rude races she dwells among. However, there is much of the kitchen, for housewives." F: O'Brien

+ — Lit R p2 Mr 6 '26 720w

"She has given us an admirably clear, if somewhat superficial, picture of the country and the people, and the sights and smells and sounds, and particularly of the Russian colonial life under the Tsar. She does not pretend to be an Orientalist. . . . Matthew Arnold's magnificent passage on the Oxus is mangled by two misquotations." Edmund Candler

+ — Nation and Ath 38:324 N 28 '25 330w

CHRISTIE, ELLA R.—Continued

"It is certainly an interesting travel-book, but the epithets adventurous and remarkable should be reserved for such experiences as Mr. Baldwin's. The author travelled by train and steamer and saw the sights that any tourist could see."

+ — New Statesman 26:364 Ja 2 '26 160w

R of Rs 72:666 D '25 40w

"Miss Christie's account of Khiva, Bokhara, and Samarkand is interesting chiefly because this corner of Asia is so often forgotten. This volume, which would also stand some pruning is, we regret to say, a conspicuously bad example of book-making, being difficult to read and unattractive in practically every feature."

Dale Warren

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:412 D 12 '25 80w

"Lightly written and well illustrated, her book gives a vivid idea of the mediaeval pomp, splendour and picturesqueness that are now seriously threatened by the Bolshevik régime. Miss Christie writes not only as a traveller, but as an antiquary."

+ Spec 135:559 O 3 '25 100w

CIPPICO, COUNT ANTONIO. Italy; the central problem of the Mediterranean. (Inst. of politics publications, Williams college, Williamstown, Mass.) 110p $2 Yale univ. press [10s 6d Oxford univ. press]

945 Italy—Politics and government. Mediterranean sea—History. Europe—Politics 26-11585

These six lectures delivered by Count Cippico before the Williamstown institute of politics are a reasoned exposition of "the serious problems which form part of the daily economic and civil life" of the Italian senator's home country.

Am Pol Sci R 20:706 Ag '26 180w

Ann Am Acad 127:195 S '26 280w

Booklist 23:71 N '26

Reviewed by H: K. Norton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ag 15 '26 1000w

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 14 '26 1250w

Reviewed by Walter Littlefield

N Y Times p14 Je 20 '26 700w

"This Italian problem is set forth briefly and persuasively in Count Cippico's six lectures. Its statement of Italy's case is reasonable. Its idealization of Italian international policies is natural in one who is presenting before the bar of world opinion the cause of a nation which has never in modern times received adequate recognition or just treatment at the hands of the more strongly-entrenched world powers."

O. D. Wannamaker

Sat R of Lit 2:772 My 8 '26 500w

"The last lecture is devoted to a eulogy of the Fascist régime so indiscriminating that it cites the bombardment of Corfu as proof of Italy's moderation. Nevertheless the argument that Fascismo approaches international problems in a matter-of-fact temper is well conceived, and a book which outlines the modern Italian attitude towards international affairs will interest British as well as American readers."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p802 N 11 '26 180w

CLAMPETT, FREDERICK WILLIAM. Luther Burbank, "our beloved infidel," his religion of humanity. 144p $1.50 Macmillan

B or 92 Burbank, Luther 26-19185

In an interview with a reporter Luther Burbank, a short time before his death, called himself an infidel. Immediately a storm broke over the head of the gentle and essentially religious scientist which clouded his last days and brought him into the center of religious controversy. The author of this little book who was with Burbank during the weeks while the vast resulting correspondence was being arranged and answered, has prepared this summary of the naturalist's religious experiences and beliefs.

"Mr. Clampett has done a fine work in keeping himself behind the scenes, and those Christians who took part in the merciless derision heaped upon Mr. Burbank's head when he made his statement of faith will do well to have a look at his religious beliefs as put forth in this book." C. W. F.

+ Bookm 64:xix Ja '27 260w

"One admires Burbank's frankness, his search for truth, his loving spirit and his honest convictions, but he leaves little ground for hope of faith."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 22 '26 280w

"In the religious flux of the present the little book is a timely one, and will offer to many disturbed souls much food for thinking and much help."

+ N Y Times p28 D 12 '26 230w

CLARK, AUSTIN HOBART. Animals of land and sea. (Lib. of modern sciences) 276p $3 Van Nostrand [15s Chapman & Hall]

590 Zoology 25-19419

"An attempt is made to present the animal world as a living unit, showing the inter-relationships of the various divisions, and the relations of the whole to the plant world, to physical conditions, and to man. Such a treatment is complementary to the usual one in which the various animal types are taken up in sequence and separately discussed."—Preface

Booklist 22:317 My '26

"An original and fascinating work." E. E. Slosson

+ Bookm 63:68 Mr '26 130w

"The accuracy of the work is attested at once by Mr. Clarke's name on the title page. The selection of text material has been wise, thousands of irrelevant facts having been omitted, only those of importance and obvious significance being included. I am as favorably inclined toward the text as I am disappointed in the illustrations. The author has given us a compendium most valuable and compact, with reference possibilities made still more available by a very full index." W: Beebe

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 N 22 '25 700w

J Home Econ 18:100 F '26 130w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:81 F '26

St Louis 24:53 Mr '26

"More than any of the numerous recent works on popular zoology, his book is packed with little-known and out-of-the-way facts about animals. Something you never heard of before jumps at you from every page. . . And the book is as full of pictures as it is of facts; there are 272 pages and there are 740 pictures. These are especially valuable, in that very many of them are of creatures whose portraits have never appeared before, outside technical monographs which nobody but specialists ever see."

Frank Thone and James Stokley

+ Sat R of Lit 2:372 D 5 '25 220w

Spec 136:sup709 Ap 17 '26 200w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER. Eugene O'Neill. (Modern American writers) 110p $1 McBride

B or 92 O'Neill, Eugene Gladstone 26-27543

"The book is the most detailed study of this dramatist extant. It should be kept beside the plays, for it gives not only Mr. Clark's views but those of Mr. O'Neill himself, which the author, like a good interviewer, has been glad to quote. And it traces Mr. O'Neill's growth in the theatre, the relation of his plays to experiences in his past life, the origin of many of his ideas, and something of him as a personality."—N Y World

Booklist 23:128 D '26

"The strange and sometimes puzzling personality of O'Neill of course pervades the book. We are given many facts about his plays, their writing, production and publication, and some commentary upon them."

Boston Transcript S 4 '26 620w

Ind 117:455 O 16 '26 160w

"Conscientious, workmanlike, and first-hand-documented study." B: De Casseres

+ Int Bk R p767 N '26 1300w

"This book is really premature, readable and interesting though it is." H: J. Forman

+ — N Y Times p5 S 26 '26 900w

"An excellent book which criticises, describes and maintains a point of view." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p4m S 5 '26 600w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 30 '26 820w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER, and LIEBER, MAXIM, comps. Great short stories of the world; an anthology selected from the literatures of all periods and countries. 1072p $5 McBride [12s 6d Heinemann]

Short stories—Collections 26-790

Among these 177 stories from thirty-five literatures there are many translated for the first time into English. The collection is three dimensional—geographical, historical, and racial. Each group of stories is prefaced by an introduction to the literature it represents, and each story is headed by a brief biographical sketch of the author.

Booklist 22:251 Mr '26

"Like practically all collections of short stories and practically all treatises on short stories, the book was never intended for the sophisticated or the well informed. But it will be useful to schools and it will be useful to libraries all the year round." Frances Newman

Bookm 63:91 Mr '26 80w

Reviewed by Mary Kolars

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 16 '26 800w

"It would be perhaps ungenerous in so narrow a space to do anything but praise this admirable anthology. From ancient Egypt back to our own Middle Western 'home town' with all sorts of instruction and entertainment on the way is surely a journey to be taken with substantial profit to one's culture. One might, however, accuse the editors of partiality to their native land; and surely, for even the ingenuous reader, there is an ill-concealed bathos in the inclusion of a name like that of James Branch Cabell."

+ — Dial 81:80 Jl '26 170w

"Here are Messrs. Clark and Lieber setting forth on a five-thousand-year journey without a single theory to guide them. And they reach their destination without, so far as we can discover, any serious mishaps. Any one who knows short stories will find certain of his favorites missing from the collection; he will find many others included, and scores of which he has never heard before." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p5 Ja 16 '26 560w

Reviewed by J. J. Smertenko

Nation 122:644 Je 9 '26 220w

"A more comprehensive anthology than has ever before been attempted." J. W. Krutch

N Y World p7m F 21 '26 750w

Pratt p28 spring '26

R of Rs 74:112 Jl '26 120w

"They have also followed American tradition by beginning with anecdotes from the Old Testament and Jatakas from India and scraps of Greek and German and English epic poems, all of which may be very remote ancestors of our stories but which are certainly not short stories themselves, and which are not necessary in this book unless the story of how Prometheus brought fire down from Olympus to mortal man is necessary in a history of the Chicago fire." Frances Newman

— Sat R of Lit 2:806 My 22 '26 1200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p764 N 4 '26 750w

CLARK, CATHERINE. Dusk of day. 331p $2 A. & C. Boni

26-9670

A melodramatic and sentimental story of an English family. Sir Richard Adair has two sons, Peter and Michael, the younger of whom he loves with a tenderness as marked as his dislike for Peter. Passive dislike for his elder son turned into positive hate when as the result of a childish quarrel between the two brothers an accident had crippled Michael for life. Neither boy was ever allowed to forget that the accident had been Peter's fault, and to add to Peter's natural distress, Michael's mind was deliberately poisoned against him. After the death of their parents, Peter devoted his life to his morose and exacting brother, even giving up the girl he loved. There seemed no end to the misery Michael was willing to inflict until another girl came who knew how to manage him. There was peace for everybody then.

"The story in every way is highly suitable for reading aloud in the family circle."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 26 '26 320w

"A refreshing literary drink of cool spring water after an indulgence in some of the head-achey synthetic cocktails of modern fiction. And, yet, there is nothing thin or emaciated in 'Dusk of Day'."

+ N Y Times p9 My 16 '26 580w

"'Dusk of Day' might have been a very capable novel if more time, or talent, had been available."

— + N Y World p4m My 16 '26 150w

CLARK, CATHERINE. Heart of a lark. 301p $2 A. & C. Boni [7s 6d Hurst & B.] 25-19621

The two girls were cousins and contrasts. Mollie, the pretty one, selfish, light-hearted and empty-headed, got all the plums in life and all the partners; Moll, the plain one, generous and sweet-tempered, got a share of genuine pleasure from seeing the other's happiness. Then came the affair of Tony, his pursuit of the charming butterfly, their engagement, Tony's departure for the tropics, his illness, and his blindness. Mollie, who could not bear to look on pain, refused to marry him. Divining Moll's love for Tony, she implored her cousin to take her place, and this Moll was persuaded to do. In height, in voice, and in feature, she was just enough like Mollie to make the deception seem feasible (to the author). The rest is the story of the marriage, and of Mollie's love affair and change of heart.

"The situation is improbable, yes, impossible, but the author has made an interesting story of it and the characters are real people."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 D 12 '25 360w

"'Heart of a Lark' is uneven in tone and shoddy in writing. Miss Clark's dialogue is insipid where it undertakes 'lightness' and puerile where it tries for grandiose effects."

— N Y Times p17 D 27 '25 550w

"The story is well told and the incidents calculated to hold our interest."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p286 Ap 26 '25 120w

CLARK, ELLERY HARDING. Carib gold. 321p $2 Bobbs [7s 6d Hurst & B.]

26-4943

Dick Lindsay, a peaceable lad, tho an expert marksman and wrestler, is suddenly transported from a sleepy village on the coast of New Jersey to the deck of a pirate ship, the reluctant ally of a pirate. He tells his own story of meeting the Black Panther, worsting him in a shooting match, and accepting under pressure a share in the pirate's scheme of vengeance against a treacherous comrade.

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 3 '26 430w

CLARK, ELLERY HARDING—Continued

"'Carib Gold' will delight the hearts of any whose pulses quicken at the thought of the black flag and the Spanish Main." J. S.
+ Ind 116:305 Mr 13 '26 220w

"'Carib Gold' may be 'old stuff' but Mr. Clark has dressed it most attractively and no one who likes pirate stories will be disappointed in it." A. C. Pierce
+ Lit R p8 My 8 '26 250w

"A man's too great versatility sometimes militates against his attempts to specialize in one particular line of work. A case in point is Ellery H. Clark, whose latest novel, 'Carib Gold,' should be a thriller and yet is not."
N Y Times p22 F 21 '26 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p497 J1 22 '26 170w

CLARK, IMOGEN. Suppose we play; a collection of indoor and outdoor games for young and old. 299p $2 Crowell

790 Games

25-19289

Games for old and young, for indoor and outdoor enjoyment, suggestions for parties, writing games, puzzles and charades are all included in this generous book of entertainment, written in part as the grown up's answer to the frequent demand of the child, "What shall I play now?"

Booklist 22:167 Ja '26

"There is a large section given over to party games, which will be beneficial to any hostess who has been so busy making sandwiches she has no ideas left on how otherwise to entertain the young guests." M. G. Bonner
+ Int Bk R p260 Mr '26 220w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:160 Mr '26

Wis Lib Bul 22:33 Ja '26

CLARK, JOHN MAURICE. Social control of business. (Univ. of Chicago. Materials for the study of business) 483p $4 Univ. of Chicago press

330.1 Business. Industry—Organization, control, etc. 26-9242

"A survey of the processes and instruments by which 'business' is subjected to a 'control' which modifies the workings of the individual self-interest and competition which were the fundamental postulates of the classical political economy. From the viewpoint of that older school of thought, social control is seen as something externally imposed upon business activity, but Professor Clark shows that 'individualistic' economic enterprise is limited and shaped by forces of group control throughout all the stages of its evolution. The book offers evidence that custom, morals, codes of ethics, and law are factors which have to be taken into account even in the analysis and explanation of strictly 'economic' activities."—Am J Soc

"As might be expected in a book which attempts to cover so wide a range of topics, the treatment is rather uneven. For his extended discussion of legal and governmental control the author has relied largely upon the earlier publications of Ely, Commons, and Dean Pound. The two chapters on informal controls are particularly interesting. The book was designed as a textbook, and seems to be quite well adapted for that purpose." F. N. House
+ Am J Soc 32:146 J1 '26 260w

"The book is well written; there is scarcely a dull page in the entire work. The author's attitude toward his subject is discriminatingly critical, his judgments are balanced and judicious. However, it is sometimes difficult to know when he is merely analyzing, giving arguments pro and con, and when stating his own views and conclusions. It further appears to the reviewer that the materials are not as logically arranged as they might have been." R. J. Swenson
+ Am Pol Sci 20:902 N '26 600w

Reviewed by J. H. Tufts
Int J Ethics 37:101 O '26 850w

"An excellent example of one of the best kinds of thinking that are being done by contemporary economic theorists—which is to say, with all due deference to the past, one of the best kinds of thinking that have ever been done with regard to social affairs. This is not to say that the book is simple or is easy reading. On the contrary, its distinguishing merit, like that of all the best contemporary theory, consists in its keeping forever in mind the endless complexity of the forces and the motives at work in our bewildering present-day life, and trying to search out the lines of social action most promising in consequence." H: R. Mussey
+ Nation 123:197 S 1 '26 670w

"Obviously a textbook for courses in business administration, this is to me more interesting than most utopias. To be sure, it is harder reading; it requires more concentrated attention, more reflection. Yet like other utopias it is an earnest attempt to discover the best possible way of living together. What adds to the interest in this case is that 'best possible' is limited by considerably less than a geologic age or a biological change in man." G: Soule
+ New Repub 47:341 Ag 11 '26 1550w

Survey 56:644 S 15 '26 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p513 J1 29 '26 50w

CLARK, MARION ELIZABETH, and others, comps. Art in home economics. (Univ. of Chicago home economics ser.) 66p $1 Univ. of Chicago press [5s Cambridge univ. press]

016.6 Art—Bibliography. Costume—Bibliography. Furniture—Bibliography. House decoration—Bibliography. Architecture—Bibliography 25-21195

"A bibliography of costume design, history of costume, interior decoration, history of furniture, architecture, art principles, and art appreciation."—Subtitle

"Valuable and up-to-date."
Booklist 22:189 F '26

"The details of the references appear to be accurately stated and consistently and clearly arranged—a quality which is not always found in such lists and which shows painstaking work by Miss Clark and her colleagues. The press work also is excellent."
+ J Home Econ 18:43 Ja '26 480w

CLARK, MARY E., and QUIGLEY, MARGERY
2 CLOSEY (MARGERY CLARK, pseud.). Etiquette, jr. 306p $2 Doubleday

395 Etiquet

26-16896

A book of etiquette for school boys and girls and their junior elders which seems to cover all occasions and which administers its precepts with good humor.

"A fine spirit of consideration for others and respect for one's self pervades this book of etiquette for young people."

+ Booklist 23:136 D '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p116 N '26

St Louis 24:324 N '26

CLARK, VINNIE B. Europe; a geographical reader. 555p il $1.28 Silver

914 Europe—Description and travel 25-19513

The book is "an attempt to furnish geographical material for children which will be sufficiently simple, colorful, and realistic to attract and hold their attention." Text and pictures are interesting, thought provoking, and offer suggestive material for correlated study in history, literature, art, and folkways of the countries treated.

"It is a book intended to promote good will by interesting Americans in our fellow men abroad, by showing us that our comforts, our prosperity, our life, are ministered to by all the countries of the Old World and theirs by us. This is the modern idea of a large purpose of geography; general welfare. This book will lead the children in the right direction."

+ Educ R 71:111 F '26 250w

"The book certainly is interesting, it abounds in local color, and there is a personal touch which makes it thoroughly realistic. It would be very difficult to find a Geographical Reader on Europe which is as full of detail and as interestingly presented." J. B. Appleton

+ Hist Outlook 17:38 Ja '26 380w

CLARK, WALLACE. Shop and office forms; their design and use. 139p il $2.50 McGraw 651 Business—Forms, blanks, etc. 25-10401

"Intended as an aid toward the simplification of clerical work in shops and offices. Deals with the design of blank forms, shows the relation of forms to the management of certain typical shop and office departments, and discusses the general administrative features connected with forms."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:57 N '25

Eng N 94:1030 Je 18 '25 50w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:29 Ja '26

CLARKE, SIR EDWARD GEORGE. Benjamin Disraeli; the romance of a great career, 1804-1881. 308p il $3.25 Macmillan [10s 6d Murray]

B or 92 Beaconsfield, Benjamin Disraeli, 1st earl of [26-27544]

The author, who is a survivor of Disraeli's own times, describes his book as a summary of the six-volume Monypenny and Buckle. It is a useful condensation which gives a sympathetic view of Disraeli in both his public and his private life.

"This biography is unquestionably the fairest, most interesting, most valuable short life of Disraeli yet written." E. P. Chase

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:906 N '26 480w

Booklist 23:128 D '26

"It makes no claim to originality; it adds nothing to the overswollen mass of facts and interpretations. It is frankly an abridgment of Monypenny and Buckle. A short cut for the reader in a hurry, who wants to know what all the shouting is for, but has neither the time nor the courage to go plowing his way through the maelstrom of Disraeliana." A. L. Sacher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 N 14 '26 450w

Reviewed by Edmund Noble

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 21 '26 1500w

"To take the great work [of Monypenny and Buckle] as a basis and to produce a single volume life for the ordinary reader was a job well worth doing. But, unfortunately, Sir Edward Clarke in the doing of it has allowed much of the freshness and force of the original to slip away."

+ Ind 117:480 O 23 '26 140w

Reviewed by B. De Casseres

Int Bk R p692 O '26 1300w

"Vivid and entertaining story."

+ Nation 123:sup607 D 1 '26 300w

"The book is attractive just because Disraeli is a hero to his old follower. It is the merit of Sir Edward Clarke as a biographer that he sees Disraeli as a man with many weaknesses, but essentially generous and noble. He writes as a Tory, and it is no use expecting from him any detached criticism of Disraelian policies."

+ Nation and Ath 39:478 Jl 24 '26 580w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

N Y Times p33 O 31 '26 1300w

Sat R 142:37 Jl 10 '26 1050w

"A straightforward, chronological life of Benjamin Disraeli. It neither criticizes his political conduct nor attempts any estimate of his place in literature. While it lacks the brilliance of Froude, it is a well balanced account by one who brings to the subject a deep interest and much personal knowledge of the period." W. S. Hayward

+ Sat R of Lit 3:71 Ag 28 '26 520w

"Sir Edward Clarke has performed his difficult task with no small success. Occasionally, no doubt, the excessive labour of making a précis, which is only another way of saying pouring a quart into a pint pot, has led him to the omission of certain aspects of Disraeli's character and to the minimizing of others, and so to a sense of disproportion and confusion, coupled with occasional repetitions. I am bound to say, however, that the net result is not only readable, but convincing." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 137:61 Jl 10 '26 1350w

"The book's principal contribution to the mass of Disraelian literature is to reveal this genius as personal rather than intellectual."

Times [London] Lit Sup p427 Je 24 '26 1450w

CLARKSON, JESSE DUNSMORE. Labour and nationalism in Ireland. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) 502p $4.50 Columbia univ. press [18s King]

331.8 Labor and laboring classes—Ireland. Ireland—Politics and government 26-422

"A consideration of previous difficulties arising from labour problems, the conflicts of ecclesiastical authority, and repeated confiscation and re-allotment of land, forms the introductory chapters. Legislation to remedy these matters, attempts to express labour's needs through trade unionism when legislation failed, and the growth of a national feeling are discussed in following chapters. These movements are then traced into the twentieth century, and the grimness of the struggle centering about Ireland's reason for existence is revealed."—Dial

"To those who, because of its uncertainties and the absence of any discoverable thread of continuity, have found difficulty in becoming interested in any phase of Irish history, this will seem a rather heavy dose. It is prosecuted with a documentary zeal and a fine disregard of what is immediately practical, that is perhaps more characteristic of the historian than of the economist." W. E. Catlin

Am Econ R 16:334 Je '26 230w

"This work is written from the standpoint of a convinced Socialist, and those who do not accept the socialistic gospel in its entirety will be slow to acquiesce in many of Dr. Clarkson's judgments and views. Still, even such persons will find his book, merely from the mass of positive information contained in it, well worth reading. It is certainly the most complete work that has yet appeared on the subject which it treats. The chapter on Early Irish Trade Unionism is especially valuable, although we can not but think that the author has sometimes done less than justice to the pioneers, those men who made possible the later work of his heroes James Connolly and James Larkin." M. T. H.

+ Am Hist R 31:786 Jl '26 600w

"In this publication sponsored by the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University, the Irish question is presented with sympathy and in detail. Every phase of the conflict is clearly presented."

+ Dial 81:520 D '26 200w

"Labour and Nationalism is a monument of patient industry. Mr. Clarkson has read everything on his subject. . . Unlike not a few workers in the same field, he is master of his material, and his skill in selecting and arranging masses of evidence will move both the envy and admiration of those who know the nature of the ground across which he drove his plough. Unfortunately Mr. Clarkson's knowledge of the movement does not extend to the human stuff of which its ranks are composed. Had he spent as many hours with Dublin dockers or Tipperary farm hands as he devoted weeks to ferreting amongst trade records and Parliamentary papers his book might have lacked something in academic thoroughness, but it would have gained in practical value."

CLARKSON, J. D.—Continued

+ — New Statesman 27:236 Je 12 '26 1300w

CLEMENCEAU, GEORGES EUGENE BENJAMIN. Demosthenes; tr. by Charles Miner Thompson. 158p il $2.50 Houghton [10s 6d Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Demosthenes 26-16054

With characteristic vigor, M. Clemenceau eulogizes the Attic statesman and orator, reading into his interpretation of Demosthenes's times and career something of his hopes and fears for France today and of his own part in defending French civilization.

Reviewed by Paul Shorey

Am Hist R 32:351 Ja '27 490w

Booklist 23:171 Ja '27

"The book has as much fire and eloquence as though it were a speech delivered to the factions of the French Chamber of Deputies."

+ Ind 117:511 O 30 '26 120w

"The more one studies it the more one is tempted to assume that this eulogy of Demosthenes is merely a peg on which the 'Tiger' wishes to hang an up-to-date lesson in politics and patriotism addressed to Frenchmen. None the less, his review of the immortal orator's high aims, efforts and achievements should itself charm thousands in all lands, while the suggestions which he has drawn from history might be dug into with profit both by Frenchmen, to whom they appeal potently, and by our Senators." C: H: Meltzer

Lit R p6 O 2 '26 1200w

"Demosthenes and Philip and Æschines and that fat-faced Isocrates are alive and M. Georges Clemenceau is alive and his book is alive." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 40:271 N 20 '26 80w

Outlook 144:574 D 29 '26 250w

"Some one has made the guess that 'Demosthenes' is the 'Tiger's' spiritual autobiography. At any rate, it is a remarkable piece of writing for a man of Clemenceau's years."

R of Rs 74:667 D '26 60w

"A book original and unexpected, able and eloquent." A. W. Colton

+ Sat R of Lit 3:332 N 27 '26 600w

"Here is a strange and intriguing book, written by the great French leader of national opinion. . . . The whole of the so-called lessons and warnings contained in this ingenious but wholly delusive piece of political strategy are based on a false analogy. . . . I have written with brutal frankness of this book because of its dangerous obsessions, but as a piece of historic criticism I feel its charm deeply." J. St L. Strachey

— + Spec 137:924 N 20 '26 720w

Times [London] Lit Sup p877 D 2 '26 520w

CLEMENTS, REX. Stately southerner. 191p il $4 Houghton [10s 6d Cranton]

910.4 Voyages and travels. Seafaring life

Following the success of his first book, "A gypsy of the Horn" (Book Review Digest, 1925), Mr. Clements writes in the same style these sketches and reminiscences of other adventures on other sailing ships.

"Two uncanny stories, 'Stand from Under' and 'The Wraith of the Pocahontas,'" are valuable as genuine examples of the folk-lore of the sea. Both are well told, but more impressive perhaps than either is the ghostly island—apparently an inexplicable mirage—seen by a whole ship's company in the Indian Ocean, and afterwards located on old East India charts. Mr. Clements gives us such good fare that we incline to ask for more."

+ Nation and Ath 39:772 O 2 '26 420w

"The author has written every word of these sagas of a ship with exceeding beauty."

+ Outlook 144:508 D 15 '26 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p646 S 30 '26 520w

CLIFFORD, SIR HUGH CHARLES. In a corner of Asia; being tales and impressions of men and things in the Malay peninsula. 252p $1.50 McBride [3s 6d Unwin]

Reprint of a book first published in 1899—a collection of stories of Malayan life and character.

"Naturally, from a purely literary standpoint there is much food for criticism in Sir Hugh Clifford's book. His style is very uneven. At times it is labored, stilted, with obvious striving after literary quality. At others it is charmingly naive, direct and simple. Occasionally it rises to really great heights." Marguerite Harrison

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ag 29 '26 1400w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 31 '26 200w

"These stories are documents of value to the student and of interest to the general reader."

+ Ind 116:696 Je 12 '26 70w

Reviewed by L. Moore

Int Bk R p549 Ag '26 200w

"One story will remain permanent in literature, 'A Daughter of Muhammadans.' The book is priceless for this one story." Harendranath Maitra

+ Lit R p3 My 1 '26 60w

CLIFFORD, SIR HUGH CHARLES. In days that are dead. 316p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Murray]

26-21461

The author of "The further side of silence" offers these stories of the white man's life in the tropics in times long past, the loneliness, the horror, the difficulties of which can never be encountered again. Contents: Rachel; In the heart of Kalamantan; Father Rouellot; In the rushing of many waters; Cast; A tight place; A tale of old Labuan; Greater love; Alone; a story of very early days in Borneo; The king of the Sedangs; From beyond the bourne.

Reviewed by W. B. Seabrook

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 D 12 '26 550w

"Inevitably coloured, often highly coloured, by the sentimentality of the Imperialist outlook, the stories are nevertheless free from effeminacy and platitude. The nature of their themes demands a certain lack of reserve, but this outspoken emotionalism is not allowed to exceed what is proportionate to exile, and the style of the book is ready and lively."

+ — Nation and Ath 40:316 N 27 '26 190w

N Y Times p12 D 26 '26 620w

"Malaya, its people, its scenery, and its waterways are brought before the reader freshly and with great vigor. . . . Altogether, a notable collection of Eastern stories."

+ Spec 137:869 N 13 '26 100w

"The number of those who still have romantic notions about life in Malay, Indo-China, and Borneo is small; so it is disappointing to find Sir Hugh Clifford throughout the greater part of this volume devoting his skill in word-painting and knowledge of the locality to showing what an unpleasant locality it is. The picture given by these stories discloses a part of the world about as revolting as any country could possibly seem."

Times [London] Lit Sup p772 N 4 '26 160w

CLIFFORD, SIR HUGH CHARLES. Prince of Malaya. 253p $2.50 Harper

26-21014

A Malayan prince is sent to England at an early age to be educated. The process of adaptation and assimilation, difficult enough at first, is at the end of a few years complete.

Outwardly and inwardly Saleh appears to be the orthodox product of English public school training and ideals. The first shock of awakening comes in England. The prince then returns to Malaya and is forthwith plunged into the lax and languorous atmosphere of the jungle. There follows a cruel conflict between temperament and training, a conflict unrelieved by sympathy or understanding from the British on the one side or from the prince's own people on the other.

"It is a notable study of character and of the profound irony of race. It is of the Conrad tradition." H. T. Baker

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 S 12 '26 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 N '26

"It is no ordinary novel of East and West, but a deep, eloquent soul-study, convincingly written and making its tragic moral clear without any suspicion of rhetorical overemphasis." F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p4 Ag 14 '26 320w

"'A Prince of Malaya' is a most colorful and fascinating story of places and people of which most of the outside world knows less than nothing."

+ N Y Times p16 Ag 15 '26 660w

"While the manner in which a book is written nowadays interests us more than its matter, in that we are again passing through one of those periodical fits of rebellion against the manners and mannerisms of our fathers, one can only hope it will be long before the fashion passes quite away of writing a story so simply, so unpretentiously, with so much reticence and wisdom, as 'A Prince of Malaya.'" H. G. Dwight

+ Sat R of Lit 3:69 Ag 28 '26 700w

Springf'd Republican p6 S 7 '26 350w

CLINE, LEONARD LANSON. Listen, moon! 312p $2 Viking press

26-15186

A rollicking extravaganza in which no one is responsible but the moon. An elderly Latin professor and the young, pretty, and naturally erring daughter of a creed-bound clergyman are first to feel the lunar spell. Their blithe behavior scandalizes the minister but is really sane compared with what follows when a completely moon crazed group including this renegade pair, a double-dealing reporter, a buxom widow, the estimable Mr Moggs and Judge Weems, turn pirate and chartering a ship kidnap the minister and set sail to search for hidden treasure.

Booklist 23:175 Ja '27

Reviewed by Harrison Smith

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 S 5 '26 850w

"There is a very good chance, we are convinced after reading this farcical tale, that Leonard Cline may become a genuine humorist. There are moments when his story compares favorably with those of Harry Leon Wilson or P. G. Wodehouse at their best. There is unfortunately, almost an equal chance that he will be swamped with the fogs and miasmas of the over-sexed younger generation, and may shower us with wholly unneeded stories of erotic content." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 4 '26 520w

Reviewed by Byron Darnton

Lit R p3 S 25 '26 450w

"The rickety story, so evidently the product of a 'fanciful' imagination, is told better than it deserves, and would distress us less perhaps if it were told worse. The man who is the first to laugh at his own jokes is not noticeable so long as the jokes are funny; the author who begins his sentences with a facetious, promissory smile must deliver the goods or be rewarded with a yawn." R. L.

New Repub 48:128 S 22 '26 200w

"[This] is a fictional enterprise calling for a wholehearted acceptance of the picaresque and a vacation from the portentous seriousness that beclouds the work of our 'young expressers.' Unfortunately the Leonard Cline of 'Godhead' lets us down. Obsessions that have nothing whatever to do with adventure make their un-welcome and too familiar appearance."

+ N Y Times p9 Ag 15 '26 660w

"Glamorous, and exceedingly well written." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p4m Ag 15 '26 370w

Outlook 144:58 S 8 '26 230w

"His humor is broad, fanciful, fresh, infectious, and yet his masterly prose seems to lose nothing of its charm through being employed upon boisterously comic materials."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:76 Ag 28 '26 270w

CLOUSTON, JOSEPH STORER. Lunatic in charge. 270p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Lane]

26-14625

The lunatic hero of two earlier farces by the same author returns in another series of adventures. Having allowed himself to pass as a suicide he manoeuvres into the position of travel guide and medical adviser to the empty-headed young baronet who inherits his property and by ingenious scheming wins back his own fortune from the miserly Sir Algernon.

Booklist 23:175 Ja '27

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 N 7 '26 130w

"There is something debonair and wistful about the simplicity of his theory and the style of his execution. A most amusing book which ends nowhere after an exciting journey."

+ Ind 117:361 S 25 '26 80w

Reviewed by C. P. Sawyer

Lit R p5 S 25 '26 250w

"A very entertaining parody of more scientific and serious mystery stories."

+ Nation and Ath 39:618 Ag 28 '26 200w

New Statesman 27:508 Ag 14 '26 150w

Springf'd Republican p7f D 19 '26 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p538 Ag 12 '26 350w

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR. Essays on life; with an introd. by J. L. Hammond. 176p $2 Dutton [6s Methuen]

824

The essays in this small volume have never before been published. They represent the author's intimate thoughts on life, religion, man and his fellow man.

Booklist 22:321 My '26

"Rarely does a human being so clearly and finely reveal himself as in these essays."

+ Bookm 63:495 Je '26 160w

"In this posthumous volume of essays the peculiar fascination of Clutton-Brock's mind makes itself scarcely less vividly felt than in the books he himself published. There is not always the finish of style, the quiet, unobtrusive but always delightful cadence in the sentences, of his best works, and the proof reading has been careless; but there is his high standard of candor, subtlety and penetration." D. G. Mason

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 23 '26 800w

"By far the most interesting essay is 'When Voltaire Came to Heaven.' Just as Mr. Clutton-Brock's brilliant wit, impulsive truth, patience, power of ridicule and magnanimity are equally shown in this essay, so are they revealed in many of the other worth while bits in his volume." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 17 '26 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 D '26

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR—Continued

"When Voltaire Came to Heaven' is witty, shrewd, provocative and utterly delightful. It is one of those brilliant flights of imagination which would have done credit to Voltaire himself. There is an innocence in it which saves it from the imputation of blasphemy." Harry Salpeter

+ Int Bk R p301 Ap '26 250w

Reviewed by C. W. Stork
Lit R p63 Mr 20 '26 750w

"Although there is much that is personal and charming, there is nothing that is new or original in any of these essays. To those who enjoy hearing old truths and ancient whimsies agreeably exploited, this little book may be recommended."

+ — Living Age 328:698 Mr 27 '26 110w

"These posthumous essays were not written for publication, and are unequal in value; but there are many good things in them."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:sup380 D 5 '25 250w

New Statesman 26:239 D 5 '25 1300w

"There is a spirit of high happiness that breathes throughout A. Clutton-Brock's 'Essays on Life.' There is also intense vigor, zest for carrying a point." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 11 '26 80w

Pratt p28 autumn '26

Reviewed by E. Shanks
Sat R 140:706 D 12 '25 200w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 28 '26 550w

"There is pleasure to be had from the way he writes. He does not appear to plan out the rhythms of his prose. The fall of the words, the structure of sentence and of paragraph seem to be determined solely by the thought. With none of the glitter of Macaulay, he has all his precision."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p734 N 5 '25 1000w

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR. Essays on religion; with an introd. by B. H. Streeter. 172p $2 Dutton [6s Methuen]

204 Religion 26-18024

This is a companion volume to Essays on life. The contents of the book consist of published and unpublished essays which embody the author's matured thoughts on the problems of religion and life. Contents: The visionaries; The religion of the particular; The logic of God; Pooled self-esteem; Evil and the new psychology; The nature of evil; The English Bible.

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 21 '26 980w

"Mr. Clutton-Brock's arguments are to me not only often unsound, but simply silly. He was at one time a fluent and graceful (if superficial) writer on art and literature, but the fatal fluency and fluidity of the skilled journalist was his undoing." Leonard Woolf

— Nation and Ath 39:279 Je 12 '26 900w

"The characteristics of simplicity of approach, clear thinking, the endeavor to express his thought with utmost clarity, and practical quality, combine with the sense of beauty and the desire to appeal to and inspire the sense of beauty in his readers to make Mr. Clutton-Brock's 'Essays on Religion' unusual among books of that sort."

+ N Y Times p20 O 17 '26 400w

Outlook 144:26 S 1 '26 80w

Sat R 141:718 Je 12 '26 40w

"The obvious sincerity and restraint of the essays make them interesting, in spite of the under-current of regret at the apparently futile quest."

+ Sat R 142:100 Je 24 '26 240w

Spec 136:1090 Je 26 '26 120w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ja 2 '26 1300w

"Clutton-Brock had the double gift of thinking freshly and originally and of running his thought easily into persuasive channels of simple expression. In every one of these essays some aspect of the contemporary problem is attacked with the conviction that the present difficulties of religion are in fact its opportunity and that the only fatal course is that blind clinging to tradition or sick aspiration after unity which the professional teacher tends to fall back upon."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p370 Je 3 '26 1100w

COBB, CHESTER FRANCIS. Mr Moffatt. 312p $2.50 Doran

26-12288

The story is told by setting down the thoughts which chase each other thru the mind of Mr Moffatt, the drift of reverie which makes up the stream of his consciousness. Mr Moffatt is the proprietor of a small pharmacy in Sydney, Australia, an irresolute, self-distrustful man much given to day dreams. One of these dreams centers around a picture which has come into his possession as security for a debt. Hopeful that it may be a Vermeer he takes it to London for appraisal, only to find that it is comparatively worthless. With the vanishing of his visions of wealth comes a series of real disasters which bereave him of his business and his dearly loved wife and daughter and compel him to take stock of his universe.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 O 10 '26 220w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 7 '26 700w

N Y Times p8 Je 20 '26 650w

"Mr. Cobb is an impressionist, and on the whole he manages his method remarkably well. 'Mr. Moffatt' is decidedly a book to read; the characters are firmly and soundly drawn, and the central figure is a portrait of altogether unusual delicacy and insight." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 140:709 D 12 '25 350w

"The method of presenting him gives the hero a kind of reality, but it is wearisome in itself and quite unable to redeem the futility of the tale as a whole."

— Sat R of Lit 2:939 Jl 17 '26 150w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 1 '26 270w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Many laughs for many days. 243p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

817 Humor. Anecdotes 25-23244

365 of Mr Cobb's favorite stories are gathered here, classified and ready for retelling.

Booklist 22:200 F '26

"Anybody who wants to test the efficacy of a good laugh as one item in the materia medica of the new-fangled preventive medicine will not go amiss in devoting a few minutes every day to his book."

+ N Y Times p13 N 22 '25 220w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. On an island that cost $24.00. 347p $2 Doran

26-4780

Ten short stories of New York by a humorist turned serious, or nearly so. Contents: Standing room only; The unbroken chain; A coyote in Central park; Nobody sees the waiter's face; The power of the press; The principle of the thing; A letter to a relative; Button, button; Ace in the hole; The black duck.

Booklist 22:421 Jl '26

"The whole may cause one to wonder whether the island was worth $24 in the first place, but that has nothing to do with the fact that Mr. Cobb's volume offers full value and is highly exciting in a disarmingly unpretentious way."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Mr 28 '26 500w

"It does not much matter what Mr. Cobb writes. He always holds you."

+ Boston Transcript p10 Mr 27 '26 330w

"Devotees of the O. Henry, crack-of-the-whip type of short story will be particularly pleased with this new collection of New York tales by a master craftsman. And those who object to being 'brought up short' at a story's close will probably forgive Mr. Cobb because of the undeniable sense for interesting material which intrudes everywhere in the collection."

+ Ind 116:527 My 1 '26 120w

Reviewed by H. H. Balos
Int Bk R p649 S '26 500w

"Even the jaded magazine reader will find these ten short stories 'interesting reading' and he will agree that almost without exception they measure up to his standard of 'good stuff.' Each of the ten tales is conceived and executed in the authentic O. Henry tradition, but not one of them is touched either with the humor which we have come to associate with the name of Cobb, or the 'horror' which lifted some of his earlier tales into the ranks of literature."

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 7 '26 480w

"It must be said that this new collection of short stories, for all that there are evidences of Mr. Cobb's care and determination to make of it something more than hack-work, is never wholly free from the commonplace clichés and the trite description of the newspaper feature writer."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:58 Ag 21 '26 530w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ap 18 '26 360w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Prose and cons.
360p $2 Doran

26-13688

Short stories and humorous pieces originally published in Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping and Saturday evening post. Contents: The chocolate hyena; Plaster of Paris; The silent partner; Who laughs last; The Parker house roll; The last of the Bourbons; Long pants; "Unaccustomed as I am—"; The thrill of a lifetime; Shakspeare's seven ages and mine.

Reviewed by Alan Rinehart

Bookm 63:xlii Ag '26 180w

"It contains a minimum of 'well made' or grocery store plots and a great deal of wise and funny character interest, as well as a goodly scattering of those unfictionized reminiscences and heart-to-heart talks in loose essay form in which the author excels. The pages, moreover are dotted with those felicitous phrases usually funny, which one might recognize in the dark as his own. It might be possible to single out a sin or two, which, however, hardly matter." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 S 12 '26 850w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 11 '26 850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p109 S '26

"Can one keep on writing stories indefinitely, without laying oneself open to the charge of triteness?" T. L. Masson

Lit R p3 O 2 '26 150w

N Y Times p9 J1 25 '26 1000w

"Take along 'Prose and Cons' for a railroad journey when you don't feel in the least critical. There is nothing of the quality of Mr. Cobb's 'The Great Awk' in this."

N Y World p4m Ag 1 '26 160w

COCHRAN, CHARLES BLAKE. Secrets of a showman. 436p il $5 Holt [25s Heinemann]

B or 92

[26-1398]

"Exactly who and what is 'C. B.' Cochran? To a possibly skeptical Cis-Atlantic eye he seems like a combination of Tex Rickard, Earl Carroll and Morris Gest. He has sought to make a living by amusing the British public. He has financed zoos and circuses, wrestlers, boxers, roller-skating rinks. He has produced 'The Miracle,' the Ballet Russe; he has promoted the Guitrys and Eleonora Duse, Ahrensmeier, 'the cowboy hypnotist,' Delysia, the Dolly Sisters and Florence Mills. More than any single man, he has built up the unique British revue."

—N Y Times

"It is a most entertaining book and, what is more significant, he quite evidently wrote it himself. It sounds authentically first hand."

W. P. Eaton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Je 6 '26 520w

Cleveland p84 J1 '26

"The thirty-two chapters of Charles B. Cochran's 'Secrets of a Showman' are of the stuff of which life is made. Under the guidance of the genial narrator the book's personalities march in a pleasing procession before the eye. To those interested in the changing panorama of the current day, Mr. Cochran will have the lure of a gipsy teller of tales. His is an engrossing book." Jim Tully

+ Int Bk R p490 J1 '26 600w

"Charles B. Cochran's 'Secrets of a Showman' is as meaty a book of theatrical reminiscences as has come out of England since Bram Stoker's Life of Irving." W. O. Tewson

+ Lit R p1 Ap 17 '26 250w

"Vastly informed compilation of episodes, amusing anecdotes, roundabouts, financial reverberations, and stentorian gossip."

Nation and Ath 38:sup374 D 5 '25 260w

New Statesman 26:supxii N 14 '25 880w

Reviewed by J. Carter

N Y Times p7 Ap 11 '26 1700w

"This is a document with all the marks of authenticity. In all of the many and varied experiences he relates the reader feels that at all times the author was more interested in the experience itself than in his relationship to it." Arthur Hopkins

+ N Y World p6m My 2 '26 560w

"Unlike many who are persuaded to write their memoirs, he knows how to write—indeed for a time he took to writing for a living. He is at his best in Spain, and his description of Seville in the great week is a masterpiece of enthusiastic art, calling up delightful memories of sunshine and smiles for those who know Seville, and offering great temptation to those who do not." E. D. R.

+ Spec 136:sup714 Ap 17 '26 420w

"Mr. Cochran might legitimately doubt the maxim that experience is cheap at any price, but he has at least bought the matter of a very amusing book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p716 O 29 '25 620w

CODY, HIRAM ALFRED. Fighting-slogan. 285p $2 Doran

26-15404

Canada in 1865, when disloyal Fenians went about stirring up rebellion against England, is the setting for this story of a loyal Canadian, his Fenian rival, the girl the hero loved, and the girl of the mountains who loved him.

"Mr. Cody's pleasant knack with countryside dialect about balances his rather humdrum and cliché-ridden narrative manner."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 O 31 '26 130w

"The characters remind one of paper-dolls cut from baby's picture book. Although the author has produced more than a dozen volumes of fiction, he still writes with surprising crudity and childishness."

— Sat R of Lit 3:140 S 25 '26 80w

COFFIN, HENRY SLOANE. Portraits of Jesus Christ in the New Testament. (Dollar ser. of religious bks.) 96p $1 Macmillan

232 Jesus Christ

26-6454

These eight sermons present the portraits of Christ to be found in the New Testament, drawn against differing backgrounds, from differing points of view.

COFFIN, HENRY SLOANE—Continued

"Dr. Coffin's renowned churchmanship is not so noticeable in this volume as in some others from his pen. But it is detectable, fighting valiantly and with strange success with his sense of truth." A. W. Vernon

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 My 30 '26 1250w

J Religion 6:442 J1 '26 50w

Reviewed by Laurence Hayward

Outlook 143:111 My 19 '26 80w

Springfd Republican p10 My 4 '26 200w

COHEN, HYMAN. Tents of Jacob. 367p $2.50
McBride

26-10314

Here is a rich tapestry of Jewish communal life in Russia with its pageantry of orthodox festival, ceremony, and rite. The dominant figure is Sorke, a big red-haired woman vibrant with life, who is mated to Avremel, a creature almost without sex. Her love for the soldier Yisroel is as inevitable as the child that is born of it. Yisroel dies in battle and Avremel accepts without question fatherhood of the baby girl. When his suspicions are finally aroused the villagers, hating the old miser for his avarice, side with Sorke. Her daughter meanwhile grows up and links her destiny with Raphael, born to the priesthood but to the wrath of the community turned scientist and skeptic. When the story ends the resolute trio leave their trials behind them and turn toward America and hope.

"There is no question about the seriousness of Mr. Cohen's attitude toward his art. If anything, he is too serious. He has sketched an ambitious epic plan and has tried to fill his background with significant characters. Readers who still preserve memories of the modes and customs of Russian Jewry will find the pleasure of recognition in the many photographic descriptions of external manners of festivals, rituals, and observances of typical situations and typical persons. It can hardly be said, however, that the author's literary gift is vivid enough to arouse interest in these things on the part of readers with an alien experience." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 J1 11 '26 380w

"Mr. Cohen writes pictorially so that mental states are sharply visualized. His visions, regarded by those who experience them as inspired, are arresting. An artistic unity runs through the book, tying the youthful exuberance of the characters to their graying years." R. H. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 26 '26 550w

"There is a rich, warm background of people and manners in a little isolated Jewish village in White Russia. The tale is told beautifully with dramatic poignancy and depth." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p4 Ag 28 '26 250w

"Doctor Cohen is a moralist; and it is a pity that such fine material as that from which The Tents of Jacob was written should be so abused and wasted. For the Jewish life in the Russian village of Zemliana is richly colorful and fascinating; but the author has spoiled its charm by an unconvincing and unnecessary plot, and by a style in which much fine writing is buried among hopeless and inexcusable clichés." W. F. Kohn

+ New Repub 47:235 J1 14 '26 200w

"The projected departure of Sorke and the two young people to the United States has the air of an extraneous afterthought rather than an inevitable 'cadenza.' None the less, 'The Tents of Jacob' is rich in observation, mellow and musical in writing, and tender in wisdom. Hyman Cohen will bear watching."

+ N Y Times p22 My 16 '26 600w

"Mr. Cohen has produced an epic picture on a small canvas. It is a truly mellow piece of work, for the author's personal thoughtfulness works with the essence of beliefs and criteria centuries old. He voices the spirit of an ancient, unbroken blood-heritage. His work has deep roots, and its beauty proves again the value of a long and undiversified lineage to the novelist." Eva Goldbeck

+ N Y World p4m Ag 1 '26 800w

"This, like most first novels, suffers from its author's inability to cope artistically with his human material; in consequence the characters, while vivid creations, appear streaked with sentiment, and their story emerges amorphous and ill-proportioned."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:12 J1 31 '26 300w

COHEN, JULIUS BEREND, and RUSTON, ARTHUR GOUGH. Smoke; a study of town air. 2d enl ed 108p il $3.20 Longmans [8s 6d E. Arnold]

628.53 Smoke

[26-3686]

"Confined almost wholly to the collection of data on results of the imperfect combustion of coal. Studies the composition and amounts of impurities in air and considers effect of different impurities on vegetation, intensity of sunlight, and public health in general. Investigations were made mainly at Leeds, England, on atmospheric conditions of a manufacturing town."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"This is a thoughtful, well-considered book which gives in easily readable form an excellent introduction to the subject of town smoke, particularly from the standpoint of the scientific investigator who may be called upon to study this question and from that of the intelligent citizen who wants to know as definitely and clearly as possible what he ought to know about this extremely interesting subject. The illustrations, graphs and tables add materially to the ease and pleasure of the book." G: A. Soper

+ Am J Pub Health 16:168 F '26 550w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:33 J1 '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:190 Ap '26

Wis Lib Bul 22:107 Mr '26

COHEN, LESTER. Sweepings. 447p $2.50 Boni & Liveright

26-18162

"'Sweepings' is the story of the commercial fortunes of the Pardway family. Peter Aram Pardway, starting out, shortly after the Revolution, as a blacksmith, had become, some forty years later, an ironmaster and owner of a factory. Then his wealth and his life were both destroyed in a great fire, but his ability, leaping over a generation, descended to two grandchildren, Daniel and Thane, the central characters of the novel. Thane becomes a stock broker, Daniel obtains a ship and runs the Civil War blockade with cotton. In a few years they have increased their initial capital of three hundred dollars to thirty thousand. Then on the famous Black Friday they make a great sum by selling short on stocks, duplicate the performance on the occasion of the Chicago fire, and settle down in the latter city, the elder brother to develop a huge cut-rate department store while the younger comes to be known as the Great Bear of the Chicago wheat pit."—Sat R of Lit

"This is a powerful novel, a complete novel, a well written novel." L. F. Hellman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 O 24 '26 720w

"'Sweepings' is a great novel. We may well use the adjective in its full significance with the whole of this country's stream of literature in mind. It is not a warm-hearted book, or a comfortable book. But it has qualities far superior to those of the genial glow of a half-alive sit-by-the-fire romance." R. B. MacDougall

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '26 860w

"An excellent book: thoughtful, well done, thoroughly readable." M. E. U.

+ New Repub 49:174 D 29 '26 100w

"A fine novel, with dignity, force and virility wedded to an unusually clear, vigorous style. 'Sweepings' is a man's book, for it is concerned with the rise and fall of a Yankee business dynasty in Chicago. . . . Since Dreiser's 'The Titan' and 'The Financier' no book has been written which gives so well as 'Sweepings' a full-bodied picture of the ruthlessness of American business."

+ N Y Times p6 O 31 '26 750w

"This is a story of business conflict, vigorous in style, and bold in the breadth of its conception. It covers the whole period of untrammelled commercial competition in this country."

+ N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 140w

"The structure of the work is well conceived. The materials are good and substantial; the workmanship is honest; stone is laid firmly upon stone; but after the architect has raised a strong and comely building the unlucky idea comes to him of decking its roof with a series of mortuary chapels. The final pages reek with deaths. . . . All this, however, affects merely the roof of his building. The sins of these last hundred pages may readily be forgiven for the sake of the rest." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 3:366 D 4 '26 650w

"Cohen has a grasp on life and the faculty of telling his story with a simplicity which adds to its force. There are signs of sound craftsmanship in this novel."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f O 3 '26 300w

COHEN, OCTAVUS ROY. Black and blue. 289p $2 Little

26-2453

A new collection of tales about "Bummin'-ham." Darktown society. Contents: The lady fare; The fly and the ointment; The framing of the shrew; Trunk and disorderly; Blackmale; Bass ingratitude; Barberous.

Booklist 22:329 My '26

"Now that my opinion of Octavus Roy Cohen's short stories has been asked, I might as well come right out and say that I have read better. As for the titles, such as 'The Lady Fare,' Mr. Cohen should be let off with the warning that this sort of thing can be overdone. The chief thing is that the book is entertaining enough." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 F 14 '26 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p96 J1 '26

Reviewed by L. T. Nicholl
Lit R p7 Mr 20 '26 560w

"There are seven of the stories, all of them amusing, clever, ingenious. To begin the book is to insure one's self an hour or two of rich enjoyment."

+ N Y Times p24 F 14 '26 300w

"His stories are growing more and more like machine-made magazine stuff, with an invariable type of humor, a smooth, trite style, a monotony of characterization and an emphasis on tricky fillips of plot."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 14 '26 120w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ap 25 '26 300w

COIT, CHARLES WHEELER. Life of Charles the First, the royal martyr. 422p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 Charles I, king of England 26-15504

The title indicates the author's attitude toward his subject. Professor Coit writes as Charles I's loyal follower to plead his cause and vindicate his character. It is maintained that the King's misfortunes were inherited—the struggle of Parliament against the Crown and the rising tide of the Puritan revolution. The author would add his name to the long line of England's saints and martyrs.

"Dr. Coit spent many years in collecting authoritative material for his book, and he there utilizes it for a vividly interesting portrayal." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p1 O 2 '26 700w

"The scholarship, the masterly writing of Professor Coit's biography gives it a literary quality and beauty independent of its argument. A reverence, a tenderness, a devotion breathes in its pages, whose influence no reader can well escape." F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p5 N 6 '26 650w

COLBY, FRANK MOORE. Colby essays; selected and ed. by Clarence Day, jr. 2v 173; 147p $7.50 Harper

814

26-20910

A vigorous mind, a keen wit, a delightful sense of humor, and a gracious spirit were the characteristics of Frank Colby; ample evidence of this fills the pages of the Colby essays, a collection of the best of his numerous contributions to newspapers and magazines, the task of editing which was begun by Mr Colby himself and finished after his death by Clarence Day, jr. The essays are in two volumes; v 1, The pursuit of humor and other essays; v 2, Tailor blood and other notes and comments.

"These are admirable essays, neither ponderous nor vaporous, but altogether delightful. As an engaging man, a fine prose writer of criticism, and a sane and humorous philosopher of life, Mr. Colby should be ranked well toward the front in American literature." S. V. V. W.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 24 '26 280w

"Colby has never been popular. Yet he stands among the best critical writers we have produced." Edwin Clark

+ N Y Times p6 D 26 '26 250w

COLE, ARTHUR HARRISON. American wool manufacture. 2v 392;328p $7.50 Harvard univ. press [31s 6d Oxford univ. press]

338.4 Wool trade and industry 26-5173

"In two stout volumes, Professor Arthur Harrison Cole tells the story of wool manufacture in America from early Puritan days. Those who are concerned in the industry will be able to trace the development of the manufacture of wool from embryonic conditions to the great diversifications of modern times. Mr. Cole, too, devotes considerable space to the economic side of the story, giving his impressions of the results of tariff legislation, marketing of fabrics, changes in industrial form, modification of the distributive system and other matters relating to the expansion of a great industry."—N Y Times

"Professor Cole's book does not abound in biographical data or picturesque incidents from old firm records; but it does describe clearly and convincingly, and for that reason interestingly for those prepared to follow such discussions, the forces that have built up a great American industry, the way they operated at different periods, and the effects they produced." V. S. Clark

+ Am Econ R 16:303 Je '26 650w

Reviewed by Clive Day

Am Hist R 32:133 O '26 940w

"Dr. Cole writes maturely and conscientiously. There are photographs of 'grand old men' and machines that were milestones, and many graphs. Even the index inspires confidence." R. H. A.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 1 '26 1100w

"While we know of no other book which has covered the ground, we may safely aver that Mr. Cole as a historian has nothing to fear from rivalry. His contribution to the story of a great industry is notable in every respect—for its accuracy, its comprehensiveness, its elaboration and for the striking and picturesque

COLE, ARTHUR HARRISON—Continued
way in which he has placed it at the disposal of readers."

+ N Y Times p10 My 9 '26 380w
Times [London] Lit Sup p488 J1 22 '26
720w

COLE, GEORGE DOUGLAS HOWARD, and COLE, MRS MARGARET ISABEL (POST-GATE). Blatchington tangle. 279p $2 Macmillan [7s 6d Collins]

26-19258

A financier of shady repute is murdered in Lord Blatchington's library. The house guests include an unpleasant American disliked by everybody and immediately suspected of the murder, the dead man's secretary—a nice young man whose movements during the night were certainly suspicious—his fiancée, and Dick Prescott. Dick turns detective and discovers a second mystery, the attempted robbery of the Blatchington rubies. A Scotland Yard man comes down and adds the finishing touch to the tangle by conniving with the others for the guilty one's escape.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D
26 '26 80w

"An unusual and ably written detective
story."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 10 '26 230w

"The fact that its characters are genuinely alive and individual is a singular merit in a book of this kind."

+ New Statesman 28:218 N 27 '26 150w

N Y World p10m D 5 '26 80w

"In their latest novel the Cole partners seem to have fallen far below the standard of that surpassing good detective story, 'The Death of a Millionaire,' which they published last year. Their present production contains many of the faults common to the rank and file of mystery yarns, and few stronger elements."

— Sat R of Lit 3:344 N 27 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p937 D 16 '26
170w

COLE, SAMUEL VALENTINE. Monica; or,
The chronicle of Marcus. 89p $1.50 Marshall
Jones

811

"In 'Monica,' which is a posthumous work,
Samuel Valentine Cole tells in blank verse the story of the life and character of the mother of St. Augustine, from the time when she yielded to marriage until her son went on those journeys which took him so far."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 19
'26 50w

"Such mixture of Latin and English we find in 'The Ring and the Book.' But there is none of Browning's obscurity and complexity here.
In the simplest, most lucid style Dr. Cole has paraphrased the beautiful narration of the unknown Marcus. It ought to be cherished by a very wide circle of readers." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 14 '26 550w

"Mr. Cole's very beautiful poem is conceived in a spirit at once lofty and warmly human.
His blank verse is almost faultless, his projection of character is convincing and appealing." C. P.

+ Cath World 124:423 D '26 240w

"A religious poem of dignity and charm, never ridiculous, never insincere, a simple tale that if not enthralling is at least reasonably interesting. The characters are human, and the verse sufficiently imaged and alive to carry the story easily."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:846 Je 5 '26 180w

COLEBROOK, FRANCIS MORLEY. Alternating currents and transients, treated by the rotating vector method. 195p il $3 McGraw

621.313 Electric currents, Alternating. Vector analysis 25-11301

"A most valuable and readable exposition of the essentials of the subject which will be welcomed by students of moderate mathematical attainments. . . Covers all the essentials of Steinmetz's large volumes without the tedious and confusing detail which made them unattractive, and the student who works through it will find few problems connected with alternating currents beyond his powers."
(J Scientific Instruments)—Pittsburgh Mo
Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 10:33 J1 '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:86 F '26

COLEMAN, ARTHUR PHILEMON. Ice ages, recent and ancient. 296p il $4 Macmillan

551.79 Glacial epoch. Glaciers 26-9491

A study of glacial periods in the history of the earth and a dissection of the theories propounded to account for them. The volume is illustrated with maps and from photographs.

Booklist 23:14 O '26

Boston Transcript p4 Je 26 '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p116 N '26

"It may safely be accepted as the latest standard work in its field." F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p9 My 22 '26 130w

"The author has done good service by uniting in one volume a large mass of material which was formerly only available in scattered papers or, in the case of his own observations, had not previously been published. The volume maintains the high standard which we expect of the publishers; it is lavishly illustrated by photographs of great interest and the only error which the reviewer has noticed is the name 'Grygalski' on page 286." C. E. P. Brooks

+ Nature 118:293 Ag 28 '26 900w

New Repub 49:120 D 15 '26 40w

N Y New Tech Bks 11:20 Ap '26

"This volume is a pretty ambitious book for the layman. It is intended as a standard work and a clearing house for all information on the subject. The author supports every conclusion with copious references to other equally learned works. There isn't a bit of sympathy for the reader who would like to read up on the matter without much effort."

N Y Times p7 Je 20 '26 350w

Outlook 143:483 Ag 4 '26 200w

R of Rs 73:669 Je '26 70w

Springf'd Republican p6 J1 5 '26 500w

"All readers of this entrancing work will surely agree that Professor A. P. Coleman, of Toronto, is the ideal author for such a book.
Never before has such an array of glacial evidence been so skillfully mustered and marshalled. At last scientific workers have before them a graphic, succinct and inspiring account of those wonderful vicissitudes of climate through which the world has passed since the dawn of its geological history."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Ag 26 '26
1900w

COLEMAN, EMMA LEWIS. New England captives carried to Canada between 1677 and 1760, during the French and Indian wars. 2v
438;452p il $10 Southworth press, Portland,
Me.

970.1 Indians of North America—Captiv-
ities. New England—History—Colonial period. New Englanders in Canada. Frontier and pioneer life—New England 26-11311

"In the year 1897 Miss C. Alice Baker privately printed a collection of papers under the title 'True Stories of New England Captives Carried to Canada During the Old French and Indian Wars.' It was the intention of the author eventually to cover the entire period between the years 1677 and 1760, but she died before completing the work. This stupendous piece of research was carried forward by her friend and co-worker, Miss Emma Lewis Coleman, and is now published in two volumes."

—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 3 '26 1000w

"The volumes form a mine of genealogical information, and will be invaluable to the student of New England family history. It must be confessed that the results of these new researches are presented in a rather raw and undigested fashion, without any attempt to summarize them or to show the significance of the mass of material so industriously gathered together." R. Fleoley

+ Canadian Hist R 7:171 Je '26 520w

"The student of that period of New England history which contains the so-called French and Indian Wars cannot fail to find this book a veritable treasure trove. In its minute and painstaking garnering of details an incalculable amount of work is involved. These volumes are practically the last word of research in this field, a last word of positive authority and definiteness." E. B. H.

+ New Repub 48:228 O 13 '26 260w

"Such a work as Miss Coleman's is usually regarded as lacking general appeal, and this is, of course, true. It may be said, however, of 'New England Captives Carried to Canada' that any reader desirous of thrills will find them aplenty in this work."

+ N Y Times p4 S 5 '26 550w

COLIN, PAUL. Van Gogh; tr. by Beatrice Moggridge. (Masters of modern art) 62,40p il $1.75 Dodd [5s Lane]

759.9 Gogh, Vincent van 26-11078

"There is hardly a painter in the whole history of art whose life, quite apart from his work, is so well worth writing and reading. M. Colin, therefore, has chosen wisely in making his short monograph almost entirely biographical."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 23:19 O '26

"The 'Van Gogh' is a pretty good biographical sketch of a life stranger than Gauguin's, though in his sympathy the writer considerably overestimates a painter whose rank, after all, will be that of a moderately competent impressionist." R. C. Holliday

+ Bookm 64:97 S '26 50w

"The biography is done with insight and sympathy." L. Mumford

+ New Repub 48:77 S 8 '26 280w

St Louis 24:245 S '26

"M. Colin has told his story admirably, without elaboration but with considerable powers of dramatic presentment, and he has interspersed occasional criticism which suffices to show his genuine appreciation and understanding of his subject."

+ Sat R 141:724 Je 12 '26 100w

Spec 137:284 Ag 21 '26 50w

Times [London] Lit Sup p376 Je 3 '26 220w

COLLETT, GLENNA. Golf for young players. 2 115p il $1.50 Little

796 Golf 26-15771

This small book of advice from the former Women's national champion to young golf players is illustrated from photographs of Miss Collett, Bobbie Jones and other champions in action.

Booklist 23:136 D '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 D '26

COLLINS, CHARLES WALLACE. Branch banking question. 182p $1.75 Macmillan
332.1 Banks and banking 26-2618

"Should banks be allowed to establish branches freely—either in the same city in which they are already located, or in other cities throughout the state? This book presents both sides of the argument in a clear, straightforward way, and without unnecessary technicalities. It contains also a digest of the laws on this subject and the opinions of the Justices of the Supreme Court and of the Attorney General of the United States."—Publisher's note

"Mr. Collins avoids in general expressing his own views on the unsettled or controversial issues. He gives the arguments which have been advanced by the proponents and the opponents of the various types of branch banking and the regulatory measures which have been suggested. His greatest contribution is in bringing together in a single volume of less than two hundred pages the main issues in this important banking question." H. H. Preston

+ Am Econ R 16:504 S '26 900w

Reviewed by E. C. Hughes

Am J Soc 32:322 S '26 280w

"While the author discusses ably the legal and political turns, one misses a thorough-going analysis of the economic issues—involved issues—which will ultimately decide the legal and political outcome. The work is, however, as far as it goes, a valuable treatise and forms a welcome addition to the literature of banking." A. S. Keister

+ Ann Am Acad 129:162 Ja '27 380w

Booklist 22:314 My '26

Reviewed by R. G. Wasson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 My 16 '26 70w

Cleveland Open Shelf p63 My '26

"The book is both interesting and informative."

+ Harvard Business R 5:125 O '26 350w

"The chief value of the book is that it brings together the more important facts of the branch-banking controversy in the United States and conveniently summarizes them. In this respect it should be of considerable value as a convenient reference."

+ J Pol Econ 34:544 Ag '26 180w

"Arguments for and against the system of branch-banking are fairly stated in this little book."

+ R of Rs 73:333 Mr '26 120w

Spec 137:101 Jl 17 '26 90w

Times [London] Lit Sup p396 Je 10 '26 120w

"An accurate account of the history and present status of branch banking in this country. Of great interest to every banker."

+ Wis Lib Bul 22:137 Ap '26

COLLINS, FREDERICK LEWIS. Travelcharts and travel chats. 316p $2.50 Bobbs

914 Europe—Description and travel—Guide-books 26-11325

"This is a new kind of guide book. There are sixteen chapters, each dealing with a European city or country. Each one is prefaced by a sketch map of the locality. Then follows a terse description of fifteen or twenty pages full of suggestions and information about what will be the most interesting things to do, in the city or the country to be toured. At its end comes the distinctive feature of the book, a diagram headed 'What I Did and What It Cost Me,' with crosswise sections for each day to be spent on this locality and vertical sections telling what to do in the morning, the afternoon and evening, where to get meals, general remarks and a discussion of costs. This chart makes possible a complete survey in a glance

COLLINS, FREDERICK L.—Continued
of the plans for as many days as are to be spent in the place."—N Y Times

Booklist 23:30 O '26

"As unique and tempting a travel book as we have seen in many a day. Mr. Collins's prose style is at times marred by an unfortunate facetiousness and a forced humor, but much can be excused on the score of his enthusiasm and his disregard of the usual tourist standards."

+ — Bookm 63:xvii Ag '26 230w

"This delectable book two classes of readers particularly should possess: those about to go forth 'the world to see,' and those who long to, but cannot."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 25 '26 290w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 S '26

"The little book will be in the nature of first aid for any tourist who carries it with him to Europe and will help him in many a difficulty as well as give him all the information he usually gets from larger and more complicated guides."

N Y Times p23 My 23 '26 300w

"Mr Collins's survey of Europe is breezy and is intended to appeal to the prospective traveler interested in other things than European culture."

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 22 '26 200w

Wis Lib Bul 22:273 O '26

COLLINS, JOSEPH. Doctor looks at love and life. 279p $3 Doran

814 Sex. Sex (psychology). Fiction—History and criticism 26-17707

"The book is made up of a number of more or less distinct essays, several of them elaborated from articles published in different magazines, and one from an address given before a group of writers. Four deal with sex in certain of its manifestations; the others with Freudianism and Behaviorism, certain modern novels, the Ku Klux Klan, prohibition, thanks to which, in the doctor's opinion, 'we have become a nation of lawbreakers and are fast becoming a nation of drunkards,' the so-called universal education which 'turns out a one-pattern mind,' and various other subjects."—Lit R

"For many readers the trouble with Dr. Collins—and it is a serious one—is that they cannot be sure from line to line and from page to page which side of the fence he is on. He seems to jump both ways in the same breath. Why does Dr. Collins, in books ostensibly devoted to 'liberalism, freedom and independence,' hedge and eat his own words on these subjects so continuously that one cannot read him without a secret key?" Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 O 31 '26 1250w

Boston Transcript p9 N 27 '26 1150w

"He is still making positive statements in his usual peremptory manner; but he has less to say about literature and more about matters in which he has had authoritative experience, I find myself for the first time reviewing a book by him. This time the opinions he expresses are worth discussing, instead of being merely the utterances of a layman. The first sixty-four pages, which deal with sexual love in its various manifestations, contain nothing new to those who have read the specialists, but they do contain a great deal of sound sense and honesty in the popularization of ideas and information which Dr. Collins' audience might not look for elsewhere. Whenever Dr. Collins likes to present us with a volume called 'The Doctor Looks at Psychoanalysis,' I hereby pledge him my enthusiastic support." Ernest Boyd

+ — Ind 117:650 D 4 '26 1300w

"Interesting and very stimulating book." L. M. Field

+ Lit R p2 O 9 '25 820w

"His judgments are usually psychologically correct; it is only in his interpretation of artistic verities that he errs from time to time. He makes the mistake, in fact, of branding actions of fictitious characters as inconsistent and illogical because they do not always run true to their behavior patterns. But surely Dr. Collins has dealt with enough abnormal people not to expect any great coherence of conduct; and there was never an interesting character in fiction who was entirely normal." J. E. Lind

+ — N Y Times p5 O 24 '26 660w

"Dr. Collins is at his best when he discusses the relation between the two fields that have engaged his mental activities—psychology and literature. He is amusing and mildly interesting as a disciple of Mencken. But when he discusses concrete ways and means of bettering conditions, all we can do is to look the other way and pass hurriedly on. The doctor seems to get tangled in his logic and to emerge unshaken, but walking backward." C. B. Chase

+ — N Y World p9m O 17 '26 580w

"Dr. Collins's ability to be pungent and entertaining, and to write good English, is a valuable asset. There is no peril in good English, but there is in pungency. And there seems peril to a doctor looking abroad on society and literature that he will read too much pathology into their varied peculiarities." A. W. Colton

Sat R of Lit 3:416 D 11 '26 1750w

Springf'd Republican p10 N 2 '26 130w

Reviewed by Haven Emerson, M.D.

+ Survey 57:162 N 1 '26 850w

COLLINS, MARY, and DREVER, JAMES. Experimental psychology. 315p $3.25 Dutton [8s 6d Methuen]

150 Psychology, Physiological 26-17605

A first year text book written jointly by a lecturer in psychology and the director of the George Combe psychological laboratory, both of the University of Edinburgh. A number of experiments are described in the text, and an appendix contains an account of the sense organs and the nervous system. There is also an extensive bibliography for supplementary reading.

"Handy, well-written and authoritative little volume."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 2 '26 250w

"This little book, designed for the university student and the general reader, offers a very readable review of the methods which experimental psychology has developed, and the results which it has achieved, during the half century which has elapsed since that date. To the student of the subject it should prove a most valuable introduction to further study."

+ Nation and Ath 38:900 Mr 27 '26 450w

"The possibility that we may in the future be able to solve problems in education and even eventually in politics and government by the irrefragable testimony of the laboratory is enticing to the imagination. To these subjects the present work provides a lucid, well-arranged, and expert introduction. If we have one criticism to make from the point of view of the general reader it is that the various tests of the mental powers are in general only described in abstract language, whereas for a proper appreciation of what has been attempted and what has been achieved in this attractive field we want to know in more concrete detail the exact nature of the tests employed."

+ — New Statesman 26:786 Ap 3 '26 260w

"It is primarily a textbook for students, full, painstaking, and up-to-date, but a little too evidently written with an eye to examinations. We think, too, that the treatment should have been more historical."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p606 S 16 '26 380w

COLTON, JOHN. Shanghai gesture; a play; with an introd. by John D. Williams. 256p $2
Boni & Liveright

812

26-12793

The setting of the play is a sumptuous brothel in Shanghai. Mother God Damn is its patron demon and proprietor. She knows too much for their comfort about the great of Shanghai whom she invites, summons rather, to a dinner party planned as spectacular vengeance on Sir Guy Charteris, the man who loved and left a Manchu princess. From scene to scene the play grows in realistic horror. It ends on a note of pity for Mother God Damn whose vengeance overreaches itself.

"Raw and sometimes ridiculous melodrama."
W. P. Eaton

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 22
'26 200w

"His play is howling good theatre in the sense that it pins the average spectator to his seat. It is, like most melodrama, howling bad art in the sense that, under a tremendous effort at sophisticated plausibility, the characters are, as usual, only puppets for action. Unlike most old fashioned melodrama, it is howling bad taste in the sense that the lowest human impulses are exposed with a blatancy that would be intolerable if, through exaggeration, the whole effect were not so funny." M. C. Canfield

— Sat R of Lit 3:118 S 18 '26 120w

Reviewed by Helen Redlig
Theatre Arts Mo 10:871 D '26 150w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Bright islands. (Tales and legends of Hawaii) 233p il $2.50 Yale univ. press [11s 6d Milford]

398.2 Folklore—Hawaiian islands 25-21804
For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:314 My '26

Reviewed by Genevieve Taggard
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 F 21
'26 450w

"Mr. Colum's book will be of great interest to all students and lovers of folk-lore."

+ Nation and Ath 38:652 F 6 '26 620w

"A book of strange beauty, in both text and pictures."

+ Outlook 142:534 Ap 7 '26 160w
Pratt p14 spring '26

"The interest of the historical chronicles included in this volume is lessened by the difficulty one has in pronouncing and remembering the names of the various characters and consequently of following their complicated careers. These stories of the Pacific Isles are, however, charmingly told, and make the reader long for the sun."

+ Spec 136:233 F 6 '26 130w

"Intended for children, primarily for the children of the Hawaiian Islands, the stories are a genuine addition to the literature of unsophisticated imagination in English. Mr. Colum retells them with the literary accomplishment of the practised artist."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p208 Mr 18 '26
530w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Road round Ireland. 492p il $4 Macmillan

914.15 Ireland—Description and travel. Ireland—Social life and customs 26-17099

An interpretation and reproduction of Irish scenes and character which does not pretend to be all inclusive, for as the author says in his preface "There is a big break in the road written about: from Donegal I go into Louth, leaving Derry, Antrim and Down unrepresented. North-eastern Ulster, the Ulster that has a separate political system, does not come into the book at all." The author points his own interpretation of countryside and town with quotations from the work of Irish writers and with reproductions from the work of Irish painters.

"To review this book is a task almost as difficult as it is delightful. And both the difficulty and the delight spring from the same cause: the fact that 'The Road Round Ireland' is unlike any other book that has been written. It has no plan save that of taking things as they happen to come. Into it come, at apparent random, peasants, tramps, beggars, a schoolmaster, priests, minstrels, poets, members of the gentry and members of the Free State Cabinet. But all these details are, by some trick of magic, brought into harmony." Theodore Maynard

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 D 5
'26 920w

Boston Transcript p6 N 24 '26 340w

"At the risk of what may appear mere laudation, I am tempted to say that Mr. Colum has produced the critical book about Ireland—for people, out of Ireland, anyway. There is a sanity and a critical soundness about Colum's writing that makes a strong appeal to the American reader." C. P.

+ Cath World 124:421 D '26 400w

"We get, alongside of charming chapters on Ryan the fiddler and Raftery the poet, equally charming chapters—though the effect is not the same—on the economics of the Congested Districts and on the Sociology of the American quota law. Instead of ecstasies about the Irish language we get figures on the comparative vocabularies of Irish and English country-people—the Irish have perhaps 5,000 words, the English perhaps 500. We become convinced, in short, of the reality of Mr. Colum's people." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 124:41 Ja 12 '27 500w

New Repub 49:201 Ja 5 '27 390w

"The difficulties of delving successfully into the intricacies of a national being are solved so lightly, so blithely, and, apparently, so effortlessly by Padraic Colum in 'The Road Round Ireland' that the casual reader, aware of the labor involved in the triumphant approximation of a people's 'being,' might be apt to doubt the complete achievement of the writer. And yet that casual reader would be mistaken. Mr. Colum's work may seem effortless, but that is a part of its curious triumph." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p6 O 3 '26 1950w

"His road round Ireland leads him often into literary byways. The reader does not resent the excursion, for it is a timely view of Ireland's literary activity that Mr. Colum presents." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p8m O 10 '26 950w

"The life of rural Ireland, in its various ramifications and expressions constitutes the backbone of the book, as that life is the backbone of the country. But since he wrote 'My Irish Year,' other elements have become fused into the national organism, in place of the alien elements which have been eliminated, and Colum has skilfully blended the new and the old, so that this book as faithfully mirrors the Irish Free State as its predecessor reflected the Ireland of its time." Ernest Boyd

+ Sat R of Lit 3:168 O 9 '26 1400w

"It is an odd sort of a book—a rambling, moody sort of a book, now descriptive, now lightly sketchy, now interpretative. But the moods fit perfectly the subjects and a spirit which is so definitely Irish is manifest at all times. Theme, and style and mood are in complete accord."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f N 14 '26
1300w

COLVILLE, KATHLEEN. Jason and the princess. 87p il $1.50 Houghton [5s Chatto & W.]

Jason was the son of a trader whose vessel plied between the far inland countries and the port of Queer Town, and the princess was the golden-haired little girl who would one day rule over the land. Jason on board the ship dreamed of the day when he could take lessons on his violin and the princess in the palace dreamed of the day when she would be as free and happy as Jason who piloted the ship along the river. Neither knew how unhappy the other was until the adventurous little princess stole on board ship and went on a voyage with Jason, but the outcome of that voyage was happiness for both of them.

COLVILLE, KATHLEEN—Continued

"Beautifully made and more than usually attractive." M. W. B.

+ New Repub 48:360 N 10 '26 60w

"This is a nice example of book production. Decorative equally describes the story, which is a little fantasy with perhaps too consciously literary a flavor for the average child fully to appreciate, but quite amusing." M. W. Bianco

Sat R of Lit 3:277 N 6 '26 60w

Times [London] Lit Sup p861 N 25 '26 110w

COLVIN, DAVID LEIGH. Prohibition in the United States. 678p $5 Doran

178.5 Prohibition—United States. Prohibition party 26-18637

"The work is a history of the Prohibition party and of the 'prohibition movement.' It is not a history of the Anti-Saloon League. The league is dealt with in a chapter of twenty-four pages and there are a few incidental references to that organization elsewhere. . . . It is not a discussion of the merits of the prohibitory law, but it is an argument for prohibition, as well as a record of the work of the Prohibition party, prepared by one of the leaders of the party who makes no secret of his pride in what the party has done and of his confidence in what prohibition will accomplish."—Boston Transcript

"A very pretentious study in this subject. Dr. Colvin is the chairman of the national committee of the Prohibition party and was at one time nominated as its candidate for the vice presidency. Naturally his book would favor prohibition. But the material it contains, including the history of the legislation, court decisions, influential personalities and other material will render it invaluable to every student of political economy." W. H. Leach

+ Bookm 63:xiv Ag '26 160w

"The volume is useful to the general student for reference; it will be read as a narrative by those mainly, perhaps only by those, who have a personal faith in prohibition or who have participated in the work of the party. The pages simply bristle with dates, names and facts. Every campaign is described."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 4 '26 380w

Reviewed by G. E. G. Catlin

New Repub 48:304 N 3 '26 620w

Reviewed by Evans Clark

N Y Times p1 O 31 '26 700w

CONCERNING parents: A symposium on present day parenthood. 284p pa $1 New republic 173 26-8709

"The New Republic has rendered good service in making available this collection of papers presented at the conference on modern parenthood called in October, 1925, by the Child Study Association of America. The articles are arranged under the following heads: The family of to-day, The family and the community, Parents and the new psychology, Teachers and the changing education, Leisure and recreation. The parents' outlook on life. The contributors are practically all of them persons of national reputation and the individual papers are of genuine value. The main significance of the book, however, is that it proves the serious and widespread interest in the subject."—J Home Econ

Booklist 22:394 J1 '26

"The ground covered is comprehensive, the treatment bears a modern—but not too modern—impress, and the ideas are presented freshly and suggestively." Agnes de Lima

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 6 '26 920w

J Home Econ 18:327 Je '26 100w

Nation 123:227 S 8 '26 80w

"Its title alone bespeaks popularity; its contents, something far more substantial than the meat in a season's best-seller."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 25 '26 350w

"These fragmentary pieces selected from the program of the Child Study Association's conference are easy reading and at least half-a-dozen of them ought to be read by a hundred thousand intelligent parents to whom the new hygiene of parent-child relationships is as unfamiliar today as was the modern physical health régime twenty years ago."

+ Survey 56:270 My 15 '26 160w

Wis Lib Bul 22:195 Je '26

CONKLING, GRACE WALCOTT (HAZARD).

Flying fish; a book of songs and sonnets. 111p $2 (8s 6d) Knopf

811

26-15682

"Mrs. Conkling's 'Flying Fish' tempts us southward from forests of pine to forests of palm, from maple to mimosa, on to Mexico, and the Indies."—Lit R

"One finds a continual and irritating straining after effect, a resorting to the palpably artificial when inspiration is evidently lacking. And only in an occasional piece, here and there in her sonnets and now and then in the series concerned with 'The Child in the Mexican Garden', does one find any indication that the author is writing out of that inner compulsion from which all true poetry must spring."

— + Bookm 64:640 Ja '27 170w

"Not all the poems in 'Flying Fish' are equally imposing. Too many continue to remind one of the less authentic manner of the Imagists—of the manner in which fragmentary emotions were caught and stiffened in fractions of metaphors. The child poems in the Mexican garden group are, unfortunately, extremely pretty. But in the two groups of a dozen sonnets each, and several 'songs' in other groups, Mrs. Conkling has sounded a note that is unmistakably her own and undebatably distinguished." Newton Arvin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 N 28 '26 520w

"Mrs. Conkling's use of colors is extraordinary. Her linking of words brings very beautiful results. Results which appeal to the senses and often bring tears of appreciation. She has nothing of the smug nature-lover about her; nothing of the preacher who draws moral lessons from nature; she converses with these living things, fills her arms full of their beauty and holds them close. 'Flying Fish' promises no monotony. It reveals a great versatility." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 22 '26 450w

Reviewed by K. L. Bates

Lit R p5 S 25 '26 180w

"'Flying Fish' is better than the author's previous work. In this latest volume she has resisted more than ever before the surfeited picture and the prodigal description. Even this book would be better for some further pruning." L. G. Marshall

+ Nation 123:sup612 D 1 '26 160w

"The author of 'Flying Fish' is a poetic rover, and too frequently she is willing to substitute poetic roving for communion with her soul. But she had done many beautiful bits of verse, and not a few of them will be found in the present volume." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p4 N 14 '26 200w

"Her lyrics and sonnets combine the fresh-coloured image with the deep intent that makes true poetry." C: H. Warren

+ Spec 137:sup758 O 30 '26 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p702 O 14 '26 350w

CONN, HAROLD JOEL, and others. Biological stains; a handbook on the nature and uses of the dyes employed in the biological laboratory. 151p il $2.50 H. J. Conn, Comm. on standardization of biological stains, box 299, Geneva, N.Y.

578 Stains and staining (microscopy)

25-24924

"For the user of stains. Presents information gathered by the Commission on standardization of biological stains, organized in 1922."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Preparation and publication of this book represent a distinct service which should be highly appreciated by all biologists who employ stains. It should help to free us to some extent from blind empiricism and pitiful rule-of-thumb methods in staining." W. J. MacNeal

+ Am Chem Soc J 48:1115 Ap '26 280w

"The book represents an enormous amount of careful work, done in an admirable scientific spirit without hope of pecuniary reward, which places all those who use dyes under great obligation to the commission. While the book makes no pretension to being a treatise on dyes and dyestuffs, it presents in logical form the information which has been accumulated, and will serve as a valuable guide to all of those interested in this field of work." M. P. Ravenel

+ Am J Pub Health 16:173 F '26 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:451 O '26

CONNINGTON, JOHN JERVIS. Death at Swaythling court. 295p $2 Little [7s 6d Benn]

26-14351

A mystery story in which a much needed murder is committed and condoned. Hubbard made his money in blackmail, most detestable blackmail at that. A loathsome creature, there were no special regrets when he was found dead at his desk in his own home. Yet Colonel Sanderson felt it his duty to probe the affair, since his nephew's best friends had very good reason to wish Hubbard dead and might easily enough be involved. The Colonel's investigation would never have solved the case, but it led to a highly amazing confession.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 26 '26 90w

Boston Transcript p6 S 1 '26 260w

"If it is, as I presume, a first book, much pleasure should be in store for detective fans in the future if Mr. Connington lives up to the standard set in it." J: Hawk

+ Lit R p4 O 2 '26 380w

N Y Times p13 Ag 22 '26 150w

"Distinctly worth reading. It may be said that the accomplished student of detective stories will quickly suspect that two of the subsidiary characters introduced early in the book will provide a solution of, at any rate, the minor portion of the mystery."

+ Spec 136:538 Mr 20 '26 80w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 15 '26 100w

"The intricate tale is well told."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p250 Ap 1 '26 150w

CONNOLLY, MARGARET. Life story of Orison Swett Marden, a man who benefited men. 327p $3 Crowell

B or 92 Marden, Orison Swett 25-24875

The Marden inspirational books were themselves inspired by the author's early struggle against heavy odds and his victory over them. In her preface to the story of Dr Marden's career, Miss Connolly says: "The material for this brief life story has been gathered from notes for an autobiography which he had planned to write, from memories of conversations spread over many years of association in coöperative work with him, and from correspondence with the surviving friends of his youth and early manhood."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 27 '25 130w

"Miss Connolly has written in the manner of an adoring disciple. The volume is a quiet but unreserved eulogy of a man who has helped many fellow inhabitants of the world."

Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '25 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p84 Jl '26

"The ambitious youth who is sometimes discouraged because of his handicaps will find the story a fountain of inspiration. It will also prove helpful to the Scout leader and to all who are interested in stimulating boys to put forth their best effort." J. A. MacCallum

+ Lit R p8 Je 5 '26 400w

"Miss Connolly has written the story of a really remarkable life with sympathy and tenderness."

+ N Y Times p18 D 13 '25 400w

"This life story of a man who gave so much of his time to helping others is well worth reading."

+ R of Rs 73:111 Ja '26 100w

CONRAD, JESSIE (MRS JOSEPH CONRAD). Joseph Conrad as I knew him. 162p $2 Doubleday [6s Heinemann]

B or 92 Conrad, Joseph

[26-27545]

Mrs Conrad searches the memories of twenty-nine years for these intimate recollections of her husband. Tho some of the stories she tells of him are slight, even trivial, they all help to throw into strong relief the powerful personality of Joseph Conrad and to reveal his ways of living and working.

Booklist 23:128 D '26

"This book by Joseph Conrad's widow is like herself, unassuming but authoritative. It is not art. It is life. It is Mrs. Conrad speaking." W: McFee

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 N 21 '26 450w

"What Mrs. Conrad tells us of the writing years interests, but leaves Conrad as completely as ever veiled in the mystery of his striking gifts. But the affectionate, intimate flashes which she gives of his nature are fresh, generous and unique." Grace Willard

+ Lit R p5 O 9 '26 1400w

"This little book, so packed with tender and intimate trivialities, will have an honoured place in the Conrad canon."

+ Nation and Ath 40:90 O 16 '26 800w

"Mrs. Conrad does not pretend that her little book is to be taken in the light of a biography of her husband. There is soon to be, she states, a considerable volume of biography and letters, to be done by M. Jean Aubry. But this sketch of Conrad, by the one who knew him best, will be for all of Conrad's readers a highly prized bit of portraiture."

+ N Y Times p2 S 26 '26 2400w

"A candid, affectionate and not unhumorous survey of the ragged edges of a personality very firmly knit at its centre."

Sat R 142:289 S 11 '26 820w

"A difficult book to write and yet successfully done. Mrs. Conrad does not seem to think herself remarkable but one sees that she is."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:394 D 4 '26 160w

"This book lies properly outside the realm of critical analysis. It is a direct and artless personal document by a brave woman and devoted wife, and the reader can only accept it, impressed by its sincerity, and honoured by its confidence."

+ Spec 137:387 S 11 '26 360w

CONRAD, JESSIE—Continued

"Mrs. Conrad's book is not of great literary merit, but it is interesting and honest enough to win respect. It is a very frank and somewhat unexpected portrait of Conrad that we get from her pages."

Times [London] Lit Sup p594 S 9 '26
400w

CONRAD, JOSEPH. Last essays; with an introd. by Richard Curle. 171p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Dent]

824 26-26614

Most of the essays in this volume were written after the publication of "Notes on life and letters" (Book Review Digest, 1921) and these two books together, the introduction tells us, contain practically all Conrad's miscellaneous writings, unless there be some early ones yet undiscovered. Contents: Geography and some explorers; The "Torrens": a personal tribute; Christmas day at sea; Ocean travel; Outside literature: Legends; The unlighted coast; The Dover patrol; Memorandum on the scheme for fitting out a sailing ship; The loss of the "Dalgonar": Travel; Stephen Crane; His war book; John Galsworthy; A glance at two books; Preface to "The shorter tales of Joseph Conrad"; Cookery; The future of Constantinople; The Congo diary.

Booklist 22:409 J1 '26

"Here are reminiscent essays in Conrad's best manner, some prefaces and miscellaneous shorts reverently gathered from newspapers and periodicals by Richard Curle. All these are rich in interest for the general reader as well as for Conrad fans." Will Cuppy

+ Bookm 63:598 J1 '26 500w

"'Last Essays,' among Conrad's books, most nearly resembles 'Notes on Life and Letters,' to which it is not tremendously inferior. It has many moments of charm and power. Let those who are skeptical of Conrad's quality read these least ambitious pieces of his and find how hard it was for him to be mediocre or banal." L. Kronenberger

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 23 '26 1000w

"That this book has been published is something for which we should be grateful; it saves forever a number of essays worth preservation that might otherwise have been lost in the files of many magazines, only to be sought out by the true Conrad student." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ap 10 '26 1800w

Reviewed by Mary Childs

Int Bk R p590 Ag '26 650w

"Passages beautiful and moving as anything Conrad ever wrote are in this slender volume, this vale made up of newspaper articles, prefaces, the here-and-there compliances of a tired man with the wishes of his friends." Grace Willard

+ Lit R p5 My 1 '26 1450w

"It is not only Conradians who will be glad to have his delicately worded accounts of Stephen Crane in accessible form. Along with Notes on Life and Letters, Last Essays contains what is most worth preserving in Conrad's miscellaneous writing."

+ Living Age 329:555 Je 5 '26 120w

"With the exception of the sensitive memoir of Stephen Crane, these literary and maritime sketches betray a vapidly rather surprising in the artist who wrote 'Heart of Darkness' and 'The End of the Tether.' It is in the short critical essay that Conrad's sheer paucity of ideas manifests itself with a painful frankness; and it is here also that the atmospheric magic which vitalizes his novel style becomes singularly irrelevant."

+ Nation 123:381 O 13 '26 170w

"The misgivings that usually fill us when we take up the posthumous collection of an author's papers are not justified in the reading of Conrad's last essays." Herbert Read

+ Nation and Ath 39:20 Ap 3 '26 750w

"Each of these essays is written with an unconquerable respect for accuracy, and with none of its belligerency. They range from intimate talk to a complete declaration of faith; and casual or significant, they are unified in the light of Conrad's distinctive vision of life." L. S. Morris

+ New Repub 46:383 My 12 '26 820w

New Statesman 27:84 My 1 '26 750w

Reviewed by P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p3 Mr 28 '26 2850w

Reviewed by Milton Waldman

N Y World p6m Ap 11 '26 130w

Reviewed by Ethel Parton

Outlook 142:654 Ap 28 '26 80w

St Louis 24:248 S '26

Sat R of Lit 2:736 Ap 24 '26 500w

Spec 136:765 Ap 24 '26 720w

Springf'd Republican p7f My 16 '26 420w

"Of the twenty essays and articles here collected some half-dozen are as good as we could hope for; they have a full measure of the nobility of Conrad's prose and the additional virtue given by a flavour of intimacy. A few others are of biographical and critical interest, others again are welcome as examples of their author's interest in questions of seamanship. But we doubt whether Mr. Curle has been wise in including several reviews and letters. They are attractive in their way, but they spoil the effect of the earlier essays."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p159 Mr 4 '26 1050w

Reviewed by Wilbur Cross

Yale R n s 16:161 O '26 720w

CONVERSE, FLORENCE. Into the void. 232p $2 Little

26-15607

A pleasant tale wherein the mystery is also a romance. A poet and a bookshop lady simultaneously disappear into the void leaving only fragmentary clues behind them. Thru personals in the Transcript, the Springfield Republican and the Times the vanished pair communicate with each other, causing a flutter among their friends. The agitation continues as one clue follows and complicates the next, until the couple return out of the void with Officer Murphy triumphantly bringing up the rear.

"This diverting mystery tale is a thing to pounce on for sheer gayety and mirth. . . Throughout, it is a merry tale, differing from the heavy run of howling mysteries in its originality of theme." F. L. Warner

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf N '26 450w

Booklist 23:132 D '26

"Miss Converse has a keen sense of humor which turns her narrative into a diverting combination of mystery and gentle ridicule of mystery stories of the usual kind. Sophisticated readers will find her volume provocative of many chuckles; and it has sufficient plot to satisfy almost any reader." H. T. Baker

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 O 31 '26 480w

"In the parlance of the ever present flapper of today, this is a 'cute story.' It probably lays no claims to being anything else."

Boston Transcript p4 O 6 '26 260w

"A pleasant tale that combines the excitements of Sherlock Holmes with the beauty, atmosphere, and culture of an old New England college."

+ Ind 117:484 O 23 '26 60w

Reviewed by H. T. Murdock

Lit R p4 O 23 '26 260w

"The skill that went into the telling of this mild mystery is worthy of greater tasks. As a detective story, Into the Void is hardly a thriller, nor is its ingenuity anything remarkable. Indeed at times the reader is somewhat confused. But the language of the telling is more than agreeable, and the temper eloquently pleasant," R. L.

+ — New Repub 48:306 N 3 '26 130w

"This is called 'a mystery story.' One does not want to be severe, but it is impossible not to reflect that the mystery consists chiefly in conjecture as to why it was ever written, then why it was published. It may be a bit of attempted irony, but irony must be witty to pass muster."

— N Y Times p32 O 10 '26 320w

"An extremely well-bred book which the publishers announce as a mystery story; to the present reviewer it seems far too pallid and well-behaved for such classification. It might be recommended with a clear conscience, however, as a chatty and whimsical phantasy."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:217 O 16 '26 100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:274 O '26

COOK, GEORGE CRAM. Greek coins. 142p $1.75 Doran 811 25-23718

The opening tributes to the memory of George Cram Cook, founder of the Provincetown players, were written by Floyd Dell, Edna Kenton, and the poet's wife, Susan Glaspell. Many of the poems were written during the last days in Delphi, where the poet captured in his own spirit something of "the glory that was Greece."

Booklist 22:285 Ap '26

"Verse into which the poet has poured whatever was in him of philosophy, of metaphysical unrest and groping disabled faith." Babette Deutsch

+ Bookm 62:726 F '26 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p38 Mr '26

"The founder of The Provincetown Players is in these improvisations and unassuming monologues unique, groping with singular stubbornness for a vision which was so clear as to make him despise the comfort of half measures. George Cram Cook's poems, like his voyage to Greece, are symbols wherein we may read one man's quest for the perfection of beauty."

+ Dial 80:253 Mr '26 120w

Reviewed by K. L. Bates

Lit R p6 Ja 23 '26 420w

N Y Times p6 Ja 31 '26 380w

COOK, JOHN A. Pursuing the whale; a quarter-century of whaling in the Arctic; with an intro. by Allan Forbes. 344p il $4 Houghton [18s Murray]

639.2 Whaling. Seafaring life. Arctic regions 26-10242

A recent revival of interest in whales and whalers has carried into print many personal narratives of whaling, a desperately dangerous calling. One of these is Captain Cook's story of whaling in the Arctic, which seems to have been taken partly from a diary and partly from the ship's log.

Booklist 23:14 O '26

"The author of 'Pursuing the Whale' writes in a somewhat rambling and unorganized way, but he has a personal and authentic tale to relate and our thanks are due him that he makes no attempt to dye his material with artificial color or to jazz the tempo of a plain narrative."

— Arthur Warner

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 My 16 '26 130w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 19 '26 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p121 N '26

"His record is an amazing story of adaptability, courage, and a gruff acceptance of good and evil fortune. It is also an intensely interesting picture of the twilight of a great tradition."

+ Ind 116:588 My 15 '26 80w

Reviewed by W. Whitman

Ind 117:742 D 25 '26 490w

"In Captain Cook's 'Pursuing the Whale,' there is more real adventure and action than in twenty average novels; but, unfortunately, the good captain doesn't know how to use his material to the best advantage. The most terrific and dangerous situations are passed over without more than a word. Not that the author is unfeeling; on the contrary, he's a sincere and kind-hearted man; but adventures were so common in the life of this hardy skipper that he has ceased to think of them as worth noticing," J. W. Leonard

Int Bk R p569 Ag '26 600w

New Statesman 28:supxviii N 13 '26 300w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus

N Y Times p11 J1 4 '26 1150w

"Without making any pretension to literary merit, this book will yet prove interesting reading to those who love the sea and ships."

+ Outlook 143:481 Ag 4 '26 400w

R of Rs 74:223 Ag '26 80w

Reviewed by F. V. Morley

Sat R of Lit 3:102 S 11 '26 1750w

COOK, SIR THEODORE ANDREA. Sunlit hours; a record of sport and life. 330p il $6 Doran [18s Nisbet]

B or 92 Sports

26-7798

A personal narrative of friendships and events particularly in the field of sport, written by the editor of "The Field." Early in his literary career the author was secretary to Joseph Pulitzer and at that time met many interesting Americans who furnish him with some of these enjoyable anecdotes.

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 14 '26 550w

"Few books of this kind have appeared in recent years with anything like the charm and quality of this one." D. R.

+ Ind 117:275 S 4 '26 250w

+ Living Age 330:124 J1 10 '26 180w

Reviewed by Gilbert Thomas

Nation and Ath 39:sup297 Je 12 '26 70w

N Y Times p20 My 2 '26 560w

Sat R of Lit 2:811 My 22 '26 300w

Spec 136:918 My 29 '26 240w

"Those who, as they read, are infected by the keen ardour with which he throws himself into the description of a sport, and who admire the vivacity with which he tells a good story, will certainly arrive at the conviction that the editor of the Field can never grow old. Enthusiasts of different sports will follow him with pleasure upon their particular subject, for he goes right down to the root of 'form' in every activity of the human body."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p112 F 18 '26 950w

COOLEY, WILLIAM FORBES. Aim of Jesus Christ; a critical inquiry for the general reader. 227p $2 Macmillan [7s 6d Allen & U.]

232 Jesus Christ—Teaching

25-20034

A critical inquiry into the purpose and teaching of Jesus and the application of his message to present day issues and the church's mission and duty. In particular, the author studies Christ's idea of the Kingdom, which he regards as central to His teaching.

"This is hardly a book for 'the non-technical reader,' for it must be read with discrimination; but it should make stimulating reading for those who can make due reservations for the peculiar philosophical viewpoint." A. M. Perry

J Religion 6:323 My '26 420w

Reviewed by R. O. Kevin

Lit R p6 Ap 24 '26 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p287 Ap 15 '26 140w

COOLIDGE, CALVIN. Mind of the president; as revealed by himself in his own words; ed. by C. Bascom Slemp. 357p $3 Doubleday

308

26-6743

"Mr. Slemp's book is in the main a collection of extracts from the President's utterances, but it will be read primarily for Mr. Slemp's utterances about the President. These utterances are presented in two ways. Mr. Slemp has an introductory chapter entitled 'An Analysis and an Interpretation.' Then he prefaces some of the President's statements with bits of comment intended to keep the reader from missing anything."—Sat R of Lit

"This volume is intended primarily to show that behind Mr. Coolidge's Presidential activities lie a substantial and consistent body of political doctrine and a well developed philosophy of life. Mr. Slemp attempts also in a brief preface to analyze Mr. Coolidge's character and to account for his political success. In this field what an observer at such close quarters has to say cannot fail to be of decided interest."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ap 18 '26 180w

"Mr. Slemp writes an entertaining preface, arranges extracts from the speeches of his distinguished chief under certain heads, and interlards the text with occasional notes, graphic, explanatory and illuminating. According to Mr. Slemp, the President 'would provide a fundamental economic foundation for the life of the people, finding its expression in economy, both public and private, with a consequent reduction of expenses of government and relief to the taxpayer.' Probably no more succinct analysis of Mr. Coolidge's system of political science has ever been made." C: A. Beard

New Repub 47:38 My 26 '26 1250w

"The title suggests spreading upon a canvas the mental operations of the present incumbent of the White House in such a way that is shall be determined definitely and for all time whether he is a man or myth. That Mr. Slemp has not succeeded in living up to this expectation does not detract from the fact that he has produced a valuable book of reference." G: Author

+ N Y World p6m Mr 29 '26 1000w

Reviewed by R. J. Davis

Sat R of Lit 2:808 My 22 '26 600w

COOLIDGE, DANE. Not-Afraid. 299p $2 Dutton

26-16266

Not-Afraid, as the Indians call him, is an intrepid ranchman who runs athwart a preacher's family homesteading on his land in Wyoming and incurs their righteous anger and their fervent prayers for vengeance. The preacher's daughter Rose is as brave as Not-Afraid, and defies him with the same spirit as he defies her God. Tho the devil gets in some good work robbing the settlers of their home and bringing disgrace on the family, righteousness is on Rose's side and the battle is not to the strong.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 19 '26 80w

Boston Transcript p6 S 1 '26 230w

"There is no plot worth mentioning, and plot is as essential to a good Western as it is to a detective story. Mr. Coolidge is usually to be depended upon for far better fiction than this."

— Lit R p12 S 4 '26 140w

"As usual, Mr Coolidge writes vividly of the West of the romancers, but this story is not as convincing as some of his previous tales."

Spring'd Republican p7f O 17 '26 190w

COOPER, COURTNEY RYLEY. High country; the Rockies yesterday and to-day. 294p il $2.50 Little

917.8 Rocky mountains

26-10334

An illustrated description of trails and passes over the Rocky mountains combined with stories of men and horses who follow them. The author has a word of advice to the motorist tenderfoot, too, in a chapter on the special technique of mountaineering in a car.

Booklist 23:31 O '26

Bookm 63:xvii Ag '26 140w

Reviewed by Blair Niles

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 Ag 29 '26 2300w

Boston Transcript p4 My 19 '26 820w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 S '26

"It is a vivid book, and any one for whom the Western mountains have an interest will find its pages very fascinating." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p4 Ag 8 '26 800w

"That Mr. Cooper has enjoyed writing every chapter on his well-known, deeply explored, and much loved mountains is evident. The book is not a feat of literary workmanship, but an easy series of chapters, rambling and colloquial, on proper equipment, proper spirit, and necessary adjustment to wild life."

+ Outlook 143:548 Ag 18 '26 200w

"Present day visitors can profit from the advice offered by a man like Mr. Cooper, who has known the country from the days when it was literally in a state of nature."

+ R of Rs 74:667 D '26 100w

"While the book is not an important addition to travel literature, it is agreeable in its light way."

Spring'd Republican p6 O 25 '26 300w

Wis Lib Bul 22:197 Je '26

COOPER, COURTNEY RYLEY. Oklahoma. 303p $2 Little

26-14910

An historical novel on an epic theme—the opening of Oklahoma to homesteaders and the rush of settlers into their promised land. Mort Sturdevant scores his father as an "armchair pioneer." Himself preferring action, he refuses a safe berth in his father's business in the East and joins Pawnee Bill (Major Gordon Lillie) in the enterprise of organizing and directing the settler's rush into Oklahoma. He meets a girl of pioneer stuff and is strongly attracted to her but her unhappy secret is a barrier to their love. Mort absorbs himself in his colossal task of organization. At the climax of his efforts funds fail. It is then that the scorned "armchair pioneer's" money saves a hope and builds a state.

Booklist 23:132 D '26

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 19 '26 80w

"'Oklahoma,' in the skilful hands of Mr. Cooper, is almost an epic of a certain day in American history. Certainly it appears to have all the stamina and sweep that a respectful world so readily granted that rushing narrative of the moving picture, screen some years ago, 'The Covered Wagon.'"

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 4 '26 440w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 D '26

Reviewed by F. H. Martens

Lit R p16 S 18 '26 450w

"'Oklahoma' must be listed among the historic romances of our recent past as one of such color, vigor, truth and interest that it deserves attention."

+ N Y Times p18 S 5 '26 550w

Outlook 144:122 S 22 '26 80w

R of Rs 74:670 D '26 80w

"The story moves with vivid swiftness from start to finish, its only fault that we have found being a particularly silly and not entirely necessary love affair."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:123 S 18 '26 120w

"One will find in the story, according to his temperament, either a lively story of realistic adventure with a thread of romance, with an Oklahoma-history background, or a realistic historical story of Oklahoma beginnings with a thread of adventure and a touch of romance. . . Taken from either angle, it is good reading; and as concerns atmosphere, it is the real thing."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f N 14 '26 280w

COPELAND, CHARLES TOWNSEND, ed.
 2 Copeland reader. 1687p $10 Scribner
 820.8 English literature—Collections

26-22430

This anthology of English prose and verse includes the selections which Professor Copeland has read aloud during thirty-four years of teaching, lecturing and reading before classes and audiences in Harvard university and Radcliffe college and in excursions to other colleges and schools as well as clubs and societies.

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 11 '26 1200w
 Ind 118:80 Ja 15 '27 260w

"Humor, action, fancy, vividness and grace, with an occasional divagation into pathos, subtlety or emotion, characterize the generous pages of this volume."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 D 29 '26 350w

COPPLESTONE, BENNET, pseud. See Kit-chin, F: H.

CORBIN, THOMAS W. Romance of lighthouses and lifeboats. (Romance ser.) 311p il $3 Lip-pincott [6s Seeley, Service]

614.865 Lighthouses. Lifeboats. Life saving
 26-7437

"An account of the life-saving apparatus and appliances used in guarding against the dangers of the sea, including a description of lightships, rockets and submarine signalling."—Subtitle

Booklist 22:317 My '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p52 Ap '26

"Mr. Corbin is a little weak on the historical side; but his explanation of the construction and working of lighthouses, lifeboats, rocket apparatus, wireless, and submarine signalling is both full and fascinating. Here, too, the illustrations are good and helpful."

+ Nation and Ath 38:364 D 5 '25 40w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:239 My '26

Times [London] Lit Sup p807 N 26 '25
 120w

CORDER, FREDERICK. Ferencz (François) Liszt. (Masters of music) 178p $1.50 Harper [7s 6d K. Paul]

B or 92 Liszt, Franz 26-165

A brief biography of Liszt followed by a catalog of his compositions to which, as far as possible, dates have been assigned.

Booklist 22:248 Mr '26

Reviewed by P: Bowdoin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 2
 '26 130w

"There is spice in Mr. Corder's book but he uses it more judiciously in painting the background, and spares his hero. In consequence, Liszt comes to life in his pages, not being dwarfed by the agitating presence of a showman."

+ Nation and Ath 38:446 D 19 '25 150w

"Attractive, well-informed and smoothly written."

+ New Statesman 26:360 Ja 2 '26 280w

"Comparatively little seems to have been published in English about Liszt; and Mr. Corder's book will be welcomed. It is readably written; and gives a good clean-cut picture of Liszt's career. It might, however, have been wished that the book had been shortened in one way and lengthened in another. Mr. Corder's style has an element of picturesquely individual humour that one would not wish to be absent, but in these pages it sometimes strays off into digressions that have really not much to do with the matter at issue. On the other hand, he is tantalizingly brief on what is really the chief point—Liszt's permanent place in the history of music."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p767 N 19 '25
 260w

Wis Lib Bul 22:196 Je '26

CORELLI, MARIE (MINNIE MACKAY).
 Poems. 113p $2 Doran [5s Hutchinson]
 821 26-9024

Love and religion are the themes for the major part of this collection of hitherto unpublished verse.

"Here is another world, as remote in its exterior of stilted phrase and saturated sentimentalism from what is representative of our time as the languishing lady with sweeping train is from the young women of to-day. Underneath all of this lace and starlight is amorous unrest enough to break into hundreds of such poems. Mystical, sentimental, undifferentiated, any single one is an example of all the others."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 O 24
 '26 180w

"Marie Corelli was a real poet and although one reads her verses with a high admiration for her skill and her fervor, they give on the whole a sense of depression at such despair tingeing every ray of sunlight or moonlight and the beauty of the sea. One looks out on nature as if through a blue glass." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 7 '26 700w

"Altho these poems are somewhat of a tour de force, admirers of Marie Corelli's romances may find in them an added interest and enjoyment. They are charmingly arranged by Miss Vyver." Lilian Whiting

+ Int Bk R p458 Je '26 400w

"The poetry is not so very bad. There is so much bad poetry that a little more or less doesn't make much difference. But even the Philistine not born in the era of the author's popularity can find a plot in the emotionized prose of the novels. In this—nothing."

— Sat R of Lit 3:12 J1 31 '26 350w

CORNING, HOBART M. After testing—what? the practical use of test results in one school system. 213p $1.60 Scott

371.25 Mental tests. Grading and marking (students). Trinidad, Colorado—Public schools 26-13261

"The author presents to classroom teachers and to students of educational psychology and school administration an account of how he utilized the results of mental tests in introducing the multiple-track system into the schools of Trinidad, Colorado. After a brief review of the testing movement in the first chapter, he describes the 'Trinidad Plan' and how it is operating. The work was begun in March, 1922. A psychological examiner administered group intelligence tests to more than three thousand children from the first grade through the high school. On the basis of the test results the children in each grade were divided into three groups: bright, average, and dull. . . It was 'necessary to go a step farther and adjust the subject-matter to the capacities of the individuals. The change was made complete for all subjects and grades.' According to the author, the plan has proved to be an unmistakable success."—School R

"It is a project conceived intelligently and carried out effectively."

+ Educ R 72:192 N '26 760w

"Superintendent Corning has produced a book that shows how to blend the theoretical and the scientific with the practical. It is possible to criticize certain points in his work, but the author himself realizes that he has not said the last word. The spirit of the book is such that it should be an incentive to other superintendents to carry on similar experimentation in their school systems." R. M. Hogan

CORNING, HOBART M.—Continued.

+ El School J 27:236 N '26 320w

Reviewed by R. R. Ryder
School R 34:717 N '26 600w

CORTISSOZ, ROYAL. Personalities in art. 444p

il $3.50 Scribner 25-23375

759 Painting. Artists
Mr Cortissoz conducts the Field of art in Scribner's magazine. These sketches, which have appeared there and elsewhere, discuss from a personal angle famous artists and their work. The illustrations are from paintings by the masters under discussion.

"It is the talk of the most engaging, persuasive, and altogether likable thorough connoisseur that I know anything about." R. C. Holliday

+ Bookm 63:226 Ap '26 720w

Reviewed by Adeline Adams
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ap 4 '26 680w

Dial 80:164 F '26 120w

"Pleasant, stimulating, not too profound." J. T. Shipley

+ Lit R p8 Ja 30 '26 160w

"Mr. Cortissoz is the perfect example of the Salon or academic type of critic, a generation too late with his courageous praise of Renoir and Monet, and still condemning with stale and empty phrases about 'unloveliness' and 'lack of quality' the man whom Renoir and Monet delighted to honor—Cézanne. 'Personalities in Art' abounds in garrulous anecdotes which are urbane and mildly entertaining for a time, but become more and more tiresome as they flutter aimlessly about, far from any real contact with either aesthetic values or significant personalities in art." T. Munro

+ Nation 122:159 F 10 '26 250w

Reviewed by C. De Kay
N Y Times p12 Je 6 '26 420w

"The book is overwhelmingly stimulating for the general reader interested in art, for whom, moreover, an occasional disagreement should act as a springboard to independent cerebral activity. The ultra-modernist will turn up his nose at the papers on Cézanne or Gauguin or '291.' But where his sympathies lie Cortissoz is a sound guide, and his sympathies are many, including the impressionists."

+ — Outlook 141:489 N 25 '25 400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:92 F '26

Pratt p24 spring '26

"Whether we agree with the author or not, he is often interesting and even refreshing when he does not become too pedantic, when he does not take himself too seriously." H. I.

+ — Springfd Republican p7a Mr 28 '26 1350w

Wis Lib Bul 21:306 D '25

CORY, SIR GEORGE EDWARD. Rise of South Africa: a history of the origin of South African colonisation and of its development towards the east from the earliest time to 1857. 6v v 4 546p il $9 (26s) Longmans

968 South Africa—History

The fourth volume in the history of South Africa begins with the Boer exodus from Cape Colony in 1834-1839 and the establishment of the Dutch Republic in Natal, and concludes with the Kaffir war of 1846. In the original plan there were to be four volumes, but the work has been expanded to six.

"Sir George Cory manages his mass of detail well, and shows becoming impartiality, though he has not been able to make his Boers as life-like as his Englishmen. A careful reading of the first four volumes of this history, and of the two which are to follow, would provide an excellent protection against the furious partisanship of African politics."

+ Nation and Ath 39:531 Ag 7 '26 200w

Sat R 142:237 Ag 28 '26 200w

Spec 137:318 Ag 28 '26 450w

"There is a great deal to be said for the leisurely sweep of his narrative, which omits few picturesque details and is constantly reminding his South African readers of buildings and sites and personalities that must have been familiar to their fathers or grandfathers. But, even so, one cannot help wondering whether a still more impressive and true picture of the early South African scene could not have been attained had the pruning knife been used a little more freely on the luxuriance of detail."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p518 Ag 5 '26 1100w

COSGRAVE, MRS JESSICA (GARRETSON). Gardens: quick results with flowers and vegetables. 177p il $2.50 Doran

716 Gardening 25-21700

The author's garden experience began, she tells us, with a few war potatoes. Her first crop was small, but sufficient to arouse a steadily mounting enthusiasm. She advises the beginner how to get quick results with annual and perennial borders, with vegetables, and flowers for odd places.

"A simple practical book. A combination of enthusiasm and common sense."

+ Booklist 22:103 D '25

"Mrs. Cosgrave has done her work well and with a contagious sort of enthusiasm that somehow manages to remain sane and practical." R. S. Lemmon

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ja 3 '26 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p37 Mr '26

"Not only beginners in gardening but also those of some experience will find much valuable suggestion in her pages, for she writes out of her own experience and she has evidently created her own gardens by depending chiefly on her individual inspirations and experiments."

+ N Y Times p10 Ap 11 '26 320w

COSGRAVE, MRS JESSICA (GARRETSON). Mothers and daughters. 117p $1.50 Doran

173 Girls. Mothers 25-23380

In this little volume Mrs Cosgrave discusses sanely and sympathetically the problems confronting mothers and fathers in the upbringing of their daughters, and explains how those problems have been solved in her own large experience with girls.

Booklist 22:190 F '26

"A slender but intensely interesting volume that is going to prove of inestimable assistance to the mothers of small, growing, and grown girls alike."

+ Bookm 62:617 Ja '26 200w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 F 7 '26 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p35 Mr '26

"A sane, sensible, moderate book."

+ Lit R p12 F 13 '26 220w

"Mrs. Cosgrave can speak with no little authority on this subject. Her pages show that, in addition to long and varied practical experience, she has kept abreast of the rapid developments of modern psychology and so can background her conclusions and convictions with the sanctions of science. But her discussions of the problems of the modern mother and the up-to-date daughter are of particular value to parents in general because they are so wholly practical."

+ N Y Times p8 D 27 '25 320w

N Y World p7m Ja 17 '26 160w

Pratt p8 summer '26

St Louis 24:49 Mr '26

"It is a sane and tolerant little book," B. A. R.

+ Survey 55:575 F 15 '26 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p751 O 28 '26 170w

"Jessica Cosgrave has written a most readable little book of good advice to some mothers. While the book fairly bristles with ideals brought together under certain headings such as 'undoubted character qualities,' which include self-control, generosity, consideration, order, sincerity, courage, perseverance, etc., the cataloging and labelling of these abstract qualities, while perhaps some incentive to the person with good impulses but lazy habits, suggest the New Year Resolution with all its lack of substance." J. W. Wise

+ World Tomorrow 9:59 F '26 300w

COTTON, EDWARD HOWE. Theodore Roosevelt, the American; foreword by Corinne Roosevelt Robinson. 192p Italian ed pa $1; English ed $1.50; English-Italian ed $2 Am. Unitar.

B or 92 Roosevelt, Theodore

This eulogistic biography of Roosevelt is printed in Italian and English on parallel pages for Americanization purposes.

Booklist 23:34 O '26

"Although Edward H. Cotton is prone to overeulogize the mighty deeds and merits of his dynamic subject, he has still succeeded in writing a moderately just short biography of the late President as a man apart from his achievements. But it seems as if Mr. Cotton's work might have been improved in dignity and value by a reduction of his incessant cheers."

+ Bookm 63:104 Mr '26 100w

"In 'Theodore Roosevelt, the American,' Edward H. Cotton has portrayed the life of 'the great American' in a simple, direct and forceful style. This is no psycho-analytical biography nor is it the usual dull chronological affair."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 19 '26 150w

"The author has not tried in the rather brief space this bilingual plan gave him to present a full biography of his subject, but rather to depict his personality and to indicate the extent and variety of his activities and achievements. It is not in any sense a critical estimate of Roosevelt's career and character, but follows the method already well established in Rooseveltian biography of ardent admiration and unbroken eulogy."

+ N Y Times p12 Ap 18 '26 220w

COUDENHOVE-KALERGI, RICHARD NICO-LAUS. Pan-Europe; with an introd. by Nicholas Murray Butler. 215p $2.50 (7s 6d) Knopf

341.1 Europe. International federation

26-14931

Count Coudenhove-Kalergi urges the creation of a Pan-European federation of states on the order of the Pan-American union. He would exclude the British Empire and Soviet Russia from Pan-Europa on the ground that they are themselves federations of states.

"A fruitful book dropped in the ungrateful soil of an unprogressive world."

Bookm 64:234 O '26 280w

"This volume, written in a mood of passionate earnestness, appears to have suffered little from translation. In the English version it retains its native virility and lucidity of style and holds the reader's attention throughout."

H. W. Horwill

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 19 '26 730w

Reviewed by Arthur Pound

Ind 117:595 N 20 '26 360w

"His argument is lucid and plausible, and though it is unlikely that the political formations of the future will fall into any ready-made pattern, no matter how rational it may be a priori, this book is thought-provoking, and it may contribute its mite toward solving the puzzle of how mankind is to dwell together peaceably on our constantly dwindling globe."

+ Living Age 330:432 Ag 21 '26 280w

"Count Kalergi's analysis of the world situation, with its recognition of something like a destiny which awaits the West, contains a good deal that will remind the reader of Spengler's political philosophy. As an exposition of political tendencies, however, and of the grave predicament in which Europe has been left by the blind and perverse framers of the peace treaties, the book is an impressive performance, well worthy of attention whatever one may think of the way in which ultimate salvation may best be attained." W. MacDonald

+ Nation 123:275 S 22 '26 560w

"Despite the numerous doubts which will assail the reader who has found practice a clearer guide than theory in the conduct of affairs, this book by the head of the Pan-European Union in Vienna is a most stimulating piece of political writing. The great development of the past century was the ability to think in terms of continents; 'Pan-Europe' is splendid mental exercise for those who would learn to think in terms of hemispheres and of the world." J. Carter

+ N Y Times p6 S 12 '26 1100w

"The book deserves to be in every library because its depiction of the Balkanic condition of Europe is of an unparalleled vividness and emphasis."

+ Outlook 144:216 O 13 '26 270w

Sat R of Lit 3:402 D 4 '26 420w

Spec 137:761 O 30 '26 80w

Survey 56:645 S 15 '26 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p823 N 18 '26 150w

COUPERUS, LOUIS MARIE ANNE. Comedians; a story of ancient Rome. 365p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Cape]

26-18630

"Couperus has put gusto and freshness into reconstructing the city of Rome in the time of Domitian. The book has very little plot. The story, such as it is, moves, or one might say revolves, round the figures of Cecilius and Cecilianus, two charming twins who play women's parts in the comedies of Plautus and Terence. Rome is seen from the point of view of the green-room and the stage. . . 'The Comedians,' with its extremely frank picture of Roman manners, is not in any sense food for babes. Domitian is indeed a kind of ogre, a dissolute human spider living in a hall of mirrors. We are told a lot about him, but we are hardly ever shown him, and yet the horror of his influence hangs heavy over the book."—Sat R

Reviewed by G: F. Whicher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 D 12 '26 650w

Boston Transcript p5 N 27 '26 230w

"M. Couperus offers a characteristically crowded canvas, and makes the world of his imagination historically convincing and educational. If it were not for certain 'purplish' passages, the story would make good reading for schoolboys. As it is, their pastors and masters will probably prefer to keep it to themselves."

Living Age 331:91 O 1 '26 280w (Reprinted from the Daily Telegraph)

"'The Comedians' is a clever piece of restoration. Couperus does not show us the real imperial Rome, we feel, but he does show us an excellent imitation. He fails in his reconstruction of historical characters; his Tacitus, Pliny, and Martial are absurd; but otherwise the book is of its kind very good." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 39:615 Ag 28 '26 50w

"An historical novel in the new style, with scholarship supplying the stuff of Roman life in the first century; and a modern imagination

COUPERUS, LOUIS M. A.—Continued
the motives and behavior by which the characters live. . . Fortunately, Couperus in research has not forgotten his craftsmanship."

+ New Repub 49:50 D 1 '26 200w

"Louis Couperus is a writer of great learning and considerable power. . . The conventions and terrors of the time are suggested with extraordinary skill, but with a somewhat cynical effect of detachment which prevents one from getting excited about what happens to any of the characters." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 27:613 S 11 '26 70w

"To write his vivid novel of ancient Rome Mr. Couperus has quarried deep into the tumult of history and literature. But there is not a fragment he draws forth, whose truncated limbs he cannot restore and whose marble he cannot, Pygmalion-wise, turn for us into sentient flesh, blood, nerves, arteries." H: L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p7 N 28 '26 1500w

"Couperus has steeped himself in the history and in the lore of the times and has enriched his book with a thousand precious details of time and place." H. S.

+ N Y World p11m Ja 9 '27 180w

"The Comedians' is not easy to read. It is fragmentary and kaleidoscopic. In dialogue no one ever finishes a sentence; and this trait, though it reproduces the tentativeness of ordinary conversation, makes the thread of the narrative hard to follow. But even for such as are not interested in Ancient Rome the book is well worth reading. Couperus had genius, and of this there are evidences in plenty, though sometimes, like valuable archaeological remains, they are to be found only after much delving in dull earth." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 142:183 Ag 14 '26 720w

"It is an artificial narrative exercise, carried out with skill and thorough attention to colorful detail—but always an exercise. It has both lightness, and an unforced reality, yet this book alone would never demonstrate the author's undoubted position as leading novelist of Holland. At any rate, the present unsigned translation is lively, natural, and makes excellent reading."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:487 Ja 1 '27 250w

"Tales of ancient days, unless they be tales of adventure purely, often read tediously or are too obviously erudite. Mr. Couperus in The Comedians has avoided both these faults brilliantly in a story of a band of actors in ancient Rome. . . The book altogether, without seeming consciously to do so, paints in the most lively way imaginable a brilliant perspective of the past."

+ Spec 137:220 Ag 7 '26 130w

"The Latin atmosphere is exceedingly rich, spread with Teutonic lavishness, but the total effect is that of a classical charade played by earnest but indifferent amateur actors."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p510 Jl 29 '26 350w

COUPLAND, REGINALD. Raffles, 1781-1826.
2 134p $2 (6s) Oxford

B or 92 Raffles, Sir Thomas Stamford

"In this monograph the career of Sir Stamford Raffles, one of the builders of the British empire, is set forth. His ambitions, performances, successes, and disappointments are here fairly appraised and related."—Ind

"The book is full of strong situations and stirring incidents,—all of them records of fact."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 8 '26 130w

"Mr. Coupland has written a valuable book on the work of a first-class organizer of colonial empire."

+ Ind 117:332 S 18 '26 100w

"An interesting story, but somewhat dry in the telling." T. McG.

+ — Nation and Ath 39:590 Ag 21 '26 350w

New Statesman 28:24 O 16 '26 400w

"Professor Coupland tells with keen but not uncritical sympathy the story of Sir Stamford Raffles's life, always a stirring romance of far-sighted enterprise and sometimes poignant human tragedy."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p503 Jl 29 '26 820w

COVER, JOHN HIGSON. Advertising; its problems and methods; with a chapter on market analysis by Percival White. 319p il $3 (12s 6d) Appleton

659 Advertising

26-9657

In method and scope the book follows much the same plan as other recent volumes on advertising, explaining the subject in all its phases to the advertiser and at the same time offering practical aid to the copy-writer.

Booklist 23:14 O '26

"All in all, I suspect this writer of having rather liberal views, but he has treated the business as though it were a dead science instead of a living scramble. It is a good technical outline of the trade." Helen Woodward

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Jl 18 '26 100w

St Louis 24:243 S '26

"A clear, readable, and sound book on the practice of advertising, wisely devoting most of its space to the subject of copy, which is, after all, the important part of the work."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:860 Je 12 '26 180w

Wis Lib Bul 22:225 Jl '26

COX, GEORGE JAMES. Art, for amateurs and students. 205p il $5 Doubleday [21s Batsford]

701 Art

26-12330

In this book, which is itself a work of art, the author explains the principles which are the foundation of all art. To illustrate these principles and to furnish material to exercise the reader's powers of discrimination, the author has reduced to fundamental terms examples of all the arts—painting, sculpture, architecture, and the rest—in primitive, medieval, and modern times. These plates are separate from the text and form the second half of the book.

Booklist 23:19 O '26

Reviewed by T: Craven

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 S 12 '26 50w

Boston Transcript p6 Je 19 '26 500w

Reviewed by H. I. Brock

N Y Times p16 Je 20 '26 430w

"The author's brief survey of essentials in design and aesthetics is of a sustained and rather tedious breeziness, while his position is so eclectic as to be merely confusing. His heart is evidently with the Modernists, but he is capable of admiring both Cotman and Cézanne, and he has passing qualms over Matisse and Roualt."

Sat R of Lit 2:907 Jl 3 '26 350w

COX, HENRY EDWARD. Chemical analysis of foods; a practical treatise on the examination of foodstuffs and the detection of adulterants. 323p $5 Blakiston

543.1 Food adulteration and inspection.
Food analysis Agr26-606

"Does not go into the subject deeply; gives only brief space to the covering of a very broad field."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"On the whole he has produced a compact and readable volume which contains a large amount of useful information. The book is more useful in initial training than as an aid in discussing special isolated points. In a second edition with a fair amount of revision and correction a very useful text-book should result."

+ Nature 118:115 Jl 24 '26 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:455 O '26

COXON, MRS MURIEL (HINE). Reluctant impostor. 301p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

25-22637

Siriol Marraby has youth, health, and good looks. She has also a profound distaste for her position as governess to the Moret children. Unexpectedly comes the chance to escape. Her cousin, Sophie Welland, who might be her frail twin, is thrust without ceremony into her life. Weak and unhappy, she begs Siriol to live with her, to exchange identities with her, and to continue the masquerade even after her death. To Siriol it means wealth, travel, social position; in short all that she longs for. Reluctantly she consents, and the comedy of errors, which runs close to tragedy for her, begins—and ends—with an inherited love affair.

"There are two or three charming people, who lend an air of freshness to an otherwise sordid situation—and always there is the plot."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 20 '26 350w

"Muriel Hine's book contains a touch of detective suspense in the plot, many moments of keen wit-matching, and action and reaction enough to keep the reader in the proper degree of suspense and wonderment. She has altered the old idea of changed identities so that even the blasé will read the story with interest and want to turn ahead to see what is going to happen." V. R. Bowker

+ Int Bk R p203 F '26 220w

"The Reluctant Impostor" is unpretentious and entertaining, a pleasant little romance with which to spend a few idle hours."

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 24 '26 450w

"Enjoyable, well written romance."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 21 '26 130w

Spec 136:138 Ja 23 '26 70w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 13 '25 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p337 D 3 '26 180w

CRAFTON, ALLEN, and ROYER, JESSICA. Process of play production; a book for the non-professional theatre worker. 314p $2.25 Crofts

792 Theater 26-14533

The authors write their main chapters from the standpoint of the director, the art director, and the actor. Pertinent words of advice and suggestion are directed to each of these, covering the whole process of play production: organizing the company, choosing the cast, staging the play, rehearsing it, costuming and making up for it, and acting it.

"The concise explanatory material is well arranged and presented in textbook style."

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 16 '26 180w

"There is one chapter that justifies the book—a chapter in which the authors take up the study of the play as a foundation for production."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:396 D 4 '26 70w

"The authors discuss everything from direction to grease paint with an equal gusto and no little practical wisdom. The A-B-C's of directing, mounting and acting a play are sensibly and often penetratingly presented."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 11:78 Ja '27 110w

CRAIG, MRS A. E. R. Beloved rajah. 308p $2 Minton, Balch & co.

26-16336

The youthful Maharajah and the tiny daughter of the Nairns were great friends. Chalyas called her royal playmate Morno, and for her he had many beautiful and fanciful pet names. Their intimacy was several years old when Chalyas went home to England to be educated. Treasuring the memory of her childhood friend she returned to India at seventeen, eager to renew the old relationship. As for Morno, his affection for the little English girl had been the ruling motive of his life. Her return and its dramatic consequences are the stuff of which the story is made.

Reviewed by H. T. Baker

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 S 12 '26 220w

"Mrs. Craig has not only written a delightful story of India, but she has created a character that will be loved and remembered."

R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p1 S 25 '26 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 N '26

"Pleasant and harmless; it is, in fact, approximately as good as it could be considering the limitations of plot and treatment that Mrs. Craig has set for herself."

Sat R of Lit 3:141 S 25 '26 200w

CRANE, MANNIN. Yarns from a windjammer; with foreword by Sir Bertram F. Hayes. 192p $4 Houghton

910.4 Seafaring life 26-22980

Here are sketches, reprinted from a variety of sources, which retail with the freshness of first-hand experience the hardy and precarious life of a sailor on the now vanished sailing ship.

"One feels that the voyages have really been made, that we have traveled with Dan Crellin and Ginger and McGinty and Sullivan and the rest, suffered and frozen with them, made adventure with them, so splendidly is it all written."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 30 '26 250w

Lit R p17 D 4 '26 300w

Nation 124:20 Ja 5 '27 20w

Nation and Ath 39:712 S 18 '26 180w

"It is a worthy addition to the growing library of the sea."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:456 D 18 '26 130w

"Wholesome, well-told stories, which children as well as adults will enjoy; indeed, all of us who go to sea in dreams or recollection or reality will read them with delight."

+ Spec 137:489 S 25 '26 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p646 S 30 '26 250w

CRANE, NATHALIA CLARA RUTH. Sunken garden. 259p $2 A. & C. Boni

26-10311

Underneath the rhetoric, buried deep in long words, is the slight story of a pair of youthful castaways on a tropical island.

"In spite of the fact that the story might almost have been written by Carl Van Vechten on an off day, I should not like to have you gather that Miss Crane's performance is uninteresting. Indeed no. It is a story which you will finish reading for several reasons. If you are not charmed by the illuminated vagaries of style, you will be held by the ability of a born story teller." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:596 J1 '26 400w

Reviewed by Genevieve Taggard

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 J1 27 '26 750w

"It certainly is a remarkable piece of writing, no matter who is responsible for it."

Boston Transcript p4 My 26 '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 D '26

"A fantasy of singular loveliness. She has given her imagination free rein and the result is a romance both delightful and whimsical, with flashes of beauty. When one considers Miss Crane's age—thirteen—this is indeed a remarkable book."

+ Ind 117:29 J1 3 '26 40w

"We believe the publication of 'The Sunken Garden' to be a mistake. The publication of a book is, in a sense, already a public avowal of its worthiness; it must be, at any rate, for the author. And 'The Sunken Garden' is not worthy, measured even by the thinnest of contemporary fiction. It does the child of 'The Jan-

CRANE, NATHALIA C. R.—Continued

itor's Boy' no good. It is the book in which she has dumped all her excess baggage of words. Her practice book." Walter Yust

— Lit R p3 Je 19 '26 600w

"Is 'The Sunken Garden' a good book? Has it absolute merit? The answer is no. But when it is asked: Is 'The Sunken Garden' a remarkable piece of work for one of Nathalia's age, then the answer is yes. It might even be regarded as an extraordinary piece of work. The enthusiastic admirers of little Miss Crane and her poetry will doubtless call the novel a work of genius. It is not. And such admirers will do the authoress far more harm than good."

— + N Y Times p11 My 16 '26 1100w

"'The Sunken Garden' is not at all a childish book in either its qualities or its defects. It shows the fine and sensitive mental quality of her earlier work, and an astonishing lyric sense, even as her poems do. However, it also bears frequent traces of library research and hot-house imagination of a type not particularly healthy. Perhaps these are the signs of immaturity. Provided they do not seriously affect Miss Crane's poetry, no one can seriously object to her getting them out of her system in a novel."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:924 J1 10 '26 360w

CREEL, GEORGE. People next door; an interpretive history of Mexico and the Mexicans. 418p $4 Day

972 Mexico—History. Mexico—Foreign relations—United States. United States—Foreign relations—Mexico 26-21131

The "people next door" are the Mexicans whose frontier for 1800 miles is our own and whose interests are our own as well. In a style bespeaking his long experience as journalist Mr. Creel sketches the history of Mexico from the beginnings of the Aztec civilization and gives a detailed account of the long unhappy conflict between the United States and its southern neighbor.

"The readers of Creel will come to feel more active sympathy for Mexico's tragic plight and interest in her success, because they will find that the best possible solution of our difficulties with her. They will need to be reminded by others that Mexico, though weak and harassed, has nevertheless important international obligations to meet and that she ought to speed up her efforts to meet them. Books which dwell upon American rights and Mexican derelictions have long held the center of interest. This one puts the other side first." H. I. Priestley

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 12 '26 1350w

"No writer has ever made so clear the incredible difficulties under which Mexico has labored as does Mr. Creel." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 8 '26 940w

"A coherent history of the Mexican kaleidoscope is a rare and valuable thing. Mr. Creel's book is certainly coherent; it is also readable. It suffers, however, from the author's habit of coloring his pages with his prejudices and stating his prejudices as facts. In short, it is journalistic in spirit and execution."

— + Ind 117:624 N 27 '26 220w

"This book is a confection which adds nothing to American scholarship and which, instead of clarifying, can serve only to muddle further the waters of the Rio Grande." Herbert Solow

— Lit R p2 D 4 '26 1150w

"Mr. Creel covers a great deal of ground with a celerity that is amazing. Paragraphs flow from him as sentences do from other writers. He is eminently rhetorical. His book on Mexico is not written from extended personal observation and familiar contact with a motley, emotional people. Perhaps Mr. Creel's contribution should be read as an appetizer for a philosophical study of Mexican history. He stimulates if he does not always impress or convince." H: E. Armstrong

— + N Y Times p3 D 5 '26 1550w

"'The People Next Door' shows the evidences of hard and conscientious labor. But it is not a well-written book. A good deal of it is framed in the language of a Bowery melodrama, and much of it is needlessly truculent in tone." W. J. Ghent

+ — Outlook 144:373 N 17 '26 1350w

R of Rs 74:670 D '26 60w

CRESPI, ANGELO. Contemporary thought of Italy. 249p $2.50 Knopf

195 Philosophy, Italian

"The aim of Dr. Crespi's book is, he says, 'to be a somewhat cursory survey of the contribution of contemporary Italy, and especially of these three thinkers (Giovanni Gentile, Benedetto Croce, and Bernardino Varisco), to our evolving notion of the universe, of man and his destiny therein.' Incidentally, the survey happens to be the first attempt in English at a systematic criticism of Italian Neo-Hegelianism. In an interesting introduction Dr. Crespi describes the new movement in Italian life since the beginning of the twentieth century, the political outlook, and the overthrow of the positivist spirit."—Living Age (Reprinted from Sunday Times)

"He has performed a complicated task with remarkable thoroughness and fairness. There is so much that is wholly admirable and useful in this book that I need have no reluctance in pointing out what I conceive to be its major inadequacy—its failure—that is, to 'thrill' with the grandeur of its subject, its tendency to leave with us the impression that Italy, despite the intense cerebration of a full quarter century, has, after all, made only an unsuccessful attempt to write a footnote to Hegel." Arthur Livingston

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 D 26 '26 990w

"The author understands Italy, past and present, and has given us an able and clear description of contemporary thought in Italy." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 3 '26 330w

"Dr. Crespi's exposition of the theories and countertheories which now divide intellectual Italy is extremely valuable."

+ Living Age 331:446 D 1 '26 260w (Reprinted from Sunday Times)

CRILE, GEORGE WASHINGTON. Bipolar theory of living processes; ed. by Amy F. Rowland. 405p il $5 (21s) Macmillan

612.014 Electrophysiology 26-9801

As the result of long-continued laboratory experimentation to discover the nature of life and of death, the author's theory has taken shape. This bipolar theory of living processes is that "man and animals are bipolar mechanisms and that the organism not only is driven by electricity but that it was originally created and constructed by electrical forces," and that the brain and the liver are the centers of positivity and negativity in this bipolar mechanism.

"The book is well illustrated, contains much information on Dr. Crile's researches, and is permeated by a forceful presentation of the author's point of view in a wide field of medical, biological, and electrical relations." C. A. Kofoid

Am J Pub Health 16:834 Ag '26 520w

"It is a highly exciting thesis. The book is stimulating but challengeable. Many years have been devoted to painstaking experiments, and the results are of the highest interest. The analogy between the elan vital and the electric current is forced, however. Not enough is known of electricity or of the physics of neurology to make the comparison completely acceptable." Lin Segal

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 S 26 '26 1150w

"An instructive and illuminating contribution to the list of life theories already offered."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 28 '26 690w

"His subject is significant and alluring, but it cannot yet bear the weight of so pretentious a work as has here been attempted. Certain early chapters are stimulating and attractive; later ones pass into mere extravaganzas. The publication of the book as it stands was ill advised." H. S. Jennings

— + Nation 123:374 O 13 '26 950w

Reviewed by Paul de Kruif

N Y Times p4 Ag 22 '26 1950w

Reviewed by Morris Fishbein

N Y World p4m Ag 15 '26 290w

CRIPPEN, ALICE HOTCHKISS, comp. French pastry book, giving complete instructions for making French pastry. 103p il $1.75 Brentano's

641.5 Pastry 26-12501

"Practical directions for the experienced cook who enjoys making fancy desserts. Foundation recipes are given and large, clear illustrations show the appearance of the completed and decorated pastries."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Booklist 23:116 D '26

"The ingredients are accurately listed and the procedure for mixing them carefully described, but the printed page can't impart the tone of a work nor the airy skill of a French chef; and so, unless you are very confident of your prowess, don't try to learn French pastry making from a book."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 N 14 '26 130w

"Into the appendix Mrs. Crippen has put most of the recipes which need to be mastered first—cream-puff paste, brioche, and various icings. In the main section of the book she has described carefully and clearly how the varieties of French pastry may be achieved."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 17 '26 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p118 N '26

N Y Times p9 Jl 4 '26 300w

CROCKETT, ALBERT STEVENS. When James Gordon Bennett was caliph of Bagdad. 414p il $2 (8s 6d) Funk

B or 92 Bennett, James Gordon. New York Herald 26-10547

Mr Crockett describes his many years' experience as a correspondent for the New York Herald while James Gordon Bennett was its owner. The title is explained by the fact that from his childhood the author had dreamed of the great newspaper man and his exploits till he had become the central figure of a modern kingdom as romantic as Bagdad of old. Thru his association with the Herald Mr Crockett came in contact with many important people and events and thru all the ups and downs of his newspaper experience James Gordon Bennett remained to him a figure of romance.

Booklist 23:34 O '26

Bookm 63:720 Ag '26 100w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 26 '26 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p131 D '26

"You will enjoy this book. I advise you to read it. It will be a frank and friendly experience. It is what we rarely encounter—hero-worship alloyed with no self-hypnotism. In addition, it is a portrait close-up of genuine distinction." R. E. MacAlearney

+ Int Bk R p358 My '26 1050w

"It's all so very interesting, especially to a newspaper man, but we cannot close without saying that having known Crockett for nearly twenty years, 'When James Gordon Bennett Was Caliph of Bagdad' is, like himself, a credit to the craft." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p3 My 15 '26 650w

N Y Times p5 Je 27 '26 600w

"Disappointing to any one who wants 'inside stuff,' for the personal touches that one expects from one so long in Mr. Bennett's service, as Mr. Crockett, are almost entirely lacking. Instead of the touches, one gets a great deal of the author's personal history and not a little of the 'office politics' that in Bennett's later years at least made employment in his service a hazardous calling. The book, however, serves a useful purpose in calling attention to the lack of a real biography of a great journalist."

— + N Y World p7m My 9 '26 420w

Spring'd Republican p18 Jl 2 '26 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p441 Jl 1 '26 850w

CROFT, DESMOND WARRICK. Frederick Linton. 318p $2.25 (7s 6d) Longmans

26-2817

A middle aged recluse suddenly maddened by fancied wrongs sets fire to the house and is suspected of having caused the housekeeper's death. He hides in a London slum, finding work as a docker and living with a docker's family. With new surroundings comes new interest and gradual rehabilitation, so that when the old life reaches out to claim him he remains to serve the humble friends who have loved and helped him.

Boston Transcript p4 My 26 '26 420w

"Except for an occasional agreeable page or two, the book is very weak and infinitely dull."

— Sat R of Lit 2:709 Ap 10 '26 200w

"A sentimental novel of a good deal of charm."

+ Spec 136:644 Ap 3 '26 300w

"Linton is too eccentric to be a very convincing character, but in the description of the Nobbs household Mr. Croft shows an undoubted talent."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p185 Mr 11 '26 200w

CROFT, TERRELL WILLIAMS. Signal wiring. 349p il $3 McGraw

654.7 Electric apparatus and appliances 26-5373

"Mainly a collection of circuit diagrams for many kinds of alarms and signals, with no attempt to treat the design or construction of signal apparatus."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:404 Jl '26

N Y New Tech Bks 11:4 Ja '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:248 My '26

CROFTS, FREEMAN WILLS. Inspector French's greatest case. 300p $2 A. & C. Boni [7s 6d Collins]

25-17660

The trusted clerk of a jewelry firm is found murdered before the open safe. Mr Duke, the head of the firm, is summoned and discovers at once that diamonds of great value are missing together with a thousand pounds in notes. An agent of the firm seems to be involved, and it appears that Mr Duke's daughter knows more than she will tell. However, the clues reveal nothing. Inspector French of Scotland Yard is completely baffled, when his wife makes a suggestion that sets him on a fresh track and leads to the solution of the crime.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Mr 7 '26 330w

"It is an ingenious and clever detective story and keeps one guessing for a good while. There are plenty of thrills and some tense situations."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 22 '26 160w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 N '26

Reviewed by L. M. Field

Int Bk R p361 My '26 60w

"It is a cleverly told tale, with many exciting moments and the usual cipher, the decoding of which leads to the downfall of the criminals, who are well hidden until the very end."

+ Lit R p8 F 27 '26 100w

CROFTS, F. W.—Continued

"Mr. Crofts is probably the soundest and most ingenious of those now writing detective stories. He has a rigorously logical mind, and that ability to lay long fuses which explode at the right time which is essential in detective stories. But good as he is, Sherlock Holmes still remains untouched. To be absorbingly interesting is not necessarily to be thrilling as well, and Mr. Crofts is not thrilling. His ability to ravel and unravel is way ahead of his ability to draw character or describe a scene."

+ — New Repub 46:30 Mr 10 '26 250w

"An ingenious story of mysterious crime and the unraveling of its complications is this which devotees of that form of fiction will doubtless find very much to their taste."

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 7 '26 400w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p7m Mr 14 '26 100w

"Mr. Wills Crofts has—if possible—surpassed even himself." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:413 Ap 18 '25 70w

Times [London] Lit Sup p204 Mr 19 '25 120w

CROMPTON, RICHMAL, pseud. See Lamburn, R. C.

CROSBY, CARESSE. Graven images. 102p $1.50 Houghton

811

26-10082

A little volume of sonnets and lyrics, and one long poem called "A legend painted gold," by the author of Crosses of gold.

"While there is no intense poetic vehemence or ardor, the verses seem to spring from a sincere and genuine impulse; and several of the pieces are so strikingly conceived and so skillfully composed as to be worthy of inclusion in the best anthologies."

+ — Bookm 64:238 O '26 120w

"For all its enthusiasm there is no impact to thought or phrase, the emotion is meager, the imagination bridled. Occasionally there is a delicate bit of fancy, a lovely lyric quality, a charming line. But the average is sensual without being beautiful, trivial and immature and conventional."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 O 24 '26 170w

"Her poetry sings. And that is very good indeed. No one ever claimed much meaning to 'Kubla Khan,' but that does not prevent its being a bit of great poetry nevertheless. Mrs. Crosby's sonnets are very musical—rhyme and rhythm are meticulously correct; she does not try to beat the game. Bits of beautiful sound linger in memory." G. K.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 26 '26 420w

Ind 116:722 Je 19 '26 120w

"The foreign flavor of these pages is no affectation but the natural breath of rearing and environment. The few child poems and more child illusions are all charming—and all French." K. L. Bates

+ Lit R p4 My 29 '26 680w

CROSBY, OSCAR TERRY. Adam and Eve. 112p $1.25 Stratford
222.11 Eden

A short study of the origin of the story of Adam and Eve and of the various interpretations of the tradition, with an account of the author's own theory of a probable interpretation.

"The book is popularly written, is sincere, sympathetic with the significance of the tradition, and decidedly wholesome in its effect upon rational understanding of much that is so difficult for Old Testament readers to reconcile." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 63:xviii Je '26 150w

"It is but fair to give him the credit of an earnest attempt, along common-sense lines, to explain the incomplete and vague story in the Book of Genesis. He has worked out his theory in a careful manner. His illustrations are reasonable and perfectly natural."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 19 '26 200w

CROSS, RUTH. Unknown goddess. 370p $2 Harper

26-9262

A vivid young girl in a North Texas town is betrayed by a visiting evangelist. When the facts leak out she leaves home to study nursing and years later, after a series of unhappy episodes, reappears as a faith healer traveling with the evangelist seducer. Convinced that her life is inextricably bound up with his, she assumes the care of his wife and family and helps the other women he has betrayed. Thruout the story her mother is her chief antagonist. This proud, ambitious, domineering woman is well drawn, as is the striking character of the daughter who defies her thru the mysterious process of thought which is the source of her healing power.

Reviewed by M. D. Blankenhorn

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Je 6 '26 350w

— Boston Transcript p4 My 26 '26 280w

"A convincing, well-written, even an impressive, story, so far as it goes—but how much farther, into what wild fictional domains, the author relentlessly leads us!" Muna Lee

+ Lit R p7 My 29 '26 650w

"Unfortunately, she seems to tire of the rigors of reality and turns to the easier way. But in The Unknown Goddess the real is pushed farther and the author's grasp on it is firmer. It has episodes and figures which the frame of fiction cannot falsify."

+ New Repub 46:414 My 19 '26 180w

"Although blended of a hundred often-used and conventional elements, the novel is not without power to interest and not without a certain mild skill in character portraiture, a skill which is particularly in evidence in the delineation of the central character."

+ N Y Times p6 Jl 4 '26 400w

"Miss Cross, while she gives a spurious realistic touch to 'The Unknown Goddess' by means of a series of lurid seductions, achieves an unmistakably melodramatic design."

+ N Y World p7m My 2 '26 200w

Sat R of Lit 2:875 Je 19 '26 180w

CROY, HOMER. They had to see Paris. 303p $2 (7s 6d) Harper

26-7271

"Pike Peters, prosperous garage owner, the socially ambitious Mrs Peters, with the young folks, Ross and Opal, are content in Clearwater, Oklahoma, until a flowing well unexpectedly oils the way to Paris for Mrs Peters and the family. Once there they rent a chateau and a poor but well-born social mentor and bring a slightly shop-worn marquis to the point of proposing for Opal. At this point Pike breaks forth, ruins an elegant soirée by proclaiming (while drunk) his origin to the noble guests and later closes the marquis episode by refusing a dowry for Opal. This done, nothing is left Mrs Peters but to return with her party to Oklahoma—her disappointment being somewhat relieved by Opal's happiness in her radio-salesman fiancé and the fact that after many bitter frays, Pike has acquired the dress-suit habit."—Cleveland staff notes

Booklist 23:79 N '26

"All through the book Pike Peters says the sort of things a man from his town would say, and they are clever sayings and have good laughs in them for the reader, but you know all the while that the reason he says them is that he feels like a fish out of water." E. P. Butler

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ap 11 '26 980w

Cleveland Open Shelf p80 Je '26

Reviewed by R. L. Kurzman
Int Bk R p454 Je '26 600w

"It seems so strange to me that Homer Croy should have written such a really great book—'West of the Water Tower'—and not at first been willing to sign his name to it when here is a book that could be anonymous and perhaps it wouldn't matter." T. L. Masson
Lit R p9 Ap 10 '26 720w

New Repub 47:121 Je 16 '26 150w

"The reactions of the Peterses to the ways and manners of the French are interesting. This episode has been worked numerous times, yet there is a freshness in this new recording."
N Y Times p9 Ap 11 '26 800w

"There are several clusters of laughs in the book for most readers, especially those who know their Middle West." P. F. Sifton
+ N Y World p7m Ap 18 '26 680w

"The book is not the most felicitous of efforts. It lacks snap and originality; there are pages as long and dull as the lonely days in a Paris hotel were for the husband and father of this family from Oklahoma. But 'he' is the saving grace."

— + Outlook 143:32 My 5 '26 170w

Sat R of Lit 2:892 Je 26 '26 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p481 Jl 15 '26 160w

Wis Lib Bul 22:141 Ap '26

CRUMLEY, JOHN JACKSON. Constructive forestry for the private owner. 322p il $3.50 Macmillan

634.9 Forests and forestry. Woodlots 26-2421

The author, who is associate in forestry, Ohio experiment station, writes this book "to discuss the fundamental principles of those phases of forestry that pertain especially to the agricultural regions of our country and the adjacent rougher areas owned principally by private individuals." Beginning with the seedling growth of trees he examines each part of the tree in detail. From the individual tree he progresses to the forest and discusses forest improvement, artificial forests, forest protection and utilization, forest mensuration, and the communal and aesthetic values of the forest. There is a chapter on the farm nursery and one on financial problems.

Booklist 22:317 My '26

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 10 '26 820w

"A thoroughly informed and a very practical and useful book for the farmer and private landowner."

+ N Y Times p26 F 21 '26 450w

Pratt p19 summer '26

Spring'd Republican p14 My 26 '26 220w

CRUSE, MRS AMY. Famous English books, and their stories. 284p il $2 Crowell [3s 6d Har-rap]

820 English literature

These chapters selected from the author's "English literature through the ages" tell the story of that literature thru the stories of twenty-five individual books.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 S 26 '26 160w

"The narrative is, in the main, interestingly written, with feeling for incidents and influences of emotional value, although it shows now and then an old-fashioned dependence upon sentiment. There is occasional carelessness in the use of adjectives. Departments of English literature in high schools and colleges will find it useful for supplementary reading, while for the general reader it will be a useful reference book."

+ — N Y Times p14 Ag 29 '26 320w

CULLEN, COUNTTEE. Color. 108p $2 (6s) Harper

811

25-21678

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:200 F '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p5 Ja '26

Dial 80:161 F '26 80w

"Here is the bud of a poet that promises to bloom into one of the rarest flowers in the garden of American poetry." Jim Tully

+ Int Bk R p252 Mr '26 550w

Reviewed by C. Norman

Lit R p4 Ja 30 '26 150w

"Ordained is a pretty bloaty word, but if there ever was a poet ordained by the stars to sing of the joys and sorrows attendant upon the experience of thwarted black folk placed in wretched juxtaposition to our Western civilization, that poet is Countee Cullen." Eric Wal-rond

+ New Repub 46:179 Mr 31 '26 400w

Pratt p26 spring '26

"Countee Cullen is more than a racially self-conscious rhymster. His race and its sufferings give him depth and an understanding of pain and sorrow. But he rises above all surface barriers and sings of experiences of universal appeal, limited only by the winds and skies." Walter White

+ Sat R of Lit 2:556 F 13 '26 450w

"Countee Cullen is close to various simplicities, and he is not afraid of them because they happen to be as old as the world."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 17 '26 750w

"What makes it of primary importance in estimating his quality as a poet is that he compels the savage and bitter details of colour conflict to serve an imaginative purpose and symbolize a spiritual conflict which is common to all mankind."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p39 Ja 21 '26 600w

"The volume has much promise, some achievement, and a long advertisement of its author's excessive youth and metrical conservatism. That Cullen is a poet is clear." Clement Wood

+ Yale R n s 15:824 Jl '26 230w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL. Child of the North (Eng title Candy man). 348p $2 Doran [7s 6d C. Palmer]

26-12287

Charlie Burton struck gold in the mountains of the North. Overcome with joy and excitement he rushed back to the settlement and there talked too freely of his find. He disappeared leaving a little child. Years later the daughter, who had been brought up as a boy, set out with vengeance in her heart to find her father's murderer. She suspected "The candy man," the friend and pal of her "boyhood" days, but who had grown wealthy overnight. The candy man knew the whole story of Charlie Burton's torture at the hands of Dogrib Indians and his subsequent plight. Together he and Jocelyn worked out a satisfactory vengeance for the crime.

"It is a wild and reasonably thrilling yarn."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 25 '26 120w

"Mr. Cullum has never written a more forceful or thrilling story than this."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 7 '26 280w

"It is a delightful story, full of thrilling adventures and hardships. It seems a pity, however, that Mr. Cullum permitted Burton to live, mutilated and blind, with his mind a blank. Far better would it have been to have the murder complete." C. P. Sawyer

+ — Lit R p5 Jl 10 '26 200w

N Y Times p22 Je 27 '26 750w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL—Continued

"It is a well-written, ingenious story."

Sat R of Lit 3:12 J1 31 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p266 Ap 8 '26
100w

CUMMINGS, EDWARD ESTLIN. Js 5. 115p

$2.50 Boni & Liveright

811

26-12794

"The earlier records of Mr. Cummings's peculiar vision of life were compounded of a delicately precise, slightly mocking impressionism. . . The current offering reveals a trend in the direction of overt satire. Mr. Cummings has all the while continued and elaborated his manipulations of the contents of the printer's font. In common with Miss Marianne Moore, whose poems are often visual patterns, and Mr. Lascelles Abercrombie, Mr. Cummings embraces the appeal to the eye in itself, as well as the use of the eye as a means of getting at the ear. . . With a few exceptions, the first section of 'Is 5' is devoted to various aspects of the vernacular: the language, the personalities, the viewpoint."—N Y Times

Reviewed by M. S. Mansfield

Bookm 64:231 O '26 400w

"By means of some nimble acrobatic device he has succeeded in becoming the very pure and delighted eye, ear and imagination. Faced by any vulgarity of the soul he takes a flying tumble and comes up clowning. . . With Mr. Cummings's faultless work certain poems here class themselves." Genevieve Taggard

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 J1 25
'26 900w

"Underneath all the nonsense, the coarse wit, the vagrant rowdism which clutter the pages of this book, the soul of the poet does at moments appear to excellent advantage. There is strength in the book, and there might be sentiment. There is depth and there might be elevation. Mr. Cummings is quite right. No preface can do this volume justice. For the simple reason that Mr. Cummings is not yet able to do himself justice."

+ Boston Transcript p3 J1 10 '26 320w

"He has certain poetic attributes, a turn for vivid phrase, and a new, disturbing rhythm; but he prefers to caper in a cap and bells, 1926 model, while profound students of modern poetry ponder owlishly over his art. As art it is a riot; but as riots go, it is fairly artistic. Mr. Cummings is perhaps the most overrated poet in the world today."

+ Ind 117:192 Ag 14 '26 170w

"Like Miss Lowell, Mr. Cummings performs certain extraneous feats of sheer cerebral horror in order to murder, by scaring to death, the inherited literary echo. Miss Lowell, eluding the moral interior of her good forbears, becomes the strenuous practitioner of the philosophy of veneer; she uses the vigor of a scrub-woman to polish Sèvres. Mr. Cummings comes from the same New England, and has, I think, the same impediments, without having at all the same temperament. He possesses a combination of fineness and vitality which makes his work genuine, however minor." Genevieve Taggard

New Repub 48:76 S 8 '26 850w

"A sober examination must needs involve a concession to Mr. Cummings's following that he does communicate an energy of naive and wistful mischief; to his adversaries that he does at times exhibit, to borrow John Morley's phrase, an 'excessive ambition which overleaps itself.'" J. W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p8 J1 13 '26 1300w

"It is not even strange that a clever young man should exploit his cleverness by means of mechanical trickery. But it is strange, not to say disconcerting, that a clever young man should grow into his tricks rather than out of them. Yet that is just what Mr. Cummings has done. . . One could forgive the author of these poems his exasperating humor of pun-tuation did he offer as reward any richness of thought or feeling. But in 'Is 5' the form too often is an empty shell." Glenn Hughes

— Sat R of Lit 3:53 Ag 21 '26 950w

CUMMINGS, W. IRVINE. Ochiltree walls. 310p

$2 McBride

26-12142

The walls of Ochiltree which stood on the coast of Maine, had housed the Roberts family for generations. John Roberts, present head of the house, had four sons, stalwart, intelligent men, all of them. John, youngest of the four, is the central figure of the story. We follow his restless wanderings in search of an elusive something; what, he himself does not know. The quest leads into one affair after another, and on again, till it takes him back home to his first love—and away.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 My 2
'26 270w

Boston Transcript p5 My 22 '26 200w

"Mr. Cummings has written a book that is very readable and has some good descriptive passages. But fortunately it is not true to life in general, though no doubt a John Roberts may be found." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p7 My 29 '26 200w

"Many of Mr. Cummings's more vigorous passages contain the stuff from which real drama is made. Much of the appeal of his book lies in its virility. After the goings on of some of the neurotic types of present-day fiction, the he-manly vices of the Roberts family shine out almost as virtues. 'Ochiltree Walls,' of course, goes deliberately counter to the accepted philosophy and prejudices of the fiction reader brought up on Pollyanna. But it contains much to delight the discerning."

+ N Y Times p16 Mr 14 '26 820w

"Somehow, though all this is undeniably well told, the reader is scarcely ever impelled to feel more than casually attentive to the proceedings."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:668 Mr 27 '26 280w

CUMMINGS, WILLIAM G. Passion and glory.

278p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Williams & N.]

25-21771

"The hero is Lens Deitrichson, a Norwegian fisherman of the seacoast village of Manley, Mass. The story concerns Lens's love for Myra Whitney, Myra's flight from an intolerable marriage just before the drowning of her husband, and her marriage to Lens after he has undergone religious conversion and made a 'bargain with God' for her return. The author subtly pictures the gradual development of the Norwegian's personality under the influences of sacred and profane love, and at the end shows Lens at a new start after his first youth has passed."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Mr 21
'26 130w

"Mr. Cummings is writing of very simple people in the grip of very powerful emotions. Nevertheless, as a whole, the story is not convincing."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 13 '26 280w

"The absence of tinsel, the hero's rugged honesty, make Mr. Cummings's story truly stirring. It is a simple tale, but so true is its reflection of human fears, hopes, agonies, that it should outlast many of its contemporaries. For there is about it none of that frothiness which is so easily blown aside by changing tastes." S. S.

+ Int Bk R p271 Mr '26 350w

"'Passion and Glory' is uneven. It has flashes of pure insight and patches of painfully manhandled organization, especially in the transitions and recapitulations. It is a thoughtful and sincere, even though incompletely successful novel."

+ N Y Times p9 N 8 '25 650w

"The eloquent beauty of Mr. Cummings' prose invests the somewhat thin material of his second novel with a depth and power which a less able writing gift could never have awakened into life. Structurally the tale is feeble, and on occasion the essence of his character value is psychologically unsound, but it is in the author's searching study of Lens, the melancholy, ill-balanced, thwarted protagonist that no faintest flaw appears."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:435 D 19 '25 250w

"Mr Cummings has adhered to some extent to imitation in the selection of theme, purpose, and situation. But in development and presentation he has approached nearer to the natural and spontaneous—one evidence of this being his escape from offense in dealing with situations where a more positive realism would be employed by some novelists, or would have been not long ago. The readability of the novel will depend on the reader himself. Those who take interest in new versions of old themes of human nature and existence will find such a version in 'Fassion and Glory.'" R. W. N.

+ — Springfd Republican p7f Ap 13 '26 650w

"It is a strange but arresting story, full of a sombre and intense emotion. The question is whether his imagination does not outstrip psychological probability."

Times [London] Lit Sup p234 Mr 25 '26 480w

CUNLIFFE, JOHN WILLIAM, and SHOWERMAN, GRANT, eds. Century readings in ancient, classical and modern European literature. 614;543p $5 Century

808.8 Literature—Collections. Classical literature. Literature, Medieval. English literature—Translations 25-18501

Other volumes in the Century readings series having dealt with English literature, this volume confines itself to readings from continental literature, ancient and modern. The selections, which are of considerable length, are introduced by sketches of the authors. Volume one covers Greek and Latin literature; volume two, medieval and modern.

Booklist 22:286 Ap '26

"The work is richly supplied with introductions, notes, and other paraphernalia for teaching. Altogether it would seem ungrateful not to regard these 1,156 pages of world masterpieces, given wholly or in part, as a treasure for anybody's shelves."

+ Bookm 62:621 Ja '26 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p70 Je '26

Pratt p28 spring '26

Sat R of Lit 2:319 N 21 '25 180w

CUNNINGHAM, WILLIAM HAYES. Character, conduct and study: how to make the most of school life. 118p 90c (3s 6d) Putnam

371.3 Study, Method of. Students 26-3398

This little book of good advice is addressed to high school boys and girls and tells them how to make the most of their school life.

"The book was prepared for and at the request of the Boston Head Masters' Association. Its chapters on 'How to Study' comprise the larger portion of the book. They cover the ground excellently in substance, but are too mechanical in treatment to lead to studious habits. The allurement is lacking." W. J. C.

— + Bookm 63:xviii Je '26 120w

Boston Transcript p3 My 15 '26 200w

"Good straight talk to pupils, just the kind of things young people are sincerely interested in."

+ Educ R 71:219 Ap '26 200w

"The book is written in a simple, interesting style. No high-school pupil can read the book thoughtfully without securing clearer ideas of character and conduct and a clearer conception of the fundamental principles of study. The book will serve its most useful purpose in the hands of the pupil, but, in the absence of such use, it will be of considerable value to the teacher as an outline for guidance in the systematic oral presentation of the principles involved." R. S. Newcomb

+ School R 34:556 S '26 550w

CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, ROBERT BONTINE. Doughty Deeds; an account of the life of Robert Graham of Gartmore, poet and politician, 1735-1797, drawn from his letter-books and correspondence. 205p $3.75 Dial press [10s 6d Heinemann]

B or 92 Graham, Robert [25-20295]

"Cunninghame Graham came legitimately by his love of distant lands, his taste for adventure, his liking for the Southern sun and for mixed races. 'Doughty Deeds' was the nickname of his ancestor of the second half of the eighteenth century and a man of parts. Born of the honored Graham line in Perthshire, and ultimately inheriting the estate of Bontine, of Ardoch, he played a manly role on several stages, but most interestingly in the Caribbean. He was a merchant, planter and official in Jamaica for twenty years preceding the American Revolution: he became an active country gentleman, holder of a large estate overlooking the Clyde; he was a Lord Rector of Glasgow University, a correspondent of Smollett and other men of note; he sat in Parliament as a sturdy Whig, known and trusted by Fox and Sheridan."—N Y World

Reviewed by C: J. Finger
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 F 14 '26 700w

"In pungent, racy style the author has related with a free unsparing hand the lights and shadows, the fame and failings of his ancestor, whom he thoroughly understands and appreciates."

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 24 '26 320w

"Mr. Graham has written the story of his kinsman with that vigorous habit of comparison which turns biography into a critique of present-day manners and customs. . . A thoroughly agreeable book."

+ Ind 116:198 F 13 '26 130w

Reviewed by T. S. Knowlson
Lit R p5 Je 12 '26 380w

"Doughty Deeds is an excellent example of what a first-rate author can do with a slight subject. One of the chief reasons why we can enjoy this book so fully is the fact that the author apparently was at no time bored by his subject. The past is so overcrowded with dutiful and exact biographies that a book like this stands out as an excellent sample of the new spirit that is entering into this type of literature."

+ Living Age 329:294 My 1 '26 160w

Nation and Ath 37:300 Je 6 '26 360w

"Out of a slight and mostly unpromising collection of material Mr. Cunninghame Graham has excavated a long-forgotten character and secured for him, by fine prose and fine sensibility, a particularly glorious resurrection."

+ New Statesman 25:235 Je 6 '25 850w

"Mr. Cunninghame Graham's biography is a labor of family pride, but also of something more. He has a genuine fellow-feeling for the craggy, aristocratic, strenuous and roving-minded Scotsman of whom he writes." Allan Nevins

N Y World p6m Ja 24 '26 600w

"The biography is sadly thin, actually skeletal in parts. But Mr. Cunninghame Graham is much too wise, even when he is filling up the empty spaces, to let this old temptation of the biographer carry him very far out of his course. Thus, some of these conjectural passages are the most interesting and vivid in the book, if only because they contain more of Mr. Cunninghame Graham than of Robert Graham. Nevertheless, in spite of the author's wit and wisdom, his quiet ironies and mellow, effortless style, the book falls very flat at times."

CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, R. B.—Continued

— + Sat R 139:557 My 23 '25 800w

Reviewed by Theodore Purdy, jr.

Sat R of Lit 2:646 Mr 20 '26 230w

"Mr. Cunninghame Graham has woven out of old letter books a most delightful volume."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p362 My 28 '25 1000w

CURTIS, ARTHUR B., and COOPER, JOHN HURLIE. Mathematics of accounting. 397p $5 Prentice-Hall

510 Accounting. Arithmetic, Commercial 25-13985

"Presents methods for the solution of problems arising in business. Contains rather elementary instruction for the student, and extends to the more involved mathematics of investment."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:453 O '26

CURWOOD, JAMES OLIVER. Black Hunter; a novel of old Quebec. 393p il $2 Cosmopolitan bk. [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

26-13911

This, the author's first historical novel, was first published serially in the Cosmopolitan magazine. The story deals with the French attempt to establish a New France in Canada, against the bitter opposition of the British. The principal characters are lovely Anne St Denis, her youthful lover David Rock, the latter of English descent like Anne a strong supporter of the New France, and the Black Hunter, who moves thru the story a dark silent figure of vengeance. David's loyalty to this man separates the lovers at first but it is the Black Hunter who is the means of bringing them finally together.

Booklist 23:132 D '26

"It has nothing of mawkish sentimentality about it. It is what it purports to be—a tale of exciting adventure with a historical setting and the sort of love story which attracts because it is so different from anything one is likely to meet with in life." D. L. Mann

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 1 '26 1000w

"The story is mainly one of action, and will appeal especially to those who like an occasional hint of gun-play and scalping mixed with their romance." S. A. Coblenz

+ Int Bk R p648 S '26 500w

"In a foreword Mr. Curwood mentions the trouble he has taken in collecting the historical evidence of his tale; how he has traced each incident from manuscript and ground. 'The Black Hunter' bears every evidence of his faithful duty and misses only that inward fire of imagination which the great historical novels possess." L. G. Short

+ Lit R p3 Jl 24 '26 500w

"Mr. Curwood's first historical novel justifies his departure from his former fictional territory. Despite its too frequent adherence to motion-picture standards, 'The Black Hunter' is a novel worth the writing and the reading."

+ — N Y Times p9 Jl 25 '26 1100w

N Y World p4m Jl 25 '26 280w

Outlook 143:580 Ag 25 '26 140w

"A spirited story, which will profit lovers of Curwood a great deal more than his stories of Canadian wilds; for it does offer an accurate and informing picture of French-America at the beginning of the Seven Years' War." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 2:950 Jl 24 '26 600w

CURZON of KEDLESTON, GEORGE NATHANIEL CURZON, 1st marqu. Bodiam castle, Sussex; an historical and descriptive survey. 164p il $10 Houghton [30s J. Cape]

728.8 Bodiam castle, Sussex 26-14225

"A detailed historical and descriptive account by Lord Curzon of one of the castles which he took such pride in rescuing from decay and bequeathing to England as a national possession. Built in the last quarter of the fourteenth century, Bodiam is a well preserved and interesting example of the austere military architecture of the period. Thirty-two illustrations accompany the text."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 Ap 4 '26 80w

"The book, admirably produced and illustrated, is written with a grace and humour which may cause some readers to regret that the author did not find in archæology, rather than in politics, the main outlet for his love of feudalism."

+ Nation and Ath 38:754 F 27 '26 500w

"With all its detail, the book is eminently readable. It will take its place as an essential contribution to the history of medieval architecture and social customs."

+ New Statesman 26:750 Mr 27 '26 1200w

"It is an admirable and thorough piece of work." J. St L. Strachey

+ N Y Times p7 Mr 28 '26 2150w

"The book is a tribute to his great capacity and untiring scholarship. An accomplished antiquary and lover of England as well as a travelled man, he could dwell both with grace and learning on the charm of the place."

+ Sat R 141:410 Mr 27 '26 560w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

Spec 136:638 Ap 3 '26 1200w (Abridged from N Y Times)

"Bodiam Castle is so beautiful and so interesting that it deserved an interesting and beautiful book made about it. Here is such a book, beautifully printed and illustrated."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p89 F 11 '26 1000w

CUSHMAN, ALLERTON SEWARD. Chemistry and civilization. 2d rev ed 171p il $2.50 Dutton

540.9 Chemistry—History 25-20387

A new edition, with the addition of a chapter on Modern concepts of matter and energy, of a book first published in 1920. The author is director of the Institute of industrial research, Washington.

"Dr. Cushman's book has long been pleasant reading because of its historical and human touch. It was written before the post-war age of chemical propaganda and lacks the stridency of later books, but is the more readable. The addition in this revision of a long chapter on the modern concepts of matter and energy is welcome as an orientation for the non-technical reader." G. L. Wendt

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 D 6 '25 100w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 20 '26 400w

"Technologists and laymen alike will read Dr. Cushman's book with keen enjoyment, as for the most part it is written in excellent style, and the author has succeeded in proving the vital importance of chemical science to modern civilization. The clear exposition of chemical theory, in everyday English—always a difficult task, is exceptionally well done." Chaplin Tyler

+ — Chem & Met Eng 32:878 N '25 250w

"The volume as a whole makes a very readable and interesting story. While the scope of the discussion does not permit the presentation of any theories or explanations other than those generally accepted, the rather dogmatic presentation is a bit unfortunate. The intelligent layman should not be given the impression that any of the theories of chemistry, or of science in general, are so completely developed and so universally accepted as to be no longer subject to revision." Hardee Chambliss

+ — Ind & Eng Chem 18:216 F '26 280w

CUTHRELL, MRS FAITH (BALDWIN). Three women. 310p $2 Dodd

26-17629

The novel is a study of three women of three generations, but preëminently of the grandmother and her influence on the lives of her daughter-in-law Elizabeth and her grandchild Joyce. When the story opens in 1885 Louisa Sheldon is a woman in the early thirties, arrogant, austere religious, passionless, except as regards her young son Lennox. Her husband dies when Lennox is nine and Louisa centers her dominating personality on the control of her son. He too dies shortly after his marriage, arranged by his mother, and Elizabeth, in the years that follow, is cowed into subjection to her will and kept from life and love. But in Joyce, of the third generation, Louisa meets her match, a mettle strong as her own. On the day that Joyce defies her grandmother's will, something of her courage passes on to her mother and together they leave Louisa's house.

"There is much wisdom and artistry in the delineation of the characters. I admired too, the simple reserve of the writing, so delicately tinted with color and feeling." M. D. Denison
+ Lit R p5 N 6 '26 520w

"This is not fiction of the first water, where analysis of character and enactment of incident have the real and intimate sense of actual life. It is rather what we call a 'good novel'—clear, compact, human. . . . Though not distinguished, her style is clear, terse, rapid; her sense of form expert. This book is in the Edith Wharton tradition, one feels; but it looks on a certain restricted phase of life with fresher eyes than Mrs. Wharton's, if eyes by no means so piercing. It is a good study of one woman dominating two others until the inevitable moment of revolt. As reading, it is dramatic and absorbing; as literature, sound and on occasion powerful."

+ — N Y Times p10 O 10 '26 720w

"Miss Baldwin displays a gift for the dramatic situation; her novel, while lacking in sustained characterization, has flashes of pure narrative power."

+ N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 70w

"The opportunities of this narrative are considerable, and Miss Baldwin has taken most of them more than competently."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:321 N 20 '26 260w

CUTTEN, GEORGE BARTON. Mind, its origin and goal. (James Wesley Cooper memorial publication fund) 213p $2.50 Yale univ. press [11s '6d Milford]

150 Intellect. Psychology. Evolution 25-24482

In his discussion of the evolution of intelligence the author, president of Colgate university, shows how closely connected are the problems of bodily and of mental evolution and that the differences between animal and human intelligence are quantitative rather than qualitative. Among the greatest dangers which threaten the development of intelligence in the human race he reckons war and the survival of the unfit.

Booklist 22:277 Ap '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p90 J1 '26

"The book is clearly written, without unusual prejudice and with a good bit of common sense. Unfortunately, however, the author's equipment is that of the layman. He seems to be ignorant of most of the work that has been done in his field." C. M. Perry

+ — J Philos 23:418 J1 22 '26 200w

"The book is frankly intended to be of a popular nature, but that fact would scarcely seem to excuse the exceedingly cursory and superficial manner of the discussion. Many of Dr. Cutten's ideas are undeniably sound and need to be iterated and reiterated, but they have all been stated before, and stated more fully and stated more convincingly." S. A. Coblenz

— Lit R p6 S 4 '26 160w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus
N Y Times p10 D 20 '25 1000w
St Louis 24:49 Mr '26

"A clear exposition of the most important conclusions of modern evolutionary science is here presented. That so uncompromising a book should come from a college president is, in these days, most encouraging."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:396 D 5 '25 230w

Survey 55:568 F 15 '26 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p47 Ja 21 '26 50w

CUTTEN, GEORGE BARTON. Threat of leisure. 166p $2 Yale univ. press [9s Cambridge univ. press]

179 Leisure

26-12223

Dr Cutten, president of Colgate university, inquires into the uses and abuses of the increasing hours of leisure brought about by the introduction of labor-saving machinery. He shows the steps by which man has obtained this leisure, how he is investing it, and how it may become a menace to him.

Booklist 23:108 D '26

"Impressed with the subtlety and profundity of the problems suggested as he looks away from Dr. Cutten's text, the reader is likely to be a bit annoyed as he comes back to read that the college graduate should be moderate in all things or that the history of Greece and Rome shows us that underwork may be as fatal as overwork." G: Soule

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ag 15 '26 850w

"The idea is well worthy of consideration. The form in which it is presented leaves something to be desired; the crux of his essay lies in the last few pages, and few lacking the leisure of a modern bricklayer would have the patience to plow through the rambling first chapters."

— + Boston Transcript p3 Je 26 '26 350w

Reviewed by Harendranath Maitra

Lit R p1 Ag 14 '26 1550w

Reviewed by W. J. Ghent

Outlook 143:578 Ag 25 '26 180w

St Louis 24:304 N '26

Reviewed by Philip Coan

Sat R of Lit 3:130 S 25 '26 600w

Times [London] Lit Sup p619 S 16 '26 480w

D

DAGGETT, MRS MABEL (POTTER). Marie of Roumania; the intimate story of the radiant queen. 297p il $2.50 Doran

B or 92 Marie, queen consort of Ferdinand, King of Rumania

26-22232

An American woman who has visited and travelled with Marie of Roumania and been dazzled by her personality writes this somewhat gushing account of the queen's life and adventures and her work for her country.

"Mrs. Daggett has spent much time with the queen and has a large quantity of interesting material. She writes, however, a too-awkward style. . . . There is a glowing, thrilling tale to be told in the victories of Marie, gained in an age of great events over master strategists in diplomacy. Mrs. Potter has told the tale as for a child's primer"

— + Boston Transcript p6 D 29 '26 200w

"This is an engaging book, as entertaining as a Graustark novel and as eye-pleasing and emotion-ticking as a Zenda melodrama. Even a Queen's love of incense ought to be satisfied by its effusion."

+ N Y Times p3 D 26 '26 280w

DAHL, KAI R. "Teddy" expedition among the ice floes of Greenland; tr. by Grace Isabel Colbron. 288p il $3 (10s 6d) Appleton 919.8 Greenland—Description and travel. Teddy (schooner). Arctic regions 25-20717

The story of the third expedition sent out by the Danish East Greenland company to visit the fur trapping stations previously established on the east coast of Greenland, and to open two new ones, is told by a newspaper correspondent who went with the party on this final voyage of the ill-fated two masted schooner, the "Teddy." The photographs supplement this lively record of an Arctic adventure ending in disaster.

"The humor with which Dahl embellishes the reactions of the crew of the Teddy to their experiences is rather too conscious for the American ear, yet it is sympathetic. The book's best merit is its accuracy. We believe in the essential dignity of the long Greenland hunter's egotistic relationship to the land because Dahl shows us his occasional querulousness. We believe in the courage of the ship's crew because their weaker moments are relentlessly drawn."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 F 14 '26 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p10 Ja '26

"A unique and interesting tale of Arctic adventures." J. M. Thorington
+ Lit R p7 Ja 30 '26 200w

"Among the party was a journalist with considerable skill in description, and a very good story he has made of hardships, dangers and escape."

+ New Statesman 26:supxxiv D 12 '25 80w

R of Rs 72:666 D '25 70w

Reviewed by Dale Warren

Sat R of Lit 2:412 D 12 '25 80w

Spec 136:sup1002 Je 12 '26 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p867 D 10 '25 120w

"An exciting story. Recommend it to boys and men."

Wis Lib Bul 22:32 Ja '26

DAINGERFIELD, FOXHALL. Ghost house. 2 253p $2 Appleton 26-15136

A suggestion of evil to come is created on the first page as Miss Felicia reviews her first impressions of her sister's husband, and imparts to the reader her dislike and suspicion of the man. These suspicions are justified, and the sense of impending evil grows with each chapter. An anonymous note summons Miss Felicia to her sister's home in the south. Ghost house or Black Swamp manor from the dismal swamp near it, is the setting for the events of the story in which the murder is incidental and Miss Felicia is the plucky heroine.

"Told by Aunt Felicia, the story has that intimate, confiding touch which the 'true confession' type of tale strives for and sometimes achieves. In fact, the middle-aged woman makes a subtle story teller; she seems to try to avoid stressing the fear-compelling parts of the situation, and thus emphasizes them." G: H. Copeland

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 26 '26 380w

"Mr. Daingerfield's story will provide a measure of entertainment, but without over-exerting the imagination or inspiring more than a casual thrill or two."

— Boston Transcript p5 D 8 '26 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 N '26

Times [London] Lit Sup p937 D 16 '26 80w

Wis Lib Bul 22:275 O '26

DALY, REGINALD ALDWORTH. Our mobile earth. 342p il $5 Scribner

551 Earthquakes. Earth movements. Physical geography 26-19363

This volume by the professor of geology in Harvard university deals with earth movements as manifested in earthquakes, volcanic action, changes of sea level and warpings of the earth's crust, the formation of mountain ranges and the evolution of the face of the earth. Suggested works of reference for further reading are included and there is a full index.

Boston Transcript p2 O 9 '26 620w

"Richly illustrated and clearly written, this is an authoritative introduction to the earth's crust and its disturbers."

+ Nation 123:458 N 3 '26 20w

"A luminous and dramatic, and therefore very readable, account of the evolution and present status of our earth as a ball of matter that is scientifically accurate and thoroughly up to date. It is just the book for the average reader who wants modern, dependable information about accepted and also still discussed theories on how the earth came into being and what is now happening to it. But the professional geologist and other scientists will find in it many pages that will be full of meat for them."

+ N Y Times p24 D 19 '26 250w

Outlook 144:477 D 8 '26 140w

Springf'd Republican p10 D 16 '26 250w

"He has given a clear and readable exposition of the whole problem, with a minimum of technicalities, and his book is profusely illustrated with excellent diagrams, maps and pictures. It should be welcome to many classes of readers: geographers, biologists, and paleontologists, as well as astronomers and physicists, will find much useful information summarized in it: while perhaps the general reader will like it better still."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p738 O 28 '26 650w

DANE, CLEMENCE, pseud. (WINIFRED ASHTON) Granite; a tragedy. 75p $1.75 Macmillan [7s 6d Heinemann]

822

[26-9840]

The scene of the tragedy is the desolate rockbound island of Lundy, off the Devon coast, a hundred years ago—a treacherous coast dreaded by mariners. The characters of the drama, rooted in their granite environment, are unable to escape its merciless hold. The tragedy unfolded, a terrible one concerned with such elemental emotions as jealousy and fear, might, but for its literary quality, sink into melodrama.

"Clemence Dane's tragedy, 'Granite,' does not seem quite to have satisfied London audiences, in spite of striking merits." W. P. Eaton

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 N 28 '26 220w

"Taken collectively, her dramatic output has been very far above the common level. And so much at least may be said very confidently of her latest play, 'Granite,' which exhibits an advance in literary, imaginative and dramatic power, although it may be doubted whether it is likely to win popularity on the stage or to add greatly to her reputation. And yet this is a work about whose descriptive and imaginative power there can be no manner of question. In some respects it may be called first rate without exaggeration. Although dealing with so worn a scheme as the domestic triangle, it is original in plan, expertly put together, intense in feeling and action, and exceedingly well written." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p2 S 25 '26 760w

"Miss Dane in 'A Bill of Divorcement' showed herself a dramatist of no mean ability. In 'Granite' she rises to truly great heights. The play is a tragedy which sets one aquiver with its very first lines, a tragedy so suggestive of the power of Ibsen the reader gasps with admiration." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p7 D 26 '26 640w

DANE, CLEMENCE, pseud. (WINIFRED ASHTON). Naboth's vineyard; a stage piece. 90p $1.50 Macmillan [6s Heinemann]
822 [25-24699]

The central figure in this dramatization of the Old Testament story is Jezebel, the Syrian queen. It is known that she rules King Ahab and is in turn ruled by Jehu, head of the army and once her lover. Each is ambitious for the throne. Jezebel's treachery to Naboth fans into flame the dormant hatred of the people against the foreign queen. With the king slain they proclaim Jehu king, and he, denouncing Jezebel, throws her to the mob.

Booklist 22:321 My '26

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Mr 14 '26 130w

Dial 81:82 J1 '26 100w

"In describing this work as a stage piece Clemence Dane displays both modesty and sagacity, for, although it is not lacking in the vivid and contrasting characterizations and tensely emotional crises which make effective drama, it is manifestly designed with the view of giving full scope to all the resources of theatrical spectacle." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p12 Mr 13 '26 600w

"The characters are at once too obviously and too sketchily drawn: apart from their circumstances there is nothing interesting in them. Because they never see themselves as figures, they never transcend the figures that we see. Perhaps this is because Miss Dane a little lacks sense of humour, and that, like nature, she is certainly not economical." Bonamy Dobree

— Nation and Ath 38:sup246 N 14 '25 180w

St Louis 24:248 S '26

Sat R 140:372 O 3 '25 40w

"Miss Dane has translated the Old Testament story into a prose of her own, which is naturally less beautiful than the original, but distinctly more agreeable than the normal speech of Shaftesbury Avenue. She has an aptitude for the painting of dominant types and Jezebel manages to drive the play along as furiously as ever Jehu drove his horses. The men, as is frequently the case in Miss Dane's work, are less lively and less convincing than the women. None the less, the text reads suggestively and one can imagine that a producer and an actress of genius could make a memorable panorama of passion and down-fall."

+ — Sat R 140:512 O 31 '25 300w

Spec 135:1051 D 5 '25 260w

DARK, SIDNEY. Paris. 139p il $6 (25s) Mac-² millan

914.436 Paris—Description

A companion volume to his "London," and like that, a book of personal impressions. Mr Dark makes no attempt to be comprehensive but frankly seeks out the places that most attract him and recalls their historic and personal associations. Illustrated with drawings by Henry Rushbury.

"A very interesting book, for it contains the principal information usually gleaned from a guidebook, and a sprinkling of literary reference." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p10m N 14 '26 100w

"Mr. Sidney Dark has made no attempt to give a picture of Paris in words; he wisely left that to his illustrator, Mr. Rushbury, who catches with extraordinary success the characteristic aspects. Mr. Dark's object has been to people the streets of Paris for his reader with their historic associations. Rightly, he ranks creatures of the imagination as real beings: memories of Dumas are everywhere with him. A pleasant, readable and instructive book, admirably produced."

+ Spec 137:1081 D 11 '26 200w

DARLING, ARTHUR BURR. Political changes in Massachusetts, 1824-1848; a study of liberal movements in politics. (Yale historical publications. Miscellany) 392p $4 Yale univ. press [18s Milford]

974.4 Massachusetts—Politics and government 25-23065

"Professor Darling is not the first to suspect, and then to discover, that the Democratic movement of which Jackson was the titular head was not confined to the West and to restless dissenters from the older political order in the East, but his detailed study of Massachusetts politics from 1824 to 1848 gives us an instructive picture of the origin and growth of the movement and its relation to the other liberal agitations from which it sprang. Back of Jacksonian Democracy lay such diverse political causes as anti-Masonry and abolition, each with its appeal to liberal sentiment and the spirit of revolt."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"The materials are well arranged. The author has constructed a clear narrative of an intricate story and is particularly skillful in his use of excerpts from his sources. His judgments are moderate and seem well founded." L. B. Evans

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:891 N '26 600w

"Students who like to observe the workings of personalities in politics will value particularly the account which Professor Darling gives of the activities of David Henshaw, of George Bancroft, successor of Henshaw as Democratic boss, and of Marcus Morton, politician-justice of the State Supreme Court. It was an ill-assorted triumvirate, as the record of its doings shows."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 F 28 '26 250w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 16 '26 550w

"His book is a study of origins rather than results, and more than maintains the high standard of scholarship we have learnt to expect from the 'Yale Historical Studies.' It is, however, somewhat overweighted with detail."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p170 Mr 11 '26 1000w

DARROW, FLOYD LAVERN. Miracles; a modern view. 289p $2.50 Bobbs

231.7 Miracles 26-15949

Mr Darrow refers back to the pagan origin of miracles, explains the inevitability of primitive belief in them, and traces the appearance of like phenomena in sacred writings of all ages. He discusses at some length the so-called miracles of faith healing which still persist, and closes with the statement that religion does not depend on superstition, nor is faith in God hampered by the rejection of the miraculous.

Bookm 64:xxii Ja '27 220w

Reviewed by J. H. Holmes

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 N 14 '26 400w

Boston Transcript p6 N 6 '26 150w

"The book is drastic, yet reverent and constructive; its plea to the churches for a frank adoption of its attitude is stirring; and the volume is so conveniently arranged as to do good service as a handbook on the subject."

+ Outlook 144:314 N 3 '26 160w

DARWIN, BERNARD RICHARD MEIRION, and DARWIN, MRS ELINOR MARY (MONSELL). Tale of Mr Tootleoo. unip il $2 Harper [6s Nonesuch press]

827 26-27685

Mr Tootleoo was a sailor who was shipwrecked in the South seas, met a cockyollybird who took him to her island and took care of him until one day a gnome changed her into

DARWIN, B. R: M. and E. M.—Continued
a lovely lady in pink crinoline. Then Mr. Tootleco and she were married. The story is told in rhyme and copiously illustrated for small children.

Booklist 23:180 Ja '27

"A mirthful and whimsical yarn. Will amuse even a serious grownup."

+ N Y Times p9 S 26 '26 120w

"The delectable tale of Mr. Tootleco has at last been brought officially to America, though for many months it has been finding its way across the Atlantic to delight youngsters almost as much as it does their parents and older readers. It is the gayest of nonsense ballads and one that would have delighted the hearts of Lewis Carroll, Gilbert and Sullivan, Stevenson, and most of all Thackeray, because he would have rejoiced in every quaint line and bright color of the inimitable pictures."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:284 N 6 '26 220w

DARWIN, LEONARD. Need for eugenic reform.

529p $4 Appleton [12s Murray]

575.1 Eugenics. Heredity 26-14276

The author discusses every angle of the eugenics question from the standpoints of the individual, society, and the race.

"It is relatively free of the blatancy so characteristic of writings in this field, but in fundamental position it does not rise above the level of its numerous predecessors." E. B. Reuter

+ — Am J Soc 32:122 J1 '26 850w

Booklist 23:14 O '26

"It runs to more than 500 pages, is written in a sober and conservative style, and will never be a best-seller; but it is certainly the largest and best compendium of eugenic knowledge in print and its thoughtful and reasonable tone cannot but impress favorably any reader intelligent and industrious enough to essay its study." H. M. Parschley

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 S 12 '26 200w

"In this book a son of Charles Darwin warns impressively against the danger of race degeneration and offers carefully thought-out recommendations of his own for averting it. . . Major Darwin buttresses his treatment of the eugenic problem in a clear setting forth of the facts which science has brought out regarding natural inheritance, heredity, environment, natural selection and the like." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 5 '26 1000w

"Major Darwin has nothing startling to propose, but his sane and sober discussion of remedies deserves careful attention. But it is to be regretted that while he resembles in honesty of purpose and breadth of view those members of his family who have put us in their debt, the resemblance does not extend to literary facility. There is a heaviness of hand which weighs upon the reader, who longs for Galton's lightness of touch, which makes his books still a joy to read, and for his father's sober and masterly prose." A. M. Carr Saunders

+ — Econ J 36:483 S '26 1100w

"It is strange that so 'well-born' a man as a son of Charles Darwin should be capable of solemnly writing so fundamentally unscientific and wooden-headed a book. There is a surprising lack of recognition, on the one hand, of the smallness of our existing knowledge of heredity and the interplay of heredity and environment, and, on the other hand, of the few relevant facts that have been established. The social smugness implicit throughout is appalling." Harry Roberts

— Nation and Ath 39:210 My 29 '26 1200w

"This is in every respect a notable book by a most distinguished author. . . The book opens with a biological introduction which deals with the Mendelian theory of heredity and discusses the inheritance of acquired qualities and the Lamarckian theory of evolution. This part is by far the weakest section of the book, for Major Darwin labours under the disadvantage of not being a biologist." E. W. M.

+ — Nature 118:39 J1 10 '26 2400w

Reviewed by B: Harrow

N Y Times p11 Ag 1 '26 750w

"His book is a valuable and many-sided survey."

+ Sat R 141:706 Je 12 '26 500w

"Major Darwin's lucid, temperate, and comprehensive treatment of the whole subject tells us, as well as it could be told, what Eugenists really do, and do not, advocate."

+ Spec 136:804 My 1 '26 1100w

"Major Darwin's book will probably long be accepted as the standard presentation of the case for eugenics. Unlike so many expositions of the eugenic doctrine, it is moderate in temper and is based on sound learning."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p294 Ap 22 '26 850w

D'AUVERGNE, EDMUND BASIL FRANCIS.

English castles. 2d ed 278p il $6 Dodd

728.8 Castles. Architecture—Great Britain 27-594

First published seventeen years ago, Mr D'Auvergne has revised his book on English castles in the light of the developments of archaeological research and has brought it up to date in accordance with the most recent discoveries and conclusions of antiquarian experts in its theme. He tells the story of the development of these structures from the earliest English strongholds and the characteristics given them by the Norman conquerors. Then classifying them according to period he narrates the history and describes the structure of over fifty famous citadels, castles and palace-castles. In the main he follows the chronological order, and in some cases he brings the history down to fairly modern times. The book is lavishly and interestingly illustrated, several plates in color being from water-color paintings and the black-and-white ones from old and modern prints and drawings.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 S 5 '26 200w

"On the whole the work is excellently done, and very well illustrated. Those who intend going to see those castles on their own ground will have the advantage of knowing about them first, and those who have seen them will appreciate more fully the perspective so vividly offered in 'The English Castles.'"

+ Boston Transcript p5 S 18 '26 120w

"The text is for the general reader with historical and literary interests, rather than for the technician, though the study must necessarily be of value to archaeologist and architect also. The book is generously illustrated with color and wash prints."

+ Lit R p13 S 4 '26 220w

N Y Times p23 O 17 '26 180w

D'AUVERGNE, EDMUND BASIL FRANCIS.

² Pierre Loti; the romance of a great writer. 253p il $5 Stokes [6s Laurie]

B or 92 Loti, Pierre

Writing in the spirit of hero-worship the author emphasizes the romance and exoticism of Pierre Loti's career. There is little attempt at interpretation or criticism.

"It is to be regretted that the author's refined antipathy to analysis, together with his predilection for the anecdotal and the saccharine-scantalious, should have inhibited him from dealing with Loti in an intelligent manner. From several points of view, Loti presents interesting problems, none of which has occurred to the author." C. P. Fadiman

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ja 2 '27 600w

"Pierre Loti is in some ways a curious book, with too much intrusion on the author's part for a good biography. Yet we forgive Mr. d'Auvergne readily enough because of his just and kind summing-up of his hero's character."

+ — Spec 137:817 N 6 '26 120w

DAVIDSON, A. Intermediates for dyestuffs. 256p $11 Van Nostrand [36s E. Benn]

667.2 Dyes and dyeing—Chemistry [26-1092]

"Mr. Davidson, who is part author of 'The Industrial Application of Coal Tar Products,' here deals comprehensively with the intermediates from which the coal tar dyestuffs are directly prepared, with accounts of their constituents, preparation and application."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Although the author presents no novel method of treating his subject, he does bring within its covers a great fund of valuable information carefully arranged and edited, and the work merits consideration from those interested in the synthesis of intermediates for dyestuffs." P. H. Groggins

+ — Chem & Met Eng 33:366 Je '26 530w

"This book would seem better adapted to the laboratory worker than to the factory man. The descriptions have an academic tinge, reminiscent of Beilstein, but the work as a whole will fill a valuable place on the shelves of a research laboratory." H. T. Herrick

+ Ind & Eng Chem 18:766 J1 '26 270w

Times [London] Lit Sup p47 Ja 21 '26 40w

DAVIES, ELLEN CHIVERS. Our friends at the farm. 150p il $1.50 Crowell

A book for quite small children about the month little Billy spent on a farm and his good times with the animals there. The farm was an English farm and some of the terms may be unfamiliar to boys and girls in this country.

"The story is told in sentences easy for children to understand, and the print is large enough to appeal to the youngest possible readers. The text is well illustrated, but the scenes are not purely American; many of them being more typical of English farm conditions."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 1 '26 80w

"Such a pleasantly conversational account of a little city-bred boy's recovery of his health on an old fashioned farm where he can be upon intimate terms with horses, cows, sheep, and every variety of barnyard creature should be appealing, especially as the small hero is natural and his speech has a twentieth century ring to it."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:108 S 11 '26 100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:334 D '26

DAVIES, WILLIAM HENRY. Later days. 234p $2 Doran [6s J. Cape]

B or 92

26-3024

The poet-author of The "Autobiography of a super-tramp" forsakes the road for London Town and the company of fellow authors and artists, of whom he writes in "Later days" sometimes genially and always entertainingly.

Booklist 22:291 Ap '26

Reviewed by G. F. Whicher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 J1 11 '26 500w

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 23 '26 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p84 J1 '26

"To indicate adequately the futility, vulgarity, and conceit of this volume would indeed be a hard matter. The reader spends his first fifteen minutes in wondering how anybody thinking and writing as Mr Davies does could possibly have been tolerated by men like Shaw, Hudson, and Joseph Conrad, and the second fifteen minutes in applauding, with infinite relish, a naïveté so bizarre."

Dial 81:83 J1 '26 50w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 117:134 J1 31 '26 1250w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

Int Bk R p300 Ap '26 460w

"One feels recurrently a doubt whether any man is quite as simple, candid, and innocent as Mr. Davies seems. There are moments when the idea that he is gently but firmly pulling the reader's leg becomes rather insistent. Having no personal acquaintance with him, but cherishing certain of his poems very closely, one finds it difficult to accept entirely an artlessness that in its devastating perfection seldom survives the perambulatory period of life."

Living Age 327:476 N 28 '25 200w (Reprinted from Observer)

Living Age 329:555 Je 5 '26 120w

"I call the simplicity of Mr. Davies an intricate thing. That is why I call his little book an important one—and why I did not think it was when I first read it." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 122:344 Mr 31 '26 550w

"Later Days is not up to The Autobiography of a Super Tramp, but it has great charm. Mr. Davies's impressions of authors are not so interesting as his descriptions of beggars, sailors and tramps."

+ — New Statesman 26:supxxii D 12 '25 160w

"Such a book as this, of course, is bound to be a more slender offering than the 'Autobiography.' Undoubtedly the earlier book bore the full fruit of his experience, while this one gives more the flavor and color of his later life. As such it makes in many ways very good reading and rounds out our impression of the vagabond poet."

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 7 '26 760w

"It contains many amusing and charming pictures of the literary lights of England."

+ N Y World p7m Ja 31 '25 40w

"Mr. Davies is perfectly sure he is a poet, which may be; he has certainly been a vagabond, which is interesting, but he unfortunately displays a rather poor selective gift in what he chooses to present from his store of memories."

+ — Outlook 142:463 Mr 24 '26 200w

"That this little book is not so good as the 'Autobiography of a Super-Tramp' goes without saying. The fact is, Mr. Davies is more charming when he is describing life on the road than he is in talking of the literary life. There are a good many quiet little sneers at editors and journalists and fellow authors in these pages that all the appearance of sweet simplicity in the world will not excuse."

+ — Sat R 140:540 N 7 '25 550w

"W. H. Davies is a reckonable poet. He had much better leave his biography in other hands. He displays no gift for it. His anecdotes of the writers he has known are rather banal."

— Sat R of Lit 3:11 J1 31 '26 120w

Spec 135:716 O 24 '25 120w

"A spirit of serenity shines through [the book], enlivened again and again by flashes of Mr. Davies' peculiar humour—seemingly innocent, wholly malicious and critical. This last is a real power in him, for it emanates from that healthy jealousy which Nietzsche found to be the true tonic of genius."

+ Spec 135:885 N 14 '25 1250w

"In the present book, attractive as it is, the author moves among less unfamiliar scenes. But what gives these pages their peculiarly sweet and refreshing quality is their candour and even more, their freedom from those ill-natured gibes with which writers of memoirs sometimes pursue their acquaintances. On the very few occasions when Mr. Davies tells a story at someone else's expense, he either suppresses the name altogether or else writes

DAVIES, WILLIAM HENRY—Continued
with such an entire absence of malice that it is impossible to take offense."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p714 O 29 '25 700w

DAVIS, JAMES JOHN. Selective immigration. 227p $1.90 Scott-Mitchell pub. co., 803 Manhattan bldg., St Paul, Minn.

325.73 Immigration 25-20271

Selective immigration is the policy of prohibiting the influx of undesirable aliens and admitting only desirable stock. Illustrating his points from records of immigrants who have contributed good or evil to the national life, the Secretary of labor urges this policy on the United States and suggests how it may be carried out.

Reviewed by R. E. Park

Am J Soc 32:149 J1 '26 200w

"A convincing plea, intelligently and sensibly presented."

+ Booklist 22:232 Mr '26

Cath World 122:708 F '26 320w

Pratt p11 spring '26

R of Rs 73:332 Mr '26 80w

Wis Lib Bul 22:29 Ja '26

DAVIS, JOHN WILLIAM, and others. American citizenship; [with an introd. by Josiah Marvel]. 88p $1 Crowell

342.73 United States—Constitution 25-18568

This series of addresses on the Constitution and its underlying principles was originally given over the radio under the auspices of the American bar association.

Am Pol Sci R 20:466 My '26 50w

"Slender, well-made and valuable little book."

+ N Y Times p19 S 6 '25 360w

Wis Lib Bul 22:29 Ja '26

DAVIS, ROBERT HOBART. Over my left shoulder; a panorama of men and events, burlesques and tragedies, cabbages and kings and sometimes W and Y; with an introd. by Irvin S. Cobb. 350p $2.50 (10s 6d) Appleton

B or 92

26-17984

Under the title "Bob Davis recalls" the author wrote for the New York Sun most of these sketches of men he has known, talked about, and remembered, and things he has heard of or done.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 64:630 Ja '27 220w

"His memory has become the storehouse of intimate and amusing reminiscences about people of all sorts from bartenders and prizefighters to men and women high in the worlds of literature, art and public life. Perhaps the most interesting chapters in the book are those dealing with O. Henry."

N Y Times p3 D 12 '26 740w

"'Over My Left Shoulder' isn't a big book or a significant book, but it's vastly more entertaining than many that are." W: Johnston
+ N Y World p11m N 7 '26 400w

DAVIS, ROBERT HOBART. "Ruby Robert" alias Bob Fitzsimmons; with an introd. by W. O. McGeehan. 134p il $1.50 Doran

B or 92 Fitzsimmons, Robert

26-11399

In the introduction, the Sports editor of the New York Herald Tribune writes "The story of 'Ruby Robert' is history, and to my mind the most faithful bit of history ever written around the ring. It seems to retain its glamour despite the tinkle of the cash register and the click of the adding machine. As to its appeal as a bit of sheer entertainment, I will leave that to the reader. Good reporting always is good entertainment when the subject matter has anything to justify it. 'Ruby Robert,' having been the strangest character in a glamorous game, is a subject worthy of the writing."

Bookm 63:721 Ag '26 150w

"A highly entertaining and at the same time informative volume. Here is truly humorous biography, which, after all, is going Homer one better." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 J1 27 '26 520w

"Though not so fine a piece of work as Mr. Dibble's biography of Sullivan, Mr. Davis' book is still an eminently readable and convincing story."

Ind 117:108 J1 24 '26 50w

Reviewed by Elmer Davis

N Y Times p1 Je 27 '26 1150w

"It is pure delight, a newspaper man's inside story of his 'story.'" P. F. S.

+ N Y World p4m My 23 '26 160w

"The book is very short, very amusing, capably written. Mr. Davis's thought, under his airy journalistic manner, is informed with a deep and obviously sincere affection for the man Fitzsimmons."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:923 J1 10 '26 250w

DAVIS, SHELDON EMMOR. Self-improvement; a study of criticism for teachers. 280p $1.60 (6s 6d) Macmillan

371 Teachers. Teaching

26-9010

"The President of the State Normal College, Dillon, Montana, writes this book in the belief that the group of those who are incessantly learning for themselves is much larger among teachers than those who can only learn what they are taught by somebody else. 'In the last analysis,' he says, 'all teacher improvement is self-improvement,' for, 'a very large per cent. of all teachers enjoy but little expert supervision.' Yet something may be done to help and direct and to give an apprehension of what teaching means in its widest significance. These sixteen chapters on such subjects as plan in the day's work, mind reading in the class room, written work repetition, 'fewer questions and better,' rate of instruction, &c., are such an attempt."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"This is a rare contribution to the progress of [the teaching] art! If I were a school manager I would buy a copy for every teacher in my staff."

+ Educ R 72:191 N '26 500w

"Because of its simple, direct style, well-defined organization, wholesome and optimistic atmosphere, logical sequence, and thorough inculcation of the findings of recent scientific research in education, the book will be a distinctly valuable textbook or general reference book for the teacher. It will serve its greatest usefulness as a text or reference book for beginning teachers or teachers with a few years of experience; it will also be valuable to any teacher for general reading." R. S. Newcomb

+ School R 34:713 N '26 550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p416 Je 17 '26 120w

DAVISON, ARCHIBALD THOMPSON. Music education in America, what is wrong with it? what shall we do about it? 208p $3 Harper
780.7 Music—Instruction and study 26-11832

The associate professor of music at Harvard university and conductor of the Harvard glee club discusses the state of musical education in America and attributes to its shortcomings the lack of an appreciation of music by the great body of our people. He analyzes the whole system of teaching music in elementary and secondary schools and colleges to show what is wrong with it and what should be done about it.

Booklist 23:120 D '26

"Aside from the fact that many of Professor Davison's premises are erroneous, dogmatism and denunciation without real constructive suggestion do not get far." F. H. Martens
— Bookm 64:98 S '26 280w

"[His] is a large enterprise and a worthy one. We record our approval of it, if not our enthusiasm for every Davisonian detail, and have no mind to hamper it with superfluous criticisms and objections." P: Bowdoin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 29 '26 350w

"Mr. Davison has high ideals, perhaps he scolds a bit too much. The arraignment which he brings in scathing language, will perhaps not help his cause so much as a good-natured, humorous presentation might have done. What he says, or certainly, a good deal of what he says in criticism of our school and college teaching of music, is true enough, but it is largely controversial and likely to arouse opposition." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ag 4 '26 1650w

Reviewed by R: Aldrich
N Y Times p11 Je 27 '26 1550w

Reviewed by Bruce Simonds
Sat R of Lit 3:88 S 4 '26 800w

"If he distributes little commendation as he goes along one may be sure that he has no desire to appear as a scold. In his essential remedy—that the corrective of bad taste in music is contact with good music—he is undeniably right, and his other criticisms, which are more often general than technical, will be found suggestive. His standard may be impractically high, but we shall get nowhere unless we start in the right direction."

+ — Springf'd Republican p20 Je 4 '26 620w
Wis Lib Bul 22:226 J1 '26

DAVISON, EDWARD LEWIS. Harvest of youth. 115p $2 Harper
821 26-6542

"'Harvest of Youth' is written by the brilliant young associate editor of the London Mercury. It represents, presumably, the best of his lyrics written between the ages of 18 and 30, and therefore is uneven in quality with the unevenness of experimenting youth. . . Mr Davison is conservative in his technic, preferring the older verse forms to the more modern free verse. But he is not at all imitative and writes with a freshness and spontaneity which is all the more appealing after the overdose of the poetry-reading public has had of experimental prosody, because it flows so melodiously and simply."—Springf'd Republican

Booklist 23:123 D '26

"Here are dignified measures and mellow lines, thoughts of beauty and of quiet passion, of English countryside and of discreet love. Much of its cadence strikes the ear as conventional; but it is also lovely, and when he has something important to say it is rather more than that." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:351 My '26 160w

"I found the first poems in the book disappointing, but on learning that the arrangement was chronological and the writer young I set myself to trace the development of a poet. There was promise in 'At Tyne Dock,' which presented a contrast luminously. But the promise was not fulfilled. The same faults which irritate the reader in the earliest poems flourish in the latest—unnecessary inversions, trite phrases, abstractions and personifications—and, alas, too little substance." Garretta Bussey

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 Je 6 '26 120w

"His poems are felicitous, balanced, and, without being ornate, realized. He also excels in the composition of the nobler, graver sort of epigram, derived from the Greek, which the Elizabethans fashioned so beautifully. In some respects, of course, this harvest is obviously of youth. We catch an occasional echo which persists from another poet in the measures of Mr. Davison's music. But not often." Robert Hillyer

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ap 10 '26 960w

"Quite unobtrusively recommends itself to the reader of poetry as one of the most delightful volumes of the year. The verse is elegant; and the themes, whether emotional or philosophical, are moving."

+ Dial 81:173 Ag '26 80w

"The lyrics in this little volume have a sure loveliness, and the sonnets move with a sonorous beauty."

+ Ind 116:367 Mr 27 '26 50w

"Here is poetry true to the great English tradition. This volume does not seek to storm Parnassus by short cuts of eccentricity that follows the path, kissing, like Chaucer's 'lil book,' the footprints of the masters." K. L. Bates

Lit R p7 Ap 10 '26 500w

N Y Times p6 My 9 '26 900w

"There are two important qualities in Mr. Davison; in the first place he evidently knows what the word 'poet' means and attains in his style the dignity which the art demands. Also he combines his words and sentences so that they make a genuine melody of the English idiom. What seems to be less fortunate in his verse is a tendency to deal with abstractions and conventional literary themes, and to lapse into lines that are sometimes dull." Hervey Allen

+ — No Am 223:362 Je '26 400w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman
Outlook 143:384 J1 14 '26 20w

Reviewed by L: Untermeyer
Sat R of Lit 2:952 J1 24 '26 650w

"Mr. Davison has a sure and easily handled technic; his ideas are happy, but not often striking; he is imbued with the pessimism of youth and dwells frequently on death and failure, but does so without either morbidity or sentimentality."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f My 2 '26 320w
Wis Lib Bul 22:197 Je '26

DAWSON, SIR PHILIP. Germany's industrial revival. 276p $3.50 Macmillan [10s 6d Williams & N.]

330.943 Germany—Economic conditions. Finance—Germany [26-4963]

The subject of Germany is not a new one to the author who has lived there for years at a stretch. In 1922 he revisited the country, making a tour of all the important industrial cities in order to ascertain the exact industrial condition. The material herein presented is the result of that tour together with information received from leading representatives of the country. It is a study of the course of inflation and its results.

"Sir Philip Dawson has embodied in this volume the results of extended studies in Germany. His thorough knowledge of pre-war Germany has enabled him to appreciate with much refinement of judgment the extent of the changes in social and industrial conditions during these troubled years." A. P. Usher

+ Am Econ R 16:468 S '26 560w

"Without being the work of a specialist in economic investigation, and while not forming so complete a unity as a more practiced writer might have made it, it is the production of an observant and conscientious investigator, and it will be found a mine of information of the utmost interest and value at the present time." W. H. Dawson

Econ J 36:459 S '26 1650w

New Statesman 27:24 Ap 17 '26 200w

"It is not a sprightly book, but it is free from any sort of official or quasi-official utterances, it is refreshingly unaffected by any of the rancors of the war and it is most informative where many Americans would most readily prefer to seek their information." Gardner Harding

+ N Y Times p1 Ag 15 '26 2000w

DAWSON, PHILIP—Continued

"Out of fifty-five years of intimate acquaintance with Germany, Sir Philip Dawson has drawn the knowledge which makes his study of post-war Germany valuable."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:219 O 16 '26 320w

Spec 136:769 Ap 24 '26 260w

Survey 56:645 S 15 '26 130w

"A very useful and well-informed account of post-war fiscal policy and economic administration, a subject which is of great importance. Much of the book is of too technical a nature for detailed discussion in these columns; but the author has avoided the danger, too common in writers on these matters, of encumbering his exposition with abstract discussions of academic, economic, or financial doctrine. His points are clearly expressed in such a manner as to be useful to those engaged in the practical affairs of business or of politics."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p109 F 18 '26 800w

DAY, HOLMAN FRANCIS. When the fight begins. 339p $2 Dodd

26-8188

"A successful lawyer and politician, utterly selfish in his aims, gets a new outlook during a sojourn in the north woods. The title is from Browning: 'When the fight begins within himself a man's worth something.'—Wis Lib Bul

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 My 30 '26 150w

"Mr. Day by no means exhausts the possibilities of this tale. He is to be congratulated that he attacks it sincerely and opens the trail for further exploration. Meanwhile he has written a plain but sufficiently interesting drama that takes its way through the political life of a great Western city and the woods of the North." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 12 '26 350w

"Mr. Day has written a worthless novel, lurid, melodramatic, ill-balanced, but throughout it holds a grip upon the reader's interest which may be a better tale by him has failed to equal." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p5 Ag 14 '26 200w

"Mr. Day, like so many popular writers, portrays his 'good' characters as almost without a flaw, and depicts his villains as utterly bad."

N Y Times p19 Je 27 '26 400w

Wis Lib Bul 22:198 Je '26

DEAKIN, RALPH. Tour of the Prince of Wales to Africa and South America; with an introd. by the Prince of Wales. 302p il $4 Lippincott [10s 6d Methuen]

916 Edward Albert, prince of Wales. Africa—Description and travel. South America—Description and travel 26-6729

A correspondent attached to the royal party writes a complete and eulogistic record of the Prince of Wales' recent tour to Africa and South America, reproducing in detail the scenes of ceremony and rejoicing attendant on the Prince's progress. With such a wealth of picturesque incident to choose from, the photographs are a little disappointing.

"It is well written, coherent, and lucid. But as ubiquitous as the mosquito on the Jersey flats, our friend the Prince stares out from each page in geometrically increasing progression."

+ Bookm 63:xxx Ap '26 130w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 21 '26 880w

"An amazing amount of history and economics has found its way unobtrusively into the narrative, which is told in such a popular style that the reader is unaware of the amount of real information which he is amassing."

+ Ind 117:220 Ag 21 '26 100w

Reviewed by L. G. Short

Lit R p16 Ap 10 '26 620w

Nation and Ath 38:654 F 6 '26 120w

"It is unfortunate that the Prince's tour should have received so official an historian. Loyalty being its object and effect, Mr. Deakin writes with the pen of a loyal subject. Into his descriptions there creeps a note of obsequiousness which is at times almost absurd." J. Carter

+ N Y Times p3 F 21 '26 1050w

Outlook 143:222 Je 9 '26 150w

R of Rs 73:446 Ap '26 100w

"The interest of this travel narrative, by the special correspondent of the London Times who accompanied the expedition, is contained in the vastly illuminating and valuable descriptions of England's colonial possessions in West and South Africa."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:654 Mr 20 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p870 D 17 '25 750w

DE BRATH, STANLEY. Psychical research, science and religion. 207p il $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Methuen]

134 Psychical research [26-13110]

It has been the author's method to state the attested facts of supernormal phenomena; to give instances from the evidence which supports them, including illustrations from photographs made during sittings circumscribed; to draw religious and spiritual inferences from these facts and their evidence; and to build upon them a system of religious education for the young.

"The book deserves the careful study of those who desire the truth and who feel that the whole subject needs disinfecting." G. A. Barton

+ Lit R p16 S 4 '26 250w

"The weakness of his work, if it has any, is that it attempts too much in a single volume. Nevertheless, it is a well-written and amply illustrated book and should be thoroughly enjoyable to the student of spiritualism." R. O. Kevin

+ Lit R p13 O 9 '26 250w

DE CASSERES, BENJAMIN. Forty immortals. 371p $3.50 Lawren; Writers pub. co.

814 Authors 26-14947

"These forty short essays embody the author's definition of the eternal essence in each man's belief, and are critical largely in the sense that they are analytical in the extreme. Mr. DeCasseres' 'Forty' include Nietzsche, Maeterlinck, Hardy, Remy de Gourmont, Thoreau, D'Annunzio, Emerson, Baudelaire, Strindberg, Poe, Tardieu, Walt Whitman, Ibsen, Gustave Le Bon, Stendhal, Hawthorne, Flaubert, Verlaine, Shakespeare and Rousseau."—R of Rs

Bookm 64:236 O '26 180w

"There is plenty of originality here. Subjects which have been written about hundreds of times are served to us again with vigor and freshness."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 30 '26 200w

"There is compensation for the lack of sanity and proportion in the crisp and pungent vigor of the style, the sledge-hammer sentences, the artful use of alliteration, the felicity of phrase and illustration, the keen-edged satire, compact and telling epigram and sardonic wit. Moreover, there is the constant savor of a comprehensive scholarship, for De Casseres has read widely, if not deeply, in both ancient and modern literatures. But his cultivation, if rich, is not catholic." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p4 Jl 24 '26 650w

"That he can keep in any semblance of thought-order such whirls of words is something to marvel at. Yet to read him once, twice, is to experience the greatest mental exhilaration. It is only because, in his wildest flights, he keeps tight hold on his return ticket to earth that he does not pop off into extra-stellar space, to be heard and seen no more."

+ N Y Times p12 My 23 '26 2250w

"A display of fireworks may fascinate, up to a certain point, but that point passed, do not wonder if you become bored and fatigued. Benjamin de Casseres's 'Forty Immortals' should be read in nibbles, not consumed at one sitting. It is scintillating, but sometimes you are tempted to ask: What does it mean?" Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p4m My 16 '26 220w

"Occasionally his explosive method justifies itself, as in the essay on 'Baudelaire; Ironie Dante,' but in the main the essays are absurd but exciting, resembling some unholy mixture of nitro-glycerine and adrenalin, or eisel and crocodile."

+ Outlook 143:480 Ag 4 '26 200w

"In a vivid, almost journalistic style, somewhat jerky at times, then again lyrical in quality, Mr. DeCasseres essays the task of summing up the illuminating and immortalizing spirit of each of his subjects."

R of Rs 73:671 Je '26 120w

"De Casseres is a mixture of genius and sheer fudge. He is always essentially a poet, whether he writes in prose or verse,—a passionate, erratic poet, whose brain breeds images and epigrams like maggots, who revels in cataclysmic visions, and with wild fury strives to shake the foundations of the world. The clang of his staccato sentences is like a fire-alarm rung all night long."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:907 Jl 3 '26 550w

"A most amazing conglomeration of words and phrases. To the followers of De Casseres, this new book may prove of interest; but it is not likely to gain him new followers."

— Springfield Republican p7f Ag 15 '26 380w

DEEPIING, WARWICK (GEORGE WARWICK, pseud.). Sorrell and son. 400p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Cassell]

26-26480

"Beggared by the war and deserted by his wife, Stephen Sorrell, in order to give his son a gentleman's opportunities, humbles his own pride and begins life over as a hotel porter. He climbs from one position to another and ends rich. . . The book covers twenty years with ease and naturalness; it takes Kit from childhood to a responsible place in medicine, and Sorrell from poverty to rather complacent comfort. . . The significant problem of the book is the relations between father and son. The pair are human because of the warmth and intimacy of their association, because of its frankness and love, because of the spirit of sacrifice in the father and the spirit of devotion in the boy."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:376 Je '26

"Words and ideas are tossed in needlessly—Freud, labor, socialism, free love—half articulate, half baked opinions, which the author may fancy but which are wholly outside the real story and weaken its own particular merits. The snatches of specious talk and loose writing, however, cannot detract from the author's talent to create convincingly human men in convincingly human situations." L. E. Marshall

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Mr 14 '26 600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p93 Jl '26

"'Sorrell and Son' is an absorbing story. Its characters are Dickensian. Mr. Deeping has made it as fascinating as excavation work for a skyscraper." W. S. Stuart

Lit R p4 Jl 3 '26 400w

"The tolerance, not to say sympathy, of the older man for every phase of youth's rebellion against code, convention, tradition, and accepted ethical standards quite takes one's breath away, and is presented a little too deliberately, too intentionally, to ring quite true. But if Warwick Deeping has been able to write an interesting and thoroughly modern novel that is also a lesson to fathers and sons, it is for members of both generations to swallow the pill and marvel at the efficacy of the sugar-coating."

+ Living Age 330:650 S 18 '26 300w

New Repub 47:316 Ag 4 '26 150w

"The story has power. The friendly and candid relations of father and son are well developed from age to age, and the latter's experiments in life are described with a realism that for all its frankness never becomes offensive. Sorrell senior is uncommonly well drawn, though it is difficult to understand how a man so wisely determined when he reaches bottom could ever have fallen so low."

+ New Statesman 26:90 O 31 '25 300w

"Trimmed to half its length, 'Sorrell and Son' would have gained immensely in strength. But the publishers either would not or could not persuade the author to weed his garden. In consequence, pedestrian pages and pages of power alternate in a most highly tantalizing manner."

+ N Y Times p24 F 28 '26 750w

"This is a simple theme, but it is treated with rare skill. The story is free from sentimentalism or imitation pathos; it has variety of incident, a sense of humor, and a maturity of fictional art reached by no other book of Mr. Deeping's except, in some degree, his war story 'The House of Adventure.'" R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 142:614 Ap 21 '26 360w

"'Sorrell and Son,' though it obviously fails to reach the level of distinguished fiction, has the merit of its theme and of unflagging interest. For a book of four hundred pages it is remarkably free from dull stretches. To be quite honest, I must confess that I find it absorbing less for its principal theme than for something else: it has the rich readability of a convincing 'success' story." L. Kronenberger

+ Sat R of Lit 2:646 Mr 20 '26 600w

"The beginning of this story with the opening of a country hotel is good reading, and the accident by which the hotel eventually obtains publicity is entertaining. The second half of the book hardly fulfils the promise of the first, and Christopher, the 'son' of the title, is not so interesting a central figure as his father."

+ Spec 135:460 S 19 '25 50w

"A novel of more obviously serious intention than some of his earlier stories. It is sentimental, inasmuch as it is always the emotional rather than the intellectual values which Mr. Deeping seeks to render; but he nowhere permits himself the sentimentalist's easy evasions of reality."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p636 O 1 '25 400w

DEJEANS, ELIZABETH (JANES) (MRS SIDNEY BUDGETT). Mansions of unrest. 312p $2 Doubleday

26-12289

Katherine Graves left San Francisco while still quite young, and for reasons only hinted at early in the story, remained abroad for a number of years. She returned to find her good friend Sumner Crandall in divers difficulties. He and his wife are at odds, his daughter has slipped away from him, and his son is a moral weakling. Katherine takes a hand in his affairs and succeeds in straightening them out, and when the slight mystery is cleared from her own horizon she is able to find her happiness as well as his.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 22 '26 130w

Reviewed by V. R. Bowker
Int Bk R p673 O '26 180w

"It is a good story of its kind, full of peppy action. If to the palate of the literary gourmet it seems a trifle 'common,' we can always say with Katherine: 'Nature is common, Sumner, but. . .'" F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p8 Ag 14 '26 200w

DE KOVEN, ANNA (FARWELL) (MRS REGINALD DE KOVEN). Musician and his wife. 259p il $5 Harper

B or 92 De Koven, Reginald 26-17686

There is more of the wife than of the musician in this memoir, which goes back on the wife's side a good many generations before it begins to picture the full and happy life of an unusually successful couple. Unusually successful, for beside the fame of Mr De Koven's career as a musician there were literary laurels for his wife and an instant success for them both in diplomatic, literary, and social circles at home and abroad.

DE KOVEN, ANNA—Continued

—
Booklist 23:171 Ja '27

"The book is not only crowded, but hurried; it reads like a crude, rough draft, ill-arranged, deficient in reflection and perspective, hit-or-miss as to fact, and set down with an engaging confidence that on the printed page whatever is right." P: Bowdoin

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 N 28 '26 1150w

"Her method of writing is discursive, and she does not differentiate very clearly between what is personally interesting to herself and what has general interest to her readers. Nevertheless the book contains a large number of interesting anecdotes, and it reflects very clearly the life of the intellectual American during the last century."

Boston Transcript p1 D 8 '26 350w

Reviewed by D. G. Mason
Nation 123:457 N 3 '26 450w

"Mrs. de Koven has written a very important volume, as interesting as a novel, yet filled with the wisdom of the keen observer of the life of her times." F. H. Winterburn

+ N Y Times p14 Ja 2 '27 1500w

Reviewed by Bartlett Cormack
N Y World p11m N 14 '26 760w

"Biography and autobiography are pleasantly combined in this survey of what was surely a golden age."

+ Outlook 144:281 O 27 '26 180w

Sat R of Lit 3:394 D 4 '26 180w

Springf'd Republican p10 O 28 '26 600w

Wis Lib Bul 22:330 D '26

DE KRUIF, PAUL HENRY. Microbe hunters.

363p il $3.50 Harcourt

925 Bacteriology—History. Scientists. Micro-organisms 26-5317

Thru these biographical narratives of some great bacteriologists the story is told of the war on pathogenic organisms which began with the discovery of bacteria, two hundred and fifty years ago, by the Dutch lens grinder, Leeuwenhoek. Accounts follow, dramatically told, of the achievements of Spallanzani, Pasteur, Koch, Roux, Behring, Metchnikoff, Theobald Smith, David Bruce, Ronald Ross, Battista Grassi, Walter Reed and Paul Ehrlich.

"Written in dramatic style and portraying the actors in the drama with a vividness which holds the attention throughout." M. P. Ravenel
+ Am J Pub Health 16:302 Mr '26 820w

"It is well that this book has been written. It should be widely read, for it tells a story of thrilling and universal interest." F. C. Shattuck

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '26 560w

Booklist 22:327 My '26

"His non-technical method of presenting the lives of these immortal pioneers makes the volume one of the most exciting, yet instructive, we have read in recent months."

+ Bookm 63:234 Ap '26 100w

"The story 'Microbe Hunters' tells is of the most important of all voyages into the unknown; as De Kruijf tells it, it is one of the most interesting stories ever told. To say that there is not a dull line in the book is to say what is true, and one may say further what is equally true that one reads on and on and on—absorbed, fascinated and proud to belong to the same family of primates which produced a Pasteur and to the same nation which produced a Walter Reed." G: A. Dorsey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 F 21 '26 1700w

"It is all written like some adventure story, full of thrills and minus technicalities. It is of absorbing interest and full of information. Biography, science and heroism are mingled in about equal proportions and they make a good mixture."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 1 '26 220w

Cleveland Open Shelf p51 Ap '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p84 Jl '26

"This is the most exciting book that has come into my hands in a long time. Paul de Kruijf has dramatized the war between scientists and the unknown world of germs in a series of papers each of which describes a great battle, won, drawn, or lost. The style of the book is journalistic in spots. So be it. It is a grand book."

+ Ind 116:251 F 27 '26 200w

"An amazing, fascinating book." J: W. Harrington

+ Int Bk R p374 My '26 1350w

"A professor of English literature would shrug his shoulders over the 'slangy newspaperish' style, but, to use slang myself, this book will 'get' the 'man in the street' in a way that a polished literary style could not possibly effect." Dr W. W. Keen

+ Lit R p2 Ap 17 '26 520w

"The book of de Kruijf is immensely interesting. The author does not disdain the arts of the rhetorician. He is not afraid of dramatic pauses and exclamation points. But his story is by no means a mere dramatization. There is a great deal of hard work behind it, a laborious inquiry into matters regarding which even most bacteriologists know little. It is an exhilarating and valuable contribution to one of the noblest chapters in the history of mankind." H. L. Mencken

+ Nation 122:235 Mr 3 '26 820w

"Aside from the honest arts of popularity Dr. de Kruijf's book tells a great story, one full of suspense, sacrifice, keen rivalry, the fascination of the unknown, the passion of discovery, the fortune that favors the brave, the sheer triumph of human intelligence. It is moreover the whole story, for the record is practically complete." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 46:334 My 5 '26 1900w

"He has made himself one of the dozen or half dozen men in America who write entertainingly as well as accurately about science. The defect of his method is, perhaps, that he tries too hard to be entertaining. He has cultivated the jazz style which has come in with jazz music and jazz dancing. He cannot let his narrative jog along, but must make it gallop at full speed." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p10 F 28 '26 1550w

"'Microbe Hunters' is not just a series of biographical sketches, although enough of the economic and social background of the principal characters is given to make them appear human, but no effort is made to transform these humans into super-humans. It is a story book which holds much of interest and profit for persons of all ages." Raymond Hussey, M.D.

+ N Y World p6m F 21 '26 700w

Pratt p30 summer '26

R of Rs 73:446 Ap '26 130w

"One of the important things that make this book an unusually good one is the fact that de Kruijf writes about men whose labors developed the science to which he himself was trained. Beside the necessary technical knowledge, de Kruijf has brought much hard work to his task, and the thoroughness which made him, before he decided to chase fame on the back of the literary hare instead of the scientific turtle, a good bacteriologist. Knowing his men, he does not exaggerate them into the priggish perfection that can ruin the most lovable character." Hans Zinsser, M.D.

+ Sat R of Lit 2:608 Mr 6 '25 620w

Spring'd Republican p10 N 26 '26 360w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey Graphic 9:42 Ap '26 1200w

Wis Lib Bul 22:140 Ap '26

"Literature owes Mr. de Kruij a debt for having provided Mr. Sinclair Lewis with the raw materials for the scientific side of 'Arrow-smith.' He is now putting science under a debt; for in this volume he narrates the story of bacteriological research in such a way as to excite universal interest. This does not say that 'Microbe Hunters' has no faults as a work of popular science. One has the uneasy feeling that the author has injected some of his own overbrimming and indeed hectic interest into the character of the personages in the scientific drama. They all seem to be excited and in a hurry, even when Mr. de Kruij assures us that they were sedate. But much can be forgiven to one who can make them live and make their achievements vivid. These pages will turn the veriest layman enthusiastic." Julian Huxley

+ — Yale R n s 16:169 O '26 850w

DELAFIELD, E. M., pseud. See De La Pasture, E. E. M.

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. The connoisseur, and other stories. 309p $2.50 Knopf [10s 6d Collins]

26-11209

"Only one of these nine stories has a realistic basis. The others tell, with the author's finished persuasiveness, of further excursions into those haunted areas where the brain of man is all fringed and interrogatory, never central and declarative. Compared with such gossamer fancies, such finespun, uninsistent horrors, the sheeted ghosts of Poe seem prosaic and mechanical. These are not really ghost stories, because there is nothing of cumulative incident in them. The present tales shadow forth, unconstricted by plot, events not at all impossible which impinge on the consciousnesses of most extraordinary people." (Nation) Contents: Mr Kempe; Missing; The connoisseur; Disillusioned; The nap; Pretty Poll; All Hallows; The wharf; The lost track.

Booklist 23:38 O '26

Bookm 63:594 Jl '26 100w

"There would be more justification for these stories if they were powerful enough to bring the reader more life or increased awareness. Instead, they are set in a world of twilight which is aridly ornamental and descriptive, never real." Margery Latimer

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Je 6 '26 620w

"In 'The Connoisseur' the rich texture of the pattern alone almost contents us. We are tempted to accept its smooth beauty, its human tenderness, and its stark irony without searching for an ultimate meaning. After all, a good bit of the charm in these stories lies in their very vagueness, and like museum pieces, will not bear much handling." W: B. I. Blake

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 5 '26 1600w

Dial 81:353 O '26 130w

"The majority of the protagonists found in the volume, tho painstakingly, even lovingly, described, are too lifelike to be interesting. This may be art—or even Art—but your average reader, when he opens a book, seeks escape from life rather than an assiduously photographic and phonographic presentation of it. Of course, Mr. de la Mare may declare that he does not write for what is termed (and usually with contempt) the 'average reader.' He may even quote Shakespeare still further (he makes several references to 'Macbeth' in the volume) by saying, 'Caviare to the general—' Caviare, then, is 'The Connoisseur.'" W. K. Bradley

Int Bk R p486 Jl '26 180w

"There is something of Oscar Wilde's writing for writing's sake, for the joy of creating beauty alone in the book. The sketches are like etchings. Every word, every line, counts." Alice Wildey

+ Lit R p8 Ag 21 '26 580w

"His preoccupation with effects rather than ideas, his careful adumbration of details, his anxious prose style, his researches into an exclusive and limited dream world proclaim the decadent; but he is that astonishing phenomenon, a decadent without pose. It is to some genuine unstudied quirk in his own nature that these phantasmagoria correspond; they are real and not synthetic trophies that from Ultima Thule he has so quietly brought home." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 122:614 Je 2 '26 300w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 39:386 Jl 3 '26 220w

New Repub 47:263 Jl 21 '26 120w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 27:328 Jl 3 '26 1800w

"The book as a whole hardly seems to balance up with those surprisingly excellent predecessors, 'The Riddle and Other Tales' and 'Broomsticks and Other Tales,' but it is compact with the unique and sometimes oblique attitude toward life that is so much a part of the author's strange fancy. . . The book serves to show that the poet's ability to write a clarified and gently-poetical prose has not abated."

+ — N Y Times p11 My 16 '26 1350w

N Y World p5m My 23 '26 420w

"Passing over the vivid experiences of 'Mr. Kempe,' and 'All Hallows' it will be sufficient to say, using in its strictest and rarest sense a word which is gradually being degraded into insignificance by the unjustifiable man-handling of inadequate reviewers, that 'The Connoisseur' contains at least four masterpieces, the masterpieces of a poet as well as a short-story writer. No book of such high imaginative quality has appeared in a long time." E: Davison

+ Sat R of Lit 2:903 Jl 3 '26 1050w

"He does not always succeed in making his characters speak quite convincingly. They are all, one feels, more sensitive and more explicit than is quite credible: in fact, they are Mr. de la Mare himself speaking with a score of clear voices. And for this reason 'The Connoisseur' must be called a series of essays in fiction form rather than a volume of stories. Incidents related are of the very slightest, and the tales are material for thought rather than sheer entertainment."

Spec 136:1012 Je 12 '26 350w

"Mr. de la Mare has the poet's imagination, and it is a poetic emotion that delights us in his stories. At the same time he takes kindly to the humours and liberties, even the lengths, of prose; for the nine tales contained in 'The Connoisseur and Other Stories' are longer than those of 'The Riddle,' and, whatever one may think about expansion as against compression, he certainly advances with a freer movement. The magic of his vision, unaltered, takes us into enchanted air."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p412 Je 17 '26 900w

DELAND, MARGARET WADE (CAMPBELL) (MRS LORIN FULLER DELAND). The Kays. 336p $2 Harper [7s 6d J. Cape]

26-17995

Tho the setting is Mrs Deland's familiar Old Chester and Dr Lavendar and Willy King appear occasionally among its characters, the scene and atmosphere hardly suggest the earlier Old Chester tales. Agnes Kay, who dominates the story, is an "iron woman," unlovable, austere religious (she belongs to the sect of the True Followers), with the courage of her stern convictions. She refuses to live on her husband's tainted money, and worst of all in Old Chester eyes, she is a pacifist. Yet for all her hardness she has a strange tenderness and a love sufficient to enable her to take upon herself an incredibly hard and thankless task. Her son Arthur inherits her uncompromising moral code. He is destined to suffer bitterly from it, especially for his pacifism, even less popular in Civil war times than today. But as the mystery is cleared which has hung over the story from its beginning, so at its close the cloud upon Arthur shows signs of lifting.

DELAND, MARGARET WADE—Continued

Booklist 23:176 Ja '27

"Mrs. Deland has created three memorable characters in this book, and she has revealed the genesis of the Conscientious Objector. I feel that her handling of Arthur Kay is a masterly piece of work—even though I fail to like Arthur." D. L. Mann

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 D 26 '26 1000w

"You cannot forget the Kays nor their problems. Once again Mrs. Deland has made her public think as well as read." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 18 '26 1050w

"From many present-day standpoints this is a sentimental novel, although even harsh critics, if they are also fair, will admit it to be much more than merely sentimental. It goes as deep as human nature, but does it see clearly at the bottom? . . . Nearly every page, including many of the attitudes, is delightful reading." Grant Overton

Lit R p5 D 4 '26 500w

"It is on the whole, with odd occasional lapses, told in the manner of restraint. It draws (few things could be more difficult) a convincing picture of a woman fanatically but not offensively virtuous. This story has distinction." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 28:242 D 4 '26 100w

"There is little to link the present book with those local studies which went before; nor is there any valid reason why there should be connecting links. 'The Kays' is a piece of work highly individual, and abundantly able to stand of itself. Mrs. Deland, as she has done before, demonstrates in 'The Kays' her right to be included in the company of the true novelists. She has taken a segment of life and made it sharply visual." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p2 O 24 '26 1100w

N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 60w

Reviewed by L. P. Hartley

Sat R 142:692 D 4 '26 200w

Spec 137:827 N 6 '26 60w

"An admirable piece of workmanship and a most absorbing study of human ideas and relationships."

+ Springfield Republican p7f D 26 '26 480w

"Miss Deland has handled the story skilfully. Whether one agrees with Arthur's reasons or not, and probably the majority of readers will disagree, one can but admire the skill and impartiality with which they are presented."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p908 D 9 '26 350w

Wis Lib Bul 22:298 N '26

DE LA PASTURE, EDMEE ELIZABETH MONICA (MRS ARTHUR PAUL DASHWOOD) (E. M. DELAFIELD, pseud.). Chip and the block. 364p $2 Harper [7s 6d Hutchison]

26-5625

"People who pose—men, women and small children—are Miss E. M. Delafield's special delight. Charles Ellery's engrossing interest in himself is not permitted to destroy the happiness of those around him—a relief to the reader. Charles, a novelist, is left a widower with three children, Paul, Jeannie, and Victor—the latter made in his own image but developing, as he grows up, a greater share of both humour and common sense than his father enjoys. The childhood and youth of the trio are attractively and naturally recorded; and in their relatives, Grandmamma and the Aunts, Miss Delafield finds scope for her satiric talent. Then comes Caroline Considine, the sensible and accomplished woman, who marries Charles with her eyes open and saves the lives of his children, as they afterwards gratefully acknowledge. With the unexpected success of one of his books prosperity sets in for the poseur, who promptly abandons his Socialistic theories and is thoroughly annoyed to find them solid convictions in Victor, the son he secretly envies and admires."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 22:329 My '26

"Here is a novel that is clear in style, candid in temper and clever without being supercilious. Making no claim to greatness, it attains without effort a quiet distinction." Isabel Paterson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Mr 7 '26 460w

"'The Chip and the Block' is tender, understanding and comprehending in its scope; and it is from the beginning to the end exactly like life, a serious comedy enriched by moments of deep emotion, and also a little pitiless." D. F. Gilman

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 6 '26 2050w
Cleveland Open Shelf p53 Ap '26

"The book should not fail to have a wide appeal."

+ Ind 116:365 Mr 27 '26 70w

"She is very careful of her characters. Tho there are plenty of them, none is casually sketched. No limelight spots appear in this comedy, just an even distribution of incidents, as in daily life. The balance of the whole is one of its pleasures. Mrs. Delafield has too much bitterness in her pen to write a 'delicious' comedy, but those who like a slightly mordant humor will thoroughly enjoy 'The Chip and the Block.'" L. G. Short

+ Int Bk R p390 My '26 400w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

Lit R p3 Jl 24 '26 550w

New Repub 46:283 Ap 21 '26 130w

"In spite of minor faults 'The Chip and the Block' is a stimulating novel."

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 14 '26 1300w

"Mrs. Delafield's latest novel is as important as the story of your life and almost as engrossing. . . A few times a year books appear that introduce persons and families whom you can discuss and gossip about as if they were relatives or very, very intimate acquaintances. 'The Chip and the Block' is such a book." Paul Sifton

+ N Y World p6m Mr 14 '26 620w

Outlook 142:497 Mr 31 '26 150w

"The characters, though excellent as literary material, are never very real; they are only people for comedy, credible perhaps but not convincing. And they suffice for the comedy, which has edge but no depth; Mrs. Delafield has contrived her story for amusement, and her satire for amusement also. She quite succeeds in so legitimate a purpose; and only those the book fails to amuse will seek implications it does not suggest." L. Kronenberger

+ Sat R of Lit 2:682 Ap 3 '26 350w

"Whatever its limitations, 'The Chip and the Block' is the type of novel which presents character incisively, which holds the right balance between the sympathetic and the tart in its understanding of human nature, and which yields incidents wherein people reveal themselves with a dramatic force that is not recognized to be dramatic because it is natural and inevitable."

+ Springfield Republican p5a Mr 21 '26 520w

"She has by now given us a good many studies in self-consciousness, and her new novel, 'The Chip and the Block,' handles the theme more skilfully than before."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p636 O 1 '25 290w

Wis Lib Bul 22:141 Ap '26

DE LA ROCHE, MAZO. Delight. 232p $2 (7s 6d) Macmillan

26-9567

"Vigorous emotions suitable to a 'primitive' setting, together with incidents ranging from strong to violent, distinguish this story of the adventures of a startlingly beautiful cockney girl in the Canadian lakeport village of Brancepeth. Delight Mainprize, employed at the Duke of York Inn, passes through many of the worst experiences of the wrongfully accused heroine before she is at all certain of her future happiness with Jimmy."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Booklist 22:421 J1 '26

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 J1 4 '26 120w

"It is an interesting story; the style is good and most of the characters stand out vividly."

+ Boston Transcript p3 J1 10 '26 320w

Reviewed by F. L. Wilkinson

Int Bk R p518 J1 '26 200w

Living Age 329:555 Je 5 '26 180w

"Throughout, the story is a little too loosely wrought; it is so good that we feel it should be better; acknowledging its imaginative truth, we involuntarily ask for something more." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 39:615 Ag 28 '26 180w

"It would not be difficult to turn some of the more violent episodes to derision; and yet atmosphere there is, compelling wherever it is not disappointing, and an atmosphere that cannot be conveyed save by a poet. Delight is rich in the sense of extravagant physical beauty, the beauty that makes men mad, and in the sense that such beauty inspires, of rich and happy and dangerous life." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 27:612 S 11 '26 120w

"In certain respects the story belongs on a low plane of literature; it is episodic and poorly contrived, it is indifferently written and much of it is frankly impossible. But Miss de la Roche has in her much humor and a little malice, which turn the course of the book away from virtuous romance toward rather pungent comedy."

+ — N Y Times p8 My 16 '26 480w

"The story from the first page lives vividly in the imagination. It has gravity and power, and is in touch with the unsensational, unemotional elements of life. Consequently minor happenings, the heroine's unravelling of her departed lover's jersey, for instance, which would seem theatrical in a book less firmly grounded on actualities, have an unchallengeable significance and propriety. Unfortunately, however, Mr. de la Roche's altogether admirable sobriety and reticence of treatment cuts both ways. It shows up his merits but it also illuminates his defects."

+ — Sat R 142:156 Ag 7 '26 450w

"For even a semi-sophisticated taste, so low a human plane must be heightened in some way if it is to seem significant. One thinks inevitably of other heroines who lived cramped lives in sterile surroundings, of Marie Chapdelaine, Tess, Miss Lulu Bett, the women in 'The Growth of the Soil.' By any such standard of comparison—and indeed by lower standards still—this story remains essentially undistinguished."

— Sat R of Lit 2:651 Mr 20 '26 150w

"A striking book which stands out sharply from among the rather sterile aggregate of Canadian fiction."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p548 Ag 19 '26 400w

DELL, ANTHONY. Isles of Greece. 226p 11 $10 Stokes [30s G. Bles]

914.99 Grecian archipelago

The travel diary of a visit to the islands of Corfu, Calymnos, Cos, and Rhodes, and to the mainland cities of Smyrna, Athens, and Corinth. The many full page illustrations are from photographs of exceptional artistry. It is a handsome volume for the private rather than the small public library.

Boston Transcript p1 O 23 '26 560w

"Observations on flowers and birds, with his sailing experiences at Corfu and elsewhere, form the best part of his book. Otherwise, apart from the classical legends, he relates in a disconnected style the ordinary experiences and impressions of travel."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p379 Je 3 '26 200w

DELL, ETHEL MAY (MRS G. T. SAVAGE). Man under authority. 419p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Cassell]

26-1831

The arrival of the beautiful foreign lady with her neurotic son and his surly attendant stirred Rickaby parish to its depths. Tongues buzzed when the vicar's interest in the lovely lady was discovered. But the Reverend Bill Quentin, being at times a man first and a parson afterward, pursued his suit undaunted by the air of mystery and suffering that hung about mother and son, and undeterred by the discreet hints of the good women of his parish. Only the faithful Miss Barnett shyly encouraged the affair, and when the crisis came she proved to be a better man than Bill.

"There is so much sentimentality in this new Dell novel that every fifteen minutes one comes close to the point of fainting because of the sheer sweetness and light of the hero and two heroines." D. F. G.

— Boston Transcript p2 F 6 '26 500w

"The great, rude, crass reading public is warned to stay away. As for the elect, they will be certain to like this book; it ranks as one of Miss Dell's best." R. W. Thompson

+ — Lit R p5 F 6 '26 320w

"One may not care for the kind of story she writes—it is not the kind that appeals to those who love literature. But it has its uses and its large and always delighted audience, as the sales of her books testify, and, considering the matter on that basis, it must be granted that she writes her kind of story very skillfully and, for those who like it, with deep and moving appeal."

N Y Times p14 Ja 24 '26 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p14 Ja 7 '26 200w

DELL, FLOYD. Intellectual vagabondage; an apology for the intelligentsia. (Doran's modern reader's bookshelf) 261p $1.25 Doran

814 Literature. Intellectuals. United States—Intellectual life 26-9153

"This book, which begins with a brief survey and explanation of certain eighteenth- and nineteenth-century attitudes toward life, held by the intellectual class and exemplified in its favorite literature, goes on to give a somewhat more elaborate account of the attitudes of that same class during my own lifetime. It is, though it may not seem to be so, a plea in defense of that generation of intelligent, sensitive and more or less creative young people to which I and most of my friends belong."—Preface

Booklist 22:409 J1 '26

Bookm 63:719 Ag '26 200w

"Written in an easy colloquial style and with an intimate touch that removes it from the field of exposition to that of autobiography, this little book is full of pith and provocation."

Babette Deutsch

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ap 11 '26 860w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 19 '26 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p128 D '26

"I am greatly pleased by Mr. Dell's coherent, frank and not too solemn diagnosis of the faiths and illusions of his youth, even though he does see himself as a still romantic herald of a dawn which was obscured with remarkable efficiency on August 4, 1914." Ernest Boyd

Ind 116:397 Ap 3 '26 1050w

DELL, FLOYD—Continued

Reviewed by N. B. Cunningham
Int Bk R p636 S '26 680w

Reviewed by S. A. Coblenz
Lit R p5 My 22 '26 500w

"It is scintillating, clever criticism, but unfortunately, in its flair for the delicate phrase and the poetic allusion, it skirts gracefully around its theme without ever coming into direct grip with it." V. F. Calverton

+ — Nation 122:585 My 26 '26 350w

"Frankly, I do not believe that Mr. Dell's book is of much value as a defence of the intelligentsia. Most of the genuinely important members of the group would avoid the types he portrays like the plague. An intellectual who is worth his salt is a person of tough mind, with a firm grasp upon ideas (which implies a disciplined intellect), and a culture that far transcends the narrow bounds of imaginative literature." C. H. Grattan

New Repub 47:145 Je 23 '26 200w

"With every desire to be impartial, we can but object, and strongly, to his misplacements of emphasis. If 'Intellectual Vagabondage' were what it purports to be, namely, an analysis and an appraisal of the forces, social and literary, that were making themselves effective during the first quarter of this century, we should not object. But it is not. 'Intellectual Vagabondage' is an autobiography of Floyd Dell. Mr. Dell's most obvious talent is facility in writing, not power of thought. And the facility with which the subject of the book is handled overshadows all else."

— N Y Times p2 Ap 4 '26 1800w

Outlook 143:187 Je 2 '26 180w

R of Rs 73:559 My '26 150w

St Louis 24:170 Je '26

Sat R of Lit 2:791 My 15 '26 550w

DELL, FLOYD. Love in Greenwich Village.
32ip $2 Doran

26-10802

A collection of short stories and verse about artists, poets, authors and others in love with life and love in Greenwich Village. Mr Dell knew the Village in its heyday. This was the real Village, the seventh in succession, he explains, the present one being the eighth.

Booklist 23:33 O '26

Reviewed by Babette Deutsch

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 J1 27 '26 680w

Reviewed by I. W. Laurence

Boston Transcript p4 J1 3 '26 1350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 D '26

Ind 116:727 Je 19 '26 70w

"Despite its glynish title, the volume contains nothing that will fetch the police. I would suggest that you read it—if you are interested in the Greenwich Village that was. I make no reference here to the other 'selling' word of the title, because, knowing the section at least as well as the book's author, I fear it smacks of incongruity." W. K. Bradley

Int Bk R p486 J1 '26 400w

"Mr. Dell sings of the 'rise of Greenwich Village' as a place sacred to the old pre-war radicals and moans what he regards as its inevitable collapse. . . He describes its glorious past with the mellow cheer of an alumnus recalling his undergraduate days. Nor does recollection bring a too sober tranquillity. This past is warm and aglow with life and loses none of its enchantment in transference to the written page." Landon Robinson

+ — Lit R p7 Je 5 '26 400w

"The book, although in every fundamental respect inconsequential, should prove highly entertaining to all but the ultra-serious."

N Y Times p8 My 23 '26 850w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p4m My 16 '26 1200w

"In 'Love in Greenwich Village' there is a new Floyd Dell. Gone is the iconoclast and rebel. Gone is the author of 'Moon-Calf.' The new Floyd Dell speaks with a different accent: gallant and gay, but poignantly so, above a brooding autumnal melancholy; pity has replaced scorn; there are unsuspected depths of tenderness; there is unexpected self-control. The Dellian ego is still prominent but is mellowing. Mr. Dell feels that he is growing old; he seems to regard himself as belonging to the past. We much prefer to regard him as one who has begun to find himself, who has completed his evolution from the intransigent writer for the Masses into the sensitive artist, and who is now more than ever ready for the future."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:918 J1 10 '26 600w

Springf'd Republican p7f J1 4 '26 250w

DELL, FLOYD. Old man's folly. 363p $2 Doran
26-17767

"'An Old Man's Folly' deals with America: with the stirrings of radical movements; with Ann Elizabeth who sacrifices much in her disbelief in war; with her lover who fought and her friends who didn't; with old Mr. Windle, whose charm and vagary make him one of the most delightful of fiction characters."—Bookm

Booklist 23:133 D '26

"It is the richest story Mr. Dell has constructed. It shows him a novelist of proportions which have never before been fulfilled. His canvas is broad. His is a story poignant, compelling, detached in its discussions of politics." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:223 O '26 220w

"A pleasant amiable story, a very literary story, with charm and whimsicality and spice. A very up-to-date story that ripples engagingly along and never once—no, not for one rash, discourteous savage moment—makes any of those disturbing revelations that exalt or terrify, stripping reality bare for the startled eye." A. B. Parsons

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 N 7 '26 500w

"It is pretty clear that his 'hero,' Mr. Windle, is a nice sentimental old man and but for his 'complex'—a modern invention—verges, as a type on the Dickensian, all the more because the author employs in his delineation some felicitous touches of humor which show a real gift for noble grotesque. With some compression the author might have achieved astonishing results." J: Cournos

Lit R p7 N 6 '26 900w

"This tale of an elderly match-maker is one that might very easily have degenerated into rank sentimentality had not the author done it with such fine restraint. It is the best of Mr. Dell's recent novels and the wistful Mr. Windle is one of his most delightful characterizations." T. M.

+ New Repub 48:307 N 3 '26 100w

"'An Old Man's Folly' put it in any category you choose—realism, romance, whimsy, fantasy—is not really a good book. It opens with extraordinary promise, but where the real story should begin it falls down and never afterwards picks itself up. It grows dull and sentimental, even a trifle mawkish."

— + N Y Times p6 O 24 '26 760w

"If his book rested its claims to attention upon its mild enthusiasm for burn-out causes, it might be dismissed in a paragraph. The first hundred pages, however, tell a different and far more arresting tale. Here, crisply presented and accurately observed, are the essential facts about the early life of the old man of the title. Unfortunately, the hero soon drops through a trap door, so far as the reader's interest is concerned, and with him go the only authentic and original elements in the story."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:364 D 4 '26 320w

Springf'd Republican p7f O 31 '26 550w

"The first half of the novel is the best. Windle is there shrewdly observed and well presented." A. A. S.

+ World Tomorrow 10:36 Ja '27 70w

DE LOI, RAIMON. Trails of the troubadours. 2 320p $3 Century

914.4 France—Description and travel. Troubadours. Middle ages 26-18748

The troubadours were a special group in the social organization of the Middle ages. Their home was in the south of France, where they flourished during the twelfth century, wandering from court to court. The author, in a series of trips thru central and southern France, follows in the footsteps of these men, especially the trails made vivid by such youths as Bernard de Ventadour, Bertrand de Born, Richard the Lion-Heart, Jaufre Rudel and Peire Vidal.

"It is a lively flippant book; as if an issue of 'The New Yorker' were being done on the Middle Ages. The style is facile, racy, charming, the history accurate."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 D 19 '26 800w

"A pleasant book, but hardly an original contribution to the accumulated data on the subjects, written with a mind to please the general reader to whom the name 'troubadour' has a glamorous sound."

Lit R p7 O 30 '26 100w

"A book of somewhat bewildering beauty, which attacks the reader's senses from so many angles that the general effect is as pleasantly disquieting as a song by Bertrand de Born, Bernard de Ventadour, or any other of those mediæval wanderers whose names are as musical as the word that designates their calling."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:471 D 25 '26 150w

DELTA, pseud. See Wentworth, P.

DELTEIL, JOSEPH. Joan of Arc; tr. from the French by Malcolm Cowley. 266p $3 Minton, Balch & co.

B or 92 Jeanne d'Arc, Saint 26-9394

"M. Delteil is an unrestrained and highly gifted young poet, and his Joan is such a one as might have perhaps been expected from the author of 'Les Cinq Sens.' She is earthy, almost stony, rugged and rustic, animal and yet, when all is said, still divine or heightened by the genius of crystallized vision. M. Delteil, in his pointed foreword confesses to his brutality of treatment, but he also tells us that Joan is, in a sense, himself; he knows her as intimately as he knows his own conscience, and he knows that she is immitigably French."—Lit R

"His is a poet's book, a dreamer's book, and to my mind a very splendid book indeed—a work of genius." Harrison Smith

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 My 16 '26 1400w

"From the standpoint of pure literary merit it is outstanding. As a biography, it is perhaps unique. The entire book is rhapsodic. The mystic element is not stressed, nor are Joan's unparalleled achievements. Rather is she depicted as a strong girl, brimming with good sense and good humor, liking a hearty meal and a hearty joke—positive—violent. . . This earthy quality is characteristic of the book." M. S. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 19 '26 560w
Cleveland Open Shelf p122 N '26

"M Delteil's biography of Joan of Arc is no half-tint; it is painted roundly—somewhat in the manner of a pert Rubens: but a biography it nevertheless is, if we accept the interpretation that biography is not only the articulation of the bare facts, but quite as validly, the rendering of authentic impressions of personality." C: K. Trueblood

Dial 81:337 O '26 950w

"In this most recent Jeanne d'Arc there is infinite humor, infinite variety, much grossness—Rabelaisianism, no doubt—and fine insight into the character of Joan, the essentially healthy and the essentially French country girl. And there can be little doubt that it is the style in M. Delteil's own book that exalts it far above any Jeanne d'Arc that has recently appeared from the pen of a Frenchman." Pierre Loving

+ — Lit R p5 Ap 26 '26 560w

"The book is a flower of French genius, presented in amazingly satisfying English by Mr. Cowley. It carries the skill of Bazalgette and Maurois over the line from history to fiction. . . . It is too thrilling a book to miss, but it falls short of greatness. It flies too obviously in the face of history. It cheapens martyrdom with sentimentality and coarsens it with fleshliness. But it fits with accuracy our impatience, our delight in strong sensation." A. W. Vernon

+ — New Repub 47:206 Jl 7 '26 1050w

"It is as poetry and not as history that one reads M. Delteil's 'Joan of Arc.' And it is in a peculiar kind of poetic prose that the author achieves a certain distinction."

+ N Y Times p4 Je 6 '26 1050w

"Joan of Arc has been canonized; she has been sentimentalized; she has been analyzed and diagnosed, and now, in the spirit of the times, she has been jazzed. Delteil has taken Joan's 'voices' and arranged them for trombone, saxophone and traps. Papini has used much the same method in his 'Life of Christ.' Both books are crude vulgarizations, full of a forced lyricism and bathos, signifying a reaction by certain of the literary left-wingers to the blasé sophistication of their neighbors. As a 'trick' book, however, Delteil's 'Joan of Arc' is interesting and amusing." Tom Davin

+ — N Y World p6m Ap 25 '26 560w

St Louis 24:253 S '26

"If his book is history, then it is history revived through clairvoyant passion; if it is a novel, then he has given it a new form through the most spirited invention. His 'Joan of Arc' is a shameless masterpiece that one reads as avidly as a detective story. The translator has happily in this case done everything possible. The text with its mixture of the latest colloquialism and the most obsolete terms, its brood of quarrelsome metaphors which are like angry bedfellows, seemed veritably inaccessible. It needed much nimbleness and virtuosity to attack this French and create the illusion of something written in English." Matthew Josephson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:869 Je 19 '26 1300w

DEMANGEON, ALBERT. British empire; a study in colonial geography; tr. by Ernest F. Row. 299p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Harrap]

325.342 Great Britain—Colonies. Imperial federation 25-21516

"Professor Demangeon provides the intelligent European with a survey of the great forces, mainly geographic, under which the empire has been formed, and a discussion of the remarkable manner in which the British have gone forth and adapted themselves to conditions in all parts of the globe. Here are the 'fundamentals' on which the expansion of England has been based, through which she has created 'the largest, the richest and the most populous colonial empire that the world has ever seen.'"—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"This suggestive and stimulating study has been written for the intelligent reading public of the Continent of Europe, not for scholars. . . . While the book contains little that is new, the discussion is well organized and full of suggestion. Wise and penetrating observations are frequent, some with a sharp thrust in them." S. K. Mitchell

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ja 17 '26 1150w

DEMANGEON, ALBERT—Continued

"It would be hard to find a more sympathetic account of the British Empire than that which was issued three years ago in French by the author of 'L'Empire Britannique'; English readers especially will be impressed with the fullness of knowledge, the breadth of view and the picturesqueness of style which Professor Demangeon has put into the work." E. N.
 + Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 680w

"Professor Demangeon's sympathetic study of the British Empire and its problems was well worth translating. He draws no hasty conclusions. He is content to survey the facts of its rise and development and present position, to draw attention to its points of strength and weakness, to distinguish carefully between the characters of its component parts and their differing relations to it, and to leave the reader to make his own prophecies, if he is so minded."

+ New Statesman 25:558 Ag 29 '25 150w

"The analysis is original. . . Throughout Professor Demangeon faces facts, and when criticism is invited he does not hesitate to give it. There is an excellent bibliographical list and appendix at the end of the book and a carefully compiled index. A word of praise is due to the translator."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p837 D 3 '25 280w

DENIS, LEON. Mystery of Joan of Arc; tr. by Arthur Conan Doyle. 233p il $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Murray]

B or 92 Jeanne d'Arc, Saint [24-30632]

The author of this work, which has been translated by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, is a Frenchman, a student of psychic research. He sees Joan of Arc as a great medium and her "voices" as spirit guides or controls. He claims, indeed to have had communications direct from the Maid, and the book concludes with a translation of one of these messages.

"The author, with an immense deal of preliminary ostentation of mysteries which he is about to clear away by his unique knowledge of 'psychic' realities, assures us that 'for the man who has lifted the veil of the invisible world the life of Joan is brilliantly clear.' His prestidigitation comes to absolutely nothing; and I myself am sickened by the solemn passes which he makes above his empty hat." Stuart Sherman

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 N 29 '25 1700w

"He gives a strange vitality to the familiar tale as it unfolds before us all the way from Domremy to Rouen. The critical part of the tale deals with the visions, and M. Denis boldly takes the ground that these must be considered from the psychic side as he considers them here."

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 12 '25 250w

"M. Leon Denis has written a fascinating and, in many respects, inspirational book—beautifully translated by Arthur Conan Doyle. It will be accepted unhesitatingly, doubtless, by all fervent believers in the doctrines of modern spiritualism. By religionists of other types it will be regarded as, at most, a possible and fairly plausible but insubstantial hypothesis. To all unprejudiced readers it will appear as an uncommonly sincere, able and suggestive document." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p6 My 15 '26 600w

"Aside from the thesis which the author desired to expound and prove, his account of Joan's life and death presents a graphic picture whose accuracy is attested by the sources to which he went for his facts. M. Denis writes in a simple and very beautiful style, whose grace and charm the translator has preserved with notable success."

+ N Y Times p20 Ja 17 '26 320w

St Louis 22:386 N '24

"This is worth reading as a very picturesque and dramatic biography of the Maid."

Times [London] Lit Sup p405 Je 26 '24 200w

DENNIS, ALFRED PEARCE. Romance of world trade. 493p il $5 Holt

380 Commerce. United States—Commerce. Agriculture—Economic aspects 26-11297

Underneath statistics and wrapped up within them the story of international barter carries authentic seeds of romance. These the author brings to full flower in these chapters, previously appearing as magazine articles, which describe the development of modern commerce, particularly that of Europe. The final chapters discuss essentially American problems. There are many illustrations and several maps.

"Written by one who has plenty of facts, knowledge, and experience. The style and method of presentation are disappointing."

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:923 N '26 130w

Booklist 23:111 D '26

"If ever a writer on trade contrived to bring romance into its realism, to find a place for imagination among its facts, and to make its figures count for something far more than mere quantities, the feat is performed by the author of this book. Masterly in its technical grasp of the subject, the volume abounds in those touches of a skilful writer who has found nothing in business, whether in the large or the small, whether a community affair or a world problem, that is alien to him." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 19 '26 850w

"Seriously and with due allowance for his effusive style and altogether prodigious enthusiasms, there is a great deal in what he says. . . The book as a whole suffers somewhat from a lack of cohesion and orderly development, doubtless due largely to the fact that the chapters in it were articles which appeared in the magazines. It gives the effect of having been thrown together without any attempt to tie in the separate parts with the thread of logical sequence or to prune away overlapping material." Evans Clark

— + N Y Times p17 Je 20 '26 2150w

"Mr. Dennis has written about world trade a book which is not merely interesting but exciting. A treatise which is far more than a dull compilation or survey; if after reading his book, one is unprepared to pass judgment on questions that have perplexed foreign statesmen, one may at least begin to understand the nature of their perplexities. This volume has the literary qualities of clearness and insight." C. H. Gaines

+ No Am 223:541 S '26 900w

DEUTSCH, BABETTE (MRS AVRAHAM YARMOLINSKY). Brittle heaven. 326p $2.50 Greenberg

26-15576

"'A Brittle Heaven' has practically nothing of plot. It is simply the story of a girl's life to the age of 25. Bianca was a child of middle-class parents, comfortably well off, conventional, indulgent. She grew up, intelligent and sensitive, in a middle-class environment which could not wholly satisfy her. She went to school and to college, experienced normal sexual emotions, plunged in and out of socialism, set up ideals and tore them down, was freed from certain problems and frustrated by others, wrote a book, married happily and had a child. The birth of her son began a new cycle of her existence, or so at least it seems to her when the book ends."—N Y Times

"Her words are often clumsy, often neither shapely nor sound. It is as if, being a good poet, she had thought to herself that prose did not need to be nursed so carefully, though her present critical prose belies this." Dorothy Van Doren

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p28 D 5 '26 450w

"Miss Deutsch writes clearly, fluently, crisply; a little too sharply, sometimes; seldom doubtfully dragging." R. H. A.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 O 9 '26 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 D '26

"It is faithfully and sympathetically written; it is filled with characters which one has no difficulty in believing; but the narrative distinctly fails to come to a focus. 'A Brittle Heaven' is too thick for a slice of life, and not meaty enough for a soul-searching sandwich."

+ — Nation 123:434 O 27 '26 70w

"Here in a sense is a document for the future, as thoroughly representative of a type of woman shaped by our time as 'Babbitt' is representative of a type—and of course a thoroughly differing type—of man. That principally, is the great virtue of Miss Deutsch's work."

N Y Times p28 S 26 '26 620w

"Has merits, but hardly a full claim to excellence. In the first place, it is a narrative whose details are inevitably forgotten as soon as the book has been read; secondly, it goes by fits and starts, in a manner more like the eccentric progress of actual events than the continuous ascent toward a climax that we should find in literary art. But there are undeniable good qualities."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:471 D 25 '26 260w

DEVINE, EDWARD THOMAS. Coal; economic problems of the mining, marketing and consumption of anthracite and soft coal in the United States; facts and remedies. 448p $3 Am. review service press, 509 North East st., Bloomington, Ill.

338.2 Coal industry. Coal mines and mining 26-26134

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"The book, while scientific in method, is thoroughly readable, and, therefore, should interest the general consumer of coal." G. M. Janes

+ Am Econ R 16:104 Mr '26 70w

"The account which he gives is, on the whole, a very enlightening one, but is weakened for scientific use by a rather sentimental bias which is displayed at several points in his treatment. His suggested remedies do not make a very impressive showing; it is doubtful, however, whether anyone else could point out better ones." F. N. House

+ — Am J Soc 31:825 My '26 160w

"The best picture of the coal industry and its present problems yet published. . . At all times the author has kept in mind a fair, impartial attitude in presenting the facts and has interpreted them rationally." F. S. Warner

+ Ann Am Acad 124:203 Mr '26 520w

Booklist 22:232 Mr '26

"Sets out frankly, simply and lucidly the facts of the industry, its ills and their possible cures. Seldom are the complex factors in industry made so easy of comprehension; still more seldom with so just a balance and so humane an outlook." E. D.

+ Econ J 36:88 Mr '26 1400w

"The author is to be congratulated for including the many graphic illustrations which accompany the text. No person interested in the coal problem can afford to miss these two volumes."

+ Hist Outlook 17:194 Ap '26 480w

"The book contains numerous graphs and illustrations, is inclusive, 'popular,' and well written. For the layman and the average reader it is the best book relating to the coal problem in its several phases." H. A. Millis

+ J Pol Econ 34:394 Je '26 200w

Reviewed by Evans Clark

N Y Times p3 F 14 '26 800w

DEVOL, GEORGE H. Forty years a gambler on the Mississippi. 288p $2 Holt

B or 92 Gambling. Mississippi river—Description and travel 26-6044

A professional gambler and famous fighter turns author to tell the story of his exploits along the Mississippi at the time of paddle ships and river pirates.

"The book is a sequence of incidents rather than a continuous narrative and contains many thrilling stories spoiled of their dramatic interest by the manner of telling."

— + Booklist 22:373 Je '26

"Aside from the personal ego the book is very interesting. It requires a fertile imagination to fully appreciate it, however, for unfortunately Mr. Devol lacks the finesse in writing that blessed his work with cards." F. J.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ap 10 '26 620w

"In Devol's life there must have been romance and color, but his book reads like the facts and figures of a bank statement."

— Ind 116:727 Je 19 '26 70w

Lit R p8 My 1 '26 200w

"Through all runs that heady, stirring quality which makes 'Huckleberry Finn' a great novel. Life on the Great River, and all that it implied before and after the Civil War, the 'steamboat age' of innocence, has an engaging and retrospective charm, which loses nothing in Devol's unabashed memories."

+ N Y Times p11 Ap 4 '26 2200w

Reviewed by Paul Sifton

N Y World p6m Mr 28 '26 1100w

Outlook 143:114 My 19 '26 400w

"For a reader interested in the background and color of the day the book is infuriating. The sort of book one pounces on in a public library, expecting to see the Mississippi steamers go puffing by, all the racket and splendor of the levees come roaring from its pages. And one finds nothing."

— Sat R of Lit 2:759 My 1 '26 450w

Springf'd Republican p14 Je 2 '26 700w

DE VOTO, BERNARD AUGUSTINE. Chariot of fire. 356p $2.50 Macmillan

26-18161

Ohio Boggs is a worthless drunkard turned prophet. His religious fanaticism sweeps a hard-working, hell-fearing Illinois community into a prolonged camp meeting. The Brashears, father and mother, get religion hard and turn on their daughters to force them into the fold. Encouraged by her lover Rose resists, but is overborne by the hypnotic influence of the burly prophet, Sue, the younger sister, holds on to her sanity longer against the onslaught of religious hysteria, but she too is made subject to the will of Ohio Boggs until a bullet puts an end to his madness and sets both sisters free.

"Violent, raw, melodramatic—but it has quite often a ring of truth in it and almost always an element of plausibility. Mr. De Voto has constructed his story on a sound foundation of group psychology, on a knowledge of the time and place involved and on a cool perception of the most plausible course which hot religious passions like these would follow. His Ohio Boggs is a powerful figure." L. Kronenberger

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 O 24 '26 560w

Boston Transcript p7 N 10 '26 300w

"There is plenty of action in the novel, and much sound thought and penetrating analysis. With 'The Chariot of Fire,' Mr. De Voto has earned a distinguished place among the younger novelists."

+ N Y Times p6 O 31 '26 750w

Reviewed by R. L. Trowbridge, Jr.

N Y World p9m O 17 '26 250w

"Mr. De Voto has written an able study of religious frenzy and of the temperament of the religious fanatic and organizer; he has combined it with a good, if not highly distinguished, picture of frontier life and a well-knit love story. The result is a novel of varied interest and a real addition to the fiction of pioneer society." Allan Nevins

DE VOTO, BERNARD A.—Continued

+ Sat R of Lit 3:194 O 16 '26 600w

DEWING, ELIZABETH BARTOL (MRS CARL BENDER). My son John. 293p $2 Minton, Balch & co.

26-16330

In supposed collaboration with John Lord's mother Miss Dewing writes this novel in the form of a biography of her hero. From a varied sheaf of documents—fragments of schoolboy compositions, letters to and from John Lord, and the statements of individuals who knew him intimately in one or another phase of his career of youthful distinction and premature eclipse—the story is compiled, and a many-sided character is portrayed. The treatment is disjointed, but effective and unique.

"We may maintain that Miss Dewing has done a fine thing, written an excellent novel, portrayed a complete character superbly, and has even come in sight of the Gods of Great Literature. There is a noticeable restraint in her style that will irk the reader in a proportionate degree according to his judgment of how restrained writing should be." L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 2 '26 600w

"The book is cleverly written. Why, then, does it fail? The author has not herself been sufficiently stirred to move us deeply. We neither love nor hate John Lord. There is a complacent varnish over him. It is not that some genius would not make such gestures; it is that we are not interested in this genius. We expected of E. B. Dewing, who has a clever and versatile mind, a more believable book." Laura Benét

— Nation 123:457 N 3 '26 250w

"Miss Dewing, possessing a gracefully up-holstered, but by no means striking style, is quite unable to disguise her voice and speak convincingly through the half-dozen mouths to which she assigns the rôle of collaborators."

+ New Repub 48:201 O 6 '26 200w

"As long as Miss Dewing's idea was a means toward the production of an interesting, convincing novel, we can afford to overlook the fact that the idea itself is not very valuable. The author is rash, almost foolhardy, in her conception of the story."

+ N Y Times p22 S 12 '26 900w

N Y World p9m O 3 '26 160w

"Another ultra-feminine and sentimental tale rather oddly and circuitously told through letters." H. W. Boynton

— Outlook 144:215 O 13 '26 70w

"This isn't at all a bad book, for readers who like a literary atmosphere, and it certainly merits serious criticism. In its own peculiar fashion it is very well told, and John Lord seems in Miss Dewing's clever hands always about to become real, which is enough to hold one's attention throughout. His life-story is a very gallant effort to achieve a difficult end. If he fails to be basically convincing it is probably because it would take a novelist as great as himself to make his greatness seem real."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:365 D 4 '26 520w

"My Son John" has a certain interest and satirical plausibility."

Springf'd Republican p7f S 26 '26 180w

DIBBLE, ROY FLOYD. Mohammed. 257p $3 Viking press

B or 92 Mohammed

26-17132

From scant and contradictory source material Mr Dibble has produced a readable and often entertaining account of Mohammed and his dual career of marriage and the mosque.

Booklist 23:129 D '26

"I am so prejudiced a Moslem that I consider it blasphemy; and as a mere human being I consider it wretchedly bad form. There is in this book no scholarship. There is in this book not the slightest understanding of that man who, True Prophet or False, somehow managed to create a system of religion, laws and ethics that survived him for twelve centuries as a living, missionary force. . . There is in this book a complete lack of appreciation of the extraordinary, spiritual significance attached to Mohammed's life and teachings." Achmed Adullah

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 O 31 '26 480w

"Mohammed is so lost in the idea of Mohammedanism, to most of us, at least, that a live, interesting human biography such as Mr. Dibble gives us, is a highly acceptable piece of work." A. L.

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 9 '26 430w

"Mr. Dibble is one of our best writers of informal biography. In view of the fact that an understandable, unbiased, and not too theological account of the Arabian prophet's life has been sadly lacking, his choice of material could hardly have been more fortunate. Ten chapters of delightful reading have been packed into some 250 pages. The book is filled with the romance of a self-made man—one who, despite his halo, is sometimes perplexingly human." A. E. Meyer

+ Int Bk R p760 N '26 650w

Reviewed by T: L. Masson

Lit R p7 O 9 '26 950w

"Mr. Dibble is no Arabic scholar, and he has been content to use the standard sources of information without going behind them. His book is as free of notes, bibliographies, and acknowledgments of indebtedness as if it were a novel. And far from losing himself in the mysteries of religion, he writes as secularly now as when formerly he wrote about John L. Sullivan. . . His history is a kind of heroic comedy. . . Understanding that reverence is a quality but not always a virtue, he treads now and then not only on Mohammedan toes but on the toes of all religionists." Carl Van Doren

Nation 123:456 N 3 '26 600w

"From time immemorial small boys have thought it a huge joke to steal up to a great man's door, ring his bell and then run away again. Similarly, it is a delightful prank to poke fun at Mohammed when you happen to reside at a safe distance from his desert. But let Mr. Dibble repeat in Arabia the pretty epigrams with which he regales America and the last laugh will be on the side of Ibn Saud."

N Y Times p3 O 24 '26 650w

"We unreservedly recommend 'Mohammed' as the season's biography. Although its subject denotes a departure for English and American writers, there is no reason why our biographers should not extend the boundaries of our knowledge." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p4m S 19 '26 1000w

Outlook 144:314 N 3 '26 150w

"Mr. Dibble offers no preface in his book, but his purpose seems to imply a wish to explain Mohammed to a generation trained in the Mencken colloquial. Thus primitive anthropomorphism is made real to common people when he tells them that 'Sharp eared Allah aloof in his own particular Heaven heard the prayer.' Set before us in this way the portrait of Mohammed however piquant as railery, is incongruous and unconvincing." F. W. Williams

+ Sat R of Lit 3:465 D 25 '26 1250w

Wis Lib Bul 22:292 N '26

DIBDIN, EDWARD RIMBAULT. Raeburn. (British artists) 158p il $1.50 Stokes [5s P. Allan]

759.2 Raeburn, Sir Henry

26-26297

This monograph on the great Scottish portrait painter sums up contemporary estimates on the work of the artist, and indicates Raeburn's influence on his contemporaries. There are eight illustrations of his work.

Booklist 22:319 My '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:144 Mr '26

"We could have done with a little more criticism and a little less scholarship; but it is not easy to find much to say about Raeburn's work. This book, however, deserves its place in one of the most valuable series of the many now being published whose object is to supply the demand for cheap and handy art books."

+ — Sat R 141:63 Ja 16 '26 180w

"Mr. Dibdin has made shift, with much reading and original research, to produce an excellent and reliable account, but it cannot be honestly said that the result is interesting. Raeburn has his place in the admirable series of which this book is the latest publication—a most distinguished place—and the fact that the book on him is dull is the result rather of the painter than the writer."

Times [London] Lit Sup p863 D 10 '25 200w

DICKENS, CHARLES. Some Dickens women; by Sir Edwin Charles; with a foreword by G. K. Chesterton. 350p $4 Stokes [16s T. W. Laurie]

An ardent Dickens lover has selected some of the novelist's most representative and popular feminine characters and told the story of each in Dickens's own words, for the most part, knitting the bits of narrative together with brief explanations. The studies are done with sympathy and enthusiasm. Contents: Introduction; Mrs Nickleby; Mrs Lirriper's lodgers; The deserted bride; The marchioness; Sairey Gamp; Mrs Sparsit's staircase; Madame Defarge; Our Missis; Miss Wardle's elopement; David's Dora; Lizzie Hexam; Betsy Trotwood; Dickens and the softer sex.

New Statesman 27:562 Ag 28 '26 320w

"Dickens is so popular that this title is sure to attract, but Mr. Charles, as a writer on Dickens, does not rank with Gissing or Mr. Chesterton; rather with the numerous simple enthusiasts who write for uncritical lovers of Dickens."

Times [London] Lit Sup p514 J1 29 '26 260w

DICKINSON, GOLDSWORTHY LOWES. International anarchy, 1904-1914. 505p $4 Century [17s 6d Allen & U.]

940.311 European war, 1914-1918—Causes. Europe—Politics. World politics 26-11142

The author's thesis is that whenever and wherever the anarchy of armed states exists war becomes inevitable and "that modern war, with all the resources of science at its disposal, has become incompatible with the continuance of civilization." He analyzes the causes and motives of war and in particular the series of events and general situation which led up to the Great war.

"On the whole no keener, more profound, or more dispassionate analysis of the international situation which caused the war—which in fact rendered it inevitable—has been made. It is based upon an intensive study of the history of the period immediately antedating the outbreak of the war and upon the study of a mass of official documents and other materials recently made available. A bibliographical list of these materials is not the least of the merits of the book." J. W. Garner

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:885 N '26 800w

Booklist 23:26 O '26

"The book is written by a great prose artist with an eloquent simplicity that not more than three living Englishmen can equal. If I had to name one book on the origins of the war that statesmen and publicists ought to be compelled to read, it is this. To have written it is a fine public service." H. J. Laski

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 J1 4 '26 350w

Reviewed by Arthur Pound

Ind 117:135 J1 31 '26 1100w

"This vigorous, eloquent and entirely logical and practicable plea for a better social world is rightly addressed to the young. On minds atrophied in the encysted acceptance of outworn shibboleths and standards basically false, it will make no impression. Yet it should aid yeast of constructive value to aid 'that new world fermenting beneath the exciting political surface.'" F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p4 Ag 7 '26 820w

"While dramatic interest is of small consequence in such a work, the degraded story of international quarrels, fears, and bargains, always with the threat of deaths by tens of thousands held in reserve, grows more and more absorbing as the author proceeds, with deepening eloquence, in his analysis. His comments upon the documents he cites seem to be dictated by the situation itself. Their terrible ironies are shaped by the unaided facts as no literary invention could shape them. But there is intellectual height in their simplicity. So might the abstract conscience of mankind lament with itself in bitter accusation."

+ Living Age 330:696 S 25 '26 620w

"No more impartial account has yet appeared of the diplomatic background of the World War. Not the slightest trace of partisanship, conscious or unconscious, to be found on any page. Mr. Dickinson unravels diplomatic mazes with the simplicity of one who has conquered his material, and the style is felicity itself. Like his master, Plato, Mr. Dickinson is artist as well as teacher; he, too, has the power of charming his readers into the paths of knowledge." J. S. Schapiro

+ Nation 123:39 J1 14 '26 1050w

"Mr Dickinson's account is masterly; it omits, I think, nothing of first class importance, and includes nothing irrelevant; it is absolutely clear and (I can only speak for myself) extremely interesting." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 38:778 Mr 6 '26 1000w

"Absence of bias is the most refreshing quality of International Anarchy. Too often the writer whose eyes have been opened by exposure of Allied diplomacy flies to the opposite extreme and will believe no good of his own side. Not so Mr. Dickinson, whose only bias is for peace and whose only passion is for the truth. He refrains from those cheap flings and jeers which make so much post-war discussion of war origins almost as irritating as the most unblushing propaganda. Good, sound, dignified writing is always a merit but never more so than in a controversial work." J. Bakeless

+ New Repub 48:23 Ag 25 '26 1050w

New Statesman 26:622 F 27 '26 130w

"The latest fruitage of the profound researches of G. Lowes Dickinson, Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, into the history of diplomacy. In 'War, Its Nature, Cause and Cure,' 'The European Anarchy' and other books he has done much to show in clear relief the inner workings of the system of plots and counterplots which have formed the main corpus of the relations among some of the principal States of Europe." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p3 Je 6 '26 2150w

R of Rs 73:669 Je '26 230w

"Very seldom have I been so moved by a book, and never before by a history book. The volume gets its power from Lowes Dickinson's apparently artless directing of the evidence. These great actors in this drama, whose activities we watch, never knew what they were doing, but with the light the author throws on the play we surmise in increasing horror the oblique and hidden tendency of every word and act of theirs." H. M. Tomlinson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:849 Je 12 '26 2700w

DICKINSON, GOLDSWORTHY L.—Continued

"Throughout the language and argument are admirably lucid—are indeed pellucid; and it cannot be said that the a priori creed, which is frankly confessed, leads to perversion either of fact or interpretation. But when his work is done, his moral adduced, his analysis complete, Mr. Lowes Dickinson allows himself a few pages of 'Conclusion.' It is a thousand pities they were added. They cannot but leave the impression that after all the zeal for humanity is at least a little blurred by political bitterness and prejudice."

+ — Spec 136:sup716 Ap 17 '26 820w

"His scholarly and laborious narrative, which has clearly been not a labour of love but an uncongenial task undertaken on the urgent call of conscience and of duty, well deserves careful study. He has a full command of the very extensive literature on the subject, and it is in both matter and treatment much superior to most of the similar works which come to us from this and other countries. We know of no book which so nearly attains the spirit of true impartiality and in which also the highest standard of critical accuracy is so well maintained."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p127 F 25 '26 2250w

Wis Lib Bul 22:296 N '26

DIEHL, LUDWIG. Sardonic smile; being the auth. tr. of Ahasuerus by Louise Collier Willcox; the romantic life of Heinrich Heine. 299p il $2.50 Houghton

Heine, Heinrich—Fiction 26-17292

This novelized story of Heinrich Heine pictures first his rather solitary boyhood as a friendless little Jew, son of a small merchant in a German town. Later student days were made happy thru the forming of Harry's first intimate friendships. After this comparatively happy season came lean years of spasmodic effort and indifferent success, with bitter moods in the ascendant, followed by a period of rainbow-chasing and poverty in Paris. During the last long months of wretched illness and near-destitution, which form the closing scenes of his life, Heine's poetic genius flared once more and as fast as he composed them, his verses were taken down by the gentle amanuensis whose devotion soothed the broken man's last days.

"'The Sardonic Smile' is an unsophisticated, well-written, readable romance of the Berthold Auerbach type—if you are still lingering there in these days of de-mything—but it is certainly not Heinrich Heine that I found in that book." B: de Casseres

Lit R p3 N 20 '26 820w

"This record of a strangely agitated and pathetic life—has been depicted by Ludwig Diehl with unusual insight, skill and even tenderness. He is not the hero-worshipping biographer who dwells only upon his subject's greatness; he is perhaps even too careful not to overlook Heine's faults; but he succeeds in giving us a well-rounded picture of a strange yet curiously attractive personality; and he writes with a power, a beauty and an appealing quality that should recommend the book to a wide audience." S. A. Coblenz

+ N Y Times p9 O 31 '26 1000w

DIGBY, BASSETT. Mammoth and mammoth-hunting in north-east Siberia. 224p il $4 Appleton [12s 6d Witherby]

599.6 Mammoth. Siberia—Description and travel [26-19027]

Tho the mammoth disappeared from the earth thousands of years ago specimens of this huge hairy elephant have occasionally been discovered perfectly preserved since prehistoric times in the natural cold storage of the frozen tundras of northern Siberia. The book gives an account of the evolution and extinction of this mastodon of the Pleistocene period and describes some discoveries of the mammoth in recent times. The author also gives an account of his experiences in hunting for mammoth tusks.

Booklist 23:116 D '26

"A curious, chaotic book." L: S. Gannett
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 D 26 '26 400w

"The story is as fascinating as a romance, and should be interesting to any intelligent person, whether a scientist or only a casual student of past wonders of the world. Interesting illustrations make the book even more valuable."

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 9 '26 420w

"It is one of those books which, not restricted to a narrower circle of scientific specialists, makes its subject real and interesting to the majority of intelligent people; a popularization in the best sense." F: H. Martens

+ Lit R p2 O 2 '26 280w

"The literature of the Mammals has produced many books of merely ephemeral interest, and much that is quite negligible. But it is long since a better book of this kind has appeared, for it contains a wide and varied appeal, and is packed with excellent reading."

+ Nation and Ath 39:49 Ap 10 '26 500w

"A book with such a title is tempting, and Mr. Bassett Digby's book about the hairy monster is most entertaining."

+ New Statesman 26:679 Mr 13 '26 660w

"One cannot read it without sharing much of the author's enthusiasm for his task." Dale Warren

+ Sat R of Lit 3:468 D 25 '26 90w

"Mr. Digby has brought together a large part of what is known about the mammoth and its habits, and has vivified his account from his own knowledge of Siberia and experience as an ivory hunter in these desolate regions."

Times [London] Lit Sup p427 Je 24 '26 500w

DINGMAN, CHARLES FRANCIS. Selling construction service. 158p il $2.50 McGraw

659 Advertising—Building trades. Salesmen and salesmanship 25-25536

"A small volume dealing in elementary fashion with advertising and selling the services of contractors and construction companies."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:317 My '26

"For the contractor who wants to know something of the publicity methods practicable for his use and to learn the elements of writing advertisements and sales letters and of preparing pamphlets describing work done, this little book contains much that is helpful."

+ Eng N 95:1003 D 17 '26 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:88 F '26

DITCHFIELD, PETER HAMPSON. London's West End. 315p il $5 Houghton [16s J. Cape] 914.21 London—Description 26-26298

"Mr. Ditchfield in his new book leaves the city behind and goes westward from Charing Cross Road, through St. Martin's Road, taking in the Haymarket, St. James's Street, Piccadilly, Mayfair, Hyde Park, Belgravia, Bloomsbury, Holland House, Kensington and many other famous sights of London's West End. He goes along in leisurely way, digging up all manner of antiquarian lore about the names and the histories of streets, buildings, localities, identifying them with the lives and deeds of celebrities in other centuries from the more recent past far back to the days of the Romans."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:325 My '26

"It is a chronicle round reading and preserving for its descriptions of historic scenes and for its sketches of multitudes of men and women who have made the place the capital of all the world." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 13 '26 1850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p43 Ap '26

"Mr. Ditchfield is a topographer in the popular sense, and addresses himself to the general reader. His book is in a familiar mode, and does not claim to break new ground. It is, however, apart from its author's annoying habit of indulging in irrelevant moralizing, a pleasant enough medley of description, history, and anecdote."

+ Nation and Ath 38:586 Ja 23 '26 70w

"Intended primarily to stimulate Londoners to more interest in their own city and set them to exploring and visiting its streets and buildings, Mr. Ditchfield's book is so rich in its antiquarian lore and has been born out of such love and enthusiasm that the American who already knows London fairly well or who hopes to know it better will find it not only a useful but a fascinating work."

+ N Y Times p2 F 21 '26 450w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

Spec 136:875 My 22 '26 40w

"If the details as he passes from street to street are sometimes a little crowded the general impression is clear and makes an admirable introduction to the study of London topography."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p887 D 17 '25 100w

DIX, DOROTHY, pseud. (MRS ELIZABETH MERIWETHER GILMER). Dorothy Dix—her book; every-day help for every-day people. 347p $2 (8s 6d) Funk

170 Conduct of life. Marriage 26-15532

Writing in the vernacular, and with much insight and sympathy Miss Dix tackles the bristling problems of human relationships. Her book dispenses sane, wholesome counsel to young people before and after marriage, and to fathers, mothers, and in-laws, beset with the difficulty of getting on with one another.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 N 28 '26 230w

"Throughout the book one feels a kindliness of spirit, a broadmindedness of nature and a good warm heart. The most popular woman journalist in the world? Well, she deserves to be."

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 9 '26 400w

"It should be declared at the outset that this is not one of the books that can be read 'at a sitting.' Yet it must be confessed by this reviewer that it is the kind of book one reads and rereads as one talks and retalks over the same old questions with a friend, with whom one agrees and disagrees, but with whom one always is content to talk—because such a friend 'says something' and does not merely 'talk.'" R: Duffy

+ Int Bk R p702 O '26 1250w

"In this book she takes up sixty or more phases of the difficulties that many people find in their daily lives and discusses the attitude one ought to have toward them and the methods by which such problems can best be solved. She goes at each one in a genial but understanding spirit, does not hesitate sometimes to strike out ruthlessly straight from the shoulder, frequently indulges in a humorous twinkle or a sarcastic note and writes always in the vigorous vernacular of the day."

+ N Y Times p21 S 19 '26 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p635 S 23 '26 150w

DIXON, ROYAL, and EDDY, BRAYTON. Personality of water-animals. 254p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Brentano's

591.92 Marine fauna. Fresh-water fauna 25-19933

"In this book we read about the romance of water animals, their quaint and curious methods of courtship, their domestic arrangements, their friendships, their instincts—and here, as everywhere else in nature, the dividing line between instinct and reason is thoroughly elusive."—Lit R

"These stories, all true, out-fiction the most incredible fiction. The illustrations are almost as wonderful as is the story itself, unfolding visions of the life of water animals our eyes would never else behold, and of which the most winged imagination could not conceive." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 9 '26 680w

"Whether one is an evolutionist or not, a book such as Messrs. Dixon and Brayton have written is bound to prove interesting. All its reader needs is an eager curiosity about living things. Written for adults and older children, it holds much sheer fascination." H. B.

+ Lit R p12 D 12 '25 160w

Spring'd Republican p10 Je 23 '26 480w

"It is clear from some of the experiences which they relate that the authors could write on nature much better, and the prevalence of the false attitude towards natural history of which this book is an example is much to be regretted."

—Times [London] Lit Sup p145 F 25 '26 380w

DOBIE, CHARLES CALDWELL. Less than kin. 405p $2 Day

26-16195

For years Adrienne was content to be Mammy's little girl and to have no second name. Later Ambereyes served as surname. But presently the young girl was asking anxiously, who were her parents and where, and why did she live alone with Selina Parsons, devoted as the mulatto undoubtedly was? Even friendship with gentle, fiery Karl and the books and music he brought her could not quiet or appease these questionings. Then Adrienne was introduced to the circle of the Sinclairs, once of the South now of San Francisco, and bit by bit the dramatic facts of her birth were made known to her, and the reason for Selina Parsons's hold on the Sinclairs was disclosed. Less than kin to the family the old mulatto was to become their gloating Nemesis. Meanwhile her young ward has a romantic adventure and, as the story closes, is left to choose between the careers of marriage and music.

Reviewed by Lorine Pruette

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 O 10 '26 860w

"The book is ambitious, solidly wrought, dramatic, far beyond any that Mr. Dobie has yet done." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p4 O 23 '26 580w

"Charles Caldwell Dobie, who loves and knows California intimately, has captured the elusive charm of his native state in his latest novel. Mr. Dobie does not say so, but to any one familiar with San Francisco's history it is evident that in Selina Parsons, the dominant figure of the story, he has reconstructed the career of an actual person, the notorious Mammy Pleasant. By simply lifting this colorful personality out of her authentic environment and by putting her between the covers of his book, Mr. Dobie had a fascinating story ready-made to his hand."

N Y Times p18 Ja 9 '27 360w

"Less Than Kin,' unsatisfactory as it is in parts, is indubitably interesting. . . Mr. Dobie has his material well in hand and his purpose clearly in mind; he has carefully articulated his incidents, and introduced none that is not salient to his story. Indeed, if any objection can be brought against him on this score it is on the ground that the technique of his narrative is a little too deliberate, as though the story had been constructed around its incidents rather than the incidents around the story." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 3:116 S 18 '26 580w

DOBREE, BONAMY. Essays in biography, 1680-1726. 362p $5 Oxford [12s 6d Milford]

824 Etheredge, Sir George. Vanbrugh, Sir John. Addison, Joseph [26-3483]

"Only a brief period of English life and letters is covered by Bonamy Dobrée in his 'Essays in Biography.' Its epoch is from 1680 to 1726, and his object in assembling his discussions of its significant figures is to bring out what he calls 'the disharmony of the individual with society,' to that end deliberately selecting men 'who did not altogether belong to their age.' These men notably are Sir George Etheredge, who is a true child of his time only when the place is London or Paris; Vanbrugh, who should have been born fifty years later in a less factious age, and Addison, who really belongs 'among those eminent (as distinguished from great) Victorians, to whom the appearance of consistency was too important to hazard in simple dealing, and who, although ambitious, contrived to play for safety.'"—Boston Transcript

Bookm 63:494 Je '26 130w

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ap 26 '26 1350w

"The scope of these essays is limited, many of them are special pleas that are entertaining, although by no means convincing, and in the liveliest sort of manner they give a series of careful portraits of three famous Englishmen." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 20 '26 620w

"Written in suave and various English, his tales of seventeenth- and eighteenth-century lives are evidence of the delicacy and the human importance of which biography is capable."

+ Dial 81:265 S '26 150w

"The three essays have the virtue of scholarship and of informality. They are brisk with atmosphere and personalities." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p8 Ag 14 '26 550w

Nation 123:110 Ag 4 '26 50w

"It is an admirable book, not, perhaps, easy to read nor obviously amusing, but a genuine attempt to make biography a department of real literature. Mr. Dobrée would, I think, not have written this book exactly in its present form if 'Eminent Victorians' had never been written. But he is only in the vaguest or purely temporal sense a follower of Mr. Strachey." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 38:404 D 12 '25 1150w

"At a first reading of these Essays, criticism is charmed away by the admiration and delight with which one watches the author at his business of reconstructing the characters of Vanbrugh and Addison, entering into their finest feelings, slipping round the voluminous twists and whorls of their souls' history like a skilful surgeon guiding his knife through the articulation of a bone. To play the novelist without having the novelist's liberty of invention requires a consummate mastery of words."

+ New Statesman 26:337 D 26 '25 1150w

"Mr. Dobrée's new book is undoubtedly the best he has written, and raises considerable hopes of further rapid advances. Mr. Dobrée has made intelligible as men and respectable as artists a body of English dramatists who too often have been regarded as a regrettable incident in our literature, depraved monsters who dabbled delightfully in vice." R: Aldington

+ Sat R of Lit 2:882 Je 26 '26 950w

Spec 135:933 N 21 '25 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p855 D 10 '25 1300w

DODD, CATHERINE ISABEL. Farthing spinster. 307p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Jarrolds]

[25-19439]

A curse follows the Jellis Farthings; she who bears the name will never marry but end her days in loneliness. The book follows the career of the Farthing spinster in five generations with their changing background of English social life. The first is the genteel product of the late eighteenth century who discovers the curse, and the last is the modern English flapper who destroys it.

Booklist 22:329 My '26

"Even after such a lengthy and charming acquaintanceship I must confess that spinsters are no more plausible than they were. But they are far more pleasing, though we are skeptical enough to wonder whether, if a hand less light than Miss Dodd's were laid upon them, their pure sweetness and dignity would not reveal itself to be a practical alloy of less wholesome emotions."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Mr 7 '26 650w

"There is a deal of philosophy woven into this very understanding novel." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 3 '26 1300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p39 Mr '26

"Her story people, young and old, are little more than puppets, and her younger generation, including young Jellis, are simply impossible. Certainly spinsters deserve a more interesting life than Miss Dodd has given them, and one can't help believing they live it." R. L. Kurzman

— Int Bk R p270 Mr '26 480w

"In the case of the world against its old maids, defense counsel would do well to cross-examine this witness who, her publishers say, proves her literary kinship to Rebecca West, Sheila Kaye-Smith, and Margaret Kennedy. Distance lends enchantment to this kinship, if any." Warner Olivier

— Lit R p12 F 6 '26 480w

New Repub 46:339 My 5 '26 220w

"The Farthing Spinster is careful, it is delicate, it is elaborate, it is just a little tedious: the shades are so fine, and there are so many of them, that one would welcome almost any crudity except the solitary one inflicted upon us by the author." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:168 My 23 '25 450w

"First of all work out a curse. Then take judicious extracts from any old-fashioned cook book; descriptions from Godey's Ladies' Book; other appropriate passages from nineteenth century literature pertaining to education and gardening. Season this with the ironic generational type of comment, and this will give you nine-tenths of the manner and matter of Miss Dodd's novel. It is worth reading for the other tenth, which is a delicately philosophical message, couched often in quaint terms, often aphoristical, sometimes downright affected, on life in general and spinsterhood in particular."

+ N Y Times p9 F 7 '26 950w

N Y World p7m Ja 31 '26 30w

"We have no hesitation, despite its intimate revelations of the maiden heart, in recommending this book by a lady not only to members of her own sex, but no less heartily to discriminating gentlemen."

+ Outlook 142:379 Mr 10 '26 280w

"A markedly well written story, it yet seems to us a bore, marred by redundancies, avoidable repetitions, an excess of ancestral anecdotes."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:548 F 6 '26 220w

"The whole story is very charming reading, and the account of the school kept by Miss Farthing and Miss Jellis Farthing about the time of Waterloo is very attractive."

+ Spec 134:898 My 30 '25 120w

"Miss Dodd's sentimental history of five generations of women, from 1789 to the present day, suffers chiefly from monotony; she scarcely differentiates at all between types and periods, and she has such numbers of female characters all drawn with the pale-coloured, flat elegance of an eighteenth-century fashion book, that the reader becomes bewildered."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p224 Mr 26 '25 220w

DODGSON, CHARLES LUTWIDGE. See Carroll, L.; pseud.

DONALDSON, MRS ELLEN MILLER. In bluebird time. 160p il $1.75 Bradley, M.

This is truly a children's book. The illustrations are delightful, the print is large, and the stories are happily worded. They are folk tales of the Indians told to little Blue Wing by her grandmother in the firelight before the tepees.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 12 '26 80w

"This book is bound to quicken the interest of children in birds and animals." Helene Champlain

+ N Y World N 7 '26 80w

"The large print will make it a comfortable book for not-very-old readers and the more than 40 illustrations make it a treat for the as yet nonreaders. Only a writer who knows Indian environment sympathetically could portray so beautifully the life in the forests and on the journey."

+ Springfield Republican p7f My 16 '26 200w

DORGELES, ROLAND. On the mandarin road; tr. from the French by Gertrude Emerson. 332p il $3 Century

915.9 Indo-China, French—Description and travel 26-10938

The book gives a Frenchman's impressions of French Indo-China. He travelled along the famous road of the mandarins from Hanoi, in Tongking, into the heart of the Mol country in southern Annam. The response of his imagination to the strange people and customs and the charm of his interpretation make this an unusual travel book.

Booklist 23:27 O '26

"Dorgelès is a Frenchman and he writes trenchantly, poignantly, of a French colony, Indo-China. Into his book has stolen the ineffable sweetness and languor of the Orient of the fairy tales, as well as the tragedy and the strange contrasts of the Asia of today."

Bookm 64:xxxiv O '26 150w

"His travels present an absorbing and valuable moving picture of Indo-China in transition. . . The translation into English, the work of Gertrude Emerson, associate editor of 'Asia' magazine, is unusually skillful." Vera Kelsey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 13 '26 1300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p121 N '26

"Always Roland Dorgelès writes with that characteristic quality of the Latin—that rare mating of beauty and sophistication; that delicate irony which is the antidote for sentimentalism as well as for hypocrisy. And Dorgelès has been fortunate in his translator, for Gertrude Emerson has brought over into English all his Gallic flavor; so that the reader lays down the book with the delusion that he has read it in the author's original French, rather than in Gertrude Emerson's English. Incidentally, Miss Emerson, who is one of the editors of Asia magazine, has the better performed her task because of her own familiarity with the Far East." Blair Niles

+ Int Bk R p607 S '26 850w

"'On the Mandarin Road' is not strong drink—it is a literary aperitif. On the whole, it is enormously interesting, done with feeling and color and a certain air that lifts it far above the ordinary book of travel. Its greatest charm is the fact that, although printed in English, it is defiantly French, for which credit is due Gertrude Emerson for her very excellent and sympathetic translation." Harry Hervey

+ Lit R p2 O 2 '26 430w

"This young Frenchman has succeeded at a task which has defeated many an older hand. That is to say, he has managed to blend shrewd observation of human beings, vivid portrayal of nature, and compact presentation of materially useful information under a style which is always easy and often distinguished." Gregory Mason

+ N Y Times p15 Jl 4 '26 400w

Outlook 143:482 Ag 4 '26 120w

R of Rs 73:671 Je '26 60w

"The book is evidently not built upon a pre-conceived plan. It appears to be without form and the chapters do not follow consecutively. Yet it should not be otherwise. Brilliant pictures, dusky vignettes, fleeting impressions, comments, conjectures, hopes, and regrets, are delightfully mingled, just as all things are delightfully mingled—in the East."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:60 Ag 21 '26 450w

Wis Lib Bul 22:273 O '26

DORSEY, GEORGE AMOS. Why we behave like human beings. (Harper's modern science ser.) 512p $3.50 (12s 6d) Harper

612 Physiology. Psychology. Evolution 25-21191

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"The book is mostly sound from a scientific point of view, though it is not correct in many details of biology and other sciences. It is especially strong in the way it has simplified the sciences relating to the behavior of human beings, and presents them in a way that the average man can readily understand. The style of the book is peculiar, to say the least." M. P. Ravenel

+ Am J Pub Health 16:417 Ap '26 850w

Booklist 22:196 F '26

"The author's style will irritate some and his personal prejudices will offend others, but he has gone a long way toward achieving his impossible aim, which was to collect the results of recent research in physiology and psychology, to put them in order." E. E. Slosson

— Bookm 63:70 Mr '26 200w

"A unique compendium of modern scientific fact about man—as an animal, as a product of evolution, as a social being, as a thinker. It rehearses literally thousands of isolated items, correctly, jazzily, entertainingly. But not quite satisfactorily if you care for good use of language, careful phrasing, civilized sentence structure and the rest of what makes reading a delight in and for itself." H. M. Parshley

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ja 17 '26 950w

"His book is readable despite the ever-recurring commonplaces and ageless bits of wisdom with which he has strewn it. He has concentrated on the determination to appeal to a wide and not over-discriminating public, to a public who wants scientific knowledge in every-day wrapping—and he has given it to them. . . Until it is proved that a true knowledge of science can be circumscribed and digested in a book written in popular style for popular consumption, Mr. Dorsey's effort will lack convincing qualities." Joseph Collins

+ Int Bk R p170 F '26 950w

"The book represents a superlative tour de force in the popularization of scientific knowledge relating to man. For a book so crammed with interesting information and covering so wide a field of research the lack of dogmatism and absolutism is surprising." Lorine Pruette

+ Lit R p2 F 20 '26 1400w

"This Coney Island, electric-sign, jazz method does not sell science; it sells Dorsey." E. C. MacDowell

— Nation 122:184 F 17 '26 200w

"He literally pelts you with facts, minute facts and gigantic facts, about your inside and outside, about specks of protoplasm and the universe, about the past and the present and the future—and he does this in a jerky, staccato, boisterous style." Leonard Woolf

— Nation and Ath 39:74 Ap 17 '26 180w

"His book is eminently readable—it is just such good talk as might be expected from a humane and versatile scientist in his leisure hours." R. L. Duffus

N Y Times p10 D 20 '25 850w

DORSEY, GEORGE AMOS—Continued

"People who tend to dislike science will like Dr. Dorsey's humanized science. The author has confined his writing strictly to the authentic. It is a safe guide."

+ Outlook 142:145 Ja 27 '26 150w

Pratt p18 spring '26

Reviewed by F. H. Lund

Sat R of Lit 2:611 Mr 6 '26 520w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 13 '26 1000w

Survey 55:568 F 15 '26 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p31 Ja 14 '26 40w

Wis Lib Bul 22:30 Ja '26

World Tomorrow 9:131 Ap '26 200w

"Dorsey's book is a valuable contribution to the literature of popular science. Unfortunately, it is written in an excited, peculiarly staccato fashion, with frequent interpolations of pleasantries." G. V. Hamilton

+ Yale R n s 15:796 J1 '26 460w

DOS PASSOS, JOHN RODERIGO. Garbage man; a parade with shouting. (Harper's modern plays) 160p $2 Harper

812

26-13916

"Mr. Dos Passos expands a familiar formula: unsatisfied questing youth living in an insane world of make-believe vested interests and hollow conventions is confronted at every turn by the conspiracy of life to substitute imitation for real values and by the stifling power of the machine. . . His play is an application of the Manhattan Transfer formula to the stage."—Ind

"The reader gets a certain amusement from this fantastic unreality and from the musical comedy technique—or he does until his mind revolts and he begins to demand that these people who wish to climb up and beat the moon like a gong stop their infantile prattle and do a little real wrestling with the actual world. As dramatist or philosopher Dos Passos needs less of the moon and more of this real and inescapable earth. But perhaps this is his joke." W. F. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 Ag 29 '26 200w

"A good deal of the comment is shrewd, a good deal of the acid burlesque bites deep into the lump of our shams; but the author fails, it seems to me, to provide a very solid alternative, to make his hero and heroine either real or interesting."

Ind 117:136 J1 31 '26 260w

"The book holds one in the reading. The play is as much a medley as was the novel, 'Manhattan Transfer.' But it is swift and lyric where that moved to a harder, heavier rhythm. One thing is certain, there is ebullient life in it, an athletic daring that excites one concerning the new theatre, if a new American theatre emerges from such attempts as these."

Sat R of Lit 3:75 Ag 28 '26 250w

DOSTOEVSKAYA, ANNA GRIGOREVNA (SNITKINA) (MME FEODOR MIKHAILOVICH DOSTOIEVSKII). Dostoevsky portrayed by his wife; the diary and reminiscences of Mme Dostoevsky; tr. from the Russian and ed. by S. S. Kotliansky. 272p il $4.25 Dutton [10s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Dostoevskii, Feodor Mikhailovich 26-14239

The material for the book has been gathered from three sources: the journal written by the young girl who was first Dostoevsky's secretary and later became his second wife; the reminiscences of Madame Dostoevsky written late in life, recalling her meeting with the author and reviewing her life with him; and letters which cover his biographer's attack on Dostoevsky and Madame Dostoevsky's defense. The diary which takes up half the book was written during her honeymoon on the continent and is chiefly concerned with the gambling fever which obsessed Dostoevsky at that time.

Booklist 23:34 O '26

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin

Bookm 63:708 Ag '26 900w

"Mme. Dostoevskaya looked at life from a bookkeeper's viewpoint and her recounting of events is likely to turn into mere counting—of sums spent for food, pennies given to beggars, amounts lost at the gaming table, number of yards of stuff purchased—all set down with pitiless precision. Together with all this, she cannot avoid giving details of real interest, and these pages yield a good deal of otherwise inaccessible information about Dostoevsky's habits, tastes, superstitions and other idiosyncracies." Abraham Yarmolinsky

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 8 '26 1000w

"Fragmentary as are these pages, dealing as they do only with a small portion of the novelist's life of sixty years, their frankness and intimacy offer the student of literary history and personality and of character, a series of rare glimpses that in their way form a complete portrait of an extraordinary man." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 29 '26 1950w

Reviewed by A. I. Nazaroff

Int Bk R p575 Ag '26 1700w

"The contents of this book will be an invaluable addition to the English reader's knowledge of Dostoevsky." D. S. Mirsky

+ Nation and Ath 39:180 My 22 '26 1050w

Reviewed by L. Mumford

New Repub 47:340 Ag 11 '26 1450w

Sat R 141:339 Mr 13 '26 80w

"It is not even an interesting book, because it leaves one with the impression that so much might have been said in it that has been passed off as unworthy of attention." Princess Radziwill

— Sat R of Lit 3:137 S 25 '26 720w

Times [London] Lit Sup p232 Mr 25 '26 900w

DOUGLAS, ALAN. For the king. 385p $2 Macrae Smith co.

26-10561

Stanley Matthews, Roundhead, was as unlike his cavalier brother Philip in character as he was like him in looks. And on that dissimilarity in disposition as much as on the similarity in appearance does the interest of the story depend. For the blunt-spoken, hard-headed Cromwellian rides upon King Charles and his horsemen, and to save his skin must play the part of the courtier Phil, for whom he is mistaken. The masquerade is little to his liking, even when it involves a lively maid, niece of Isaak Walton, but when it becomes Stanley's duty as Philip to protect the person of Cromwell's enemy, the king, the play passes the bounds of distaste and becomes dangerous indeed. Here is adventure linked with romance in a picturesque historical setting.

"Mr. Douglas has made skillful use of authentic incidents of the period and has been almost equally successful with his enclosing fable."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 S 5 '26 170w

"For one who likes tales of the good old days of blood and thunder, bold knights and fair ladies, this will prove a very entertaining story."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 12 '26 360w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 N '26

Lit R p6 J1 3 '26 200w

"A spirited, swashbuckling romance of picturesque days. There is an unflinching demand for a good novel of adventure where men dare all for love of a lady, and in whose thrilling pages the common or garden citizen may forget the uninteresting humdrum of his matter-of-fact existence."

+ N Y Times p9 My 30 '26 700w

"The author has obviously spent a lot of time in preparation for this story, with the result that one may read it and get as much information relative to the customs, manners, clothes, etc., of the time as might be obtained from reading some lengthy treatise on the subject. There is plenty of action and excitement for the most jaded of readers and the element of suspense is well developed throughout the novel."

+ Springfield Republican p7f Jl 18 '26 600w

DOUGLAS, LLOYD CASSEL. These sayings of mine; an interpretation of the teachings of Jesus. 234p $1.50 Scribner

232 Jesus Christ—Teaching 26-9087

The minister of the First Congregational church, Akron, Ohio, writes this interpretation of the teachings of Jesus. He deals with the parables at some length, in their relation to each other and in their bearings on problems of living today.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 My 2 '26 80w

Reviewed by A. W. Karnaghan

Boston Transcript p2 My 15 '26 1400w

"The author has a way of getting out of ruts without being irreverent. The treatment will appeal especially to forward looking folks of reverent mind."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 19 '26 350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Jl '26

N Y World p6m Ap 4 '26 80w

"There are 10 chapters, sermons, addresses—call them what you like—telling those old stories from the gospels with a strong dash of imagination and picturesque modern speech, and adapting them to current problems so interestingly and forcefully as to set his readers to thinking and his listeners to sitting up to take notice."

+ Springfield Republican p10 Jl 13 '26 300w

Wis Lib Bul 22:224 Jl '26

DOUGLAS, O., pseud. See Buchan, A.

DOUGLASS, HARLAN PAUL. How shall country youth be served? a study of the "rural" work of certain national character-building agencies. (Institute of social and religious research. Publications) 259p $2.50 Doran

630.1 Social surveys. Boys—Societies and clubs. Girls—Societies and clubs. Country life 26-2905

What is being done in the way of character-building for the boys and girls of the country? A committee of investigation was sent out to see and this is the result of their study of the rural work of five national agencies: the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., the Boy scouts, the Girl scouts and the Camp fire girls. Part one embodies their report; part two, the discussion and recommendations arising out of it.

Reviewed by A. E. Holt

Am J Soc 32:312 S '26 120w

Booklist 22:318 My '26

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 O 24 '26 170w

"This book is a real contribution to rural understanding and appreciation."

J Religion 6:555 S '26 170w

"At the moment I am impelled to recommend this volume to those students who are aware of the possibilities of improving the technique of social research. Social agencies, particularly if they bear any relation to rural areas, will be obliged to read it in any case." E. C. Lindeman

+ New Repub 42:205 Ap 7 '26 700w

N Y World p7m Ja 17 '26 40w

Pratt p18 summer '26

Survey 56:268 My 15 '26 60w

Wis Lib Bul 22:170 My '26

DOUGLASS, HARLAN PAUL. Springfield church survey; a study of organized religion with its social background. 445p il $4 Doran; Inst. of social and religious research

277.44 Springfield, Massachusetts—Churches. Springfield, Massachusetts—Social conditions. Social surveys 26-7591

At the instigation of the Institute of social and religious research the survey here reported of the protestant churches of Springfield, Mass. was undertaken. The scope of the survey was five-fold; a house to house religious census; study of churches and religious organizations; of religious education; of recreation; and of interrelationships of church and social movements.

J Religion 6:447 Jl '26 120w

"Not only Springfield churches, but the churches in all American cities, would do well to consider earnestly the facts and proposals of this volume." C. T. Holman

+ J Religion 6:533 S '26 1300w

St Louis 24:160 Je '26

Survey 56:268 My 15 '26 60w

DOWD, ALBERT ATKINS, and CURTIS, FRANK W. Modern gaging practice. (Industrial management lib.) 280p il $3 Eng. mag. 621.75 Gages 25-7651

"Descriptive work for the practical man rather than for the mechanical engineer. Deals with the limit system, gaging, inspection, and tolerances in their relation to interchangeable manufacturing."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 10:20 Ap '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:191 Ap '26

DOWD, ALBERT ATKINS, and CURTIS, FRANK W. Tool engineering; punches, dies and gages. 341p il $3.50 McGraw

621.96 Punching machinery. Dies (metal working). Gages 26-19

"Third volume of a series on tool engineering. Previous volumes dealt with jigs and fixtures, and with fixtures for turning, boring and grinding."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:318 My '26

N Y New Tech Bks 11:5 Ja '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:191 Ap '26

Pratt p17 summer '26

DOWD, JEROME. Negro in American life. 611p $5 Century

326 Negroes. United States—Race question 26-19485

The author presents a comprehensive study of the social, political, economic, industrial and educational aspects of the problem of the Negro in America, quotes from the expressed opinion of both Negroes and whites concerning these problems, sums up the contribution of the Negro to American life and literature, and touches upon the possible future of these contributions.

Reviewed by Alain Locke

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 N 28 '26 900w

Boston Transcript p3 D 24 '26 350w

"Professor Dowd has written this treatise on the negro life in America with the sympathy of a humanitarian. The scope of the book is enormous. Although there can be no complaint on the score of inadequate representation of conflicting views, the reader is left with an impression of uncritical and prolix use of doubtful sources, an unwieldy mass of opinion. There is a need for a close analysis and reduction of the material offered in this book. Dowd has, however, undoubtedly rendered a service to the discussion of this very sore spot in our national life by making a serious attempt to unravel and redefine the issues. The conclusion of the book is marred by the use of an easy escape from the vital questions which the author himself poses." R. L. Shapiro

DOWD, JEROME—Continued

— + Lit R p9 N 27 '26 280w

"The data in this book may be distinguished for its omissions. Unfortunately these include the most recent and important work, mostly published in scholarly journals, and practically unavailable to the general reader. It is obvious that Mr. Dowd does not know these papers. This is true not only in the biological sciences, where such lack of knowledge might be excusable, but in his own field of the social sciences."

M. J. Herskovits

— Nation 123:668 D 22 '26 1100w

"He has gone about his task in a straightforward, methodical way, somewhat heavy with documentation and multitudinous detail, evenhanded in the presentation of conflicting opinion, without any pretense of literary flavor and often marred by too great diffusion. But taken as a guide book for the inquiring mind to an exceedingly difficult and ill-explored field, its usefulness compares favorably with the immense and urgent need for public enlightenment. Merely as a reference book of facts and figures on the history and present status of the negro in this country it is of the greatest value." Evans Clark

+ — N Y Times p1 N 21 '26 2100w

DOWLING, LINNAEUS WAYLAND. Mathematics of life insurance. (Modern mathematical texts) 121p $1.75 McGraw

519.5 Insurance, Life—Mathematics

25-17728

"A first course for students who expect to become actuaries. While the trained actuary should have a knowledge of calculus, the present work presupposes only a knowledge of elementary algebra."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Should be of value to those desiring to master the methods of calculation adopted in the many forms of insurance. It is really a book on arithmetic and algebra applied in a stimulating manner to an interesting series of special problems, and is very readable."

+ Nature 117:651 My 8 '26 60w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:20 Ja '26

St Louis 24:164 Je '26

DOWNS, BRIAN W. Cambridge, past and present. 256p $6 Doran [15s Methuen]

378.42 Cambridge university. Cambridge, England

"Mr. Downs opens with a concise but full history of the town, and proceeds to a review and description of the various objects of interest in the neighbourhood, not forgetting to give his reader directions by which they may be found and the hours when they may be inspected. After a chapter on the origin and organization of the University and on its relation to the separate colleges, he describes the University buildings, with particular attention to the Fitzwilliam Museum, and then takes the colleges in order. Their foundations, great men, and points of special interest he describes at adequate length and with good judgment. The water-colour illustrations which complete the book are done with great clearness and freshness, and with excellent choice of subject."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"It appeals specifically to the college student, and is a meatily atmospheric and full flavored little book, in which the cant terms used in the University in 1824 form but one of numerous amusing features."

+ Bookm 64:367 N '26 160w

"The abundance of light anecdote with which Mr. Downs enlivens his pages serves rather to obscure the very considerable amount of antiquarian inquiry upon which his book is based. Mr. Downs's scattered paragraphs on the architectural beauties and curiosities of Cambridge are among the most satisfying parts of his work. Unfortunately the illustrations in color by E. Vulliamy which supplement these descriptive passages are not altogether pleasing; they lack depth and strength; the artist's technique is not very well suited to his subjects." S: Chew

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 O 31 '26 450w

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 28 '26 400w

"Here is a scholarly little work, containing in brief compass a mass of interesting facts, which will be very welcome to all old Cantabs resident in this country. It may also be studied, with pleasure and profit, by all American tourists meditating a visit to the English university astride of the sluggish old river Cam." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p22 O 23 '26 320w

"This is an excellent book for the visitor and anyone who wishes to get a good idea of Cambridge all round. Mr. Downs, who is a Fellow of Christ's, compresses a great deal of appreciation into his 250 pages, and lightens his detail with a perpetual flow of humour. This vivacity would have astonished the dons who wrote the text for Le Keux's Memorials of Cambridge eighty years since, but solemnity is now out of date, and we read the author's quips mostly with pleasure."

+ New Statesman 27:94 My 1 '26 250w

"The best feature of the book is the general perspective of the foundations through the last seven centuries of political and educational history. The style might deserve to be called scholarly if we were not pulled up by frequent descents into facetiousness and, rarely, by a wrong use of words."

+ — Spec 137:323 Ag 28 '26 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p399 Je 10 '26 380w

DOWSLEY, W. G. Travelling men. 256p $2 Stokes

Historical romance of Ireland in 1816 when the country was suffering under a new ejectment act and things had gone from bad to worse. Young George Borrow, with two other Irish youths, makes an adventurous trip across the country assisting in the flight of a gallant Irish soldier who had been imprisoned by the English for serving in Bonaparte's army and sharing in some narrow escapes from the red coats.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 22 '26 180w

"The style in which it is written is absolutely Irish in the turn of every sentence. Mr. Dowsley is such a master of the method that often he does not even use the interrogation point. It seems impossible that anyone could read the book without the greatest enthusiasm for it. It has a distinctiveness entirely individual and it carries one into a literary field of great possibilities." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 J1 10 '26 650w

"Having to do in great part with that drollest of all humans, the Irish peasant, there is a deal of innocent Gaelic humor in the story. The irrepressible Borrow, too, contributes his share of the comic." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p6 J1 10 '26 200w

"None of Mr. Dowsley's characters breathe the air of Ireland; they are animated puppets, manipulated by their creator from the wings of an old, old stage."

— N Y Times p9 Je 27 '26 420w

"The story is picturesquely and unpretentiously written, liberal in humorous 'blarney,' but as a whole it is too essentially childish for enjoyment by the average adult reader."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:11 J1 31 '26 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p13 Ja 7 '26 200w

Wis Lib Bul 22:333 D '26

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. History of spiritualism. 2v 329;338p il $7.50 Doran [42s Cassell]

134 Spiritualism 26-17488

"Very frank, detailed, and deeply interesting record of the progress of necromancy and psychical research from Swedenborg's time to the present day."—Living Age (Reprinted from Observer)

Reviewed by Edmund Noble
Boston Transcript p3 O 9 '26 1550w

"Sir Arthur Conan Doyle has done a noteworthy service, not only to those who profess or secretly entertain a belief in the subject of which he has become the chief protagonist, but to the unprofessing and uninformed public at large, if only by assembling within handy compass what is known—or what he classes as known—of a shadowy and much-disputed realism." A. S. Crockett

+ Lit R p7 N 20 '26 900w

"Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's literary gifts and known enthusiasms fit him in a peculiar degree to act as the historian of the spiritualistic movement." Evelyn Underhill

+ Living Age 330:648 S 18 '26 750w (Reprinted from Observer)

"Though there is more to regret than to approve in Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's book; though he is often wrong-headed, vague and irrational in his comments; though his narration is apt to be as dull as it is painstaking and well intentioned, I am not prepared to say that I wish his book unwritten. In spite of its many failings the general effect is what it was designed to be." J. St L. Strachey

+ N Y Times p5 J1 18 '26 3400w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey
Spec 137:18 J1 3 '26 1450w

"This work will no doubt afford great satisfaction and encouragement to the author's fellow-Spiritualists; but we find it difficult to believe that it will make any notable impression upon those who are accustomed to weigh evidence and who approach the subject without preconceptions. Sir Arthur possesses in an eminent degree the gift of narrative, and the book makes easy reading; but its appeal is addressed to the general reader rather than to the student who wishes to investigate."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p385 Je 10 '26 2000w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. Land of mist. 285p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

26-11490

Under the guise of fiction the book is chiefly a statement of the claims of the spiritualists and a description of their séances. Professor Challenger represents the attitude of scientific opposition. His daughter Enid and her fiancé are open-minded skeptics who early in their investigations for the Daily Gazette become converts to spiritualism. In a final and dramatic scene the Professor is also convinced of the genuineness of the psychic phenomena he is forced to witness.

Booklist 23:38 O '26

"He writes as always tightly and fascinatingly." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:204 Ap. '26 40w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 15 '26 160w

Ind 117:108 J1 24 '26 100w

Reviewed by L. M. Field
Int Bk R p509 J1 '26 600w

Reviewed by A. S. Crockett
Lit R p4 Je 5 '26 950w

"The book is not without passages of dramatic power. The materialization of Pithecanthropus at the séance in Paris, the struggle with the evil presence in the empty house, and the conversion of Professor Challenger are exciting enough, but it is a barren excitement. Propaganda cannot afford to be barren, and here there is not even the stimulation of passion and abandon which alone can bring about conversions and can justify the writing of this type of novel."

+ Nation and Ath 39:108 Ap 24 '26 220w

"This series of ill-linked stories of the supernatural may be good spiritualist propaganda, but as an essay in imaginative fiction, in which guise it is presented, it is unworthy of so skilled a story-teller as Sir Arthur Conan Doyle."

+ New Statesman 27:58 Ap 24 '26 130w

"Unfortunately, yet perhaps inevitably, the characters of 'The Land of Mist' are scarcely more than props for Sir Arthur's propaganda. Yet one of them, at least, the big-game hunting Lord Roxton, shows in every turn of him the creator-power of the author's master hand."

+ N Y Times p9 My 16 '26 700w

"When Mrs. Stowe wrote 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' she was interested in her individual puppets as well as in her case. Sir Arthur is profoundly uninterested in his puppets—to him, the case is everything. Consequently, the average reader, to whom the book is addressed, cannot read it for the story, as a story, fails to hold. There is too much pill, too little sugar-coating."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:955 J1 24 '26 650w

Springf'd Republican p7f S 19 '26 250w
Times [London] Lit Sup p237 Mr 25 '26 400w

DRAKE, DURANT. Mind and its place in nature. 259p $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan

150 Psychology. Realism. Knowledge, Theory of. Consciousness 26-1041

"An interpretation indicating the relation of mind to the physical universe by a philosophical view called by the author 'monistic realism.' Mind is a natural development in 'an organism with sense-organs and brain in the midst of a physical world.' Belonging thus to the monistic system of reality, mind has its entirely explicable function in a homogenous world-order." —J Religion

"Professor Drake has a much more pleasing style than is normally the case with philosophers. He carries the reader along with a minimum of strain. His book gives an excellent orientation with regard to current topics of discussion in philosophy, and he presents a very able defense of an indefensible position." B. H. Bode

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ap 18 '26 1200w

"The universe is conceived as a single time-space order of physical events. At least it is an interesting working hypothesis, which he ably defends. It is interesting, but hardly convincing."

Boston Transcript p11 Mr 27 '26 260w

J Religion 6:222 Mr '26 60w

"Many things are taken for granted which ought to be subjected to careful analysis and explanation; while on the other hand confident answers are proffered to questions that ought never to be asked at all." E. A. Burt

+ J Religion 6:435 J1 '26 500w

Reviewed by D: Novak
Lit R p9 Ap 24 '26 200w

"Professor Drake frankly acknowledges the gaps in our knowledge; and, in spite of inescapable impediments, he has given us a book which is at once original, stimulating and penetrating." S. A. Coblenz

+ Lit R p6 S 4 '26 360w

Reviewed by A. W. Hinshaw
N Y Times p6 J1 25 '26 550w

Reviewed by Joseph Jastrow
Sat R of Lit 3:39 Ag 14 '26 220w

"His theory, within the limits he has set himself, is very clearly expounded, although, as is usual in writings of this kind, several of his key words could be made subjects of interminable controversy. In its main lines, however, his doctrine is clear enough."

DRAKE, DURANT—Continued

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p888 Je 10 '26
750w

DREISER, THEODORE. An American tragedy.
2v 431;409p $5 Boni & Liveright

26-141

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"Dreiser's greatest novel, and an impressive achievement to be reckoned with in any history of American literature." R. N. Linscott

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Mr '26 480w

Booklist 22:295 Ap '26

Bookm 62:711 F '26 50w

Bookm 63:202 Ap '26 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p53 Ap '26

"The greatness of this work lies in the fact, among other things, that it covers so much ground. Some of the most arresting of Mr Dreiser's contemporaries are vigorous and convincing enough when on their own particular native soil. No one except Dreiser seems strong enough to swallow the whole chaotic spectacle and to disgorge it into some form of digested brain-stuff." J. C. Powys

+ Dial 80:331 Ap '26 3000w

"He still keeps his old cacophonies, his abominable clichés, his newspaper manner. But, sometimes because of these, sometimes in spite of them, he has built up a great novel that is profoundly tragic and intensely American." C. R. Walker

+ Ind 116:166 F 6 '26 1050w

"The novel is an epic of tawdry detail. In all Theodore Dreiser's other novels one meets characters that are glowingly alive. In 'An American Tragedy,' detail drowns humanity . . . With all its faults, however, there is a vastness in this Dreiser novel that appeals. On and on he writes, with stoical persistence, piling detail upon detail—until the reader becomes as confused as one of his sentences." Jim Tully

+ — Int Bk R p167 F '26 1100w

"'An American Tragedy' does not leave the impression that goes with reading a story; the feeling is rather that of a series of terrible physical impacts that have relentlessly shocked every sensitive nerve in the body. . . Dreiser carries the story straight, honest and true to the inevitable end. One thing, at least, is sure: it is deadily interesting from the beginning to the last word. One is not reading; he is living—and dying!" Clarence Darrow

+ Lit R p1 Ja 16 '26 2150w

"The story, continuously interesting and continuously terrible, marches forward with a resistless energy. Incident is piled upon incident and fact upon fact, but never does the structure grow unwieldy or the interest falter. 'An American Tragedy' is the greatest of its author's works, and that can hardly mean less than that it is the greatest American novel of our generation." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 122:152 F 10 '26 1000w

"'An American Tragedy' can only be compared with the great achievements in fiction. The book is not only immense in length; it is closely wrought. Indirect criticism of American institutions there may be in it, but there is no 'sociology,' no attempt to elaborate a theory or point a moral, no padding; the author's whole mind is given to the effort to render his characters and the situations in which life involves them . . . Mr. Dreiser's imagination is so incontestable because he never forgets the primary passions and motives of his characters. By the pure simplicity of his imagination, and without a trace of bitterness or of satire, he shows up the passions as they are." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 40:88 O 16 '26 620w

"His contribution is not to literature alone; he has done more, directly and indirectly, than any other individual to rouse Americans to a consciousness of what American life is like and if an American civilization ever emerges, Dreiser's share in its making will not be small. That is what it is to have historical importance. Perhaps it is more than being a good novelist." T. K. Whipple

+ New Repub 46:113 Mr 17 '26 2350w

Outlook 142:222 F 10 '26 560w

"There is no contesting the total effect of the book; it is tremendous. It is unrelieved by beauty, humour, or the sense of a happier world exterior to the hero's tormented self. America seems to have made Clyde's ruin its particular concern, to foster it and gloat over it. . . 'An American Tragedy' establishes a reputation, but it is too painful a book to be read with pleasure or profit. It is a genuine experience, but, like a bilious attack, not one to be courted for its own sake except by the experimental or the morbid." L. P. Hartley

Sat R 142:522 O 30 '26 980w

"A work occasionally poignant, occasionally intense in its realism, often deadly dull, usually a monotonous narrative of everything that happened in the course of Clyde Griffiths' short, worthless, and almost meaningless life. Dreiser's place in American literary history is secure, and you must admire him, even if it is impossible to read, without skipping, in his books."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:569 F 20 '26 900w

"An American Tragedy is a very great and very portentous novel indeed. It is a sudden and even staggering vision of man in the grip of industrial civilization. If Mr. Dreiser tells this simple, plain story with so great a wealth of detail, it is because he has seen why crimes like this happen, why smutched little boys like Clyde exist. He reveals the reason. . . The Russian novelists, the Irish playwrights are optimists compared to Mr. Dreiser; yet his despondency arises not from a grievance but from clear-sightedness. Absurd to speak of his style when the construction of the novel is so inevitable, so grandiose and so complete. Idle to carp at long or awkward sentences when the authentic tones of truth ring through every page. . . The whole of this vast, sad book is shot with a rare appreciation of the essential beauty of man's innermost spirit; and if the millions of Clydes in the world are being swept into an abyss, the appalled reader of this menacing work of fiction closes it with the conviction that they are utterly and urgently worth salvation."

Spec 137:602 O 9 '26 750w

"As the story moves along it accumulates a momentum and an intensity that finally carries the reader heedless through the tangles and brambles of the Dreiserian style."

+ Spring'd Republican p5a Mr 21 '26
650w

"It has the same trying qualities as the rest of Mr. Dreiser's fiction. But it also has in a marked degree his sprawling strength. . . It is a strange book, painstaking, honest, full of pity for human weaknesses, thoughtful and moving—and awkward."

Times [London] Lit Sup p672 O 7 '26
720w

Wis Lib Bul 22:109 Mr '26

DRESSER, HORATIO WILLIS. History of ancient and medieval philosophy. 338p $2.50
Crowell

180 Philosophy, Ancient—History. Philosophy, Medieval—History 26-12335

Intended as a textbook, this history covers the period from the dawn of philosophy in ancient Greece, 600 B.C., to 1600 A.D.

"Will serve admirably for general reading for those who bring the requisite bent to the undertaking."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 S 5
'26 80w

J Religion 6:559 S '26 20w

"Designed as a text for college courses, it is a scholarly, compact survey of sources and provides ample references."

+ Outlook 144:59 S 8 '26 50w

DREW, ELIZABETH A. Modern novel; some aspects of contemporary fiction. 274p $2 Harcourt [7s 6d J. Cape]

808.3 English fiction—History and criticism. American fiction—History and criticism

26-7707

The chapter headings give the key to this discussion of the aspects of the modern novel. Among others, these appear: Sex simplexes and complexes; "The new psychology"; Yokel colour; the American scene. Galsworthy, Wells, Bennett and Conrad are considered in separate chapters.

Booklist 22:409 J1 '26

"There is not a large crop of new ideas in this book, but some fine straight thinking and fine writing—and a rich example of what Tom Jones called the 'cookery of the author'."

+ Bookm 64:233 O '26 220w

"One cannot but believe that her audiences have been interested and informed through her wide familiarity with contemporary fiction, her reasonable and balanced judgment, her amusing quotations and anecdotes and not infrequent flashes of wit. In the face of these admirable qualities it seems a bit unfair to cavil, because the book is not more exciting." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 My 16 '26 320w

Boston Transcript p3 My 15 '26 380w

"Miss Drew has written the most intelligent book on the modern novel which has yet appeared." R. M. Lovett

+ Dial 81:166 Ag '26 1900w

"The book contains sensible and shrewd discussions. It contains penetrating and judicious appraisals of Galsworthy, Wells, Bennett and Conrad. It comments briefly but with discriminating aptness on numerous other novelists, including many of the younger generation. It is always sane and often revealing." Garland Greever

+ Lit R p6 Je 26 '26 150w

"She is suave, she is persuasive, and she takes infinite pains to make the significance of everything comprehensible to the meanest intelligence. One merely wonders if it is worth while to do so." J. W. Krutch

Nation 122:507 My 5 '26 150w

"The virtue of the book is common sense. Miss Drew is neither fatuously enthusiastic about contemporary literature, nor is she barrenly critical. Her remarks are always to the point. But, as if in payment for all this coolness, this common sense, she estimates everybody too highly." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 39:448 J1 17 '26 650w

"We are distressed from the first by the pert, mens-sana-in-corpore-sano attitude which she adopts with regard to her subject. But what is most disconcerting is the large rapture which leads her to take all sorts of novelists—good, bad and indifferent—to her generous heart. No writer is too negligible, no method too insignificant, for her to expand upon. When we find a critic entertaining such a hotch-potch of admirations, we are not reassured as to his (or, in this case, her) power of discrimination. Miss Drew's enthusiasm for modern fiction in general commands sympathy; but something more than this is needed to make a good book of criticism on so wide and important a subject."

— New Statesman 27:304 Je 26 '26 300w

"Miss Drew's excellent study of the modern novel and a few selected modern novelists should interest readers of many kinds."

+ Outlook 143:258 Je 16 '26 300w

Sat R 141:653 My 29 '26 60w

"Without claiming to be particularly original or profound, the author is shrewd, sharp-eyed and sane."

Sat R of Lit 2:923 J1 10 '26 100w

"Perhaps the most valuable quality in her book is the maintenance throughout of a good-humoured sanity. She both praises and criticizes frankly, but always upon general grounds of literary value; and though there is nothing fundamentally new or striking about her judgments, she succeeds in giving an excellent summary of the modern novel, and one that is sound and entertaining."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p370 Je 3 '26 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 22:170 My '26

DRINKWATER, JOHN. Mr Charles, king of England. 314p il $5 Doran [18s Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Charles II, king of Great Britain 26-21881

John Drinkwater's biography of Charles II is, like Shane Leslie's of George IV, a defense of maligned royalty. His Charles is generous and gracious to his friends—except in his treatment of Clarendon which his biographer does not attempt to condone—to his mistresses and to art and learning. He makes the king not quite so bad as his contemporaries in the life of the court during the dull and dissolute period of the Restoration.

"Mr. Drinkwater is a moderately capable, even-tempered, rather heavy-going but charitable writer; he sets forth Charles's variegated career in a smooth and orderly manner, educating nothing new, but disposing the old materials and conclusions acceptably." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 D 26 '26 340w

"Happily, it is no crude whitewashing to which the figure of Charles is subjected. The King's weaknesses are acknowledged as frankly as he acknowledged them himself. But they seem in their right proportion and in their true perspective."

+ Nation and Ath 40:342 D 4 '26 260w

"Mr. Drinkwater's idea of writing a new life of Charles II. of England was an admirable notion; for it was something that needed doing. But one lays down this book with the feeling that it still needs doing." R. B.

— New Statesman 28:314 D 18 '26 1250w

N Y Times p5 D 19 '26 800w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p10m D 5 '26 750w

DUBLIN, LOUIS ISRAEL, ed. Population problems in the United States and Canada; an outgrowth of papers presented at the eighty-sixth annual meeting of the American statistical association, December, 1924. (Publications) 318p $4 Houghton; Pollak foundation 312 United States—Population. Canada—Population 26-6554

Twenty-five authorities contribute to this symposium on the population problem. A general statement is followed by three sections discussing population in relation to natural resources, immigration and labor supply. The concluding section deals with the outlook for the future.

Reviewed by N. E. Himes

Am Econ R 16:511 S '26 1550w

"In a book made up of articles selected by a careful editor, every one of which is well worthwhile, it is difficult and perhaps invidious to commend certain ones. . . . The volume before us can be commended for its clearness, sanity and the careful scientific spirit shown by all of the writers." M. P. Ravenel

+ Am J Pub Health 16:723 J1 '26 350w

Booklist 23:8 O '26

DUBLIN, LOUIS ISRAEL, ed.—Continued

"The book as a whole, with all its admirable qualities, suffers a bit from the tendency of its authors to call everything under heaven a population problem." H: R. Mussey

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ap 26 '26 1000w

Canadian Hist R 7:185 Je '26 1300w

"A sensible book. Probably many of the chapters will have to be revised some day, but that is because our knowledge will increase, not because the writers are malicious. With some of them some of their readers will not agree; the editor, for example, has lately written an article in the Atlantic Monthly which caused much pain to neo-Malthusians, as did his attack at the annual conference of the neo-Malthusian Society last year; but in this volume he shows himself the brilliant statistician which he is, and also an able editor, who has endeavored, in his own words, without bias, to present all sides of the question, making no attempt to reconcile differences of opinion." J: Langdon-Davies

+ New Repub 48:sup164 S 29 '26 1100w

N Y Times p26 My 23 '26 320w

"The editor and contributors are to be congratulated upon the conception of their symposium and the results thereof." G: M. Stephenson

+ Pol Sci Q 41:643 D '26 750w

R of Rs 73:670 Je '26 60w

Survey 56:643 S 15 '26 100w

DUCLAUX, MME AGNES MARY FRANCES (ROBINSON). Life of Racine. 256p $4 Harper [10s 6d Unwin]

B or 92 Racine, Jean Baptiste

"Mme. Duclaux's monograph will contribute towards an understanding of Racine's life and work and, indeed, of French classicism. There are very few who will not learn something by reading her exposition and then rereading Racine; and this book should help many English readers to make a further advance towards conquering this difficult poetic province. For Racine is after all something special, even in French literature. He is alien to all the poets and prose-writers who fill the five centuries between the 'Chanson de Roland' and Ronsard." —Nation and Ath

Reviewed by R. T. House

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ap 4 '26 830w

"The portraits are none too clear at times; in fact, they are frequently merely sketches and glimpses. Something of the genius of the man is disclosed during this record of the sixty years of his life, but we search in vain for any comprehensive study of his art and his work. The biographer is ecstatic and episodic, but never vigorously critical and appreciative. She makes an entertaining book to read, but one of only passing biographical authority." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 Mr 6 '26 520w

Dial 81:445 N '26 100w

Nation 123:110 Ag 4 '26 20w

"Racine is an author to whose charm the English mind is often singularly rebellious; but that is only another reason for thinking that Mme. Duclaux's book will reveal his excellencies to many. When a new edition of this book is called for, the misprints in the French should be corrected." R: Aldington

+ — Nation and Ath 38:293 N 21 '25 1100w

"It is only as critic of the plays that Madame Duclaux is not very satisfactory. Most of her criticism is made en passant and says next to nothing. The book, however, should be regarded as almost pure biography, more in the modern than the orthodox manner, and all in all, as good biography." L: Kronenberger

+ New Repub 47:234 JI 14 '26 600w

"Racine escapes from every net in which one would seek to capture him, but Mme. Duclaux has hardly even tried to help us."

— New Statesman 26:242 D 5 '25 1150w

"Here is an admirable example of the critic's art—the art of interpretation. Mme. Duclaux reveals to us the true Racine and makes us understand not only the man but his poetry. I recommend her delightful book to all lovers of good literature. There is not a dull page in it." J. St L. Strachey

+ N Y Times p10 F 21 '26 1300w

"Racine is a fearfully important person to her, but for one reason or another the thing gets cold before it reaches the reader. There is the confusion of dates and incident that is the curse of books on this period. She tried to cover too big a field. Still she gives a number of Racine's letters, which are charming."

— + Outlook 143:386 JI 14 '26 250w

"The work of Madame Duclaux is charmingly written, clear, and ever-interesting. She threads her way through the religious controversies of the time with lucid impartiality. Although her sympathy with her hero is undisguised, it is tempered with shrewd realism." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:739 Ap 24 '26 500w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

Spec 136:489 Mr 13 '26 1300w (Reprinted from N Y Times)

Spring'd Republican p10 Mr 31 '26 860w

"The work of Mme. Duclaux is, as its title implies, primarily a biography, not a critical study. Yet she is a critic also, and an admirable one. Her point of view is almost unique and makes her an excellent guide to the English reader, for it is neither English nor French, but somewhere between the two, while her knowledge of either literature is equally great."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p734 N 5 '25 2000w

DUDLEY, EUSTACE. National resurrection; a plea for disillusionment; preface by Arthur Hungerford Pollen. 127p $1.40 (4s) Longmans 914.2 Great Britain—Civilization. Great Britain—Social conditions. Sociology, Christian. Roman Catholic church 26-8787

Mr Dudley studies conditions in England today from a religious and national point of view. He makes his point by analyzing the general character of the national life in two outstanding periods of England's history—in the later Middle Ages and the height of the industrial revolution—and argues that the only cure for the ills of the day is to reinvest the Catholic church with the authority over spiritual and temporal affairs which it held in the Middle Ages.

Boston Transcript p3 Je 26 '26 160w

"National Resurrection is a suggestive and, at times, a brilliant little book." T. M.

+ Cath World 123:859 S '26 250w

Spec 136:805 My 1 '26 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p289 Ap 15 '26 260w

DUFF, SIR HECTOR LIVINGSTONE. Ivory graves. 295p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Nelson]

26-12466

Daunt Tremeneere's father died leaving his son nothing but debts. Even the old family home had to be sold. Under the circumstances Daunt could hardly blame Marcia for breaking their engagement, tho her marriage to Lord Brackenham seemed to the jilted lover a trifle precipitous. Daunt left England for Africa to recoup his fortune. There thru his friendship for an African chief he discovered the secret of the Ivory graves, and there his continued loyalty to Marcia and her husband had its, for him, unexpected reward.

"Here is drawing room adventure, with polite touches of nature in her fairly wild moods."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 J1 4 '26 140w

Cleveland Open Shelf p108 S '26

"The book makes a fairly good adventure story with an old theme to prod along a none too original plot."

+ — Lit R p6 Ag 14 '26 270w

"The love episode is an incongruous appendage to a well-told story of adventure."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p185 Mr 11 '26 160w

DU GARD, ROGER MARTIN. The Thibaults; 2 tr. by Madeleine Boyd. v 1-2 631p $5 Boni & Liveright

"Du Gard has here undertaken a majestic fresco of contemporary life. He takes as a background upon which to hang his gallery of bourgeois portraits two French families, the Catholic Thibaults, and the Protestant Fontanins. The head of the former is a rich reactionary with a passion for public beneficence and an oily hypocrisy regarding family shortcomings. That of the other is an attractive rake. The two families unwillingly react on each other, first through the affection between the younger sons of each. The work is planned in ten volumes, of which four, here in America bound as two, have so far appeared."—Boston Transcript

"There can be very little question that the French judgment on Les Thibaults will be echoed over here: that this is the most significant achievement in the French novel since the first appearance of Proust." C. P. Fadiman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 N 7 '26 950w

"All of the personages in the story have individualities quite distinct and quite their own. Herein, indeed, lies the power of the book. Tirelessly, in detachment, M. Du Gard dissects them under the lens of his art and puts them still warm upon his pages. It is a tremendous task which M. Du Gard has set himself, thus holding up a mirror to the face of half a century, but so far it is a task well done." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 24 '26 550w

"M. Du Gard not only keeps us enthralled throughout his active narrative about the same kind of people that Balzac portrayed—the higher bourgeoisie—but makes us wonder, on putting down the second volume, what can happen next, and with it we have the feeling that much is yet to happen. . . . The women in the book are, like the men, superbly alive, and moved by a force which is life itself." J: Cournois

+ Lit R p4 N 20 '26 700w

"A very powerful novel, for all its looseknit and episodic action, a style upon whose necks the reins seem to lie loose, and that exacerbated psychology which gives the vague sense of some intolerable grievance of memory lying behind the bitter words. It contains a great deal that reads like the hysteria of sex-consciousness and some passages disconcerting in their cold and deliberate sensuality." H: L. Stuart

+ — N Y Times p8 D 19 '26 620w

Reviewed by Theodore Purdy, Jr.

Sat R of Lit 3:485 Ja 1 '27 1050w

DUGMORE, ARTHUR RADCLYFFE. Vast Sudan. 312p il $4 Stokes [21s Arrowsmith]

916.24 Sudan, Egyptian—Description and travel. Zoology—Sudan, Egyptian 26-8334

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:325 My '26

Reviewed by Karlene Kent

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 17 '26 420w

"For those that like tales of real adventure, this account of a peaceful journey into an almost unknown country is to be warmly recommended."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 26 '25 350w

Ind 115:656 D 5 '25 80w

"Altogether a lively, readable and interesting book." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p9 D 26 '25 180w

Nation and Ath 36:529 Ja 10 '25 400w

"The author weaves his several purposes together into an entertaining and informing narrative, although he thinks it necessary to include masses of unimportant and clogging detail of no interest whatever to the reader."

+ — N Y Times p23 Ja 24 '26 700w

"The Vast Sudan, is splendid entertainment."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:438 D 16 '25 420w

DUKE, WINIFRED. Heir to kings. auth Am ed 344p $2.50 Stokes

The time was ripe for the Young Pretender's return. He landed in Scotland, the Highland chieftains rallied about him, and his triumph seemed secure. The next few tragic months saw the defeat of all his hopes. Those months witnessed change and indecision in his plans; growing dissension in his entourage; the love affair that solaced the dark hours of the Prince; and at last, a day of bitter rout to his cause. The figure of the bright, unhappy youth moves, alert, eager, buoyant or despairing, in a group of living characters, against the background of the Highland scene.

"Miss Duke has an historical sense which is as rare as it is valuable. Not only does she deal with real persons, but she conveys a sense of reality to them which is astonishing." D. L. Mann

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 D 12 '26 650w

"A moving, well-written dramatization." F. H. M.

+ Lit R p12 O 9 '26 100w

"She has clung so closely to accepted fact that her work is more nearly akin to that of the historian than of the novelist; and yet as history, the book is not satisfactory. It must be conceded none the less, that the book, in spite of some trivial and insipid passages, does make engrossing reading in parts."

+ — N Y Times p28 O 31 '26 480w

DUNN, ESTHER CLOUDMAN. Ben Jonson's art: Elizabethan life and literature as reflected therein. (Fiftieth anniversary publications) 159p il $3 Smith college

822 Jonson, Ben. English drama. England—Social life and customs 25-12061

The author studies the impression made upon Jonson by the richly colored life and literature of his time and shows how "with conscious artistry Jonson turned his impressions of the life about him now into corrective satire, now into philosophic comment."

Reviewed by S: Chew

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 23 '26 360w

Times [London] Lit Sup p266 Ap 8 '26 80w

DUNN, ROBERT WILLIAMS. American foreign investments; contracts and concessions. ed. by Adrian Richt. 421p $5 Viking press [21s G. Allen]

332 Investments—United States 26-2161

The book answers the two questions where and how is American money invested abroad? Following a summary of government loans, banking transactions and private investments, the author lists, country by country, the enterprises backed by American money.

Am Econ R 16:312 Je '26 120w

DUNN, ROBERT W.—Continued

"As a work of reference, 'American Foreign Investments' will speedily age. So rapidly is the economic face of the world shifting that the matter of a few months intervening between the compilation and the publication of this work has already in places distorted the text with errors of omission and commission. It is to be hoped that Mr. Dunn and his backers will make of the present volume a pioneer of a series of annuals, subsequent issues of which may round out the inevitable shortcomings of the first effort." R. G. Wasson

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Mr 28 '26 980w

Ind 117:220 Ag 21 '26 230w

"The chief value of Mr. Dunn's book is not so much in the compilation of these general statistics, which is already adequately done by the Department of Commerce, but in the admirably detailed listing of the various American investments in virtually every country." P. H. Douglas

+ Nation 123:108 Ag 4 '26 280w

"Mr. Dunn's book will arouse no opposition. It is an arsenal of statistical ammunition capable of filling the rifles of the international banker or the crusading anti-imperialist or the professor on a secluded college campus. In a work such as Mr. Dunn's however scrupulously and patiently performed, there is always the possibility of a wide margin of error. Mr. Dunn himself explains at some length the evasiveness and deficiency of his source material and is quite prepared to admit that the results of his research may be incomplete if not inaccurate. Nevertheless, this is an original and pioneer work to which subsequent authors will owe much and for which discriminating students of international affairs will be grateful."

+ New Repub 47:313 Ag 4 '26 600w

"The book is too detailed for comfortable reading; but it is careful, and useful for reference."

New Statesman 27:506 Ag 14 '26 120w

N Y Times p14 Mr 28 '26 1100w

"A thoroughly practical summary."

+ N Y World p7m Ja 17 '26 40w

"It is well documented with statistics from official sources, and in addition has a useful appendix giving the text of many foreign loan contracts and concessions. The detailed analyses of American investments in different countries make the work especially valuable to banking houses and to all who deal in foreign securities."

+ N Y World p6m F 14 '26 300w

Spec 137:98 J1 17 '26 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p376 Je 3 '26 50w

DUNSANY, EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, 18th baron. Alexander, & three small plays. 199p $1.75 (5s) Putnam 822 26-9026

"In the Amusements of Khan Kharada, an Eastern potentate spending a festive evening with men-about-town in a West End hotel manifests his supernatural power, and in blueish light his earthly companions appear with the heads of dogs, camels, and other animals; but as they remain as unaware of their transformation as Bottom, and gain no glimpse into their true nature, the moral, if it be such, remains external. The Evil Kettle is a slight allegory: to the boy James Watt, dreaming by a fire on which the famous kettle sings, of the future, Satan shows, in grimy silhouette, a factory town. The Old King's Tale is a story set casually in dramatic form, but it has the remote charm of those strange and abstract regions, where longitude and latitude are the same, discovered formerly by the author. In Alexander, a sustained chronicle in four acts, the fate of one who by ambition has sought to transcend human limitations is depicted."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 23:68 N '26

Reviewed by J. R. Towse

Lit R p7 Je 5 '26 600w

"It is written in prose, but such prose as only a poet could write, and it touches unflinchingly the heroic mood. How it would play on the stage it would be unsafe to predict, but it is impossible to read it without feeling its effect."

+ Living Age 328:432 F 20 '26 260w (Reprinted from Morning Post)

"A melancholy array." Abbe Niles

— Nation 124:18 Ja 5 '27 80w

"Take all these plays together, with all their imperfections on their respective heads, and the reader can but be sensible of a certain romantic striving stirring below the surface. In 'Alexander' this writer can see little but failure; yet he is clearly conscious of a definite striving throughout the play for those things which, in their highest attaining, have made English romantic drama pre-eminent in literary history." P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p11 Je 20 '26 1700w

"For those who love Dunsany 'Alexander and Three Small Plays' is their book. But it is not a book to make converts for him." H. S.

N Y World p4m Je 13 '26 250w

Sat R 140:662 D 5 '25 50w

Sat R of Lit 3:43 Ag 14 '26 360w

Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 9 '26 440w

"A mighty theme—that of the Two Horned Alexander, a theme which could be treated boldly, imaginatively, mysteriously, but which trickles through Lord Dunsany's hands in four acts of inconsequential wanderings."

Theatre Arts Mo 10:563 Ag '26 120w

"To admirers of the imaginative work of Lord Dunsany the present volume of brief plays will bring the pleasure or disappointment of repetition. All these four plays can be resolved into allegories. Devices that had been strange appear without marvel. Gods reveal again their divinity by mechanical means; we are given the thunder of the embattled Sinai without the revelation of the commandments."

Times [London] Lit Sup p13 Ja 7 '26 260w

DUNSANY, EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, 18th baron. Charwoman's shadow. 294p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam 26-13667

"The Charwoman's Shadow is a fairy-story: a man sells his soul to a magician as the fee for instruction in the art of making gold, in order that he may provide a marriage-portion for his sister. She, however, desires not a portion but a potion, and, when he has procured a love-philtre for her, she puts it in the cup of a visiting duke and makes him sick (comic relief). Meanwhile the brother has fallen in love with the magician's charwoman, who is old and ugly, but can be recovered to youth and beauty if her shadow is restored to her: he does restore both her shadow to her and his own shadow to himself. . . . It is in Spain that the action passes."—New Statesman

"As original as it is charming, full of useful morals and worthy suggestions if you wish to imagine so, or, as some of us think, just a tale of tales to be read with laughter, or with here and there a misty eye." W: Beebe

Atlantic's Bookshelf N '26 400w

Booklist 23:38 O '26

"The story is charming, a beautiful fairy tale." Margery Latimer

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ag 29 '26 670w

"None of the many fantasies Lord Dunsany has written is more characteristically transfused with picturesque imagery and delicate satire than this tale." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 21 '26 620w

"To the wayfarer, plodding wearily through the dusty road of commonplace books, such a volume as Lord Dunsany's 'The Charwoman's

'Shadow' comes, as Conrad exquisitely put it, 'like the cooling shadow of a cloud.' It is evidence of the renewing virility of a genuinely original mind that Lord Dunsany's latest book shows enhanced rather than diminished mental grasp." F. H. Winterburn

+ Int Bk R p712 O '26 350w

Reviewed by J. Anderson

Lit R p5 S 25 '26 550w

"It is to be observed, first that it is wholly delightful, then that it shows a distinct dilution of fancy and lessening of vitality as compared with 'The King of Elf-Land's Daughter.'" Abbe Niles

+ — Nation 124:18 Ja 5 '27 220w

Nation and Ath 39:105 Ap 24 '26 100w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 27:48 Ap 24 '26 300w

"On the whole, Dunsany tells his story in the manner of an old chronicle in which magical episodes are recounted with charming matter-of-factness. It is a story for the child that is in all of us, told with a quiet but none the less prevailing grace. Style, without seeming to do so, makes 'The Charwoman's Shadow.'" Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p4m Ag 22 '26 620w

"Among an increasing number of realistic novels, this illusive fantasy of Lord Dunsany's is a delight to the imagination."

+ Outlook 144:156 S 29 '26 300w

"The glamour of romance is there, and Lord Dunsany's imagination, though sometimes content with the well-trodden paths of fairy-land, has a direction of its own and an effortlessness which prefers the ordinary to the strained. He has an odd, almost childlike sense of humour, which is sometimes trivial and sometimes delightful, just as his style can achieve effects both of beauty and of silliness. But throughout the book there is a tenderness, a spontaneity and a kind of grave playfulness which make it restful and refreshing." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 141:456 Ap 3 '26 320w

Reviewed by Padraic Colum

Sat R of Lit 3:193 O 16 '26 720w

Spec 136:1054 Je 19 '26 150w

"To admirers of Lord Dunsany's work this new romance will bring delight; for, though latterly the author seems to have stepped a pace beyond that magic circle within which his assured imagination has evoked so many strange beings, here is a return, and a generous exercise of power as in the 'Chronicles of Rodriguez.'" + Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Ap 8 '26 360w

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Ap 8 '26 360w

DUPLAY, MAURICE. Our doctors; a novel of to-day; tr. and preface by Joseph Collins. 279p $2 Harper

26-14830

A translation from the French of a story about a group of modern physicians. Daruel, the surgeon, who is the central figure of the story, is a disciple of the celebrated Manceaux. A brilliant, self-seeking man, he has caught much of his great master's skill and but little of his broad humanitarian spirit. The story tells of the birth of that spirit thru the redemptive power of love and suffering.

"He has written an unusually unpretentious and engrossing book for those of us who have any interest in the possible fate of our bodies. His hero and his hero's adventures are unimportant (Sinclair Lewis has done the job much better), but what is important is that he has offered to the intelligent reader, if not to the medical man, a decent and unsentimental account of matters as they do exist. To these people the book is unconditionally recommended." Lillian Hellman

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 S 26 '26 600w

"The pages swarm with details relating to laboratory experiments in search of a cancer remedy, hospital wards and their inmates, prolonged passages of dialogue in which the savants discuss their campaigns against the malady. These details should, undoubtedly, have, in some measure, been given space in the text. But also in a more skillfully constructed novel along the same lines, the repetitious and superfluous in their use would have been eliminated instead of always being overwhelming in evidence." E. C. Beckwith

+ — Lit R p12 S 4 '26 250w

"The lay reader will be apt to wish that its action did not hover quite so persistently around operating rooms, but it is undoubtedly a vivid study of doctors with their masks off."

+ — Nation 123:434 O 27 '26 80w

"The experienced reader is not likely to be overexcited or charmed by such old wine, exceedingly new though the bottle is into which it is poured. The bottle here is much more appealing. We have Dr. Collins's word in his interesting preface that M. Duplay—who by the way is a doctor's son—is substantially sound in his treatment and exposition of medical problems."

+ — N Y Times p31 S 26 '26 700w

"Our Doctors' will be found interesting by physicians and laymen since the story is never secondary to technical elucidations. It is the kind of novel that has long been waiting the hand of some one thoroughly conversant with the medical scene and yet sufficiently the literary craftsman to hold readers by his art." Morris Fishbein

+ N Y World p9m O 3 '26 480w

"Surely Dr. Collins has brought to the American public an original and a stimulating novel. Certainly all medical men who can snatch an hour or two from their practice will delight in M. Duplay's novel and its background; the general reader will find much to hold his attention. Dr. Collins's eminence fortunately assures us of the novel's scientific accuracy."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:240 O 23 '26 180w

Spring'd Republican p7f O 3 '26 320w

Wis Lib Bul 22:275 O '26

DURANT, WILLIAM JAMES. Story of philosophy; the lives and opinions of the greatest philosophers. 577p il $5 Simon & Schuster [25a Benn]

109 Philosophy—History 26-12314

The essential thought of the great philosophers from Plato to John Dewey is presented in such a way as to make it human and readable. Some personal comments are added to the expositions and many quotations from the writings of the chosen philosophers are included. Contents: Plato; Aristotle and Greek science; Francis Bacon; Spinoza; Voltaire and the French enlightenment; Immanuel Kant and German idealism; Schopenhauer; Herbert Spencer; Friedrich Nietzsche; Contemporary European philosophers; Contemporary American philosophers.

"Dr. Durant, writing ably and conscientiously, has given the common reader an interesting and enlivening introduction to a variety of thinkers who have profoundly influenced the modern world. His enthusiastic text and footnotes are an encouragement and a guide to a further acquaintance with the great philosophers through their own works." Theodore Morrison

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf S '26 800w

Booklist 23:62 N '26

"Dr. Durant's outline includes not only lucid explanations of the great philosophies, but the careers of the philosophers and interpretations based upon the twofold view, together with a host of good tales and merry quips by and about famous scholars from Socrates to Professor John Dewey."

+ Bookm 63:717 Ag '26 180w

"Straight to the average man he addresses his lucid and enlivening account of seventeen

DURANT, WILLIAM JAMES—Continued
famous attempts to see life steadily and to see it whole." Stuart Sherman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Je 20 '26 3000w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 30 '26 1050w

"The author of this book is a consummate stylist, and some of his pages grip as closely as those of a thrilling novel. . . The real merits of this book cannot blind the critic to its very considerable shortcomings. Its opinions and judgments cannot be accepted at face value, but require careful examination and sifting." W. P. H. K.

Cath World 124:272 N '26 1000w

"The greater thinkers, set in the proper framework of their own ages, are presented in the manner of a gallery of celebrated painters, as if the Uffizi gallery, with its self-portraits of noted artists, were accompanied in each instance by a rare masterpiece. There are advantages and disadvantages in this method. To select only the choicest specimens of any art is to awaken enthusiasm; to leave out the preliminary studies, the tentative sketches, causes a certain misconception." Woodbridge Riley

Int Bk R p700 O '26 1500w

"It is a rich, delightful book, full of buoyancy and charm, a tonic for pedants, a stimulant for intelligent dilettantes." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p5 J1 10 '26 1200w

"Mr. Durant's book is probably no worse than its fellow outlines, but it commits the typical sins. . . The character of the errors in many cases forces one to suspect an uncritical reliance on secondary sources. . . The most offensive, if the least important, of all Mr. Durant's sins is the vaudevillian character which informs the whole work. One can almost forgive him the bad taste of his punning and his little jokes; but one cannot brook the bald and blatant bombast of innumerable [of his] summaries. It is not inharmonious with what has gone before to add that 'The story of Philosophy' is a very good book of its kind." M. J. Adler

+ Nation 123:298 S 29 '26 1050w

"A sense of humor, a lucid style and a surety born of familiarity combine to make the Story of Philosophy never ambiguous and always interesting. He is Strachey to the Queen of Sciences. He has made warm blood circulate once more in her cold veins and has penetrated behind her regal grandeur to find the living woman." Paul Weiss

+ New Repub 47:286 J1 28 '26 650w

"While he who runs may not read a book of 577 pages, he who sits can certainly read it in a few evenings. What is more, he can reread it with profit and delight. For, astonishingly, Dr. Durant writes like a competent writer, not like a German philosopher. The old textbooks, the Paulsens and the Windelbands—they seem documents by comparison. Dr. Durant's book is decidedly not a document, except in its rigorous accuracy. For the rest it is a delight."

+ N Y Times p6 Je 20 '26 2250w

"Philosophy made delightful and intelligible to everybody just when the world is peculiarly in need of philosophy! Dr. Durant is indeed a benefactor."

+ Outlook 144:216 O 13 '26 260w

Pratt p6 autumn '26

"It would be pleasant to omit all negative criticism in the case of a work so brilliantly conceived and executed as a whole. But there are a few reservations that must be made. Even Mr. Durant's catholic appreciation fails him occasionally when he is dealing with those philosophers with whom he is temperamentally least in sympathy. Scant courtesy, for instance, is shown to Benedetto Croce." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:899 J1 3 '26 800w

"We know that we are treading on debatable ground, but it appears to us disrespectful to call the doctrines of Plato, Aristotle, or Kant

'opinions.' And Dr. Durant's method has encouraged in him a certain formlessness and lack of concentration. His eighteen philosophers, moreover, are oddly selected. Yet he writes with liveliness and good feeling. His expositions are trustworthy enough if some allowance has been made for his personal bias. The Story of Philosophy brings together in a stimulating and fluent style a great deal of useful information."

+ Spec 137:384 S 11 '26 520w

"Is the book a thoroughly bad one? Yes, inasmuch as it is unscholarly in the bad sense being inaccurate about facts and often shallow in its exposition of doctrines. It is episodic and not a continuous story at all, and one has only to compare it with, say, Webb's 'History of Philosophy' in the 'Home University Library,' where in a quarter of the space the writer really expounds something and never gives the impression of shallowness." G. Brown

— Springfield Republican p12 O 14 '26 820w

Wis Lib Bul 22:271 O '26

DURYEE, MARY BALLARD (MIMI, pseud).
Avenues of song. 80p $1.75 Brick row bk. shop
811 26-6993

"Out of the 'Conning Tower' steps Mimi (Mary Ballard Duryee) down 'Avenues of Song.' Mrs. Duryee dwells quietly on love, on nature and particularly the sea. She touches the war but lightly."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"These poems are mostly serious—without being too deadly serious. They are written not with great passion but serenely, sincerely." Garreta Bussey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ag 8 '26 230w

"A fine lyric quality is revealed in this slender volume. Mrs. Duryee's verse is marked by delicate, flexible, but genuine strength and by an equally genuine feeling for beauty. Occasionally, a line reminds the reader of Emily Dickinson; occasionally, another is reminiscent of Edna St. Vincent Millay, but the author is no imitator."

+ Ind 116:399 Ap 3 '26 100w

"Many readers will wish this little book for the children's poems, for they all have delicate grace and whimsical turns of thought."

+ N Y Times p6 My 9 '26 260w

"Miss Duryee's unpretentious volume of poems like so many others, falls under the too common head of undistinguished lyrics. There are occasional lines in which there is a fine consciousness of vowel and consonantal values. There are other lines in which a poignancy of feeling is suggested rather than said. Finally two which have the rare sound, charm. But this is the best that can be said."

— Sat R of Lit 2:925 J1 10 '26 180w

DUTTON, CHARLES JUDSON. Crooked cross.
243p $2 Dodd 26-2814

An eminent scientist returns to his home in New York state from China where he has discovered new and startling material for a book on the origin of man. Three friends, detectives of fame, are invited to dine with him. They find their host in the library, stabbed thru the heart, a crooked cross traced upon his forehead. It develops on enquiry that the dead man's visitor was a Chinaman on an unknown errand, that his secretary, an attractive young woman, left the house in the afternoon in a state of high excitement, and that the doors of a bookcase in the library had been smashed and several volumes stolen. With these facts to start upon the three detectives open their investigation and unravel the mystery.

Booklist 22:329 My '26

"He has not only rendered distinguished service to jaded readers of so-called thrillers, but he takes the palm for originality over all competitors in this well-trodden fiction field. In 'The Crooked Cross' he has not only unearthed

a unique motive but has handled it in a way that stamps him as a writer of intelligence and a keen student of the United States that may be if our Puritanic curtailers of joy continue their dirty work." Carty Ranck
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 F 23 '26 350w

"This is a fairly good story of clues and detectives, and if a reader does not mind an accumulation of false clues and poor detectives he will enjoy it. The greatest fault with this story lies in the writer's own lack of ingenuity. He conceals nothing from his readers."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Mr 24 '26 270w
Cleveland Open Shelf p108 S '26

Reviewed by L. M. Field
Int Bk R p361 My '26 30w

"Mr. Dutton has a certain skill at narrating detail after detail without becoming dull. His diction is smooth, colorful, very easy to grasp and pleasant to read, though frequently the reader is jarred by such repetitions as 'Bartley's keen eyes never left my face, and a trace of anxiety swept across his face.'"

+ — N Y Times p22 F 7 '26 360w

"A vastly entertaining and superior mystery tale."

+ N Y World p6m Ja 31 '26 220w

"The obvious devices multiply incidents and heighten interest despite the fact that the reader will be able to identify the guilty man before events proceed far."

Spring'd Republican p5a F 14 '26 230w

DYCHE, JOHN ALEXANDER. Bolshevism in American labor unions; a plea for constructive unionism; introd. by Julius Henry Cohen. 224p $2 Boni & Liveright

331.88 Trade unions—United States. Clothing trade 26-18305

"Out of his forty years' experience in the garment industry the former general secretary of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union attempts an explanation of what has happened in the needle trades of New York City."—Int Bk R

"Where prejudice and irritation do not hinder him, the book has sound practical value and authority."

+ — Bookm 64:364 N '26 130w

"This is what is usually called a 'hard-hitting' book. The author speaks his mind without equivocation or softening of terms. Unfortunately, it is a poorly written book. A person trained in the use of words and armed with a blue pencil could have wrought wondrous changes for the better in the manuscript." W. J. G.

— + Int Bk R p784 N '26 300w

"Mr. Dyche's book is a crudely human and pungent document without the slightest scholarly pretense, or even a successful attempt to achieve grammatical correctness. Mr. Dyche evidently nurses an intense resentment over his expulsion from office in the union on whose policies he attempts to pass such withering judgment. The cloud of his rage obviously blinds his eyes to accomplishments of the union admired by observers far more competent, and certainly more detached, than he. But the main current of his argument sweeps clear of these obstructions." Evans Clark

— + N Y Times p1 Ag 1 '26 700w

"Loses much of its possible value as a criticism of trade unions by its obvious prejudice and bombast. In too many cases, the author has allowed personal antagonism to color his conclusions. Yet few will quarrel with this general assertion."

Spring'd Republican p10 S 16 '26 400w

DYER, WALTER ALDEN. All around Robin Hood's barn; a canine idyll. 204p il $5 Doubleday

26-10518

Robin Hood was an old English sheepdog who had been given to Alice Sawtell by Lieutenant Arnold when he went to the war. Alice cherished Robin Hood all the more because Arnold never returned. The big barn back of the Sawtell's was known as Robin Hood's barn because this was his special domain. All the many dogs of the village were friends of Robin Hood and once when he was stolen and found his way home with difficulty his dog friends were among the most overjoyed. Altho told in story form the book gives some information about each of the many breeds of dogs of the village of Mapledoram.

Booklist 23:38 O '26

"To adults who enjoy a pleasant rambling bit of imaginative, dog-lore, not thrilling, but moving steadily, and to juveniles who want to glean a general idea of dog character, this book will appeal. Mr. Dyer never yet wrote without a charm peculiarly his own. As for the illustrations, they would carry a telephone directory to popularity." A. P. Terhune

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 My 2 '26 720w

"The book is one to be read gratefully by all lovers of animals in general and of dogs in particular. Anything more delicious than the story of the wedding of Alice Sawtell we cannot remember or imagine."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 15 '26 350w

"Mr. Dyer knows and understands and respects all these dogs and writes of them persuasively and entertainingly." Gilbert Sevier

+ Int Bk R p444 Je '26 1400w

Sat R of Lit 2:891 Je 26 '26 130w

"The book is illustrated by Charles Livingston Bull, well known as a painter of animals. This artist's sketches are admirable; his expressions and postures lifelike, yet the colored plates are impaired by too uniform coloring. Most of these colored pictures would have been much better had they been allowed to appear in straight black and white."

+ — Spring'd Republican p7f Ap 25 '26 620w

E

EAMES, ARTHUR JOHNSON, and MAC-DANIELS, LAURENCE HOWLAND. Introduction to plant anatomy. (McGraw-Hill publications in the agricultural and botanical sciences) 364p il $3.50 McGraw

581.4 Botany—Anatomy. Plant cells and tissues 25-16986

"An excellent elementary work, not intended as a record of what is now known, but as a text for class study and laboratory use as a preliminary guide to independent study."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:318 My '26

"A well-balanced book which can scarcely fail to be of value to any botanist who uses morphological data."

+ Nature 117:21 Ap 3 '26 250w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:23 Ja '26

EASTON, BURTON SCOTT. Gospel according to St Luke; a critical and exegetical commentary. 367p $3.50 Scribner [12s T. & T. Clark]

226.4 Bible. New Testament—Gospels—Luke 26-8837

"Dr. Easton's method is to divide the Gospel into its natural short sections and comment on each of them, verse by verse. At the close of each section he discusses the correspondences with Matthew and Mark, and also considers the difficulties of a critical and historical nature which fall outside of the strict exegesis. Footnotes on every page are concerned with purely textual matters, and this part of the work has been excellently done. The more important readings are stated in the familiar notation, and are accompanied where necessary with a few words of illuminating comment which enable the student to form a judgment. Account is taken not only of the well-known codices, but of the newer MS material which is not yet generally accessible."—J Religion

EASTON, BURTON SCOTT—Continued.

"Dr. Easton has undertaken to write a commentary of moderate bulk which will take full account of the parallels and yet examine Luke's Gospel as a work complete in itself. The task is a formidable one, but has been admirably carried out. Its execution has been possible only because the author has the singular gift of concise statement and at the same time a faculty of seizing on what is strictly relevant. A work which might easily have overflowed into several volumes and left at the end a very confused impression has thus been confined to four hundred pages." E. F. Scott

+ J Religion 6:425 JI '26 1050w

Times [London] Lit Sup p786 N 11 '26 1100w

EATON, HERBERT NELSON, and others. Aircraft instruments. (Ronald aeronautic lib.) 269p il $5 Ronald

533.6 Aeronautical instruments 26-7848

"Describes, and in some cases presents theory and explains operation of, various instruments of both American and foreign manufacture. Meteorological instruments receive little attention; they are described in Willis Ray Gregg's 'Aeronautical meteorology.'"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 11:21 Ap '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:454 O '26

Pratt p19 autumn '26

EATON, RICHARD, ed. Best continental short stories of 1924-1925, and The yearbook of the continental short story. 557p $2.50 Dodd

Short stories—Collections (25-765)

"Containing thirty-one short stories by writers in twenty-one European countries, including the Scandinavian and the Turkish. Among those whose names already are known to us are Luigi Pirandello, Maxim Gorky, Alexander Kuprin, Miguel de Unamuno and Prince Wilhelm of Sweden."—N Y World

Booklist 22:295 Ap '26

Reviewed by Frances Newman

Bookm 63:91 Mr '26 50w

"All translated, it would seem, with rare fidelity to spirit as well as letter. The stories witness colorfully the racial characteristics of the native countries of the authors." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 23 '26 850w

"Naturally enough, the choice was not always wide, and some of the work is inferior, but the short story enthusiast will find much that is interesting and valuable, much that is informative, in these tales gathered over so wide and diverse a field." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p5 Ja 23 '26 140w

"Mr. Eaton offers good and often exceedingly amusing continental stories built in the main on the American model." J. J. Smertenko

Nation 122:644 Je 9 '26 220w

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford

N Y Times p12 Ja 24 '26 600w

N Y World p6m D 27 '25 50w

Wis Lib Bul 22:141 Ap '26

EATON, RICHARD, ed. Best French short stories of 1924-25; and The yearbook of the French short story. 514p $2.50 Dodd

Short stories—Collections

"Four hundred and seventy-four pages of short fiction culled from various journals and schools and including samples of the craft of such as Paul Bourget, Pierre Benoit, Pierre MacOrlan, Pierre Mille and Paul Morand. A statistical looking 'Year Book' brings up the rear."—N Y World

Booklist 22:420 JI '26

"Paul Morand's story, 'I Burn Moscow,' is the only story in the French volume which has managed to survive very crude translating." Frances Newman

+ Bookm 63:91 Mr '26 50w

"This is Mr. Eaton's second anthology of short stories from the current French magazines. The first, which appeared last year, was distinguished by errors in translation. In this respect the second volume is hardly behind the first. . . A great deal more can be said for the stories themselves. They are pretty well selected, their general level is high, and a few—including those by MacOrlan and Morand—are indeed excellent." Malcolm Cowley

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 S 5 '26 400w

"The translation of these stories is well done, though in conversation a hint of the stilted from time to time creeps in. In general, the selection seems fairly to give a representative cross-section of shorter fiction as written in France last year." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 17 '26 460w

"Not so complete in the nature of things as Mr. O'Brien's, but showing promise of becoming in time a valuable guide to short story literature." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p5 Ja 23 '26 120w

Reviewed by J. J. Smertenko

Nation 122:644 Je 9 '26 160w

"All the stories are competent, almost discouragingly so. Some of them, the greater part indeed, present such a sleek surface of technical accomplishment that the mediocrity of content is all the more tedious." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p12 Ja 24 '26 600w

N Y World p6m D 27 '25 50w

Wis Lib Bul 22:275 O '26

EATON, THEODORE HILDRETH. Education² and vocations; principles and problems of vocational education. (Bks. on education) 300p $2.50 Wiley

371.42 Vocational education 26-14528

"The author has placed within the scope of his book the essential problems of industrial education. Although not so organized, the book is divided into two parts. The first part deals with the sociological aspects of the industrial-education situation. The chapters which comprise this section treat such topics as 'Vocation from the Individual and Social Standpoint,' 'Education and Economic Society,' 'Consequences of Division Labor,' 'The Need for Vocational Education,' and 'The Selective Function of Vocational Education.' The second part deals with method in vocational education."—School R

"This book affects me as a John Wesley sermon does a Methodist—powerfully confirms my belief. Eaton must have taught or studied composition, for his argument, illustration, and concrete instances are winsome. He has caught, too, the modern idea of teaching reading, for his questions appertaining to each chapter are put at the beginning instead of being tagged on at the end. Here is an up-to-the-minute book, appealing to everybody, capably done."

+ Educ R 72:255 D '26 520w

"Because the book is all-inclusive, it fulfills the broad purposes for which it was written. Vocational education would be benefited if each person engaged in its service carried into practice what the author of this book has written." Robert Woelner

+ School R 34:710 N '26 280w

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Bucolic attitude. 74p $1 Duffield

630.1 Country life 26-10646

In this little book, written in reply to Charles Downing Lay's "Freedom of the city," a defense of urban life, Mr Eaton upholds the country as holding a richer, happier and more satisfying life than the town.

"Walter Prichard Eaton, in extolling the bucolic, has achieved a charming little volume which ought to be enjoyed for its own sake, beyond the point of discussion." L. B. Gilkes
+ Bookm 63:715 Ag '26 200w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 S 19 '26 160w

Boston Transcript p1 Je 5 '26 220w

"Mr. Eaton has written a charming book." L: Mumford

+ New Repub 48:280 O 27 '26 100w

"Very persuasive and quite fascinating." H: J. Forman

+ N Y Times p1 Je 20 '26 950w

Outlook 143:387 J1 14 '26 180w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Sat R of Lit 3:53 Ag 21 '26 350w

EBERLEIN, HAROLD DONALDSON, and RAMSDELL, ROGER WEARNE. Practical book of chinaware. 325p il $10 (42s) Lippincott

733 Pottery 25-27874

In a book intended for reference rather than for general reading the authors cover the chinaware of all countries from the beginning of its manufacture to 1840. The history, body, glaze, characteristic shapes and types of decoration and the potters' marks of each kind are set forth in such a way as to enable the amateur to identify the various makes. Distinctly museum pieces are omitted and only such china is dealt with as the owner may expect to acquire by way of inheritance or purchase. There are over 200 illustrations, a bibliography and an index.

"A good one-volume work on the chinaware of all countries. It will be useful to amateurs and to experienced collectors. An addition to any library."

+ Booklist 22:239 Mr '26

"The book is large in scope, and liberally and colorfully illustrated. It is valuable for its authenticity and readable style."

+ Bookm 63:367 My '26 80w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 30 '26 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:144 Mr '26

"Messrs. Eberlein and Ramsdell have produced a great work, betokening on every page its ripened and comprehensive scholarship. Covering pretty much the same ground as the well-known work of Burton, published in two sumptuous volumes some four years ago, they have produced a work which does not suffer by comparison with that of Burton. Thanks to an adequate index, a vast amount of information is made readily accessible." J: Spargo

+ Sat R of Lit 2:544 F 6 '26 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p184 Mr 11 '26 280w

EBERLEIN, HAROLD DONALDSON, and RICHARDSON, ALBERT EDWARD. English inn past and present. 308p il $7.50 Lippincott

914.2 Hotels, taverns, etc.—England. England—Description and travel 26-7097

The inns described and illustrated include most of the chief examples in England from the fourteenth to the early nineteenth century. The inns are treated both structurally and for what they tell of other times and customs. Two long introductory chapters tell the history of the English inn and there is a chapter on inn signs and one on coaches and methods of travelling. The illustrations number 277, including road maps, and the Appendix gives a topographical list of old inns.

Booklist 23:74 N '26

Bookm 63:493 Je '26 140w

"One suspects that the writers built up the text as an excuse for publishing their admirable collection of pictures, instead of using the latter as a means of illustrating the text. The result is that they just miss doing what they set out to do. The reader loses the architectural thread in the social history, and the pattern of life and manners in the description of individual inns, considered for their own sake. As a collection of pictures of inns and inn-life, however, this volume attains distinction." L. L. Notestein

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 J1 25 '26 450w

"The facts given are authoritative, being the result of personal investigation. The authors themselves visited and studied the inns they describe. Moreover, from old manuscripts and letters they brought to light various fascinating bits of previously unknown history."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 3 '26 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p43 Ap '26

"Space forbids any further reference to this delightful book except for a commendation of its chapter on inn signs and its very practical advice to the inn-seeking tourist. Mention must also be made of the innumerable illustrations. They include photographs, sketches and eighteenth century prints, and it is in no way a reflection on the authors to say these are even more valuable than the letterpress." Keith Hutchison

+ Int Bk R p504 J1 '26 950w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

Lit R p10 Ap 3 '26 280w

"It is a book of strangely humanizing effect. And in value and abundance of illustration the volume has few rivals."

+ N Y Times p11 Ap 11 '26 1700w

Sat R 141:574 My 1 '26 900w

"On the whole, it is rather pedestrian in style, but it contains much that is fascinating in its record and a wealth of excellent illustrations."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:652 Mr 20 '26 100w

"A volume of large and quite fascinating interest."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p109 F 18 '26 800w

EDDISON, ERIC RUCKER. Styrbjorn the Strong. 256p $2 A. & C. Boni [7s 6d J. Cape]

26-15960

"The story of Styrbjorn, who, born to hereditary joint-kingship, finds that the intriguing of others has cost him a throne and a friend, and at the last attempts to regain his throne. He fails, but his viking-faring of the earlier days, as well as the glory of his failure, have more than earned for him a place at Valhalla."

—Boston Transcript

Booklist 23:176 Ja '27

"There is a sweep, a headlong, unweaving impetus in the tale that makes for drama and builds to stirring climaxes." Juana Nelson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 O 10 '26 750w

Boston Transcript p4 S 29 '26 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 D '26

"The story is told with a vivid sense of narrative and a strong feeling for the characters. Mr. Eddison is thoroughly at home in his material; he makes his people and his story live."

+ Ind 117:424 O 9 '26 120w

EDDISON, ERIC RUCKER—Continued.

"He writes with a beauty not often found this side the sixteenth century. His prose is mannered, but it is rugged, energetic, fresh for all its devised old idiom; and, best of all, it carries the imagery of a mind that is individual and rarely commonplace." Walter Yust
+ Lit R p3 S 18 '26 620w

"Again Mr. Eddison demonstrates his extraordinary gift for breathing life and passion into legendary or purely imaginary personages, and for awakening breathless partisanship in their conflicts, triumphs and disasters." D. B. W.
+ New Repub 49:173 D 29 '26 100w

"For the qualities of glamour and imagination which stood out in 'The Worm Ouroboros' he has substituted in this book the lusty vigor and poetic simplicity of the old Scandinavian lore, telling Styrbjorn's story with historical fidelity yet with the skill of the true story-teller, clothing it in the style of the old sagas, yet with the beauty of the true stylist."
+ N Y Times p16 S 19 '26 820w

"Crude as the relations between the characters are, they have an inflexibility and an emotional integrity that are extremely moving, and the last scene is finely worked up to and described with economy of detail and great dramatic effect." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 142:388 O 2 '26 260w

Times [London] Lit Sup p676 O 7 '26 300w

EDDISON, ERIC RUCKER. The worm Ouroboros. 445p il $3 A. & C. Boni

26-26719

"The story tells how one Lessingham, a modern man, dreams a dream and sees visions. He is translated to another world, to Mercury, we are told, and there observes the great adventures of the strange beings in that country. Their world is torn by struggles between the great kingdom of Witchland and that of Demonland. For a while Lessingham figures slightly as an observer, and then fades out of the book and the dream goes on. . . The king of Witchland is the Lucifer of this dark struggle; venomous, proud, wicked, he opposes his overwhelming power against the three noble leaders of Demonland. And when at last he falls, he falls with superb, unconquered pride, mighty and terrible in his defeat. . . The author has created a new planet-world for his Homeric story, and has created a new English style to tell it in."—Ind

Booklist 23:38 O '26

"The book is very difficult to evaluate. Praising it, we come forthwith against the wall of its undeniable weaknesses, the greatest of which lies in the author's attempt to carry a perilously tenuous plot and diffuse vision through nearly 450 pages. Condemning it we are brought up even more quickly by the realization that something very akin to power or prolonged yearning was necessary to enable the writing of such a volume." Kenneth Burke
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 J1 4 '26 1000w

"This extraordinary book is so far out of the usual run of modern fiction as to make adequate description almost impossible. While Mr. Eddison has not the lightness and humor of a Cabell or a Stephens he is still decidedly of their company, and of Dunsany's also one might add. Like them he is a stylist, and a slightly precious one; an explorer in strange realms of the imagination, at one with the spirit of far-off legendary days. And yet even these authors provide but a poor basis of comparison; for 'The Worm Ouroboros' is really sui generis and has an epic sweep to its narrative that sets it quite apart from other recent prose romances." J. F. S.
+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 26 '26 1050w

"A strange subject, a strange style; an author concerning whom I know nothing. Yet here I touch the skirts of bewildering romance and by them I am bewitched; here, abruptly, by some magic far different from the common magic of the art I know, I am made aware of and become a part of a new world. For this I am thankful. It is an amazing, a vast book. Some of you will become its prophets." D. R.

+ Ind 116:750 Je 26 '26 1300w

"So suavely runs the narrative, and with so little occasion for disbelief, and so far from to-day is it all, that a Chatterton or a MacPherson might well have passed it on to willing readers as an authentic romance of old, found in some hidden vault or chest, a thing left over from antiquity. From the first, our attention is captivated by the scenery, the architecture, the sculpture and the other decorations, as well as by the stately personages continually disclosed—galaxies of characters of every degree." Edwin Markham
+ Int Bk R p697 O '26 1800w

"A chapter of this masterpiece would suggest more sensitive awareness of life to the square inch than a whole shelfful of realism of recent manufacture. It is not a book that will attract many readers, but it is one which will survive the century; let us be generous, indeed a number of centuries." Walter Yust
+ Lit R p3 Je 26 '26 500w

"A rigorously conceived epic, the interest lies purely in the narrative. As Mr. Cabell notes in his preface, there is no hint of allegory, hardly even a suspicion of humor. Much of the style is unabashedly synthetic, but a chapter like that recounting the marvelous ascent of Koshtra Pivvarcha has a poetic boldness and masculinity that finds its meet parallels in Blake and Ossian." C. P. Fadiman
Nation 123:87 J1 28 '26 350w

New Repub 47:148 Je 23 '26 320w

"This new writer is stylistic in the grand and heroic manner that evokes beauty and vigorous life, yet it seems to us that without injury to his verbal charm or loss of beauty in his passage of atmosphere saturated with glamour of nature, he could have removed much that would quicken the action of his narration to a more attractive pace. Eddison is a poet, his sensitiveness finely depicting contrasts of living forces. And 'The Worm Ouroboros' is the product of a first-class imagination that has yet to be fully mastered by art." Edwin Clark

+ — N Y Times p13 Je 6 '26 950w

"The prose in which it is told has a sonorous, rich beauty that caresses the ear. We almost completely succumbed to its spell. That seems large praise but the word, almost, as we just have used it, has a notable importance. For example, a predilection for too precious verbosity burdens many paragraphs; a cadenced prose becoming too smooth and sweet blurs certain poetically conceived designs. Notwithstanding the 'Worm Ouroboros' deserves the critical connotation now generally given to the word, authentic. Finally it must be stated that it is not so much a grand epic account of an imaginative world as the utopia of a decadent who wills to escape our present century."
+ — Sat R of Lit 3:43 Ag 14 '26 160w

EDDY, SHERWOOD, and PAGE, KIRBY. Makers of freedom; biographical sketches in social progress. 311p $1.50 Doran

920 Biography. Reformers 26-12628

"The authors have chosen for their subjects eight epoch making figures from the history of world progress. Those whose lives and works here illustriously represent the eternal struggle for liberty and enlightenment are: William Lloyd Garrison, Booker T. Washington, Francis of Assisi, Martin Luther, John Wesley, J. Keir Hardie, Susan B. Anthony, and Woodrow Wilson. The book contains a valuable concluding chapter in which the various present dangers to the advance of altruistic ideals, of democratized government, industry and commerce, are impartially dissected."—Bookm

Bookm 64:105 S '26 100w

"Nothing new or strikingly intelligent is to be found in the book. It is a traditional appreciation of stock heroes, with an emphasis on their churchgoing habits."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 S 5 '26 160w

J Religion 6:557 S '26 50w

"Their method is a very admirable one and ably worked out."

+ N Y Times p20 J1 4 '26 780w

Outlook 144:90 S 15 '26 50w

Survey 56:644 S 15 '26 50w

EDIE, LIONEL DANFORTH. Economics: principles and problems. 799p $5 Crowell [15s Pitman]

330 Economics 26-8894

Written by the professor of economics, Indiana university, the book is intended to provide an introduction to economics for university students and general readers. "The plan of the writer has been to state as clearly and coherently as possible the content of economics when the newer developments are integrated with the older traditions of the science, without complicating the study by technical controversy over disputed issues."

Reviewed by J: Ise

Am Econ R 16:453 S '26 1050w

Am J Soc 32:158 J1 '26 60w

"The mere placing of inductive material into juxtaposition with the older body of economic principles hardly constitutes a synthesis, and here is a weakness of the new volume. The connection between particular problems and the previously presented principles and the relation of the inductive data thereto, is often obscure. The work is lacking in continuity and unity. These difficulties coupled with the enormous mass and scattered nature of the material covered, are likely to make the book somewhat unsatisfactory for use as a text in introductory courses in economics. Professor Edie has done pioneer work here, which is of great value in showing the varied extent and great range of the subject of economics in its more recent developments, and it should prove stimulating and suggestive to subsequent writers, but a genuine fusion of modern economic literature into a consistent body has yet to be made." R. T. Bye

+ Ann Am Acad 127:200 S '26 350w

"Readers of Professor Edie's 'Principles of the New Economics,' published more than a year ago, will recognize in this larger treatment of the subject he has made his own the same insight into the factors and the like mastery of the material which he showed in the earlier volume. . . There is considerable originality in his method." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 2 '26 1100w

"It is a text-book, but I am sure you will find that the author's intent to satisfy the general reader has been so happily carried out that an expert teacher is not a necessity for interpreting the book to you."

+ Educ R 72:129 O '26 580w

"Mr. Edie wants to go all the way in the making of his economic text a genuine illumination of contemporary existence. But he has wavered and temporized. In his book lip service is done to the traditional body of doctrine, though the problems arising from his data interest him most. And so his book is a straddle. But this may not be a bad thing; for it will prepare the way for others." R. G. Tugwell

+ Sat R of Lit 3:292 N 13 '26 120w

Survey 56:644 S 15 '26 70w

EDMAN, IRWIN. Richard Kane looks at life. 320p $2.50 Houghton [6s Constable]

170 Life 26-8757

A college professor of philosophy looks at life through the eyes of Richard Kane, a favorite pupil, whose mental and spiritual gropings are followed through college and several years after. Richard is sensitive, reflective and idealistic, keenly alive to everything beautiful. He lives always "beyond his intellectual income" and at twenty-eight, when the book leaves him, he has passed through many disillusioning experiences; but though he has become less hopeful of a beautiful and ordered world he has reached a greater serenity and wisdom.

Booklist 23:5 O '26

"It is the most important message of its kind to young thinking America, and to all those who are interested in youth anywhere, that has yet been published." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:475 Je '26 250w

Reviewed by Joseph Collins

Bookm 63:653 Ag '26 1050w

"Here is a type of book which interests me much. It personalizes contemporary culture as exhibited by an intelligent youth of the educated class. If the book were as good as it almost is, one might easily prefer its somewhat ambiguous genre to the fish of pure exposition or to the flesh of pure fiction. For the purposes which Mr. Edman has in mind perhaps the genre is right. He has come so close to brilliantly justifying it that the very defects of his experiment are instructive. Sagacious readers will recognize this account of the life and opinions of young Richard Kane as an essay toward filling a vacancy. Do you wish a book which will help steer your boy at college into the excitements of the mind and the imagination? Here is one." Stuart Sherman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 2 '26 2850w

"A book so mellow in tone and well-bred in manner and style that it is likely to be pushed aside in the crowd of brisk and aggressive literature." Landon Robinson

+ Lit R p7 My 15 '26 450w

"The book as a whole is one of the best introductions a young person could have to the universe of sensitive reflection. Yet it is only an introduction, and the young person has an even chance, provided he is unaware how much above his callow hero Mr. Edman remains, of concluding that after all ideas are little more than pretty toys. . . For Richard they are all included under the term Beauty—and there lies his weakness." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 122:583 My 26 '26 600w

"Richard Kane is a good book, and an important one, if only for the reason that it so thoroughly analyzes a type but little understood." C. H. Grattan

+ New Repub 47:145 Je 23 '26 600w

"It would be difficult to overpraise this book. In its peculiar sphere 'Richard Kane Looks at Life' is a unique contribution. It may be that the book preaches; if so, the wind is tempered to the most shorn of lambs. And we doubt if the consensus of judgment will be that the book does preach. It seems, rather, one of those inspirational things, but inspiration submitted to reason and rarely mellowed. The literary charm and flavor are undeniable." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 18 '26 1650w

"Distraction is by way of being a highly prized virtue, and many books capitalize this quality. Here, however, is a book that serves the opposite purpose: it concentrates and clarifies. Instead of fretting the reader's senses by multitudinous external stimuli it guides him to perceive and follow spiritual trends within himself and in the world. It is not perfunctory as an entertainer is, nor aloof as even a garrulous dreamer remains. It is excellently companionable. That is its first, perhaps its greatest, benediction. Mr. Edman has winnowed his thought and ripened the chosen seeds; thanks to his unerring judgment, they are all in some measure fruitful. A book of thought cannot be crystal clear; this book, however, resolves itself, continuously and finally, into translucence, and that, since translucence affords insight, is enough." Eva Goldbeck

EDMAN, IRWIN—Continued

+ N Y World p6m Ap 25 '26 1300w

"Richard Kane is the hero of one of the most interesting books of the year, a strange new kind of book, half fiction and half essay, the work of a graceful writer, half poet, half philosopher." E. S. Bates

Sat R of Lit 2:786 My 15 '26 1100w

"Told with deft analysis and ready sympathy. Is this a true picture? Yes, of an important and growing group in our colleges. Doubtless they are dilettantes. But they are headed in a good direction. Like the essays of Prof Edman which describe them, they are gracious and alert and delightful; and, again like the essays, all that they need in order to become more effective is stamina and fire." W. R. A.

+ Springfield Republican p8 Ap 20 '26 480w

"If you have youth to teach or interpret or correct (or even a few things left uncertain in your own philosophy) you'll find Richard Kane's biography of the soul, mighty stimulating. It covers the field and poses the problems with an intellectual dignity that few of our disputations on the young reveal." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 56:331 Je 1 '26 270w

"Mr. Edman ransacks Richard's brain with unhurrying affection. He is tolerant, whimsical, witty, sometimes argumentative, and always interesting when he is writing about music and the arts in general—his own opinions are more interesting than the actual conversation of his Richard Kane."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p685 O 14 '26 520w

Wis Lib Bul 22:169 My '26

EDWARD, KENNETH. Religious experience; its nature and truth. (Kerr lectures) 259p $3 Scribner [8s T. & T. Clark]

201 Religion—Psychology

"The Kerr Lectures delivered in Glasgow in the winter of 1923. They furnish study of the nature of religious experience and a critical consideration of investigations made by modern psychologists. The lecture on 'The Fallacy of Psychologism' contains many shrewd observations concerning a prevalent modern tendency to suppose that religion translated into psychological technique is superior to any other translation."—J Religion

J Religion 6:443 Jl '26 50w

"He is not content merely to report; he makes valuable criticisms and suggestions at every step." W. M. Horton

+ J Religion 6:635 N '26 530w

"A volume which deserves attention for its clear constructive handling of a subject grown increasingly complex of recent years."

+ Spec 136:723 Ap 17 '26 280w

"Not the least valuable part of the book is to be found in its appreciative and critical discussion of the teaching of Schleiermacher and of that of Professor Otto."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p812 N 18 '26 550w

EGGLESTON, MRS MARGARET (WHITE). Kathie's diary; leaves from an old, old diary, written by Kathie, ed. by Margaret W. Eggleston. 339p il $2 Doran

26-4063

"The quaintly charming chronicle of a young girl's life from 1876 to 1886, in Mentor, Cleveland, Oberlin, and other Ohio towns, all thinly disguised in the narrative; the diary ending with her wedding at the age of 22."—Cleveland Open Shelf

"Kathie as a little girl is more delightful than she is in the more self-conscious years of her love affairs. She is not, however, more natural. From the very first moment when she discovers that she would like a certain boy not as a big brother but as a lover, Kathie is launched on the more difficult portion of her career. Nevertheless the girl of today will discover something of amusement and pathos and surprise in these love affairs of an old-fashioned girl." D. L. M.

Boston Transcript p3 F 6 '26 1250w

"Will offer a refreshing draft of memory to readers of Kathie's generation and will be liked by young people who enjoy Little Women and the story of Louisa Alcott's own life."

Cleveland Open Shelf p4 Jl '26

"'Kathie's Diary' is a genuine day-by-day record of a girl who has much of the same human, ageless appeal as the characters in 'Little Women.' It is as simple as every-day life is simple, and just as engrossing, with its moments of happiness and its moments of sorrow and its moments of in-between existence." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p643 S '26 70w

"A good deal of the book is interesting because of the light it throws on a nineteenth century girlhood. Kathie had a book in her—and she wrote it down with that honesty of feeling that makes literature of life."

+ N Y Times p13 Je 20 '26 550w

EICHLER, LILLIAN. Well-bred English. 324p 2 $3 Doubleday

808 English language—Rhetoric 26-17874

The book aims at correcting slovenliness in speech and diction—the common faults in grammar and pronunciation—and at increasing the vocabulary thru the use of synonyms and antonyms. It offers help in written as well as spoken English.

"A plausible, sometimes amusing and never for a moment a puzzling book."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 7 '26 300w

"'Well-bred English' is much superior to many more pretentious works on correct speech, and is a good short course on the technique of words."

Lit R p12 Ja 8 '27 130w

"She writes with knowledge and her advice is dependable. And there are very few Americans who could not profit by some one or another part of it."

+ N Y Times p25 N 28 '26 220w

"There are some good things in 'Well-Bred English,' but there is, I always say, enough sadness in the world without adding to it. In this advice, she tries, it seems to me, to make hermits of her readers. 'Read aloud as much as possible,' she counsels, 'and mingle with people who speak fine, pure English.'" F. P. Adams

N Y World p9m O 10 '26 200w

EIGELBERNER, JESSE. Investigation of business problems; technique and procedure. 335p $5 Shaw, A.W.

658 Business. Business education 26-3822

"The author has analyzed the steps in making investigations from the standpoint of theory, first, and then applies the theory to practice through solutions of specific, simple business problems. It is not a book on business problems, but a development of the art of investigation with the training required on the part of the investigator to execute the principles. The book is designed to acquaint the practical business man with the application of the principles of logic, psychology and philosophy in the solution of his problems as contrasted with mere intuitive methods. The subject is presented from three angles: the mental equipment required of the investigator; the actual mechanisms of investigation; and the presentation of the results of the investigation."—Ann Am Acad

Reviewed by N. M. Perris

Ann Am Acad 126:171 J1 '26 360w

"Mr. Eigelberner has successfully achieved his objective in presenting a work which not only contains a complete analysis of investigational procedure but also includes practical suggestions for the business executive and research worker in the solution of major and minor business problems encountered in the general run of business life." L. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 J1 17 '26 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 D '26

"Likely to be useful for reference to home economics classes studying the relation of business methods to the economics of consumption." S. L. S.

J Home Econ 18:532 S '26 60w

"For the research man in the field the book ought to be of the greatest value in defining the steps of an investigation that he perhaps unconsciously follows and in such a way will inspire and aid him to carry on his work in a more systematic way. Furthermore, the book ought to have a very definite place in the curriculum for training industrial research workers." W: O. Lichtner

+ Management R 15:316 O '26 1050w

R of Rs 73:560 My '26 60w

St Louis 24:312 N '26

Survey 56:644 S 15 '26 50w

"In the preparation of his book Mr. Eigelberner has carried out the same procedure that he recommends for others in arriving at the solution of an industrial problem. To the student in school or to the man young in experience the book should be particularly helpful because in many parts it is essentially elementary. It may inspire the man older in years and in experience to analyze his conscious and subconscious efforts and furnish him a worthwhile audit of his technique." S. M. Woodward

+ Taylor Soc Bul 11:239 O '26 230w

ELDER, MARGARET MUNRO. Life of Samuel J. Elder; with chapters by Edmund A. Whitman and William Cushing Wait. 370p $5 Yale univ. press

B or 92 Elder, Samuel James 25-25030

Samuel J. Elder, 1850-1918, was a leader of the Massachusetts bar and an eminent trial lawyer. The service he rendered to the United States as one of the senior counsel at the Hague tribunal in the North Atlantic fisheries arbitration added to his renown. His daughter, in this biography, has given not only an account of his legal career but, as expressed by William H. Taft in his Foreword, a "loving picture of a man whose life illustrates the possibilities and opportunities of a New England youth with religious home training and conscience and self-discipline, with excellent mental capacity, with literary taste and cultural tendencies."

"Miss Elder's biography of her father is not only a labor of love but a notable performance in its kind. The author's pleasing manner and constructive skill suffice to place her book well above the average of the commonplace memorial volume."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 F 28 '26 150w

"Miss Elder has made a narrative of her father's life that is appreciative of his fine qualities, his characteristics and his many activities, but never exceeds the restraints of dignity and good taste. She has had recourse to letters, diaries, her own recollections and those of his associates and has produced not only an interesting story of the life of a successful American lawyer but also a revealing portrait of a typical American man who has made his own way by his own abilities and efforts to an important and honored place in the country's life."

+ N Y Times p20 Mr 21 '26 350w

Outlook 141:677 D 30 '25 40w

ELDERLY SPINSTER, pseud. See Wilson, M.

ELDRIDGE, PAUL. Irony and pity. 182p $2 Lawren

"A book of tales, most of which first appeared in such magazines as The Guardian, The American Parade and The Smart Set during the Mencken-Nathan régime. Eldridge is a smiling pessimist. He has been compared with Anatole France, Baudelaire, Laforgue, Swift, Ambrose Bierce, Leopardi and Edgar Allan Poe. To this list we add De Maupassant, believing that Eldridge compares favorably with the 'master of the short story.' Some of Eldridge's pessimism in this book is expressed in an occasional touch of quite unnecessary pornography."—Boston Transcript

"That this smiling pessimist is one of the most significant and least typical of the writers of our time, I am as certain as I am certain that the future will agree with me in both estimates," says Vincent Starrett in introducing this baker's dozen of tales. . . Mr. Eldridge's shortish pieces are often exotic and strongly flavored with primary passions, a fact which may, indeed, account for some part of the popular neglect mentioned by Mr. Starrett, but which should not keep any one away."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Mr 28 '26 180w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 9 '26 180w

"There is no letting down in the careful, quiet workmanship of Paul Eldridge. And evidently there is no letting down in his conviction that the world is a vast irony and everything in it partakes of it. Mr. Eldridge chooses characters and a setting, inextricably joined, and, starting with a premise, never remote, allows fate to work its ironic way." H. A. Potamkin

+ Lit R p6 Ap 10 '26 330w

ELIOT, CHARLES WILLIAM. Charles W. Eliot, the man and his beliefs; ed. with a biographical study by William Allan Neilson. 2v 382;383-790p $10 Harper

814 26-20944

The essays and addresses of President Eliot contained in these two volumes have been chosen to convey as far as possible his most characteristic ideas and to express the man and his beliefs. The papers, which begin with his inaugural address as president of Harvard in 1869, are grouped under five heads—education, capital and labor, war and peace, conduct of life, and government, and are prefaced with a biographical study by William Allan Neilson, president of Smith college.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 64:629 Ja '27 480w

Reviewed by A. C. Dieffenbach
Ind 118:51 Ja 8 '27 600w

"Were I selecting Christmas presents for college seniors, this instructive, stimulating, inspiring book would be among them." J. C.

+ Lit R p4 D 4 '26 650w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 49:sup80 D 8 '26 1200w

"A treasury of sound sense, of high aspiration, of noble thinking." Allan Nevins
+ N Y World p10m N 14 '26 520w

Outlook 144:509 D 15 '26 80w

"The appearance of these two volumes is to be welcomed for the opportunity they afford of studying Dr Eliot's beliefs and tastes in his own statements conveniently assembled. They do not, however, make a substitute for a biography. They are somewhat monumental in size and the margins seem excessive. A more compact and cheaper book would have been preferable."

ELIOT, CHARLES W.—Continued

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 O 29 '26 750w

ELIOT, ETHEL AUGUSTA (COOK) (MRS SAMUEL ATKINS ELIOT, Jr.). Waul & Dyke, inc. 244p il $2 Doubleday

26-20760

Jane did not particularly want to go to Grace Merriman's house-party because she regarded Grace as one of the most colorless girls in Miss Burke's school. But if Grace was colorless her relatives were anything but dull, and their big old rambling castle-like summer home was full of mysteries. Beginning with the loss of a valuable bracelet which disappeared under the very noses of the girls and boys of the party, the week-end proved the most exciting in Jane's life.

"A detective story exciting enough to satisfy any young reader, one in which the mystery is well sustained—as in all good detective stories—almost to the last page." M. W. Bianco

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ja 9 '27 150w

"The story is mildly exciting, its conclusion not easily foreseen, and on the whole is too innocuous to be enjoyed by readers who have passed eighteen."

Sat R of Lit 3:216 O 16 '26 150w

"There is enough adventure and mystery, with just a dash of romance, to make a good plot with suspense sustained throughout."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f D 5 '26 130w

ELIZABETH, pseud. See Arnim, M. A.

ELLERBE, ROSE LUCILE. Ropes of sand. $95p $2.50 Fischer corp.; for sale by Baker & Taylor

26-11636

"Miss Ellerbe gives a picture of the Southern California of a century ago, when the first stragglers from the East were fighting their way across the deserts and the mountains to that detectable land. James Woods, a trapper, finds his Indian wife dead on the desert with their new-born son by her side. Leaving the half-breed baby in a pueblo village, with a promise to return, he pushes on to California. Becoming rich and marrying the fairest daughter of Don Bernardo Nuñez, Woods aligns himself with the Catholics and helps defeat an onslaught from the North. The finding and reclaiming of his Indian son, who at first was bound only by 'ropes of sand,' is movingly related."—Lit R

"Her style is simple, direct and virile, her technique so unobtrusive that the reader is unconscious that he is seeing the story in words; it is as if he were mingling with real characters and partaking in their dramatic incidents. And in the inevitableness of the story's progress we get the author's highest art." G. S. Townsend

+ Int Bk R p644 S '26 460w

"While the book has no great historical value, it is a diverting story." A. C. Clerce

Lit R p6 J1 3 '26 160w

"She has unearthed the richest kind of materials for the type of story she attempted to write. But her actual accomplishment is so marred by crude writing, by a lack of rudimentary craftsmanship, and a bungling ineptitude throughout, that the high possibilities of the tale are rendered completely negative."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:891 Je 26 '26 80w

ELLIOTT, CYRIL. Distillation principles. (Chemical engineering lib., 2d ser.) 166p $2 Van Nostrand [6s Benn]

542.48 Distillation

[25-6064]

"This little book gives a very good account of the subject and can be recommended

though it contains but little that cannot be found in any good physical chemistry text." (American journal of science, 1925)—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Reviewed by W. L. McCabe
Chem & Met Eng 32:943 D '25 200w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:183 Ap '26

ELLIOTT, RALPH NELSON. Tea room and cafeteria management. 176p $1.50 Little 647.95 Restaurants, lunch rooms, etc. Cafeteria management 26-16153

The book discusses location, equipment, decoration, accounting, buying, serving—in short all the problems that face the amateur proprietor of tea room or cafeteria.

Booklist 23:65 N '26

Reviewed by Florence Brobeck
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 N 28 '26 320w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 D '26

"The book will prove a helpful guide to the inexperienced in business, and to those who have had experience it will give the satisfaction of knowing they are travelling the right path. This pioneer volume is a distinct contribution to the field of institution management and we hope it will light the way for other literature on the subject." Lenore Richards

+ J Home Econ 18:707 D '26 460w

"Mr. Elliott writes with authority upon all these matters because of his wide and varied business experience and observation. His advice is couched in simple and direct language and is confined to rather simple and fundamental principles."

+ N Y Times p14 Ag 15 '26 280w
Wis Lib Bul 22:293 N '26

ELLIS, CARLETON, and WELLS, ALFRED
A. Chemical action of ultra-violet rays. 362p il $5 Chemical catalog co.

541.35 Photochemistry. Ultra-violet rays 25-19420

"Complete survey of the periodical and patent records of the subject. Covers the nature and sources of the light, the various kinds of lamps, protective glasses and filters, reactions of gases, photo-chemical and photolytic reactions, effect on halogenation reactions, photosynthesis, sterilization, biologic effects and therapeutic applications, and miscellaneous applications."—N Y New Tech Bks

"Scientific, technical and popular interest in the subject of ultraviolet radiation is such that a book written by the authors of numerous articles in this field is particularly welcome and timely. The inclusion of essentially all pertinent references to the technical literature of ultraviolet radiation makes the book of great additional value."

+ Chem & Met Eng 33:108 F '26 70w

"The authors have collected an immense amount of material, which for the most part is presented in the form of brief abstracts of the original papers without comment or discussion. There is evidence of hasty preparation and frequent repetitions occur, which is not surprising considering the enormous number of papers reported. The chief fault of the work is that there is little or no attempt at classification or criticism." R. W. Wood

— + Ind & Eng Chem 18:104 Ja '26 600w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:49 O '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:364 J1 '26

ELLIS, HAVELOCK. Soul of Spain. [new ed] 420p $2.25 Houghton

914.6 National characteristics, Spanish. Spain—Civilization 26-20991

Havelock Ellis's interpretation of the Spanish spirit is based, as the preface tells, on twenty years acquaintance with the country gained from five visits. Politics, commerce and industry have little space in these pages, which are devoted rather to exploring the essential genius of the Spanish people, their attitude toward spiritual things, their feeling for romance. Mr Ellis concludes thus: "It has been by passion, by virility, by moral energy carried to the farthest point, that the firm-fibred soul of Spain has achieved its place in the world, and in his own way the Spaniard of to-day still carries on the traditions of the race."

Boston Transcript p1 N 6 '26 260w

"It is 'essential Spain' that Havelock Ellis explores in this fascinating book—of what I may call an exotic kingdom of the mind." B: De Casseres

+ N Y Times p4 O 17 '26 1500w

ELLIS, HAVELOCK. Study of British genius. new ed rev & enl 396p $3.50 Houghton

151.1 Genius. Ability, Distribution of. Great Britain—Intellectual life 26-12970

In this new and revised edition of a book first published in 1904, a British scientist who is himself a genius makes a curiously minute and informing study of the psychological aspects of genius as exemplified in the thousand men and women of the highest intellectual ability produced in Great Britain from the fourth to the nineteenth century.

Booklist 23:186 Ja '27

"It is a valuable attempt at statistical inquiry in a field in which legend and sensational generalization usually pass unchallenged."

+ Bookm 64:368 N '26 180w

Boston Transcript p8 J1 17 '26 800w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 117:78 J1 17 '26 950w

Reviewed by W: R. Langfeld

Int Bk R p718 O '26 550w

"There are three values in this contribution to our knowledge; it is of interest to all whose origin is found in the British Isles; it is almost indispensable to ethnological psychologists and anthropologists, and it is finally a model for some future analysis of the genius of the United States." T. S. Knowlson

+ Lit R p4 Ag 14 '26 220w

"Mr. Ellis's book has been modified very little from the original, save in the addition of few fine essays. They may be new additions, but Mr. Ellis adds that some of them were written thirty years ago. The remarkable fact is not that they are old but that they are timely, and that Mr. Ellis is an author who does not age." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p4m J1 11 '26 1200w

"Whether or not one accepts all these views, this is the type of criticism that gets us somewhere. Its generalizations are worked out methodically, meditatively and with insight."

Spring'd Republican p10 J1 3 '26 1050w

ELLIS, MABEL BROWN. Visiting teacher in Rochester; report of a study. (Publication no. 6) 205p 75c Joint com. on methods of preventing delinquency, 50 E. 42nd st., N.Y.

371.9 Visiting teachers. Rochester, N.Y.—Public schools 25-11014

Following an introductory chapter on the general school system in Rochester, the author outlines the origin and development of the visiting teacher idea, and its organization and administration as a department of the Rochester city system. Then thru a selection of recorded cases she studies the methods and results of the department at work.

Reviewed by T: D. Elliot

Am J Pub Health 16:170 F '26 400w

Reviewed by Evelyn Buchan

Am J Soc 32:501 N '26 80w

"The report is a valuable contribution to education and will be of great service to school administrators and teachers."

+ Ann Am Acad 124:206 Mr '26 360w

Cleveland Open Shelf p36 Mr '26

Reviewed by Agnes de Lima

New Repub 46:336 My 5 '26 30w

"The volume will prove particularly valuable to teachers in service who are interested in suggestions as to how they may supplement their classroom work with some form of community service, to teachers who desire to devote a part or all of their time to visiting under the direction of a department like that in Rochester, to principals and superintendents who may be interested in introducing a similar program into their school systems, and to school patrons who are desirous of keeping in touch with modern educational movements. It is easily read and contains, in sections, an intensely human appeal." A. J. Brumbaugh

+ School R 31:75 Ja '26 900w

Survey 55:258 N 15 '25 100w

ELLNER, JOSEPH, ed. Gipsy patteran [by] Miguel de Cervantes, and others. 302p $2 Richards, B.G.

Short stories—Collections 26-9112

"The Gipsy Patteran," appropriately bound in a bandana cover, contains, besides an interesting but brief historical introduction by the editor, twelve stories." (Sat R of Lit) Contents: My lady of Egypt, by P. Kester; Makar Chudra, by M. Gorki; La gitanilla, by J. Richepin; The raiment of captivity, by H. H. Malleson; Roman pride, by A. Val; The gipsy Christ, by W. Sharp; The gipsy's prophecy, by P. A. de Alarcon; The Lubbeny kiss, by Louise Rice; The grass of Lohina, by K. Mikszáth; The gipsy's bear, by W. M. Garshin; The gipsy girl, by J. Falkberget; The little gipsy, by M. de Cervantes Saavedra; Glossary.

"Stories have been chosen only by those who have a real insight into gipsy life, and the author contributes a scholarly and interesting introduction to the Romyan chals."

+ Bookm 64:104 S '26 150w

Reviewed by Irving Brown

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Je 20 '26 750w

Boston Transcript p1 My 15 '26 620w

N Y World p6m My 2 '26 280w

"One who is merely looking for a collection of good short stories will be delighted with the volume." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:952 J1 24 '26 400w

ELLWOOD, CHARLES ABRAM. Psychology of human society; an introduction to sociological theory. 495p $3 (10s 6d) Appleton

301 Social psychology 25-19762

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"No one doubts that there are scientific facts concerning society, hence facts for sociology, but would it not be profitable for writers of textbooks to differentiate between 'scientifically established principles' and 'social opinion,' particularly when that social opinion proposes to mold society?" M. K. Walsh

— Am J Psychol 37:442 J1 '26 1100w

Reviewed by Ellsworth Faris

Am J Soc 32:305 S '26 850w

Am Pol Sci R 20:230 F '26 150w

Reviewed by J. P. Lichtenberger

Ann Am Acad 125:265 My '26 200w

Booklist 22:314 My '26

Reviewed by Alexander Goldenweiser

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 O 17 '26 520w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 26 '26 550w

"The author devotes his attention almost entirely to the high and misty entities of sociological theory. The discussion is carried on in the terms of an extremely abstract psychology. The author's paragraphs on language and his remarks on invention and discovery impressed the reviewer more favorably than other parts of the book." J: Storck

J Philos 23:417 J1 22 '26 350w

J Religion 6:112 Ja '26 50w

ELLWOOD, CHARLES ABRAM—Continued

Reviewed by E. C. Lindeman

New Repub 45:337 F 10 '26 850w

"The book is replete with vague and descriptive characterizations which make it a disappointment to the analytical student, however entertaining it may be in other respects."

— Sat R of Lit 2:516 Ja 23 '26 180w

"The text is marked by the clarity and the scientific point of view characteristic of the earlier work of the author. The volume is of value to all who are interested in the social sciences. It will prove a satisfactory guide in classes in sociological theory." H. C. Hill

+ School R 34:314 Ap '26 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:305 D '25

"The book as a whole and in most of its detail is a stimulating exposition of the psychological and sociological basis of human life."

Anna Rochester

+ World Tomorrow 9:58 F '26 750w

ELSER, FRANK B. Keen desire. 335p $2 Boni & Liveright

26-10203

When Martin left college and got a job on a newspaper in his home town, he was determined to tell the truth about the town to the townspeople, and particularly at all times to tell the truth about himself to himself. But he found it impossible. The truth about the town was unprintable when discovered, and the truth about himself was so difficult to learn. He lied to Edna, whom he did not love, to spare her, and did not know how to end the situation. He lied to Vada, whom he loved, desperately believing that he spoke the truth. And at last in New York with a measure of success in sight, all his beautiful built-up dreams of happiness and fulfillment crash about him in the ruin of inescapable fact.

Bookm 63:203 Ap '26 60w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 23 '26 220w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 10 '26 560w

"It is a good novel, perhaps age and a blue pencil would improve it, provided its impetuous fire were not dimmed thereby."

+ — Ind 117:23 Jl 3 '26 150w

"Mr. Elser's style is satisfyingly simple, and he tells his story in a thoughtful manner, with much originality of plot. He says what he wants to say in a most compelling fashion, and one's interest is held at white heat to the end. One has no difficulty in believing his statement that he put every ounce of energy he had into the work." M. D. Lake

+ Int Bk R p454 Je '26 420w

"It is put forth as a protest against 'hypocrisies.' That reason for its existence may do as well as another, but a liking for its flavor must be an acquired taste. If it is a cure for 'hypocrisies' about such matters as sex and civilization's short-comings, then the cure is worse than the disease." C. M. Morrison

— Lit R p4 Mr 27 '26 400w

"The book is a remarkably straightforward account of the behavior of a young man who is moved by mixed urgings, obsessional and rational. . . Martin's drunken debauches, his erotic reveries, his flutterings toward romance, his cruel and delicious self-torture, his unhappy consciousness of self are all put down, sometimes with shrewd observation and always with a terrible sincerity."

+ Nation 123:487 N 10 '26 150w

"Though the theme is not original the treatment is, rather unaccountably, quite fresh. The book is full of crudities, indulgences, faults, cracks, but through the cracks rises the hot steam of life."

+ — New Repub 46:150 Mr 24 '26 300w

"The Keen Desire' says many things that need to be said, and says them once for all. It takes a supreme place among first books and a high rank among the more practiced writings."

+ N Y Times p9 F 28 '26 800w

"Mr. Elser's excellent newspaper training serves him well in his first novel. His style has the newspaper virtues, being compact, rapid and easy to read. His observation of people and things, though narrow, is accurate, often startlingly accurate where motives are concerned. This marked indication of genius for character portrayal promises well for Mr. Elser's future in fiction. Unfortunately, he has burdened himself so heavily with the obligations of 'realism' that he obscures his real strength." J. W. Barrett

+ — N Y World p7m F 28 '26 550w

Sat R of Lit 2:794 My 15 '26 350w

"The novel would have been more effective if the author had given it a complete ending. As it stands it exhibits a good deal of crudity, and is of greater interest for its social criticism than its artistry."

— + Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 28 '26 480w

ELTON, GODFREY. Testament of Dominic Burleigh. 153p $2 Houghton

26-10566

An Oxford don goes reluctantly into war and is reported killed. Reading the honors heaped upon him in obituaries he is moved to write a testament of the truth about himself as it was brought home to him by his experiences during the war.

"A fine and impressive brochure on the human soul. Perhaps most of all there remains with you a memory of the startling, apparently fortuitous beauty of certain pages. English critics have praised Mr. Elton's restraint, which is, indeed, an important element of his artistry. But under the restraint I should have liked to find passion worthy of his subject, passion that as a living thing destroys and recreates." Lorine Pruette

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 N 7 '26 550w

"There is something in this book which everyone needs to read. In the passionate abandonment of pretense he strikes at every human being. He says something which needs saying, and he says it clearly and impressively. Here is raw human nature, not the calm self-satisfaction of the diarist." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 17 '26 900w

"The little book is vigorous and arousing." Walter Yust

Lit R p3 Jl 3 '26 250w

N Y World p4m Jl 25 '26 130w

"A subtle and powerful piece of character depiction. It begins so deliberately and develops its purpose so slowly that it may not at once receive the reward of praise it deserves."

+ Outlook 144:154 S 29 '26 200w

Sat R 140:706 D 12 '25 50w

"If the reader is even ordinarily well disposed he will allow himself to take it as real and get a temporary thrill out of the enhanced interest. But the most glib won't be taken in completely, for the story is an exceedingly improbable one."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:398 D 4 '26 430w

Spec 136:182 Ja 30 '26 30w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 4 '26 480w

EMERSON, PAUL. Soil characteristics, a field and laboratory guide. (McGraw-Hill publications in the agricultural and botanical sciences) 222p il $2.50 McGraw

631 Soils

25-18108

"Gives detailed instructions for the making of soil surveys, presenting directions for the examination and determination of the physical, chemical, and biological properties of soils."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:141 Mr '26

EMERSON, RALPH WALDO. Heart of Emerson's journals; ed. by Bliss Perry. 357p $3 Houghton

B or 92

26-15215

From the wealth of Emerson's ten volumes of Journals in which he made fairly full entries from 1820, when he was seventeen years old, to 1875, Bliss Perry has made a single volume of selections. This intermittent diary is not only an autobiographic record, but a commonplace book in which Emerson jotted his impressions of books and authors, judgments on his contemporaries, records of his reading, his thoughts and his religious moods.

Booklist 23:129 D '26

"His edition is done with the dignity which Emerson himself would have appreciated, and it is beautifully printed. New Englanders will be glad to have, in this succinct form, the literature they love."

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 8 '26 250w

"A refreshing collection of extracts from the journals. The intimacy and informality of expression will appeal to many who will for the first time meet Emerson as a man rather than as philosopher and poet."

+ Ind 117:364 S 25 '26 70w

"Mr. Bliss Perry has performed his editorial task with great skill and discrimination, and it is now possible to read in a convenient form the intellectual log book of the Concord philosopher, to obtain an informal, but truer picture of Emersonian thought than in the 'Essays.'" Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 117:394 O 2 '26 1250w

Reviewed by B: De Casseres
Lit R p2 O 16 '26 950w

Reviewed by Mark Van Doren
Nation 123:368 O 13 '26 620w

"Most students of Emerson will miss this or that favorite passage; but it is safe to say that no student could make a more representative selection. For these excerpts, preserve unharmed the essential qualities of the Journals; their amazing pith and condensation, their bracing individuality of outlook, their vigor and virility; their pride in America."

+ No Am 223:690 D '26 840w

"Professor Bliss Perry, selecting and eliminating with admirable judgment, has succeeded in retaining in a single volume, not only the best separate passages which their crystalline completeness of construction makes a comparatively simple matter, but, what is more difficult, the unspoiled portrait of Emerson himself."

+ Outlook 144:280 O 27 '26 250w

"If you are an American by birth or training, and an idealist by disposition, it is questionable whether you know yourself until you have read Emerson and this book!"

+ Sat R of Lit 3:355 D 4 '26 700w

"Beyond all doubt this new volume will extend the sphere of Emerson's influence."

+ Springfield Republican p7f S 26 '26 1400w

EMERY, STEUART M. Mantle of masquerade. 297p il $2 Dutton

26-12144

A lightly amusing account of what happened when Uncle Charlie went on a business trip and left young Terry in charge of Cloverdale and the ensuing house party. Terry befriends a theatrical group out of luck, and extends to them the hospitality of his uncle's home. The servants strike, and Terry, distracted but firm, fires them on the eve of the house party. To help him out of his dilemma the actors don the mantle of masquerade and pose as the departed servants with a consequent train of blunders and thrills.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 19 '26 400w

"A clever entertaining and amusing tale." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p6 Je 12 '26 320w

"A gay bit of farce comedy, amusing, irresponsible and quite preposterous."

+ — N Y Times p8 Je 6 '26 560w

"Farce of the broadest, refraining only at the verge of pie-throwing from such naive antics, Mr. Emery's comic novel may not serve to amuse readers of a more cultivated sense of humor."

Sat R of Lit 2:891 Je 26 '26 130w

EMMONS, ARTHUR BREWSTER. Health control in mercantile life; a problem of conserving human energy. 234p il $3 Harper
613.6 Hygiene, Industrial. Medical service, Industrial 26-6831

"Makes available to stores, banks, offices, etc., present approved principles and methods, with results obtained. Based on a study of health conditions made in 25 stores by the Harvard mercantile health work."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"The work is young, and material worthy of analytical consideration is scanty. Sometime there may be a better book on mercantile health work; but this is the first of its kind, an important and praiseworthy contribution." Wade Wright

Am Econ R 16:518 S '26 360w

Reviewed by E. R. Hayhurst

Am J Pub Health 16:636 Je '26 200w

Booklist 23:15 O '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p119 N '26

"While the intense specialization of this book makes it of interest and value chiefly to those engaged in the endeavor to conserve health in mercantile life . . . for whom its practical importance is very great, it has also a certain intellectual interest for other readers."

+ N Y Times p10 Jl 25 '26 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:302 Je '26

St Louis 24:236 S '26

"Fills a definite lack in the library of industrial hygiene. There are few things to criticize in the book." F. G. Pedey, M.D.

+ Survey 56:469 Jl 15 '26 360w

Wis Lib Bul 22:138 Ap '26

ENDERS, MRS ELIZABETH CRUMP. Temple bells and silver sails. 337p il $3 Appleton
915.1 China—Description and travel 25-21428

The author of "Swinging lanterns" (Book Review Digest, 1923) has written another book of travel impressions of China. This time she had travelled far into the interior. She describes a trip on the Ch'ien Tang river to the Dragon gorge, wanderings about Shanghai, a night on the great wall of China, a journey by chair thru the Nankow pass, and one to the grave of Confucius. Her big adventure was a trip of fifteen hundred miles up the Yangtze river thru the land of the bandits, and the terrible gorges of the upper river, to Chungking. This adventure ended in shipwreck in which the author narrowly escaped death.

"Charming travel impressions."

+ Booklist 22:246 Mr '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p11 Ja '26

Reviewed by J: J. McLaughlin

Lit R p6 Ja 9 '26 200w

"This book is a better and more facile piece of work than the average traveler's surface impressions. It is, in fact, excellent journalism, though it lacks the distinction and individual point of view of fine prose, and is often consciously flowery."

+ — Outlook 142:146 Ja 27 '26 120w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:103 F '26

R of Rs 72:665 D '25 120w

ENDERS, E. C.—Continued

Reviewed by Dale Warren

Sat R of Lit 2:412 D 12 '25 70w

Spring'd Republican p10 Ag 25 '26
300wTimes [London] Lit Sup p888 D 17 '25
100w

"A readable book filled with anecdote and bits of information."

+ Wis Lib Bul 22:32 Ja '26

ENGLAND, JANE. Red earth. 337p $2 Doran
[7s 6d Cassell]

26-17294

A lonely and unloved girl on a disintegrating farm in South Africa is the heroine of the book. Luce's father is absorbed in the Boer woman who supplanted his first wife and cares little for his daughter. She is the drudge of her stepmother and, haunted by her sister's terrible death, becomes a prey to brooding fear of her stepmother, the veldt and the Kaffirs. New found friends brighten her lot and stimulate a belated development in character. A brief infatuation for one of them further awakens her and paves the way for the happiness that is to follow when her fears are swept away.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p31 'O 3
'26 100w

Boston Transcript p3 O 9 '26 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p121 N '26

"A very good book. The love-story is not particularly original; the details, however, are fresh, and Miss England knows how to get her effects without straining after them." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 27:142 My 22 '26 50w

"As a picture, the painting of the movement of figures against a background, it is effective and convincing, and suggests that Miss England may presently write the best South African books that have yet been written. She can write; one hopes that next time she will write about somebody more exciting than Luce Bronson."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:123 S 18 '26 320w

"The loneliness of a South African farm and the difficulties which have to be contended with are well portrayed, and the heroine is an attractive figure. The plot is rather weak, but the author writes with considerable mastery of her medium."

+ — Spec 137:27 J1 3 '26 80w

"This is a well-written and lifelike story, and one that conveys a haunting impression of the mystery and fascination of the veldt."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p396 Je 10 '26
180w

ENGLAND, PAUL. Fifty favourite operas; a popular account intended as an aid to dramatic and musical appreciation; with an intro. by Olin Downes. 605p il $5 Harper [12s 6d Harrap]

782 Opera [26-1943]

Summarizes the plots of fifty familiar operas, and indicates the high moments in the music to be watched for and remembered.

"This book carries its due load of errors in fact, as well as a voluminous cargo of pretentiously flippant writing. But the paper, the type, and the general make-up are a delight. It is a pity that the pompous ineptitudes and dreary stretches of would-be facetiousness that play so considerable a role in the text should not be enlivened in the American edition as in the English by full-page pictures of a number of the older worthies of the lyric stage." P. Bowdoin

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 12
'26 400w

"The thick book is intended as a popular guide to the opera, which will increase and extend the appreciation of all music lovers who are not students of music. Written briskly and entertainingly, with an interpretive running comment on the music." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p13 S 11 '26 70w

"Mr. England performed his task thoroughly and intelligently, and he is musically erudite without, as it were, rubbing it in. In writing of 'favorite' operas he was naturally forced to consider things that are hopelessly old fashioned, but on the other hand he has given plenty of space to masterpieces that scorn the inconstancies of time, and to modern operas that, so far as we can judge, stand a good chance of survival."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:219 O 16 '26 250w

ERLEIGH, EVA VIOLET (MOND) ISAACS, lady. In the beginning. 110p il $1.75 Doubleday
[5s Heinemann]

930 History, Ancient—Juvenile literature
26-27682

A first history for quite young children which tells the story from the time when "there was no Earth. . . only a big ball of burning gas, which was the Sun," to the fall of the Roman Empire.

Booklist 23:180 Ja '27

New Statesman 27:304 Je 26 '26 100w

"Mrs. Erleigh's 'In the Beginning' has the always valuable recommendation of having been worked out to supply a definite need. For she wrote it in order to have just the sort of book she wanted, but could not find, for use in the education of her own small son. It is all done with the utmost simplicity, so that the narrative is quite within the comprehension of children from 6 to 10 years old."

+ N Y Times p9 S 26 '26 180w

"It has all been written simply and clearly, with that definiteness of detail which children crave, and for a condensed account for very young readers we think the author has been fairly successful. But somehow the book isn't as vivid or full of poetry as we should have liked it to be."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:323 N 20 '26 200w

"It will be very useful to have this outline, and Lady Erleigh deserves gratitude for a good idea and for the excellent way in which she has carried it out."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p143 F 25 '26
250w

ERSKINE, JOHN. Galahad; enough of his life to explain his reputation. 340p $2.50 Bobbs
[7s 6d Nash & G.]

26-27587

Those legendary immortals, King Arthur, Lancelot, Galahad, Guinevere and the two Elaines are brought to earth in very human quality and made to speak like modern sophisticated beings. The story opens when Arthur, Guinevere and Lancelot are young, four years after Arthur's wedding. Twice in his life a woman asked Lancelot for his love. Both women were named Elaine. These two incidents begin and end the story, which spans the twenty years between. Galahad is Lancelot's son by the first Elaine, but Guinevere is the abiding love of his life as she is the inspiration of Galahad. There is not a little satire in the delineation of the women—Guinevere, with her passion for managing and uplift, and Elaine, whom one critic has described as the "Arthurian flapper." After receiving a proposal from the second Elaine, the lily maid of Astolat, Lancelot enters the religious life.

Booklist 23:133 D '26

"'Galahad' is a satisfying book from every standpoint. It is less a satire than 'The Private Life of Helen of Troy' and more a story, yet it is none the less entertaining." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:626 Ja '27 350w

"The theme is obviously more restricted than in the case of Helen; one cannot honestly say that it makes quite such a rich and witty book as its predecessor. Maybe that would be too much to expect. There is also, naturally, less of the pleasant shock of novelty. But leaving comparisons aside, there is much shrewd knowledge of human nature and philosophic erudition displayed easily and gracefully; wisdom feathered by wit flies straight to the mark." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 N 14 '26 450w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p3 N 20 '26 1950w

"For the first two thirds of the book it is sheer delight. And yet just as we near the finish, his frank subtlety of pure dialogue begins to pall." Robert Benchley

+ Ind 117:715 D 18 '26 280w

"Mr. Erskine writes delightful dialogue and perhaps his two novels afford the closest approach in fiction to the pleasure of good comedy, well acted in the playhouse. All the usual difficulties of reading a play are eliminated." Grant Overton

+ Lit R p1 N 13 '26 1900w

"The legend unfolds in a clear dry light. Its charm consists in the enjoyable apprehension we have of a form which is actually based on a continuous mental process. Our delight consists in the eagerness with which we follow each character in his progress from misunderstanding to lucid cerebration." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 124:42 Ja 12 '27 960w

"Mr. Erskine has occasional grace and wisdom, but his prolonged joke palls." Austin Clarke

+ Nation and Ath 40:394 D 11 '26 110w

"Due probably to the fundamental depravity in human nature, the private life of Galahad does not pique public curiosity so powerfully as that of Helen, until a supplementary explanation of his reputation is promised in the circumstances of his birth and bringing-up. All the spice one has any business to look for may be found in this novel as seasoning for more substantial fare than Mr. Erskine offered in his Homeric satire. His irony is here applied to types, to be sure, but to types embodied in plausible characters, whose emotional situation, threadbare in legend, he restores to vivid interest, winning sympathy as well as intellectual assent through a progressive narrative of coherent dramatic substance." D. B. Woolsey

+ New Repub 48:384 N 17 '26 400w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 28:241 D 4 '26 230w

Reviewed by Elmer Davis

N Y Times p2 N 14 '26 1200w

N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 100w

"Wisely eschewing the task of reproducing an impossible medievalism and forgetting, for the moment, even the beauty of the ancient legends, he has told the tale as he has apprehended it. To him the ancient story is a revelation of the strange inversions and paradoxes of life, high aims withering away into futility; and then, to the confusion of all law and system, pettiness suddenly blossoming into splendor. It is in the setting forth of such contradictions as these, and not in the mere presentation of the story in modern dress, that the genuine novelty of the book consists." C. B. Tinker

Sat R of Lit 3:420 D 11 '26 860w

"By irresistibly convincing revelations of the imaginary 'real facts' about King Arthur, Guinivere and Lancelot Mr. Erskine makes of the story a delicately psychological triangular situation, with Elaine as an explosive. He writes in a deliberately casual way about these heroes and heroines, as though they were rather remarkable suburbanites; this gives the book a freshness and innocence which is altogether charming."

+ Spec 137:869 N 13 '26 180w

Springf'd Republican p7f N 14 '26 320w

"Mr. Erskine's attempt to modernize the legend, an attempt which involves fresh feats of creation on every page, is remarkably successful and will set many people thinking. Beyond the ideas with which it deals, it is full of a charming irony and sense of character, and, whether it discusses education or love and motherhood, can be read either as a commentary on our age or as a delightful novel."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p884 D 2 '26 480w

Wis Lib Bul 22:333 D '26

ERSKINE, LAURIE YORK. Coming of Cosgrove. 307p $2 Appleton

26-3268

It was a poor time for Cosgrove to come home. His father's worst enemy had just been shot down, and the natural inference would be that Cosgrove had returned from the East to kill him. That was just what the dead man's brother tried to prove. But Cosgrove had friends, among them the victim's daughter whose enemies were his own; and more than that, he was a better horseman and a better shot than the ruffians who affected to despise him. In the repeated attacks on his life he presently stood in desperate need of all his gifts to save himself and the girl whose champion he had become.

"Once in a blue moon one comes across a good story that makes you want to growl at any interruption until the last page is turned 'The Coming of Cosgrove' is such a story, full of adventure, true to life in its setting, decent and exciting." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 24 '26 400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p40 Mr '26

"In spite of the fact that Bradley seems a trifle more than human in his miraculous escapes, it is a most interesting and well developed tale." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p8 Ag 14 '26 300w

"Taken altogether, 'The Coming of Cosgrove' is a very entertaining yarn, provided one is not too fussy about probabilities and such."

+ N Y Times p22 F 14 '26 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p397 Je 10 '26 160w

Wis Lib Bul 22:172 My '26

ERTZ, SUSAN. After noon. 338p $2 Appleton [7s 6d Unwin]

26-9019

A quiet story of well bred people. Its chief interest lies in its keen observation and understanding of human nature. Charles Lester after only three years of married life is abandoned by his wife who leaves him with twin daughters to bring up from babyhood. Crushed at first, the young man of twenty-four soon pulls himself together and with growing wisdom and sympathy devotes himself to the interests of his motherless girls. While entering into the love affairs of the twins he finds himself in an affair of his own with a charming American widow. In spite of his vow never to love again he marries Lydia Chalmers and a few months of rare happiness follow. Then difficulties develop, due to his acquired distrust of marriage and Lydia's extreme sensitiveness. But thanks to their sincerity and real love for each other a way is found out of their misunderstandings and they settle down to a delightful afternoon of life together.

Booklist 23:79 N '26

"This is a bland and likely story but it misses fire. The stage is too nicely set, the characters too nicely fit all requirements, the situations are languid and obvious." L. G. Marshall

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 30 '26 550w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '26 1900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p107 S '26

ERTZ, SUZAN.—Continued

"Like 'Madame Claire,' this book is full of charming people—the sort one would choose for friends. A thoroughly readable novel with clever characterization, humorous conversation, and an unusual plot."

+ Ind 116:696 Je 12 '26 60w

"If you are not too sociological, if you look for a story intelligently told, if you have a weakness for polite, attractively mannered and minded persons, if you are willing to forego now and again the rawer tragedies of life, if you are keen to be amused, you must not neglect 'After Noon.' It is an unusually entertaining story." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p2 My 29 '26 650w

"It cannot be said that her new book is as distinguished a piece of writing as her first one, but in some ways it is more enjoyable. 'After Noon' has the conventional characteristics of a best seller: it is optimistic, a bit sentimental and most sympathetic in its treatment, it makes slight demands upon the intellect, and it is easy to read. But it is a best seller honestly written by a thoroughly competent craftsman."

+ N Y Times p8 My 16 '26 860w

"The plot of 'After Noon' is wholly credible. The story is logical, dignified and capably told. 'Too much human perfection,' is, perhaps, the worst that can be said of it."

+ N Y World p7m My 2 '26 260w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 143:256 Je 16 '26 180w

"This is an excellent story about very real people, and it is full of those pleasant touches that denote observation, humour, and sincerity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p143 F 25 '26 200w

Wis Lib Bul 22:230 Jl '26

ESCHOLIER, RAYMOND. Comes the blind fury; tr. from the French by J. Lewis May. 301p $2 Dodd

Convinced that it is their duty, yet secretly fearful of the consequences, the Langlades take into their home the illegitimate daughter of their dead son. The little Henriette's spontaneous gaiety is subdued by the quiet atmosphere of the old house, her lively gestures checked by the unresponsiveness of her grandparents who, loving the child dearly, fear to find in her traces of the woman who seduced their son. All her natural craving for freedom is denied. The house becomes a prison, her grandparents the jailers. But Henriette escapes for occasional thrilling half-hours. As she grows older the thrill increases with the danger of these secret sorties. At sixteen blindness comes, yet in spite of it Henriette finds her way to the thing she longs for, tho it separates her irretrievably from her home.

Reviewed by Malcolm Cowley

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ap 4 '26 300w

Boston Transcript p10 Mr 27 '26 580w

"It is hard to see why Raymond Escholier's title La Nuit is changed in English to Comes the Blind Fury, for the simpler title suits the book admirably. Here is one of those ample, warm stories which the French do so competently and, for our taste, so much too often. A story of repression, escapades, final blindness, drawn with sincerity, charm, credibility, and many other standard literary qualities, but somehow not as good as it ought to be." M. H.

+ New Repub 45:363 F 17 '26 160w

"Such a theme would be intolerable if it were not treated with the delicacy and daring of poetry. By M. Escholier it is so treated, and Mr. May is a worthy translator." P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 26:306 D 19 '25 120w

"In his insistence upon the cruder side of physical attraction and upon a sort of amorphous villainess in human nature, Escholier proves himself a true disciple of de Maupassant."

— N Y Times p9 Ja 31 '26 850w

Outlook 143:416 Jl 21 '26 320w

"This powerful story is told with a great economy of words, and moves dynamically to its terrific climax. The translation, although awkward in spots, is adequate."

Sat R of Lit 2:596 F 27 '26 320w

EULALIA, Infanta of Spain. Courts and countries after the war. 287p il $3 Dodd [21s Hutchinson]

923.1 Courts and courtiers. Kings and rulers 25-25541

The book contains no revelation of scandal in high places. Rather, one glimpses in its pages royal personages of many countries, nearly all of them relatives or close friends of the writer. The Infanta Eulalia gives her personal impressions of France, England and America gained during brief or protracted stays. The book concludes with a chapter on moral conditions in postwar Europe.

Booklist 22:416 Jl '26

Bookm 63:108 Mr '26 150w

"With a heartfelt sigh I put down this new book of the Infanta Eulalia. She is sterling! No tenth cousin many times removed from a doubtful throne is this, but a true princess of the blood and aunt of the reigning King of Spain. No cause does she plead. No propaganda has she to offer. Just a clean, well written impression of post-war Europe seen through the eyes of a very bold princess." Karlene Kent

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 1 '26 450w

"It is true that some of her judgments are not founded on the best of facts. But if these impair the reliability of what she says, they do not lessen the interest. Her book has behind it the impact of a distinctive mind and personality, the result of a definite standpoint." L: Kronenberger

+ Int Bk R p286 Ap '26 400w

Living Age 328:606 Mr 13 '26 230w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 37:706 S 12 '25 680w

"The book is a gallery of royalties painted by a royalty. They are not works of art, but for readers of a certain kind they have an interest."

New Statesman 25:614 S 12 '25 300w

"Her book is interesting, suggestive and significant, yet the limitations of her position are pitifully apparent, and many of her ideas, excellent in themselves, will be dismissed because of the naïveté of many of her observations." J: Carter

+ N Y Times p3 Ja 17 '26 2200w

N Y World p7m D 20 '25 200w

Pratt p31 summer '26

Sat R of Lit 3:124 S 18 '26 250w

EUROPA; an illustrated year-book of Europe, 1926; by Michael Farbman, Ramsay Muir and Hugh F. Spender. 626p $5 Harper [15s Routledge]

940 Europe. Europe—Directories. Europe—History—Yearbooks [26-14316]

"This is the first appearance of a new year-book which seems to belong on even the shortest shelf of reference books dealing with the world to-day. Part I is a survey of Europe in 198 pages, distributed under the following headings: The Outlook; The League of Nations; The Armed Peace; Problems of Disarmament; Finance, Debts, Reparations; Political and Social Problems; Industrial Problems; Economic Problems; Science and Invention; The Arts. Under each of these headings there are contributions by from two to thirteen distinguished authorities of various nationalities. Part II is a concise European 'Who's Who'

and directory with classifications. Part III is described as 'a diary of the chief events of 1925 in each of the European nations.'—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Booklist 23:27 O '26

"The book is an extraordinary feat of assembling and digestion. By the omission of some unnecessary cuts of authors and vain attempts to characterize them and by condensation of Part I considerable space might be made for facts."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Je 13 '26 380w

"The amount of information given is remarkable, and its arrangement is good. The whole work should, in fact, be useful to a large number of different people. We hope, however, that in a subsequent edition steps will be taken to make it more accurate."

+ Nation and Ath 38:756 F 27 '26 230w

"There is good stuff in this book; but it wants weeding and it wants arrangement. . . . Despite its defects, the book should be valuable for purposes of reference. It could be made more valuable still if the editors would expand the objective sections at the end, and cut down—or cut out—the olla podrida at the beginning."

+ New Statesman 26:688 Mr 13 '26 250w

"Altogether one of the most useful pieces of International survey work which have been undertaken since the War."

+ Spec 136:604 Mr 27 '26 750w

"Promises to be a useful reference work."

Wis Lib Bul 22:171 My '26

EVANS, MRS ROSALIE (CADEN). Rosalie Evans letters from Mexico; arranged with comment by Daisy Caden Pettus. 472p il $5 Bobbs [18s Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Mexico—History—Revolution, 1910-. Mexico—Economic conditions. Mexico—Social conditions. Land tenure—Mexico. Mexico—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Great Britain—Foreign relations—Mexico 26-9540

Rosalie Evans was an American woman who married a British subject in Mexico, owner of an old Spanish hacienda which was sacked and partly destroyed during the Madero revolution. Mr Evans died in Mexico in 1917 after an unsuccessful attempt to regain his property, whereupon his wife took up the unfinished task as a sacred cause. For six years Mrs Evans resisted the revolutionists who repeatedly raided and looted the hacienda. Her resistance became an international question, involving three governments—Mexico, Great Britain and the United States, and the British chargé d'affaires, Cunard Cummins, was expelled from Mexico for championing her cause. In 1924 she was shot from ambush as she was returning to the hacienda with the payroll for her workers. Her letters tell an extraordinary tale of really thrilling adventure and give a graphic picture of revolutionary Mexico.

Booklist 23:34 O '26

"The Rosalie Evans Letters from Mexico' now given to the world, read like the pages from a fictional thriller staged in medieval Europe. Through all the 'sound and fury' which is the tale south of our border today, there shines forth the unique and complex personality that was Rosalie Evans. She was sensitive, brilliant, gifted; and spiritual to the degree of mysticism."

Bookm 63:718 Ag '26 120w

"These letters are a swift-moving account of a life as full of thrills and action as any novel of adventure you may find. They are written at odd moments, dashed off in the midst of a dozen things all going at once: the episodes are struck off white-hot. The result is a collection of letters that could scarcely be equaled for speed, for clarity, for self-revelation, for wit and charm." K. A. Porter

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ap 11 '26 1950w

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 3 '26 1500w

"This is an immensely interesting and a thoroughly inspiring book." C. P.

+ Cath World 123:850 S '26 570w

Cleveland Open Shelf p76 Je '26

Reviewed by Gertrude Atherton

Int Bk R p352 My '26 2800w

"These letters will make bitter reading for Mexicans and even more bitter for some Americans in high places. They are not to be explained away in the smooth suave phrases of 'statecraft.' The Rosalie Evans Letters from Mexico' are the hardest blow ever struck against the Obregon-Calles régime. They blacken its face and reveal the thing for what it is. Had they been in the hands of the American people when the treaty was an issue there might now be no treaty." C. M. Morrison

Lit R p16 Ap 10 '26 900w

"This is a book decidedly worth reading, but one to be read with caution; not merely with sorrow for Mrs. Evans's hardships and foul murder but with sympathy for the problems of Mexico, the difficulties of its leaders, and the century-old sufferings of its oppressed people." Carleton Beals

Nation 122:671 Je 16 '26 950w

"Apart from their significance as amazing human documents, Mrs. Evans's letters light up with lurid flashes obscure places in Mexican history and diplomatic relations. They reveal some of the realities with which the Mexican government and the government of the United States had to deal." C. A. Beard

New Repub 48:226 O 13 '26 500w

Reviewed by J. Carter

N Y Times p5 Mr 21 '26 2700w

Reviewed by Hugh O'Connor

N Y World p6m Ap 18 '26 1100w

Pratt p36 autumn '26

Reviewed by Ernest Gruening

Sat R of Lit 2:820 My 29 '26 1000w

Spec 137:sup590 O 3 '26 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p641 S 30 '26 1050w

EVARTS, HAL GEORGE. Painted stallion. 267p $1.75 Little

26-10313

The first time Conway saw the colt running with a herd of wild horses, he called it White Blanket and marked it for his own. He did not know that Mollie Powers also laid claim to the colt, for he had not met her then. It was years before he did know, and in those years Conway and the colt both grew up and got ready for their important meeting. It is primarily the story of the wild horse and secondarily of the two who most admired him and each other.

Booklist 23:39 O '26

"Reese is one of those attractive heroes who do not think it essential to talk like a book just because their sweethearts have been away to school. And Millie has a way with her. So has White Blanket, which gives us three leading characters of about equal charm, with a galloping story to boot."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 15 '26 120w

"An interesting and well written Western story with plenty of adventures."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 23 '26 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 N '26

"It is in the description of the color of Western life that Mr. Everts is at his best. The graphic story of White Blanket's career is full of charm and glorious adventure." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p8 My 15 '26 200w

EVARTS, HAL GEORGE—Continued

"The Painted Stallion" is least important for its narrative. What appeals to the reader is the strong, vital sense of horseflesh—the spectacle of White Blanket or of hundreds of other horses running wild. Such pictures are convincing, and obviously first-hand. They go far toward lifting "The Painted Stallion" above the level of trite blood-and-thunder Western yarns."

+ N Y Times p27 My 30 '26 350w

Outlook 143:416 J1 21 '26 50w

"It is a good, entertaining tale of its kind, not up to the standard set by Mr. Everts last year in his highly meritorious 'Spanish Acres,' though far better and shorter than the lowly 'Western' majority."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:859 Je 12 '26 100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:230 J1 '26

EVERS, NORMAN. Chemistry of drugs. 247p $9
Van Nostrand [32s 6d Benn]

543.4 Drugs [26-8355]

"Description of natural and synthetic drugs, their chemical constitution and reactions, with the chemistry, rather than the technical details, of their manufacture. Has a chapter on the relation of chemical constitution to physiological action; also lists of drugs classified into five groups. Does not treat of analysis."—N Y New Tech Bks

"The book is written distinctly from the standpoint of pure chemistry, rather than from that of manufacturing technique. Valuable appendices on the chemical constitution and physiological action, and on lists of various types of drugs, have been included."

Chem & Met Eng 33:108 F '26 50w

"The book will no doubt prove useful to one who does not have access to well-selected texts on the subjects covered, or who wishes to know the structural formulas, a few properties, physiological action, synonyms, etc., or to gain some general information about certain drugs. One wishing to know very much about any of the topics discussed must seek elsewhere and the errors and omissions tend to destroy one's confidence in the reliability of the information given." A. H. Clark

+ — Ind & Eng Chem 18:436 Ap '26 400w

N Y New Tech Bks 11:5 Ja '26

St Louis 24:164 Je '26

EWART, E. A. See Cable, B., pseud.

F

FABIAN, WARNER, pseud. Summer bachelors.

363p $2 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d S. Paul]
26-15271

"Derry Thomas, one of New York's most beautiful and genteel stenographers, sets forth to lead temporarily a gay life, but not too gay. She swiftly conquers the affections of several wealthy pinheads, some of them married, others single, with whom she romps at night clubs and other retreats of the festive."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by L. F. Hellman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N
28 '26 650w

"Mr. Fabian can do two things—he can plot a good story, and he can put it into the mouths of his characters. If his conversation sometimes drops into the realm where dwell the dime-novels, we must forgive him, for he deals with stories that hover on the edge of cheapness, but are saved by a certain consistency to truth and actuality." E. B.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 S 11 '26 500w

"Nothing could induce me to read this book. The wicked people in all the books I read must, well in a way, be good sports. These people—so far as I went—were distinctly not." T: L. Masson

— Lit R p3 O 2 '26 250w

Outlook 144:376 N 17 '26 180w

"The book is not in the least pernicious; it is merely insufferably silly and dull."

— Sat R of Lit 3:140 S 25 '26 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p890 D 2 '26
130w

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Here and there in popular science; ed., annotated, and tr. by Percy F. Bicknell. 409p il $2.50 Century

504 Science. Astronomy 26-16661

There is great diversity in the subject matter of the book. Part I, which is a little more than half of the volume talks of the sun, moon and stars; Part II, contains some "curiosities of plant life"; and Part III, turning to physiology, offers an array of facts concerning the human body.

Lit R p8 D 11 '26 160w

"Unlike most works of this kind, here is one that is at all times exceptionally full of interest."

+ N Y World p8m O 3 '26 90w

Wis Lib Bul 22:300 N '26

FABRE-LUCE, ALFRED. Limitations of victory; tr. by Constance Vesey. 368p $4 Knopf [12s 6d Allen & U.]

940.3 European war, 1914-1918—Diplomatic history. European war, 1914-1918—Peace
26-10479

"The Limitations of Victory," carries us beyond the war and into the perplexing present. To the first half is given the sub-title 'The Genesis of the War.' The second is called 'The Abortive Peace,' and affords M. Fabre-Luce an opportunity to discuss reparations and security, the invasion of the Ruhr and the unhappy events leading up to it, concluding with a discussion of the futility of the victory. The first half is an excellent summary of pre-war diplomacy while the second is a fair-minded summary of events and tendencies since the Armistice."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"With great detachment and perfect honesty, M. Fabre-Luce goes quietly about his decision of the pre-war plottings of the diplomats. He is after the truth. If the truth happens to be inconvenient, so much the worse for the people inconvenienced, but it does not worry M. Fabre-Luce." J: Bakeless

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Je 13
'26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 S '26

"M. Fabre-Luce's book will retain its importance after most books on the origins of the war have become hopelessly out of date." W: L. Langer

+ Nation 123:87 J1 28 '26 550w

"M. Fabre-Luce has a keen eye and a clear mind, and has rendered conspicuous service in clearing away a mass of irrelevant detail and reducing the arguments pro and con to their lowest common denominator. He is less interested in assessing the blame than in explaining the actions of the various Powers. His object is not to indict or to exonerate, and the detached, dispassionate tone of his essay distinguishes it favorably from some of the other studies that have come from France in the last years." W: L. Langer

+ New Repub 47:93 Je 9 '26 750w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald

N Y Times p3 J1 18 '26 2500w

"Among French writers on the World-War M. Fabre-Luce holds a deservedly high position. One may not always agree with him in his criticisms; but at least it must be conceded that he has been careful to support them with an imposing array of facts gleaned from trustworthy sources."

+ Sat R 141:630 My 22 '26 200w

Reviewed by T. H. Thomas

Sat R of Lit 3:479 Ja 1 '27 2000w

"He finds much for which to blame M. Delcassé, M. Poincaré and others in France, and M. Isvolsky in Russia. For Germany he finds many excuses. . . We can only accept the general impression, drawn from conflicting evidence, that Germany could have prevented the War and did not care to. This impression is not wiped out even by a Frenchman's efforts to whitewash her. With the rest of the book, which condemns M. Poincaré's policy after the Peace and ends with hopeful passages on the League of Nations, we can agree."

— + Spec 136:921 My 29 '26 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p381 Je 10 '26 2350w

FACHIRI, ALEXANDER PANDELLI. Permanent court of international justice; its constitution, procedure, and work. 342p $5 Oxford [15s Milford]

341.1 Hague. Permanent court of international justice [25-21692]

"There was a real place for a book of this kind. It is a text-book on the Court which was established under the Covenant of the League of Nations. Mr. Fachiri gives a sketch of the events leading to the creation of the Court, and follows it with a full account of its constitution and organization. Chapter III. contains a detailed analysis of its jurisdiction. Chapter IV. deals with its procedure. Chapter V. gives a very valuable account of the work of the Court from the beginning up to its judgment in the case referred to it by the Greek and Bulgarian Governments with regard to the interpretation of the Treaty of Neuilly. Chapter VI. contains a short discussion of the relation of the Court to the League and on the sanctions existing for the enforcement of its decisions."—Nation and Ath

"It should prove extremely useful to students to whom the documents themselves are not available or whose time for investigation is limited. But it is not more. It does not put the Court in any setting. One chapter only is a departure from the four corners of the documents—Chapter VI on 'The Court and the League.' If the whole volume had been prepared with the same freedom, and if the author had taken more account of the growing literature on the Court, the work would have been more generally useful." M. O. Hudson

+ — Ann Am Acad 123:225 Ja '26 200w

Booklist 22:233 Mr '26

Int J Ethics 37:110 O '26 160w

"A scholarly, documented account. Written objectively by an Englishman, it is the most useful account of the court available."

+ Nation 121:582 N 18 '25 60w

"The book is clearly written, well arranged, and fully documented."

+ Nation and Ath 38:126 O 17 '25 150w

"While somewhat in the nature of a lawyer's handbook, its clarity and authoritative presentation of facts are in no way diminished by its excellent style and able handling of the material presented." W: S. Myers

+ No Am 222:383 D '25 420w

Pratt p11 summer '26

Spec 135:559 O 3 '25 150w

"His book is very readable, is carefully furnished with authorities, and gathers together full particulars of the fourteen cases with which the Permanent Court has dealt in its advisory or its judicial character."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p595 S 17 '25 1250w

FAIRCHILD, HENRY PRATT. Melting-pot mistake. 266p $2.50 Little

325.7 United States—Foreign population. Americanization. Immigration. Nationalism and nationality 26-2830

In this consideration of the immigration problem the author first disposes of the melting-pot as a suitable symbol, since the process it stands for obviously has not taken place. The racial and national origins of our immigrant population are factors working against their assimilation into the American nationality. How then shall the assimilation process be accomplished? The Americanization movement failed adequately to meet the situation. The chapters 'The making of Americans and The duty of America suggest another point of attack and another method.'

Reviewed by R. E. Park

Am J Soc 32:300 S '26 330w

Booklist 22:315 My '26

"If you want statistics, don't read this book. If you want anti alien bigotry or pro alien 'sob stuff,' don't read it. But if you want a reasoned, readable, and informed study of immigration, up to the minute and into the future, then do read it. Some of its minor conclusions may not find you in agreement. For my part, I differ with several. But the broad main stream is sound, and also entertaining. It is the best book on immigration that I have read." H: H. Curran

+ Bookm 63:228 Ap '26 700w

"Professor Fairchild is right in his contention that the melting-pot has failed and the new immigration legislation is a natural consequence of that failure. But he does not convince me that he has really understood why it has failed. Economics, not anthropology, is the key to that problem." Ernest Boyd

— Ind 116:192 F 13 '26 1000w

"The specialist may find Professor Fairchild's reasoning open in places, to argument. To the present reviewer, however, it seems remarkably sound, detached, and consonant with the facts assembled." L: Kronenberger

+ Int Bk R p395 My '26 450w

Reviewed by R. G. Smith

Lit R p9 D 11 '26 250w

"This book impresses one as having been written by one who knows his subject and has mastered his material; it is an excellent statement of his philosophy. But it will leave many unconvinced that the war demonstrated the impossibility of Americanization." K: F. Geiser

+ — Nation 123:16 Jl 7 '26 650w

Reviewed by G: A. Dorsey

New Repub 47:67 Je 2 '26 1050w

"Like the preceding volumes by Professor McDougall and Professor Wilbur C. Abbott, it proffers an apology where one is no longer needed. With this reservation it may be stated that Professor Fairchild's book is the best of the series so far. It is much more equable in temper, notably broader in its sympathies, and at closer grips with the facts involved." Simeon Strunsky

+ — N Y Times p4 F 21 '26 2050w

"Over Prof. Fairchild's precise, reasoned argument for the general immigration policy which Congress has seen fit to adopt, broods his respect, almost amounting to awe, for the majestic might of words." D: Loth

— N Y World p7m Ja 31 '26 750w

Outlook 142:539 Ap 7 '26 80w

Pratt p10 autumn '26

R of Rs 73:332 Mr '26 100w

FAIRCHILD, HENRY PRATT—Continued

"His entire book is a well-reasoned, well-written, and dignified attempt to prove that there never was, and never can be, a melting pot such as the dramatist presented it." G: M. Stephenson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:661 Mr 27 '26 1100w

"Although Prof Fairchild's statement of his position is impaired by diffuseness, he is not consciously actuated by any bias or class partisanship. The ethnological and biological considerations which might give weight to a study of the actual difficulties inherent in the melting-pot process are lacking."

+ — Spring'd Republican p10 Ja 29 '26 650w

"Professor Fairchild states the case for the quantitative limitation and racial selection of immigrants with good temper and without the hysteria which has characterized much recent Nordicism. With some of his incidental conclusions observers of nearly all camps will heartily concur. . . But his fundamental theses will take much more proving than he has attempted here."

Survey 56:470 J1 15 '26 200w

Wis Lib Bul 22:137 Ap '26

FALCONER, SIR ROBERT ALEXANDER.

United States as a neighbour, from a Canadian point of view. 259p $3 Macmillan [7s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

327.73 United States—Foreign relations—Canada. Canada—Foreign relations—United States. Canada—Civilization. United States—Civilization [26-6844]

"This volume is composed of lectures delivered by the author, at British universities, as the Incumbent in 1925 of the Sir George Watson Chair of American History and Institutions. The contents of the volume cover, necessarily in a more or less summary way, a wide field, embracing, as between Canada and the United States, such subjects as common ingredients in the population, the determination of boundaries, the settlement of fisheries disputes, the course of trade and commerce, the elements that go to make up public sentiment, and educational developments. There is also a chapter, without which no book relating to Canada would now be complete, on 'Canadian nationalism'; and there is assigned to Canada the high function of acting as an interpreter between the United States and Great Britain."—Canadian Hist R

Booklist 22:397 J1 '26

Reviewed by J. B. Moore

Canadian Hist R 7:60 Mr '26 1000w

"Sir Robert ends his fascinating volume by a chapter on 'Canada as Interpreter.' It would be difficult to exaggerate its value. It is full of political good sense and good feeling. He proves beyond all question how tremendous is the power for good which Canada holds, by reason of her position and the character of the great majority of her people." J. St L. Strachey

+ N Y Times p3 Ja 24 '26 1450w

"The task is admirably done. The American reader will take exception here and there to some matter of detail, but he cannot fail to appreciate the judicial spirit which informs the book as a whole."

+ Outlook 142:573 Ap 14 '26 240w

Pratt p11 summer '26

"It is always interesting to see how successfully the wrinkles of history can be ironed out when a writer chooses to tell the story in a calm and genial fashion. The President of Toronto University, addressing British audiences on the United States as a neighbor, treats all disturbing episodes with a quiet generosity which, if it does not abate any essentials of the Canadian claims, does rather more than justice to the American temper and American methods, and leaves the impression that underneath the dust and clamor of the moment a spirit of international comity was always effectively working." W: MacDonald

+ Sat R of Lit 3:200 O 16 '26 720w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

Spec 136:172 Ja 30 '26 1350w (Abridged from N Y Times)

FALES, HAROLD ATHELSTANE. Inorganic quantitative analysis. 493p $3.50 Century

545 Chemistry, Analytic—Quantitative. Chemistry, Inorganic 25-20845

In preparing this textbook in chemistry it has been the aim of the author "to apply the principles of Physical Chemistry to the theory of Quantitative Analysis in the same detailed and thorough manner that has been done in the last decade or so to the teaching of Qualitative Analysis and of General Chemistry. . . The methods which have been given in the text will be found sufficient not only for an elementary course but also for an advanced course as well; they have been selected so as to present something new in theory or technique in every case, and have been arranged progressively with respect to their general order of difficulty." (Preface)

"This is an outstanding example of a modern type of textbook which aims at presenting the subject of quantitative analysis from a physico-chemical standpoint. To those who wish to use the beginning course in quantitative as a vehicle for physical chemistry and especially to those who want a book suitable for advanced classes in the theory of quantitative analysis, the reviewer most heartily recommends this one by Professor Fales." C. W. Foulk

+ — Am Chem Soc J 48:3003 N '26 600w

FALON, DALTON BOYLES. Zinc oxide; history, manufacture and properties as a pigment. 145p il $1.75 Van Nostrand [12s Constable]

661 Zinc oxide 26-813

"After a brief survey of the history of zinc and the occurrence of the ore, gives a detailed description of manufacturing processes, specifications, and methods of examination. Pays little attention to properties or uses."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"This book is not of much use to the consumer; it is for the furnace designer and operator, a metallurgical engineer's book. The student who is not familiar with the kind of furnaces used in this art will not be able to get much of value; but the experienced man may find a great deal that he can use." A. H. Sabin

Ind & Eng Chem 18:326 Mr '26 220w

N Y New Tech Bks 11:5 Ja '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:564 N '26

FANE, LENOX. Legation street. 320p $2.50 Little [7s 6d T. Butterworth]

[25-22994]

Diplomatic teas, official dinner parties, sunset strolls on the great wall, rivalries and flirtations, ceremonious wranglings in the bazaars—these glimpses of life in the consular service in Peking are offered in this book in the guise of a quietly moving story. John Stuart, a middle aged bachelor, visits his brother, a British diplomat in Peking, and sets down these observations of life in Legation street.

"A collection of sardonic impressions is strung together on the slender thread of a plot just sufficient to grace them with the name of fiction. The book is peevish, yet disturbing with unrealized implications." Mary Willcox

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ja 24 '26 400w

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 23 '26 300w

"The author gives us snapshots of Peking and takes a few side-thrusts at the farce of diplomatic routine. The snapshots are pleasant, but superficial and decorative; the satire is equally pleasant, but equally superficial. In general, the virtues of the book are negative rather than positive." L: Kronenberger

+ Int Bk R p392 My '26 400w

"This is a cross between a textbook, a satire and a tragic love-story. But the teller is possessed of such quiet urbanity, such good and right diction and such indifferent humor toward all things that it would be entirely out-of-the-picture for us to question his way of work." L. T. Nicholl

+ Lit R p3 Ja 16 '26 400w

"Lenox Fane is obviously acquainted with Legation Street, but he takes care to write without giving offense. His characterizations are happily mischievous rather than offensive. This book should arouse endless speculation in Legation Street at Peking, both as to the true identity of its author, and of the characters and events suggested by his narrative."

+ N Y Times p16 D 20 '25 1100w

"'Legation Street' is not gauche or impossible. It deals with rivalries, jealousies, intrigues, flirtations and one more or less serious love affair. And it has a certain deftness although it is damned by the oppressive and never faltering good taste of its author."

N Y World p7m D 20 '25 300w

"A light and whimsical touch characterizes this author, who is an adept at polite sarcasm and whose dialog rings true, whether humorous or ironical. The reader's interest holds throughout the book, for diplomatic England and China in a breath make the unfamiliar."

+ Springfd Republican p7a Ja 17 '26 520w

"Mr. Fane has a pretty wit in dialogue and a gift for characterization which enables him to clothe the persons of his drama with an effective identity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p814 N 26 '25 160w

FARINGTON, JOSEPH. Farington diary; v 5-6; ed. by James Greig. 335;314p il ea $7.50 Doran [ea 21s Hutchinson]

B or 92

(23-7187)

The fifth and sixth volumes of the Farington diary continue the day-to-day record of this voluminous journal for the period from January 9, 1808 to December 21, 1809, and for January 13, 1810 to June 9, 1811, respectively.

Booklist 22:291 Ap '26 (Review of v 5)

Booklist 23:129 D '26 (Review of v 6)

"As a gently bred, reactionary mind, naively pious and never brilliant, alway credulous, solemnly sedate and deadly serious, Farington survives, a perfect type of his age."

Bookm 64:241 O '26 100w (Review of v 6)

"We should have been inclined to dismiss this volume as on the whole dull were it not for the large portion of it which is devoted to a tour in Devon and Cornwall. The break from the round of his London habitués seems to have had a freshening effect upon the diarist. Farington appraises each spot with the cool discerning eye of a professional, and the sincerity of his appreciation does not suffer from the unimpassioned language in which it is expressed." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 N '26 '26 960w (Review of v 6)

Boston Transcript p5 Je 23 '26 600w (Review of v 5)

Reviewed by A. H. Wharton

Lit R p4 Ag 21 '26 1150w (Review of v 5)

"Like the preceding volumes, it is invaluable as a work of reference to the lighter side of English life during the period it covers, and it is admirably edited."

+ Nation and Ath 38:sup252 N 14 '25 50w (Review of v 5)

Nation and Ath 39:534 Ag 7 '26 400w (Review of v 6)

"This diary is of great value, because Farington knew so many people of importance and was so conscientious in keeping his records."

C: de Kay

+ N Y Times p6 Ap 18 '26 1100 (Review of v 5)

N Y World p6m Mr 21 '26 200w (Review of v 5)

"It is a considerable testimony to the merit of his diary that the public appetite for its innocent prattle seems to be unabated. The present volume is the sixth, and it is now intimated that two more volumes will complete the work. It will thus occupy as much space on our bookshelves as Mr. Wheatley's definitive edition of Pepys. It would be absurd to pretend that Farington can be a serious rival to Pepys in either literary or historical importance, but it is creditable to the public taste that people can continue to be interested on this scale in the social and artistic gossip of a hundred years ago."

Sat R 142:130 Jl 31 '26 520w (Review of v 6)

Spec 135:890 N 14 '25 230w (Review of v 5)

"Are there quite as many plums in this instalment of Farington as there were in the others? Perhaps it depends on what the individual reader is looking for; otherwise Farington exhibits all his customary curiosity; his interest is unabated in pictures and their prices, in the incomes and money affairs of friends and acquaintances."

Times [London] Lit Sup p631 O 1 '25 620w (Review of v 5)

"The charm of this Diary lies less in its novelty or its originality than in its variety. All kinds of information found their way into Farington's notes."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p445 Jl 1 '26 750w (Review of v 6)

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON. Old churches and meeting houses in and around Philadelphia. 275p il $6 Lippincott

277.48 Philadelphia—Churches

26-27491

"In Philadelphia, as elsewhere, the old churches often are the center of secular as well as ecclesiastical history. Only Protestant churches are included here, as Roman Catholicism had no place in Colonial Philadelphia. The Episcopal and Presbyterian churches and Quaker meeting houses are perhaps the most interesting of this group, which includes many others—Baptist, Methodist, Lutheran, both Swedish and Evangelical, Dunkard, Mennonite and Moravian."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Booklist 23:74 N '26

"Will be of primary local interest, but the volume is a valuable historical contribution and will be welcomed by many interested in our national 'storehouses of history and romance.'" W. J. C.

+ Bookm 63:xv Ag '26 60w

"Mr. Faris makes no attempt at literature. Nor does he attempt to make his book interesting beyond the intrinsic interest that information of this sort holds for accurate minded persons with a passion for collecting information. Probably, too, in this sesquicentennial year there are an unusually large number of persons engaged in gathering information about Philadelphia. For these the book is useful." Emily Clark

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 Ag 1 '26 820w

"Roman Catholic churches are not included, because their growth took place almost entirely after the Revolution, and because those few churches which did exist before that time have no known records. For people interested in the history of the regular Protestant sects, however, and also for those concerned with the smaller groups, such as the Dunkards, Mennonites, and Friends, this volume will be extremely interesting." W. B.

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON—Continued

Boston Transcript p6 J1 28 '26 1450w
Cath World 124:134 O '26 130w
N Y Times p9 S 5 '26 500w
R of Rs 74:111 J1 '26 50w

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON. Romance of the boundaries. 331p il $6 (21s) Harper

973 United States—Boundaries 26-14839

Mr Faris tells the story of our numerous international and state boundary controversies. All of these disputes have interesting histories back of them, the facts of which are often difficult of access, and some were so critical at times as to threaten war. The first part of the volume tells about the settlement of such international disputes as those about the northern boundaries of Maine and of New Hampshire, the Niagara frontier, the forty-ninth parallel, the Alaska boundary and the Texas border. The state boundary disputes, some of which were long drawn-out, reveal some picturesque and often humorous episodes. Numerous illustrations and maps are included.

Booklist 23:125 D '26

"The writing aims at accuracy rather than vividness, and the flavor and excitement of history seem almost wholly lacking."

+ — Bookm 64:639 Ja '27 80w

"The book is primarily a library book for students of historical topography. But there is interest in it for the general reader, too, odd things as well for the man hunting suggestions for short story writing, queer sidelights on history of a sort to engage a teacher with respect for his class; in short, a book for novices and experts alike." C. D. Finger

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 O 3 '26 130w

Boston Transcript p4 S 8 '26 280w

"The episodes of the story he describes are well chosen and sure to interest the layman as well as the historian. The book has an alluring array of photographs and maps."

Ind 117:366 S 25 '26 130w

Reviewed by F. H. Martens

Lit R p7 S 4 '26 350w

"It is a scholarly book, depending much on contemporary accounts and historical records for incident and color."

+ N Y Times p10 D 19 '26 490w

"The general reader will find much in this book that has heretofore escaped him. An occasional misprint of name or date unfortunately occurs; but in this imperfect world one hundred per cent accuracy seems unattainable. A graver fault is that the right-hand pages throughout carry, not the chapter titles, but the title of the book."

+ — Outlook 144:92 S 15 '26 330w

Wis Lib Bul 22:296 N '26

FARJEON, JOSEPH JEFFERSON. Green Dragon. 388p $2 Dial press

26-10567

"The Green Dragon' should give you the creeps, and maybe it will. Finding poor old Mrs. Gummet locked up in the cupboard of the inn is bad enough, not to speak of the blood stain on the door and the nameless Chinaman peeking in the windows at the end of chapters, even when he is supposed to be drowned."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 J1 18 '26 200w

"The cleverest of mystery yarns. The conversation is brilliant, if occasionally exaggeratedly so. A drunken tramp is not the kind of associate one would choose but this one is an amusing variant. If Mr. Farjeon has made such a success with what we understand is only his third novel, it behooves the older writers of mystery stories to look to their laurels." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 19 '26 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p109 S '26

"A blithely improbable and altogether delightful mystery story." L. M. F.

+ Int Bk R p652 S '26 330w

"It's a capital story, with the mysteries lightened by the jolly old tramp." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p6 Je 19 '26 200w

"Although the plot can hardly be said to be convincing, 'The Green Dragon' has several advantages over the average novel of its type. In the first place, no one is murdered; in the second place, there are no detectives. Of course, the introduction of the valuable ruby is a sufficiently standardized device, but surely the writer of mystery tales is not expected to be altogether original."

+ — N Y Times p27 My 30 '26 450w

"In 'Uninvited Guests' he turned the trick well-nigh to perfection, then, after the story was far and successfully advanced, he seemed to fall down woefully. Even so, this story seems to merit, as did its forerunner, a ranking considerably higher than is justified by the mass of its kind."

+ — N Y World p4m J1 25 '26 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p582 S 2 '26 180w

FARJEON, JOSEPH JEFFERSON. No. 17. 320p $2 Dial press

[26-10851]

"Except for its very brief preliminaries, the entire action of this excellent mystery story transpires at 'No. 17,' a vacant, dilapidated London house. Ben, a timorous derelict, seeking shelter from the rigors of a dense fog, enters the dwelling where he all but expires of fright. The presence of a corpse upon the attic floor drives him terror-stricken to the street, there to encounter a strange young man whom he persuades to return with him to the house. Soon the pair are joined by a frightened girl, and a little later by three impostors pretending to be prospective tenants. Other shady characters appear upon the scene; there follows a mad conflict of baffling motives, out of which eventually emerges a moderately coherent explanation of the preceding bedlam."—Lit R

Booklist 23:176 Ja '27

"This yarn is a corker." Carty Ranck

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 D 12 '26 120w

Boston Transcript p6 N 20 '26 230w

"No one accomplishes this particular kind of fantastic tale more dexterously and fascinatingly than Mr. Farjeon." E. C. B.

+ Lit R p12 O 2 '26 150w

"The story is unusual of its type, inasmuch as action is confined to a single night, little space being given in describing characters, and no indication until near the end that the contending groups represented law and the lawless. It is an entertaining tale."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f O 24 '26 150w

FARMER, H. F. Log of a shellback; a narrative of life and adventure before the mast in the 'nineties. 251p il $4 Stokes [10s 6d Witherby]

B or 92 Seafaring life [26-26402]

A straightforward narrative of a hard life and the hardy men it produced. The writer served before the mast on four different sailing ships. The book contains memories of his experiences on each of them and is a tribute to the men who shared those experiences. "The shellback was an unlovely being, a drunkard and an outcast; but in the battle against wind and wave he was a hero."

Booklist 22:370 Je '26

"Rather dull stuff. It calls itself a 'narrative of life and adventure before the mast in the nineties'; in reality it is a hash of soliloquies about the old days. It is a book which talks round its subject, never of it." H: Beston

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ap 18 '26 100w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 17 '26 1200w

"Squeamish people will not like this book. The sea, in the days of sailing ships, was no place for squeamish people. Beauty and horror are commingled in the book, just as they were often commingled on a long sea voyage. From cover to cover there runs the longing of the sailor for the sea. A true picture. Brutality never quite killed that longing." Bill Adams

+ Lit R p2 My 8 '26 330w

"Mr. Farmer writes well and convincingly. He makes us feel the soaked and stiffened sail at which he clawed; the throb of the muscles after a weary day's incessant pulling and hauling in the doldrums. He can paint the beauty of his ship and communicate his pride in her."

+ Nation and Ath 38:sup252 N 14 '25 200w

New Statesman 26:supxxii D 12 '25 50w

"It is written with a sense of selection that makes all its pages worth while and with an eye for the dramatic and the picturesque that gives constant movement and color."

+ N Y Times p12 Ap 18 '26 500w

St Louis 24:172 Je '26

"The book deserves a place in any library devoted to the sea. It is well written and authentic. The pictures of ships and sailors ring true."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:651 Mr 20 '26 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p776 N 19 '25 300w

FARNELL, LEWIS RICHARD. Attributes of God. 284p $4.25 Oxford [12s 6d Milford]

231 God. Religions [26-6684]

"The Gifford lectures for 1924-25, [delivered in the University of St. Andrews] undertaking to gain from a study of the conceptions of God in the various religions a general understanding of the motives underlying the elaboration of divine attributes, and an analysis of the process by which these attributes are clearly apprehended. Out of this study comes a suggestive statement of the chief problems confronting a theistic philosophy. The religions studied are those germane to the occidental conception of God—Semitic, Hellenic, and Christian sources furnishing the material."—J Religion

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 3 '26 400w

J Religion 6:333 My '26 80w

"Though this book is a first-rate work of scholarship, it is free from technicalities and is fascinating reading even for the uninitiated." S. J. Case

+ Nation 123:380 O 13 '26 380w

Nature 117:111 Ja 23 '26 1050w

"One of the most competent discussions of Comparative Religions that we have read. We are in the hands of a master throughout."

+ New Statesman 26:752 Mr 27 '26 680w

"It is difficult to give a full idea of the interest and scope of this book. Like a history of religion, it presents the facts; like a psychology of religion, it explains them. With rapidity and clearness the author touches on many questions of more than academic interest."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:598 F 27 '26 450w

"Students of the history of religion will be prepared to welcome this book with interest and curiosity. . . It is to be regretted that the design, unexceptionable in itself, should have been carried out by Dr. Farnell in a fashion which one cannot avoid characterizing as unworthy of the distinguished author's high reputation for sober and accurate scholarship. The book before us often gives the impression of having been put together from notes jotted down in the course of reading without any adequate revision or careful verification of references; nor is this criticism applicable only to passages in which Dr. Farnell is dealing with matters remote from his own special studies."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p194 Mr 18 '26 2100w

FARNOL, JEFFERY. High adventure. 353p $2 Little [7s 6d Low]

26-6146

"London in the early part of the nineteenth century forms the background of the story. Jeremy Vervan of Vervan, 24 years old, was heir to a great estate, held in trust by his uncle, Sir James Trevor, until he should attain the age of 25. But if he died before his twenty-fifth birthday, then the estate went to his uncle, who himself had a very handsome son, named Arthur. . . He presently realized that his chances of staying alive would be excessively meagre, should he remain anywhere within the reach of his amiable uncle and scarcely less amiable cousin. Therefore, he set forth on 'The High Adventure.' According to the usual and admirable custom of heroes of this kind of romance, he began his experiences by acquiring a dog and rescuing a lady. With the appearance on the scene of the elderly lawyer, Mr. Gillespie of Clifford's Inn, and the murder which follows soon after, the tale becomes a detective story of old London."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:329 My '26

"Jeffery Farnol has written what purports to be another eighteenth century adventure story, but it is really only a shadow of what it might have been."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 21 '26 300w

"The sheer delight of Mr. Farnol's people grows upon you. They are lovable, from Jeremy himself, big, blundering Jeremy, down to the Imp. There are perhaps two dozen persons in the tale, and all are as real as if a book were written about each one. Then, too, they give one a satisfactory feeling, of great deeds done greatly, and high ideals fought for highly." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 3 '26 1150w

Reviewed by Sidney Shultz

Int Bk R p387 My '26 330w

"It is a delightful tale." C. P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p4 Mr 27 '26 500w

"The story is picturesque, and reasonably entertaining; quite divorced from reality, but a tolerably pleasant companion for a few idle hours."

+ N Y Times p19 Mr 21 '26 900w

"Mr. Farnol is overfond of mildly facetious chapter-headings, of endless interchanges of facetiae in ponderously 'funny' dialogue, and of presenting at least one 'punch' per chapter. He whisks his characters on and off stage like an awkward playwright. He waves coy little eccentricities at them and expects them to live and breathe on such delicate fare." H. F. Pringle

— N Y World p7m Mr 21 '26 250w

Reviewed by C. H. Gaines

No Am 223:374 Je '26 550w

Springf'd Republican p7f My 23 '26 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p617 S 16 '26 260w

Wis Lib Bul 22:198 Je '26

FARRAR, GILBERT POWDERLY. How advertisements are built. 296p $3.50 (15s) Appleton

659 Advertising 25-23124

The book is written for the business man who advertises and for the man who writes advertisements. The author gives the ten essentials of good advertising copy and by the generous use of illustrations from actual advertisements, makes graphic his points.

FARRAR, GILBERT P.—Continued

Booklist 22:356 Je '26

"It is an excellent technical textbook for business men and students who want to know how advertisements are made. The chapters on copy are not so good. Mr. Farrar lays down a set of principles and then builds an ad around them. The result of such a method would be a synthetic affair and just about as effective as a synthetic novel. But the book is full of sense and empty of bombast." Helen Woodward

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ja 17 '26 250w

Management and Adm 11:58 Ja '26 80w

"Altogether Mr. Farrar's book is the most practical and most efficient guide and help to perfection in an art the acquisition of which is necessary in every great trading country throughout the modern world."

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 10 '26 430w

"Mr. Farrar is chiefly concerned with the physical appearance of advertising. On this subject he has written and lectured, so naturally when he writes a book about it it is a good book, sound and well considered and exceedingly helpful."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:484 Ja 9 '26 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p46 Ja 21 '26 90w

Wis Lib Bul 22:226 Jl '26

FARRELL, HUGH. What price progress? the stake of the investor in the discoveries of science. 323p $2.50 Putnam

660.9 Research, Industrial. Chemistry, Technical. Technology 26-17882

The author combines two points of view in this fairly comprehensive survey of national industries: how industry is benefited thru encouraging scientific research, and on the other hand how industry without research is crippled.

"The author is an enthusiast and he justifies his enthusiasm. His story reads like a fairy tale." F. L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 1 '26 370w

"Here, research and chemical research in particular, is dramatized effectively. The book should prove useful in promoting the business man's interest in a serious investigation of the question 'Does Research Pay?'"

+ Chem & Met Eng 33:692 N '26 80w

Ind & Eng Chem 18:1359 D '26 200w

"Enlightening the stockholder on the importance of science to industry is a task which necessarily limits one in language, conception and outlook; but the employment of every known axiom, commonplace and family remedy seems hardly excusable even in addressing such an audience." H. C. North

+ — Lit R p5 N 20 '26 310w

FARRERE, CLAUDE, pseud. (CHARLES BARGONE). Useless hands; auth. tr. from the French by Elisabeth Abbott. 300p $2.50 Dutton

26-17606

The scene of this prophetic novel is the latter half of the twentieth century, when the machine age has so far advanced that human labor seems about to be supplanted altogether. A huge industrial combine called the Siturgic supplies bread for the whole western hemisphere. A device has been perfected which if adopted will force out several hundred thousand employes of the Siturgic, and in a demonstration of protest they march on the great plant to attack it. The daughter of the head of the combine is secretly the mistress of the strike leader and marches with him at the head of the employes. Her father has it in his power to wipe out the whole army of strikers without a trace, but to destroy them (for they threaten famine to half the world) is to destroy his loved daughter too.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 9 '27 80w

"M. Farrere is so taken up with material things, with descriptions of machinery, of the luxury of the trust president's palace and of Eva's frocks, with ingenious speculation, scientific and economic, that he forgets to instill an atom of life into any of his dramatic personae. They too, therefore, have a mechanical and a factory-made air that is far from pleasing. They move when M. Farrere thinks to pull the strings, but they are too often neglected so that their poor joints creak and they stumble awkwardly." S. L. R.

— Boston Transcript p8 N 20 '26 350w

"An imaginative story, with a strong sense of realities." J. Cournos

Lit R p6 O 30 '26 620w

"On the whole, 'Useless Hands' is an entertaining as well as a far-seeing and provocative book. It is the sort of work that the thoughtful reader will welcome and enjoy, for as a social commentary it is superior to many disquisitions on economics, while at the same time it sets fire to the imagination and stimulates the mind to prophecy."

+ N Y Times p28 O 31 '26 600w

"The characters are all monomaniacs, each ridden by some one form of lust for tyranny. Apart from these considerations, it is a well-ordered and skillfully told tale, rising to a terrible and inhuman climax."

N Y World p11m O 31 '26 150w

FARSON, NEGLEY. Sailing across Europe. 2 354p il $3.50 Century [21s Hutchinson]

914 Europe—Description and travel

26-18250

Mr Farson tells the story of a cruise across Europe by river and canal from Rotterdam to the Black Sea. The adventures of this trip, which was made by the author and his wife in a twenty-six foot yawl, are told in an informal narrative which appeared first in the columns of the Chicago Daily News.

"[Traveling] in this way, they got a close-up of Europe which is distinctly fresh and constantly entertaining."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 7 '26 100w

"Whether by river or by Rhine-Danube canal, which Mr. Farson describes as the least-known and least-used waterway in Europe, the trip must have been a delightful experience—how delightful the eighty excellent illustrations proclaim."

+ New Statesman 28:supxvi N 13 '26 100w

"No one can take such a trip and avoid adventures, but again there are few amateur yachtsmen who can convey the reality of them so well to a patient reader. Negley Farson is to be envied for the amount of fun he has had, and thanked for the portion of it he has passed to us."

+ Outlook 144:575 D 29 '26 210w

"A book which tells one more about post-War Europe than a dozen documented political volumes, and is all the while the radiant account of a most variegated adventure. . . Everything is told unpretentiously, but seen, realized, understood, and set down with swift appraisal." Stephen Gwynn

+ Spec 137:1155 D 25 '26 500w

"Though not an especially distinguished piece of writing, it records an unusual voyage."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 N 22 '26 160w
Times [London] Lit Sup p900 D 9 '26 550w

Wis Lib Bul 22:331 D '26

FATH, EDWARD ARTHUR. Elements of astronomy; a non-mathematical text-book for use as an introduction to the subject in colleges, universities, etc., and for the general reader. 307p il $3 McGraw

520 Astronomy

26-13553

"An attempt to set forth the main facts of our present knowledge of astronomy for those with slight mathematical training. Author is (1926) professor of astronomy in Carleton college."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:545 N '26

"The book should receive a hearty welcome from teachers of astronomy and readers who desire a 'non-mathematical treatment of the science of the stars.' The subject-matter of the book is very comprehensive and all fields of astronomy are touched upon. In general the author has preserved a good sense of balance and proportion and has not overemphasized certain fields at the expense of others... In the attempt to avoid too lengthy a treatment for a first course some material has been omitted which will seem to many teachers as very important." W. K. Green

+ Science 64:405 O 22 '26 450w

FAULKNER, WILLIAM. Soldiers' pay. 319p $2.50 Boni & Liveright

26-6911

Donald Mahon was coming home from the war; his face horribly mutilated, his memory gone. The two who found him on the train wondered pityingly what his reception would be. They could guess the shock to the father who thought him dead, and they knew from her picture what the pretty, shallow fiancée would do. The strangers to each other, touched by the dying man's helplessness, Joe Gilligan and Margaret Powers decided to see him home. The book tells the moving story of that home coming with all its complications and implications. Against the background of a small southern town the characters are deftly drawn—Donald's father, the rector, Cecily the butterfly fiancée, her family and her lover, Jones, a fat voluptuary, and the central figures of the story, the doughboy Gilligan and Margaret Powers, war widow.

"The author writes with irony and pity, but he is more ironic than pitiful, and his fine understanding of humans is marred by overemphasis. He admits of no restraint in his writing and submits to no discipline. And this is to be regretted, for 'Soldier's Pay' is almost a great book." Larry Barretto

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Je 6 '26 750w

"Apparently this is a 'first book.' If so, it is an extraordinary performance. One hopes the author will not let manner and method run away with his amazing grasp of personality and life, that he will not become faddish, married to a cult. He is able now to cut loose and tell his story any way he likes, so long as it is his way and not the way of any particular group or school."

+ Ind 116:463 Ap 17 '26 230w

"Mr. Faulkner's method of presentation is as uncontrolled, unforming, haphazard and desultory as his substance; but it very often achieves a vividness, a fervor, an immediacy which ordered procedure would not project." L: Kronenberger

+ Int Bk R p522 J1 '26 400w

"We have read a great many novels that portrayed the disillusioned veterans' conflict with the unfamiliar life of restored peace, but, in our opinion, for originality of design and beauty of writing, this book stands alone among them." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p2 Ap 3 '26 520w

"The force of this is blurred by the fact that Mr. Faulkner does not see around the period he is handling. And the poignancy of situations is weakened by literary echoes, which lead him into straining for effect and misplaced brilliance. Beneath this self-conscious 'literature,' however, is a nervous, swift talent. When Mr. Faulkner forgets his desire to be devastating he is genuinely imaginative." L. S. Morris

+ New Repub 47:148 Je 23 '26 150w

"This book rings true. It is the opinion of this reviewer that it belongs among such excellent conceptions of war and man as are to be found in 'What Price Glory' and C. E. Montague's 'Disenchantment.'"

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 11 '26 1000w

"Mr. Faulkner submits to very little government in writing. His impressionistic manner is honest but slap-dash; often he sets down an extraordinarily vivid scene. The book has fervor and strength, but it would be more effective if it were better controlled." T: Boyd

+ Sat R of Lit 2:736 Ap 24 '26 580w

"An impressionistic piece of work with fleeting moments of good writing and much of the kind of language that is common enough with men in uniform but needs artistic justification when it is transferred to the text of a novel or play."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 4 '26 300w

FAURE, ELIE. Dance over fire and water; auth. tr. by John Gould Fletcher. 158p $3 Harper

844 Civilization. Art. War

26-6378

"The symbolism of the book's title should be evident. Civilization is a dance in which the participants step their measure above fire (war) and water (morality). No more than fire and water combine, can war and morality combine." (N Y Times) "War and revolution," says the author, "are an integral and active part of civilization . . . the most cruel factors certainly, but up to now the most necessary, also, of civilization."

"Lest he should be obscure, M. Faure resorts to scrupulously careful and devious statement of his philosophy. The result is hard reading, but behind it is a sound and beautiful wisdom, full of pessimism yet essentially inspiring."

+ Booklist 22:363 Je '26

"The book is symbolical and full of conflicting theories, but beneath its mysticism and its purely verbal beauty lie many positive and amazing ideas. Theoretically Faure's position is beautifully and effectively stated, but his historical arguments are by no means impregnable." T: Craven

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ap 18 '26 820w

"Rarely has it been our privilege to read a book which was so sophisticated and yet so alluring." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 24 '26 950w

Reviewed by Ananda Coomaraswamy

Dial 81:340 O '26 1650w

Reviewed by Helen Sahler

Int Bk R p458 Je '26 750w

"Though we may question the inevitability Elie Faure sees in the obvious interconnections of war and art, 'The Dance Over Fire and Water' is at once a searching examination and a beautiful expression of the questing spirit of man, on the eternal adventure of art." J. T. Shipley

Lit R p7 Ap 17 '26 1100w

Reviewed by Llewelyn Powys

Nation 122:728 Je 30 '26 900w

"What is sound in Faure's theme has already been set forth, with impeccable clarity, by Ruskin; and what remains peculiarly Faure's own has been expressed, with great amplitude, in the History of Art. In sum, The Dance over Fire and Water can be dismissed as bad poetry; it cannot be justified as good criticism." L: Mumford

+ New Repub 47:95 Je 9 '26 600w

"We thank M. Elie Faure for some of the most enjoyable hours it has been our lot to spend with a book."

+ N Y Times p13 Mr 28 '26 1550w

FAURE, ELIE—Continued

"Many men can illuminate with the flashlights of their minds a small set of facts; few men can marshal all history, analyze it, collate it, transcend it, substantiate with sure-fire examples all their intellectual audacities, and deduce therefrom certain stunning conclusions as to the relations between so-called morality, progress, the inherent tragedy of existence, the myths which serve as roots for all our thinking, war, the arts, and the 'Just Man.' It takes a comprehensive thinker. It takes Elie Faure. 'The Dance Over Fire and Water,' as a series of philosophic profundities, is a book to be reckoned with."

+ N Y World p6m Ap 11 '26 500w

Pratt p21 summer '26

St Louis 24:248 S '26

"The English translation hangs like a curtain of fog between the original text and the American reader. . . M. Faure is a famous man in the field of French literature. I suspect that it were better for his reputation as a philosopher and a historian if he were to remain completely untranslated." H. W. Van Loon

— Sat R of Lit 2:697 Ap 10 '26 950w

"In criticism, the book is excellently witty. No superstition is left unexploded, no room is left for complacency and comfortable opinions. In its constructive ideals the book is—charming. M. Faure can, however, bear us no grudge if we say that it is not serious."

Spec 136:1049 Je 19 '26 650w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 26 '26 600w

"That his book, in so far as it sets out to argue an impossible case, is worthless does not detract from the merit of some of his ideas, or from the effectiveness of the grand manner he employs. It is possible that M. Faure himself would not claim for his book merit more persuasive than verbal ingenuity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p351 My 27 '26 800w

FAURE, GABRIEL. The Dolomites. (Picture guides) 143p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Medici soc.

914.5 Dolomite Alps—Description and travel
26-6722

This attractive volume, one of the Medici society's series of Picture guides, describes the Dolomite region, lately an Austrian possession and but recently restored to Italy. The illustrations are in photogravure.

Booklist 22:325 My '26

Boston Transcript p1 F 20 '26 780w

Cleveland Open Shelf p43 Ap '26

"An exquisite travel book written in an appealing style that is both descriptive and appreciative."

+ Ind 116:368 Mr 27 '26 60w

"The Dolomites region, growing in popularity among tourists, is here observed leisurely and appreciatively. For one about to go there M. Faure's volume will be an excellent guide book, informal, rich in detail, a courier in covers."

+ Lit R p9 F 6 '26 100w

New Statesman 26:490 Ja 30 '26 70w

R of Rs 73:447 Ap '26 20w

St Louis 24:83 Ap '26

"The most valuable and attractive feature of the book is the large number of photographs, which are of exceptional merit. Whether as a foretaste of joys to come, or as a memento of past pleasure, this is a delightful little book."

+ Sat R 141:100 Ja 23 '26 100w

Sat R of Lit 2:582 F 20 '26 130w

FAUSSET, HUGH I'ANSON. Samuel Taylor Coleridge. 350p il $3.50 Harcourt [12s 6d J. Cape]

B or 92 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor

"Mr. Fausset has written a descriptive rather than a narrative biography, distinguished as in the case of his John Donne by the inclusiveness of his method and the consistency of his interpretation. He deals with the three aspects of Coleridge's career, poetic, critical and philosophical, and finds a common denominator for them in his character."—New Repub

Booklist 23:129 D '26

"His account of Coleridge is neither flashy, cynical, smart nor even satiric. His humor is never pointless or unjust; his method is always sober and deliberate, and it is not the least of the merits of his book that, although it deals with pathological matter, it is not written in psychoanalysis or even psychology, but can be read without trouble by any one familiar with English. . . The trouble is that Mr. Fausset has been so vitally interested in making clear the sources of Coleridge's helplessness, . . . in defending him, in fact, by pointing out that his weakness was essentially physical, that he has unconsciously emphasized the impotent Coleridge to the subordination of any other." F. K. Brown

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 S 19 '26 1650w

"A study of Coleridge that is gloriously fascinating. In all its clashing phases the tragedy of his broken, miasmatic life is set down in this biography in such manner that perhaps for the first time Samuel Taylor Coleridge appears before us, not so much a figure in the history of English literature, as a man." K: Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 25 '26 2000w

"Superb, creative biography." B: De Casseres
+ Lit R p2 S 25 '26 1050w

"There are few writers who could have handled with similar competence a subject calling for the appraisal of such variety of faculties and activities. By virtue of its psychological penetration and its grasp of literary and philosophic values the book takes a precedence over all that has so far been written about Coleridge." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Nation 123:405 O 20 '26 500w

"To say that Mr. Fausset writes as a sensible, well-informed, serious man, and not as a quack, may seem a back-handed compliment, but it implies at least certain negative virtues. Mr. Fausset does not treat his subject as a feeble sparring partner to be scored off for the amusement of the audience; he does not produce the figure of M. Bergson as a god in the machine to clear up all problems; Dr. Freud does not haunt his pages. A reasonable and coherent view of Coleridge is presented calmly and persuasively, without affectation. It is quite possible to disagree with Mr. Fausset's presentation, as the present writer quite firmly differs from some of his opinions, principles, and tastes; but it would be ridiculous to deny that Mr. Fausset is a well-equipped writer with plenty to say and the ability to say it well." R: Aldington

+ — Nation and Ath 39:388 Jl 3 '26 1050w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 48:98 S 15 '26 1200w

"His book on Coleridge is most interesting. Its defect is that he excels in treating Coleridge as 'a case,' rather than as a man, and this is a direction in which it is neither so difficult nor so excellent to excel. He is wise after the manner of psychologists, whose systematic penetration is impressive at first, but apt to leave behind a sense of disappointment. Perhaps Mr. Fausset tries to explain Coleridge too thoroughly. But he has written a good book, a really clever book which brings out many important matters which other biographers have not observed or have neglected, and one which will be read for a long time."

+ — New Statesman 27:295 Je 26 '26 1200w

"The beauty of this book by Mr. Fausset is its endless appeal for quotation. It is simply a mine of anecdote, psychology, poetry and reminiscence in which all the friends of Coleridge vividly appear. Coleridge the metaphysician is treated as thoroughly as Coleridge the poet and Coleridge the drug addict. This is not merely a biography. It is a creative piece of literature, one of the best I have ever read."

B: De Casseres

+ N Y Times p8 S 5 '26 2050w

"Mr. Fausset's book is interesting, even brilliant; and his analysis of the relations between Coleridge and Wordsworth, together with his discussion of Dorothy's influence upon his life and work, are a genuine contribution to the study of the poet. But one comes away at the end with a feeling of disappointment. As was wisely said long ago of Pope's so-called translation—'It is a pretty poem, but it is not Homer,' so we may say here, 'It is a fascinating portrait, but it is not Coleridge.' For that portrait we are still waiting." Earl Daniels

Sat R of Lit 3:292 N 13 '26 750w

Times [London] Lit Sup p401 Je 17 '26 4400w

FAUST, ALLEN KLEIN. New Japanese womanhood; with preface by William E. Lampe. 164p $1.50 Doran

396 Women in Japan. Japan—Social life and customs 26-13853

The president of one of Japan's largest colleges for women has had ample opportunity to observe and study the newly developing type of womanhood in that country. For the purpose of contrast he sketches briefly the life of the Japanese woman in the past, a status from which she is gradually but surely emerging.

Booklist 23:112 D '26

Reviewed by W: H. Leach

Bookm 63:xiv Ag '26 150w

"He succeeds in giving a serious if not vivid summary of Japanese women in the transition period." Ernestine Evans

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 S 12 '26 350w

"Dr Faust has been in Japan for twenty-five years, but he has seen only the surface. He is, however, a sincere well-wisher of that country. His book is worth reading by those who are interested in the modern womanhood of Japan." Harendranath Maitra

Lit R p6 O 2 '26 550w

"It is interesting to have an account by some one who can write with authority of what the evolutionary ferment known as the woman movement is doing in Japan."

N Y Times p14 Ag 29 '26 460w

FAWCETT, HOWARD SAMUEL. Citrus diseases and their control; with sections on oriental citrus diseases, by H. Atherton Lee. (McGraw-Hill publications in the agricultural and botanical sciences) 582p il $5 McGraw

634.3 Citrus fruits—Diseases and pests 26-13183

"Comprehensive treatise dealing with all aspects of the subject. Intended for the grower, the student, and the research worker." —Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:561 N '26

FEE, MARY HELEN. Plain Americans. 351p $2 McClurg

26-6811

The Hatfield family and their friends furnish the book with its subject matter. Margaret, the eldest, is half-sister to Betty and Tom, and wealthy in her own right. She and her fortune marry an English earl. Tom marries the rather vulgar daughter of German-Americans. True to Betty's predictions disaster attends both these mixed marriages. She herself becomes the wife of Col Alexander, an elderly Croesus. After his death at the close of the world war, Betty, who is by way of being the heroine, joins a "Save America" movement and as the eagle screeches and the flag flies, marches in the parade a one hundred percent American.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Ap 26 '26 150w

"For all its self-sufficient provincialism, 'Plain Americans' is a wholesome and invigorating tale. 'Plain Americans' may be recommended as a consistently conceived and well-written book. It holds the reader's interest throughout."

+ N Y Times p19 My 9 '26 860w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 29 '26 350w

FELKIN, FREDERICK WILLIAM. Craft of the poet; an outline of English verse composition. 70p $1.50 Holt [3s 6d Allen & U.]

426 Versification. Poetry [26-19463]

After a brief definition of poetry, the author explains the composition of English verse and the principal meters and forms used by the English poets, illustrated by many examples.

Bookm 64:353 N '26 70w

"If his sections deal necessarily with tools that are by no means new, his point of view and use of unhackneyed examples lend something of freshness. The volume is not so formidable as the beginner might be led to expect from the introductory list of terms."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 12 '26 170w

"By giving the figurative origin of his technical terms Mr. Felkin fixes even such Hellenic barbarities as 'oxymoron' and 'paraprosdokian' in the minds of his students. But his book is worth reading in spite of containing such appalling information." Gordon Lawrence

Lit R p5 S 11 '26 230w

"His ideas are not clear enough to admit of consecutive exposition; and, indeed, his work amounts to little more than a scrap-book of aphorisms, perhaps reconcilable with one another, perhaps reconciled in his own mind, but not presented to the reader in such a way as to enable him to see the connexion between them."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p186 Mr 11 '26 120w

FENTON, MRS JESSIE M. (CHASE). Practical psychology of babyhood; the mental development and mental hygiene of the first two years of life. 348p il $3.50 Houghton

136.7 Child study. Infants—Care and hygiene 25-20396

Presenting as it does a month to month record of the development of the author's own child from birth to two years, the book is of practical value to the mothers and fathers who are interested to know what may be expected of a baby (and what is expected of themselves) at any given stage during this period. Pictures of the author's small son in many charming moods and poses point the moral and adorn the tale.

Booklist 22:141 Ja '26

"Mrs. Fenton's book is an intelligent attempt to make available to the lay mother the fruits of this new approach to infancy. It will be eagerly welcomed by the myriad child study groups of laymen who have hitherto been largely limited for their texts to the too technical reports of scientific laboratories or to material prepared especially for clinical use. Mrs. Fenton not only reports from close observation of her own son how a child develops from birth through his second year, but she manages with great tact and insight to suggest how mothers may best further this development, mental and emotional, as well as physical." Agnes de Lima

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 F 28 '26 700w

Boston Transcript p6 D 9 '25 250w

"While the book is thoroughly well grounded in the contributions to child psychology that have been made in recent years, its language

FENTON, JESSIE M.—Continued
is as simple as that of one ordinary mother talking to another."

+ N Y Times p26 My 30 '26 350w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:9 Ja '26
Pratt p7 summer '26

FERBER, EDNA. Show boat. 398p $2 Doubleday
26-16053

The scene of the earlier part of "Show boat" is a floating theater which twice a year was towed up and down the Mississippi river and its tributaries from St Louis to New Orleans, regaling the people of the river towns along the way with presentations of "East Lynne," "St Elmo," and other old-time favorites. Magnolia, daughter of Captain Andy Hawkes, was the admired leading lady on this variety stage but left it to follow the troubled fortunes of her gambler husband in Chicago. The career of Magnolia's daughter Kim who became famous on the New York stage continues the story to the present.

"It would be rather too solemn to treat Show Boat as a 'serious novel.' As a picturesque and entertaining narrative, it will certainly have thousands of readers who will accept it uncritically as a readable story; and theirs is the best mood in which to approach it. To uncritical readers the fact that it has many faults of style and invention will make no particular difference." R. M. Gay

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf S '26 600w
Booklist 23:79 N '26

"'Show Boat' is magnificent. It is a definite advance in minor characterization and in atmospheric writing over 'So Big.' Miss Ferber's documentation of her story of theatre days down the rivers of mid-America is admirable. This is a book particularly notable for the small scene, the memorable wave of the hand, the magnificent dress, the unforgettable gesture. Edna Ferber builds now like Dickens." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:91 S '26 300w

"'Show Boat' will be liked; one may safely say that of whatever Miss Ferber writes, because of her genuine feeling for the joys and sorrows of her fellow beings, her infectious love of her work, and her enviable talent for the handling of words. She has a rare sense of the color and taste and shape of words; her prose is pungent, graphic, sparkling, rising at times, though not often, to genuine distinction. But she has not yet discovered what a novel really is; and so 'Show Boat' is unfortunately rather further from being a wholly satisfactory novel than any of her three previous volumes." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ag 22 '26 1050w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 21 '26 1600w
Cleveland Open Shelf p137 D '26

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford
Int Bk R p608 S '26 620w

"Miss Ferber has the true romancer's gift. She sees her people and their settings as we should see them, though, maybe, with added insight and the ability of interpretation which is the novelist's art. But her characters move to and fro familiarly with none of the subtilized oversensitive analysis which has been so popular of recent years. It is not a matter of superiority, just difference. Miss Ferber gives us romance visible and objective in genuine American adventure." L. G. Short

+ Lit R pl Ag 21 '26 1250w

Nation and Ath 40:274 N 20 '26 180w

"I am prepared to confess that I am inconsistent because I read the book with excitement, not over the story, which is negligible, but over the description of life on the Mississippi in a floating theatre. Show Boat is enthusiastically recommended to the four out of five Americans who have no information on the subject. Miss Ferber 'got up' that subject. If anything, the book is at times heavy with information. And certainly the information in the later chapters, telling us how certain well known and practicing dramatic critics, editors and column writers foregathered at the heroine's apartment, is a bad error of judgment and taste. It is cheap." W: McFee

+ New Repub 48:101 S 15 '26 650w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 28:113 N 6 '26 100w

"'Show Boat' is a gorgeous thing to read for the reading's sake alone. Some, perhaps, will conscientiously refer to it as a document which reanimates a part of the American scene that once existed and does no more. But this writer cannot believe it is that; rather it is a glorification of that scene, a heightening, an expression of its full romantic possibilities." L: Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p5 Ag 22 '26 1150w

N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 120w

"The panoramic treatment does not admit of close attention to construction or unity of plan, although it fits the subject. 'Show Boat' is far from having that singleness of fictional purpose found in 'So Big,' and for that and other reasons that story still remains Miss Ferber's finest achievement. But 'Show Boat' seizes and holds interest throughout that part which is foreshadowed by the title, and it is already finding eager and entertained readers everywhere."

Outlook 144:90 S 15 '26 520w

"When Kim, the granddaughter, so to speak, of the Show Boat emerges as a stage success of the modern, sophisticated variety in New York, the fabric of the story weakens and pales. The 'frail and brittle' life of current New York does not lend itself to local color. Not so the Mississippi. With the river, Miss Ferber's synthesis is a grand success. We have learned something about story telling (thanks to the high price of space) since the 'nineties, and Miss Ferber uses her experience."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:49 Ag 21 '26 800w

"Richly romantic, packed with incident and sentiment, this new book by Edna Ferber brings back the colourful past of the Southern States of America in the 'eighties and the 'nineties. It is cordially recommended for an utterly readable, rather touching, and ably managed story."

+ Spec 137:324 N 6 '26 320w

"In this character conception and portrayal of 'Show Boat' Miss Ferber has probably done her best and truest work so far. Most of the persons step forth in their own characters—are natural and real in speech and act—stand in no need of what Miss Ferber had hitherto achieved. It must be acknowledged however, that the character work is not so good in the latter portion of the story. It is in the presentation of the troupe and the river life that Miss Ferber has especially succeeded." R. W. W.

+ Springf'd Republican p7f S 5 '26 1600w

"The atmosphere of the book is impregnated with life, and the fabric is so strongly woven that one has nowhere the sense of weakness or insecurity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p792 N 11 '26 320w

Wis Lib Bul 22:274 O '26

FERGUSON, WYNNE. Practical auction bridge. 222p il $2 Doran.

795 Auction bridge 26-17591

"Simple, common sense directions for anyone who knows the fundamentals of the game, especially for the amateur who has been playing an unscientific hand and wishes to understand the principles of bidding and play."

—Cleveland Open Shelf

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 D '26

Reviewed by C. P. Sawyer

Lit R p16 S 25 '26 300w

"Approaches the reader with a sense of humor and seeks occasionally by facetious comment to affect the reader's memory better than by didactic efforts only."

Springf'd Republican p10 D 1 '26 190w

FERGUSON, HARVEY. Hot Saturday. 261p
$2.50 Knopf

26-15396

The story is a realistic statement of a youth-ful sex crisis, and while it records the events of a single midsummer day in a small New Mexican town, the history of the town, of the heroine's family, and of Ruth's own twenty years have all gone into the making of that day. Ruth's excursions into sex have left her restless and unsatisfied; she has had tentative affairs with several of the town youths, and sorties of a more exciting but equally inconclusive nature with an older man. But these have brought her no farther along the road to a desired marriage. Then Wilbur Fadden appears. He is already smitten, and on the picnic planned for this hot Saturday Ruth means to complete the conquest. Town talk and her own history bring about the climax that night: the ironic anti-climax occurs next morning.

"It is an interesting story, well sustained, with more than an ordinary integrity in the development of character. It is a hot weather novel that leaves the reader with a consciousness of having been in contact with an actual person. It is easy to read and worth having read." C. B. Chase

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 29 '26 850w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 21 '26 460w

"Hardly a volume to put into the hands of all the boys and girls of this fair land, but a very convincing piece of work, just the same. The author is frankly and intelligently interested in what is known as the sex life of his heroine—a not very successful flapper in a New Mexico town. A very ingenious and clever performance, but only for adult consumption."

+ Ind 117:480 O 23 '26 120w

Reviewed by C. V. Knox

Int Bk R p710 O '26 430w

"A prodigious, but strictly ordered, eventfulness pulses through the book, a vivid intensity which endows its people with a likeness to real mortals startlingly true. A short work, this unique, richly compact novel should substantially strengthen Mr. Fergusson's prestige and reputation as one of the impressive few." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p5 Ag 28 '26 440w

"Mr. Fergusson has no little skill as an author; his tale has movement, and at the same time it is concise. Also, Mr. Fergusson paints his New Mexico skillfully, and the grim humor of 'Hot Saturday' will commend it to those with a penchant for the Gallic."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 22 '26 400w

Reviewed by E. F. Walbridge

Outlook 144:57 S 8 '26 120w

"This has all been done before and very well done. Mr. Fergusson does it again and does it very well. For difference he must depend upon his heroine and his ending. The book makes no compromise with sentimentality or Mrs. Grundy; it will not appeal to those who enjoy 'pleasant fiction' nor will it soothe the Watch and Ward Society. It is essentially a book for those who take their realism real." G. C. Graham

Sat R of Lit 3:86 S 4 '26 620w

FERRAND, HENRI MARC. Nice to Evian by the Route des Alpes. (Picture guides) 153p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Medici soc.

914.4 Alps. France—Description and travel [26-5417]

This description of the journey by train and motor thru the Alps from Nice to Evian is illustrated by a profusion of beautiful photographs in sepia.

Booklist 22:325 My '26

Boston Transcript p1 F 20 '26 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p65 My '26

"Follows a route of unusual setting. An inviting book and a practical one for any person with a holiday on his or her hands and the money to pay for it."

+ Lit R p9 F 6 '26 100w

New Statesman 26:490 Ja 30 '26 70w

R of Rs 73:447 Ap '26 20w

Sat R of Lit 2:582 F 20 '26 220w

FERRIMAN, Z. DUCKETT. East and west of Hellespont: memories of fifty years. 320p il $5 Houghton [15s J. Cape]

914.96 Turkey—Description and travel.

Greece, Modern—Description and travel.

Asia Minor—Description and travel

[26-22005]

A record of journeyings in the Near East and the Holy Land written by a keen and appreciative observer. Attractively illustrated from photographs.

"A volume of travel reminiscences interesting and valuable far beyond the usual. There is a curious mingling of modernity and antiquity in the pages that seems to revitalize with illuminating significance the life and peoples of bygone ages whose waning descendants still dimly exist."

+ Bookm 64:xxxv O '26 130w

"The author writes from fifty years' knowledge of his subject. No phase of life east or west of Hellespont is outside the subjects which engage his cultivated intelligence. Yet all is set down in that devalitized manner which is responsible for the fact that many critics have come to use the word 'readable' as though it expressed the superlative of eulogy."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 O 31 '26 200w

Boston Transcript p4 S 11 '26 300w

New Statesman 27:146 My 22 '26 320w

Outlook 144:156 S 29 '26 250w

"This is one of the most delightful books of travel that have been published for many years. It is stamped with the impress of a strong and interesting personality. The author brings a well-stored and thoughtful mind to bear upon the selection of the scenes that stand out in his recollections of fifty years spent in the Near East."

+ Sat R 142:20 Jl 3 '26 130w

"[The fragments] are written with great charm of style, showing the author to be a scholar, a man of letters and an antiquarian, and they are spiced with quaint information and touches of old-world learning which cannot fail to hold the reader."

+ Spec 137:101 Jl 17 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p473 Jl 15 '26 1150w

FEUCHTWANGER, LION. Power; tr. by Willa and Edwin Muir. 424p $2.50 Viking press

26-19097

"Power" is the story of Josef Süß Oppenheimer, an ambitious Jew who attached himself to Karl Alexander, ruler of the duchy of Württemberg in the early years of the eighteenth century. By clever manoeuvring he made himself indispensable to the Duke, became his financial director and virtual ruler of the duchy. He also had a controlling hand in the intrigues of a depraved court. Süß was vulnerable in but one spot, his love for his beautiful, young motherless daughter. In one of his bestial moods, the Duke pursued the beautiful Naemi and in trying to escape from him she was killed. Süß became a changed man, living only for revenge. His downfall followed and a tragic death.

Reviewed by Matthew Josephson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 N 14 '26 750w

"So brilliant and many-faceted is the 'power' of this novel that at first the impression is of a titanic pageant." S. V. V. W.

+ Boston Transcript p1 D 8 '26 320w

FEUCHTWANGER, LION—Continued

"It is easy to overestimate Feuchtwanger's achievement. It is equally easy to underrate the novel. The author is no showman; Scott and Dumas were essentially showmen. But Feuchtwanger, if he falters considerably, if he cannot always manage his stage lighting, if he is deficient in dramatic perception, has, despite everything, projected on his pages an intensely impressive company. 'Power' is a work of human significance."

+ — N Y Times p7 O 10 '26 1200w

"'Power' is a splendid romantic, historical melodrama which pulls the reader into the orbit of the characters and into the times in which they played their parts, with a force that is not to be resisted." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p10m N 14 '26 600w

"The language and style of the book fit no adequate pattern. The original German is anything but typical. Nervous and staccato, it frequently defies grammatical analysis. In his choice of words Feuchtwanger is at times almost a Rabelais. The translators, Willa and Edwin Muir, have done an excellent piece of work. The juicy expressions of the original have for the most part been successfully transported into the English. On the whole 'Power' is hardly as great as some of its admirers would have us believe. Nevertheless, its qualities are superior to the average." A. E. Meyer

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:314 N 20 '26 1000w

"'Power' has a gripping narrative and is vivid and colorful in style. The picture of the duchy of Wurtemberg, especially the court life, is clear and effective. Suss is a living, pulsating figure and a sympathetic one. In addition to this creation of the Jew, Feuchtwanger has drawn a number of other characters who are no mere puppets. 'Power' has the intensity and the vivid detail of the stronger type of historical romance."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f O 31 '26 460w

FEUILLERAT, ALBERT. French life & ideals; tr. by Vera Barbour. (Philip Hamillon McMillan foundation) 214p $2.50 Yale univ. press

914.4 National characteristics, French.
France—Social life and customs. France—
Nationality 26-1032

The professor of English literature in the University of Rennes is the writer of these chapters in which he analyzes the character and temperament of the French people, their intellectual and social qualities, their morals and family life, their politics and religion.

"Professor Albert Feuillerat's volume is of a curiously antiquated kind. The style of the book is lucid and scholarly, but it seems even older than the ideas." Albert Guerard

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ja 3 '26 550w

"Professor Feuillerat has put his countrymen and their ideals in the finest light. Surely he has not been over-modest, if zealously patriotic, in his last chapter on 'The Mission of France.' There is a certain Gallic temperament and fine loyalty which mark his presentation throughout. Unconsciously the professor and his lectures are 'Exhibit A' in the delineation of 'French Life and Ideals.'"

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ja 30 '26 650w

"This is an attractive bill enough; and M. Feuillerat, who brings to his task those qualities which stand first in the array of French literary virtues—ease, charm, and lucidity—paints a brilliant and attractive picture."

+ New Statesman 27:20 Ap 17 '26 550w

St Louis 24:60 Mr '26

"His eight lectures are clear, concise, and admirably thorough; every one is an adequate summary of its subject. Together they constitute an orderly coherent explanation of those phases of national life and culture which, essentially autochthonous, are apt to be most incomprehensible to the uninitiated foreigner." Floyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 2:511 Ja 23 '25 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p267 Ap 8 '26 300w

FIDDES, SIR GEORGE VANDELEUR. Dominions and colonial offices. (Whitehall ser.) 288p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam

354.42 Great Britain.Colonial office. Great Britain—Colonies

The book comprises a history of the Colonial office—since 1925 no longer a single office, but divided into two, one for the Dominions and one for the Colonies and Protectorates—together with a study of its methods of administering the affairs of the British Commonwealth.

"The first part contains much valuable information especially in connection with subsidiary organizations. The second part also abounds in information, but is disfigured by compression. The division dealing with the Dominions is disappointing and irritating." W. P. M. Kennedy

+ — Canadian Hist R 7:340 D '26 870w

"An admirable account of the development and organization of the various offices and departments."

+ Nation and Ath 40:122 O 23 '26 50w

New Statesman 27:746 O 9 '26 200w

Spec 137:710 O 23 '26 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p498 J1 22 '26 80w

FIELD, RACHEL LYMAN. Eliza and the elves. 96p il $2 Macmillan

26-17254

A collection of stories and poems for children all about the elves and fairies and their connections with mere mortals.

Booklist 23:136 D '26

Reviewed by L. St J: Power

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 N 28 '26 460w

Reviewed by Constance Naar

New Repub 48:352 N 10 '26 200w

"These elves are engaging little creatures, in both text and pictures, but according to the author they do make people and animals do queer and thrilling things."

+ N Y Times p6 D 5 '26 70w

"A sprightly little book, enhanced by the illustrations of Elizabeth MacKinsty."

+ N Y World p10m N 7 '26 60w

Springf'd Republican p8 D 24 '26 170w

FIELD, SAMUEL, and BONNEY, SAMUEL ROBERT. Chemical coloring of metals and allied processes. 264p il $4 Van Nostrand [10s 6d Chapman & Hall]

671 Metals—Coloring 25-10571

"A scientific treatise of the coloring of metal surfaces by the application of ornamental coating by the effect of heat upon metals, by the action of chemicals, and by electroplating."—Pratt

Booklist 22:356 Je '26

"It is evident that the book is intended for experienced workers, as the text is somewhat superficial for successful amateur endeavor."

Chem & Met Eng 33:108 F '26 100w

Pratt p23 spring '26

FILENE, EDWARD ALBERT. More profits from merchandising. 159p il $2 Shaw, A.W.

658.8 Retail trade. Business 25-11354

"Every producer, every distributor and every buyer is faced with this problem—how to have the right goods, in quantities neither too great nor too small, at the times when they will be desired most, and at the prices at which they will sell best. To meet it, the Model Stock Plan—explained in detail by its originator here—has been developed."—Title page

Booklist 22:196 F '26

"In this book, although primarily discussing the field in which he has spent his life, Mr. Filene offers scientific help to people engaged in a variety of pursuits. His clear and vigorous style makes this apparently 'business book' an entertaining treatise also on human activities of our day." M. C. S.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 9 '26 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:88 F '26

FINCK, HENRY THEOPHILUS. My adventures in the golden age of music. 462p $5 Funk

B or 92 Musicians—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc. 27-825

For forty-three years Mr. Finck was critic of music for the New York Evening Post. In this capacity he met and won as friends many of the artists whom he vigorously championed in his column, or in some cases as vigorously lampooned. Included among these friends are most of the names famous in the musical world of the last fifty years, and Mr. Finck's recollections of them are extremely interesting.

"This book is emphatically meant for the kind of person who accepts music as part of the good times of life, rather than as a sort of adjunct to the classroom and the social register. Place it in company with Honeker's 'Steeple-jack' and you have the two chattiest, most discursively entertaining books of their kind ever written in this country." C. L. Buchanan
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 N 21 '26 1300w

"One can dip into these pages almost anywhere and bring up treasure-trove. Mr. Finck's gossip autobiography inevitably takes its place as the 'Who's Who' of America's Golden Age of Music. What a pity that its versatile author could not have been spared to see a completed copy of this last and best of his books!" E. L. Shuman

+ Int Bk R p765 N '26 1600w

"Rich in anecdote, varied experience and lively observation as this book almost inevitably is, perhaps the most attractive feature of it, at any rate to the very many friends of the author, will be found in the completeness of his self-expression. He may be said to live again in the pages he has written." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p8 D 4 '26 1000w

FINDLAY, HUGH. Garden making and keeping. 252p il $5 Doubleday

716 Gardening. Gardens 26-10244

The assistant professor of agriculture, Columbia university, writes this thoroughly practical book on gardening. Beginning with the making of the lawn he takes up paths and border planting, wall and rock gardens, bird gardens, pools and aquatic plants, roses, bulbs, favorite annuals and biennials, perennial borders, trees and shrubs, giving advice thruout about soil, color and arrangement.

Booklist 23:19 O '26

"In so far as it is possible to catch between two covers of moderate size the almost innumerable facts and suggestions which are welcomed by a beginner, Mr. Findlay has won a signal success. His book is a compendium that, by treating the varied phases of its subject concisely, contrives to become a storehouse of essential details without losing sight of the larger principles that underlie successful gardening of every sort." R. S. Lemmon

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 9 '26 460w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 26 '26 300w

Reviewed by A. T. A. Quackenbush
Lit R p7 My 1 '26 230w
N Y Times p13 Je 20 '26 200w
St Louis 24:166 Je '26

FINDLAY, JOSEPH JOHN. Foundations of education; a survey of principles and projects; v 1. The aims and organization of education. 345p $2.50 Holt [8s 6d Univ. of London press]

370 Education

This, the first of two volumes in which the author propounds a comprehensive system of education, deals in section I with the aims of education, and in section II with the principles of organization. The volume is intended for the lay reader as well as the school man.

"The work is much the kind of effort which was common in America a generation ago, an essay founded on extremely vague generalizations, followed by the author's running comment on current issues and occasional reference to confirmatory statements or passages, drawn now from some member of the Freudian company, now from a circular of a board of education, now from a poem." H. C. Morrison

— El School J 26:707 My '26 650w

"Professor Findlay's work is always marked by strong idealism and kindly human sympathy. These qualities are prominent in the introductory survey of the aims of education which occupies the first part of this volume. There is nothing in it that is particularly new, or stated with any startling freshness. His book is valuable chiefly as bringing together in a convenient shape the assumptions and opinions which are current among enlightened teachers and educational administrators of to-day."

+ — New Statesman 26:786 Ap 3 '26 200w

"It must be said frankly that Professor Findlay's first volume in a large enterprise is disappointing. It is fair to his book to recognize the wealth of hard work and sound information which he has packed into it, without pretending to think that he has said in it what he can say about the spirit which is education."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p833 D 3 '25 360w

FIRESTONE, HARVEY SAMUEL, and CROWTHER, SAMUEL. Men and rubber; the story of business. 279p $3.50 Doubleday

B or 92 Firestone rubber and tire company. Ford, Henry. Edison, Thomas Alva 26-13526

In collaboration with Samuel Crowther, Harvey Firestone tells the story of his life and of the great tire industry he built up. The principles upon which Mr Firestone insists have a wider application than to his own business alone. He tells something about the human relation in the Firestone rubber and tire company and of his sales organization. He also recounts some of his camping experiences with Ford, Edison and Burroughs.

Booklist 23:129 D '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p131 D '26

"The book is dull. Into such common clay not even an experienced journalist like Mr. Crowther could blow the breath of life. It is a stiff and formal recital of the obvious. The very dullness is tragic because Mr. Firestone so evidently yearns for the richness of finely wrought perceptions, for the warmth of quick appreciations, for the difficult satisfactions of human understanding." Evans Clark

— N Y Times p13 S 5 '26 1450w

FISCHER, LOUIS. Oil imperialism; the international struggle for petroleum. 256p $2 International pub.

338.2 Petroleum—Russia. Petroleum—Persia 26-10144

This account of the international struggle for oil is chiefly concerned with the oil resources of Russia and the dealings of the Soviet republic in regard to oil concessions. Mr Fischer emphasizes the importance of the part oil plays in the supremacy of nations and the close relations between the interests of oil trusts and the policies of diplomats.

FISCHER, LOUIS—Continued

"The story is well told and well documented. There are some palpable errors, but the main trend of the facts is excellently set forth. And yet the spirit in which it is told gives the book a curious twist. The author's sympathies are all with Soviet Russia and he must condemn the acts and policies of the oil companies and all who have converse with them." H: K. Norton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 J1 25 '26 950w

Reviewed by L: S. Gannett
Nation 123:132 Ag 11 '26 770w

Reviewed by C: A. Beard
New Repub 49:sup82 D 8 '26 800w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p10 Je 27 '26 650w

"His book is a shrill-voiced and furious indictment of all the 'capitalist nations' in behalf of Soviet Russia. A book written in such a vein is not likely to be taken over-seriously." W. J. Ghent

— Outlook 143:148 My 26 '26 120w

Springfd Republican p7f O 10 '26 1300w
Survey 56:650 S 15 '26 70w

FISHER, MRS DOROTHEA FRANCES (CANFIELD). Her son's wife. 302p $2 Harcourt
26-15178

Mary Bascomb's passion for perfection and for ordering other people's lives suffers a rude shock when one day, without warning, her idolized, fatherless son brings home as his wife a cheap, ignorant and vulgar girl. With fine courage and resolution she sets about to adjust herself to an impossible situation and her character rises to the task. Mrs Bascomb patiently puts up with the two young irresponsibles and the upset to the order and dignity of her life, but when a granddaughter is born, she wakes from her nightmare and vows that little Dids shall be rescued from her inheritance. The book becomes the story of her fight for the child—a winning fight, for Dids grows up a fine woman, leaving for the state university as the book closes. And more than that, during the process, Mary Bascomb becomes the friend of her son's wife.

Reviewed by Mary Ross
Atlantic's Bookshelf O '26 700w
Booklist 23:80 N '26

"By far her most interesting novel. Critics, generally, will probably not call it her best, but unless I am greatly mistaken the public will. It is a universal theme treated with cold detachment, yet with all the warmth of feminine detail which Mrs. Fisher handles so expertly." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:222 O '26 130w

"Because she has a single purpose in writing Dorothy Canfield can launch her stories with tremendous force. I suspect her to be drained and exhausted by the force of these Bascomb struggles. You may like her or not, but Mrs. Bascomb is one of the few real characters who has entered our imaginative world in many years. I foresee that, like Becky Sharpe—of whom also many readers do not approve—Mrs. Bascomb is here to stay. Her case is likely to be argued widely and for a long time." D. L. Mann

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Ag 29 '26 1500w

"Not since 'The Brimming Cup' has Dorothy Canfield written a story of such gripping human interest as 'Her Son's Wife.' There is something strong and splendid and vital and permanent about Mrs. Bascomb. I have a strong suspicion that no one who reads about her will be able to forget her!" D. L. Mann

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 4 '26 1450w

"Even though one has to condemn the falsity of the solution, there is no escaping the power of the book, or the changing and lovely lights one catches in the rearing of a little girl. It is a powerful study not only of education, but of a family, a group, a whole section of social life in America." A. McC.

+ Cath World 124:139 O '26 260w

"'Her Son's Wife' contains the most complete and most satisfying piece of character creation that has yet been published over the signature of Dorothy Canfield." A. C. Gordon, Jr.

+ Int Bk R p696 O '26 1000w

"Without question Dorothy Canfield's latest work, 'Her Son's Wife,' will receive that well-meaning tag, the outstanding book of the year. And then like last year's and those of the year before, it will be forgotten, swept away in the avalanche of next year. It would not surprise me, however, if fifty years later it were exhumed and given the breath of new life by another generation. Such was the fate of Samuel Butler's 'Way of All Flesh,' and, to me, 'Her Son's Wife' is as masterly a piece of work." A. H. Gibbs

+ Lit R p4 Ag 28 '26 880w

"Dorothy Canfield has the gift of the storyteller. Her sympathy and her vitality fuse into integrity with her story the temptations to teach and to show which lurk in the New England background. She has become a real educator—as opposed to a mere propagandist—in the art and rationale of neighborliness." Mary Ross

+ Nation 123:249 S 15 '26 480w

Nation and Ath 40:224 N 13 '26 150w

"Mrs. Fisher cares about her people, she knows them well, she achieves, in a number of places, a truthful intensity, and she offers us one of the most thorough studies of the psychology of virtuous grievance that we have seen for a long while. But the whole thing does not come to life. It never has a chance to: the story is never alone with itself for a moment." R. L.

+ New Repub 48:127 S 22 '26 280w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy
New Statesman 28:312 D 18 '26 120w

"The narrative of the book suffers from being a little too long. Miss Canfield does not seem entirely to have mastered her technique; she does not carry the story forward as one pattern, interweaving the separate destinies of her characters as it moves. Here, as in her other recent novels, Miss Canfield has not quite achieved the masterpiece one feels she may some day write. This book has its excellences, but it is no such fusion of humanity and art as will take any permanent place in American literature."

+ N Y Times p4 Ag 29 '26 1050w

N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 50w

"'Her Son's Wife' is a fine, honest piece of writing, free from that striving for effect often found in books by writers whose hand is less sure." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p4m Ag 29 '26 150w

"Clever, well-written, well-observed book." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 142:526 O 30 '26 100w

"It is a story full of interest, full of warmth, full of shrewdly observant detail. Here and there it is careless in structure and style, and toward the close of the whole work seems not quite sufficiently matured. Yet from it there does emerge one striking personality." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 3:86 S 4 '26 1000w

Spec 137:870 N 13 '26 120w

Springfd Republican p7f S 19 '26 230w

Reviewed by V. F. Calverton
Survey 57:161 N 1 '26 50w

"It is only towards the end of the book, when Miss Canfield shows us the pity and affection slowly growing in Mary Bascomb for the woman who has broken up her ordered life of little comforts and little pretences, that our emotion is really wakened. It is not altogether easy to believe in Mrs. Bascomb's gradual transformation; but, if one does accept it, the final touches to the story compel admiration."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p766 N 4 '26
250w

Wis Lib Bul 22:274 O '26

FISHER, IRVING. Prohibition at its worst. 255p
$1.75 Macmillan

178.4 Prohibition 26-16581

A summary of the case for prohibition which goes to show that conditions under prohibition even at its worst are better than before it, and in the author's opinion would be immeasurably improved by enforcement of the law.

Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '26 230w

"Professor Fisher strains our faith to the breaking point by his method of argument. A very valuable piece of propaganda; but it is a very poor piece of reasoning." Ernest Boyd

— Ind 117:533 N 6 '26 1350w

Reviewed by H. R. Mussey
Nation 123:641 D 15 '26 650w

Reviewed by G. E. G. Catlin
New Repub 48:304 N 3 '26 620w

"The public has a right to expect that Professor Fisher would bring to any subject he might consider the clarity and precision, the patience and disinterested thoroughness of a laboratory test. The times cry out for such an analysis of prohibition. The facts are lost in a miasmic haze that hangs over the flow and counterflow of propaganda. There is literally no place where the perplexed individual can turn for information that he can be sure is free from the stain of it. Unfortunately Professor Fisher has not filled the need. His book is frankly, almost blatantly dry propaganda." Evans Clark

— + N Y Times pl O 31 '26 1450w

R of Rs 74:557 N '26 130w

Reviewed by Bruno Lasker
Survey 57:230 N 15 '26 450w

Wis Lib Bul 22:328 D '26

FITE, WARNER. Moral philosophy; the critical view of life. 320p $3.50 Dial press

170 Ethics 25-24879

"A suggestive discussion of ethics dominated by the conception that morality consists in a critical evaluation of life rather than in conformity to an authoritarian code."—J Religion

Reviewed by C. K. Trueblood
Dial 81:259 S '26 1000w

"Chaste and dignified in argument and expression, Warner Fite's Moral Philosophy is nevertheless the precipitate of an adventure in living. . . There is here and there a slight after-taste of something bitter, the exact flavor of which I have not defined; but the work taken as a whole strikes me as an estimable contribution to philosophical literature, informing, stimulating and graceful." M. C. Otto

Int J Ethics 36:309 Ap '26 1650w

Reviewed by Laurence Buermeier
J Philos 23:351 Je 24 '26 4400w

J Religion 6:222 Mr '26 30w

"Thoroughly urbane and interesting book." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 122:372 Ap 7 '26 1150w

"This is his philosophy: the necessity of thinking for oneself. What he wants us to understand is that morality is a matter of satisfied understanding of the issues and conditions of our lives. This is a broad truth. Few men have written on it more wisely, more restrainingly, or more disturbingly than Warner Fite." C. E. Ayres

+ New Repub 47:312 Ag 4 '26 1450w

St Louis 24:235 S '26

"To have created an image of the good life, so vivid, so fresh, and so moving, as Mr. Fite has done in this book is a high achievement." C. A. Bennett

+ Sat R of Lit 2:541 F 6 '26 1000w

Spring'd Republican p6 Ap 19 '26 650w

"He writes himself out before his book is over, and towards the end the pertinent anecdotes and the winged epigrams grow fewer and cease. But his intense admiration for personality, for a personality that is not blank emotion, but is founded on original and creative thought, makes his book unique, and makes the reading of at least its first ten chapters a constant succession of chuckles of intellectual satisfaction. It is in those chapters a book that is an embodied mind." H. T. Costello

+ — Yale R n s 16:175 O '26 250w

FITZGERALD, FRANCIS SCOTT KEY. All the sad young men. 267p $2 Scribner

26-8618

Nine stories by the author of The Great Gatsby, with young, old, or married love as the sometimes incidental theme. The first is the character study of a rich young man and his pursuit of the unattainable. Contents: The rich boy; Winter dreams; The baby party; Absolution; Rags Martin-Jones and the Prince of Wales; The adjuster; Hot and cold blood; "The sensible thing"; Gretchen's forty winks.

"An uneven but interesting collection, and on the whole more mature and more finished work than previously done by this author."

+ Booklist 22:421 Jl '26

"He will always entertain, because the fact of entertainment is a serious one to him, and eminently worthwhile. 'All the Sad Young Men' is, it seems to me, by far the best book of short stories he has given us, and it contains some of his very best work." J. F.

+ Bookm 63:348 My '26 400w

"'All the Sad Young Men' is a poet's title, like all the titles Mr. Fitzgerald has invented or borrowed from other poets' verses. And the prose in which its nine stories are written, like all Mr. Fitzgerald's prose, has the virtues and the defects of prose written by a man who was born to write verse." Frances Newman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ap 26 '26 820w

"Originality, freshness, intriguing plot, natural yet unexpected surprise, and an easy manner of writing that carries one along without consciousness of the mechanics of the story-writer's trade." Daniel Rochford

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 20 '26 1500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Jl '26

"Mr Fitzgerald displays the sureness and insight which distinguish his best work."

+ Dial 80:521 Je '26 140w

"He has written a book in which each story is different from the other, yet all of them are equal, if not superior, to anything that has come from his facile pen."

+ Ind 116:335 Mr 20 '26 180w

Reviewed by L. M. Field
Int Bk R p316 Ap '26 550w

"The characters, in the main, are as sordid, selfish and unattractive as the people of actual life. Through them all, save the lonely exception in 'Hot and Cold Blood,' there runs the cheap, coarse, grasping materialism of the mentally limited and the spiritually barren. But Fitzgerald, even at his thinnest and worst, never writes dully; there is an ease, a grace, a vitality in his prose which withstands the hurt of his surviving propensity to make 'wise-cracks' and give his characters 'clever' lines to speak." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p4 Mr 13 '26 620w

"This book is a big advance over his previous stories. It distinctly marks a transition. The nine tales have a much greater variety. It is also time that Fitzgerald be given credit for creating other than youthful characters; his elderly people are excellent portrayals. He has written a book of mellow, mature, ironic, entertaining stories, and one of them, at least, challenges the best of our contemporary output."

FITZGERALD, F. S. K.—Continued

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 7 '26 1050w

"For the most part they are good stories, with now and then a touch of genius. Mr. Fitzgerald has graduated from the jazz age." H: F. Pringle

+ N Y World p6m F 28 '26 580w

Reviewed by C. G. Gaines

No Am 223:367 Je '26 750w

Outlook 143:33 My 5 '26 130w

"His ingenuity at evolving marketable ideas is extraordinary. But one naturally feels, behind most of the writing in this book, the pressure of living conditions rather than the demand of the spirit. As a writer of short stories the author more displays his astonishing facility than the compulsions of his true nature. He is keeping his hand in and paying the rent. And the performance is energetic with a certain gallantry. But now that he has written 'The Great Gatsby' we are, perhaps, exorbitant in our demands." W: R. Benét

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:632 Ap 3 '26 800w

Springf'd Republican p5a Mr 21 '26 130w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 56:331 Je 1 '26 250w

FITZ-GERALD, SHAFTO JUSTIN ADAIR.
Story of the Savoy opera in Gilbert and Sullivan days; with an introd. by T. P. O'Connor. 240p $2 Appleton

782 Gilbert, Sir William Schwenck. Sullivan, Sir Arthur Seymour. Opera. Savoy theater. London 26-26224

With the composition of "Trial by jury" in 1875 Gilbert and Sullivan began their long partnership. Mr Fitz-Gerald tells of the origin of each one of the operas and gives full details of their production, their ups and downs, and the trials of manager, author and composer. The original cast of each opera is given and there are many illustrations.

Booklist 22:283 Ap '26

"Altogether the book is a sprightly and authentic record of a series of productions in the English playhouse which have never been excelled and apparently never will be. Since most of the Gilbert and Sullivan operettas are immortal, an authentic history of their first productions is greatly to be desired." W. P. Eaton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Jl 27 '26 100w

"The volume abounds in anecdotes and intimate allusions that bring to life those who took part in the early productions, not only of the operas, but also of many contemporary plays. The struggle to prevent Americans pirating the operas is told with amusing detail."

+ Living Age 328:124 Ja 9 '26 180w

"It is a worthwhile service, and a gracious and an interesting one, to rescue from the devouring years the full story of an important period in the history of the English theatre. Mr. Fitz-Gerald has told the story in such detail, so without prejudice for or against any individual or development, and with such colorful memories that it lacks nothing any one would ever be likely to want to know about it."

+ N Y Times p14 D 27 '25 300w

"His is a valuable reference book to all who wish to make a thorough study of the Savoy opera. It is sprinkled with many amusing anecdotes. It is the work of an experienced singer, comedian, and journalist who has long established himself as an authority on theatrical matters and particularly upon all the works and ways of Sir W. S. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:499 Ja 16 '26 220w

FLACCUS, pseud. See Levy, N.

FLAMBEAU, VIKTOR, pseud. See Brigham, G. R.

FLANNER, JANET. Cubical city. 426p $2 Putnam 26-17993

In an elaborate style that tends to make difficult reading the author gives the story of Delia Poole's life in New York, the cubical city. Delia is a luscious blonde from Ohio, a designer of stage scenery under contract to Goldstein the producer. To Delia the last love is always the only one. She feels this now, of Paul. Yet when he urges her to marry him before he leaves for the Philippines Delia admits that marriage is not her aim. The lovers spend two days together and Paul goes away alone. The year of his absence brings to a period Delia's relations with other men, yet his return does not make for the immediate happiness of the lovers.

"Neatly constructed, but sometimes written in a style which overreaches itself to grasp at the unusual phrase. Miss Flanner's originality of manner is not well enough concealed. Her sentences too often produce the effect of having been written for effect." Garreta Busey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 D 12 '26 750w

"She has a power and resource in the stroke of her pencil which reminds one in a less brilliant way of the quick witted phrases of Rose Macaulay. Like that cynical and devastating woman Miss Flanner knows how to say one thing and cast into the furnace of her words a molten lead which comes out as a gleaming jewel of commentary upon the general situation or scene which she describes." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 30 '26 500w

"This first book of Miss Flanner's of the life of a young artist in New York betrays a number of unhealthy symptoms in the author. And if she has begun this way one wonders how and where she will bring up. At present she retains a disarming frankness, to the extent that her work is removed from the category of the purely salacious. But the evidences of a literary neurasthenia are there."

— Ind 117:743 D 25 '26 190w

"Miss Flanner dresses her story very smartly indeed. Her power lies chiefly in her sensitiveness to the confused phenomena of modern life, and in her ability to discriminate sharply her impressions. The background is Miss Flanner's best character."

+ New Repub 49:49 D 1 '26 210w

"Miss Flanner has a broad, unhurrying sense of character that is seldom to be found in a first novel. Her situation is a little prolonged and her splendid scenes are offset by passages of somewhat florid rhetoric. The novel has vitality and a strong, even surge of energy."

+ N Y Times p26 O 31 '26 700w

"This is another novel that tries to 'catch the spirit of New York.' Occasionally it runs across the trail of said spirit, but that event occurs scarcely often enough to be worth recording. It is also a first novel in which an obviously talented writer is attempting to work out for herself an original and individual stylistic idiom; it must be reported that she has not yet solved her problem."

— Sat R of Lit 3:344 N 27 '26 120w

"With its original and striking choice and economy of words and its daring metaphor it is obviously written for effect, and is clever enough to be effective, the style being well suited to the subject, the world of theatrical art in New York. Goldstein, theatrical producer, ugly, bestial, vulgar, is yet capable of deep emotion and a sentimentality which makes him pathetic and almost lovable. It is easily the best piece of characterization in the book."

+ Spec 137:1082 D 11 '26 100w

"Delia Poole was simply erotic, and no attempt is made to disguise the fact. She reacted to nothing but the stimulus of the senses, and the interesting thing is that she is made a credible and intelligible being. Goldstein really is the triumph of the book. His genuineness, the whole solidity of his passionate nature is the making of this very clever, but not very pleasant, book."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p948 D 23 '26 610w

FLECKER, JAMES ELROY. Don Juan; a play in three acts. 122p $2 Knopf [6s Heinemann] 822 25-24015

"Another posthumous play by James Elroy Flecker. Don Juan was Flecker's first play and shows his genius thrusting into new forms. Transposing the legend from Seville to a semi-realistic London, and making bold use of his characters as symbols of his thought, Flecker presents a picture of the fate of pure reason when confronted with the non-reasonable, the unknowable. This Don Juan is in 'modern dress' and lives in Cadogan Place, but his conversation is pure poetry and his action pure logic. The results of his logic, however, are disastrous both to himself and his environment."—Theatre Arts Mo

"A great plan indeed, but the result was not a great play. It was too big for its creator, as Flecker was obliged to confess. Yet if it is not a great play, it is a play of great moments, a play of genius, an erratic comet shooting off on wrong courses." H. N. Hillebrand

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 31 '26 630w

"We are inclined to feel he was right that the play was not fitted for the larger stage, in spite of its interest and in spite of its containing some of Mr. Flecker's most beautiful verse. As a reading play it will never be without interest."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 18 '26 370w

"So long as devotees refrain from telling us that Flecker's 'Don Juan' is a great work, there is no need to say anything against it. It is a piece of exploration that gets nowhere. But his play is a charming enough piece of immature work, with much of that very English freshness he always preserved, however much he dallied with the ancient and gorgeous East." Bonamy Dobrée

+ — Nation and Ath 38:527 Ja 9 '26 100w

"The realistic setting of the play has been admired, yet an examination of the underlying concepts will show perhaps that the realism is merely additional. Despite the successful admixture of prose and rather single-moulded verse, there is a deeper discord which shows that the poet has not found himself and that after the rich conquest of the dramatic medium in Hassan, he would probably not have retraced his steps."

New Statesman 26:654 Mr 6 '26 680w

"It might be easy to overpraise Flecker's 'Don Juan.' But it is better that the play should be overpraised than under-appreciated. Undeniably, it is thin in spots. But the author died at the age of 30. A Don Juan may, in his fitting from flower to flower, be actually as light a character as the author pleases, but he should give an appearance of sincerity as he enters into his new adventure. Flecker's failure to perceive this, or, at least, his failure to embody it, is what makes for the thinness which at times becomes damaging. But whatever there may be of dross is far outweighed by metal of true preciousness." P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p5 D 13 '25 1200w

"The piece exhibits nearly all his merits together with faults which he partly outgrew. It is certainly more than a curiosity or a document illustrative of his development."

Sat R 140:662 D 5 '25 50w

Reviewed by E: Davison

+ Sat R of Lit 3:4 Jl 31 '26 800w

"In spite of its faults, it vibrates at times so earnestly with the thoughts of a young enthusiast for ideals, and then again discloses with such high fervor the collapse, the utter desolation of the idealist's purpose, that even the most hardened critic must be impressed."

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:219 O 16 '26 280w

"The play, for all its inequalities and confusions, has a strong pulse of life—and it would be interesting to see whether its poetic and dramatic qualities would not flower into something of unusual beauty in the hands of an imaginative producer."

Theatre Arts Mo 10:279 Ap '26 250w

"Flecker attempted in his Don Juan a more difficult synthesis than that which he so successfully achieved in Hassan; and one cannot be surprised that, in spite of the enthusiasm of his attack and the persistency with which he returned to it, he was obliged in the end to abandon his play and acknowledge it a failure."

Times [London] Lit Sup p796 N 26 '25 900w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Amaranth club. 320p $2 Knopf

26-1535

"After being introduced to a German secret agent and the British woman who is in his employ, one finds one's self ushered into a select club that ostensibly is entirely respectable and that apparently obeys every police ordinance, but that in reality is no more than a secret gambling place. Early in the book a young man afflicted with a fatal curiosity seeks to investigate the real nature of this club, and a few hours later is found mysteriously dead in bed. A friend of the murdered one suspects foul play in spite of the Coroner's verdict of suicide; and he silently and unobtrusively sets out to discover who are the culprits and to bring them to justice. How he accomplishes his object constitutes the main theme of the book."

—N Y Times

Booklist 22:376 Je '26

"Despite the German spy, 'The Amaranth Club' is a notch or two higher than the average mystery story of to-day and it is distinctive for another reason: Mr. Fletcher draws real characters and knows how to differentiate them." Carty Ranck

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 F 14 '26 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 D '26

Reviewed by L. M. Field

Int Bk R p362 My '26 100w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Nation 122:236 Mr 3 '26 400w

"Mr. Fletcher has succeeded in making his book entertaining in spite of the manifest impediments of the subject-matter, and has written with such a sure hand that, as detective novels go, the story will probably rank nearer to the top than to the bottom of the season's output."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ja 17 '26 520w

"I have this complaint to make—that the story is lacking in those charming descriptions of the English country, of the picturesque inns, the bountiful food and drink, and the obsequious landlords which usually impart a peculiar charm to the Fletcher novels. Not even the description of the London supper club with its fashionable clients and smooth-tongued proprietor can atone for this lack of the feature to which devotees of the Fletcher cult have long been accustomed. I may add, however, that 'The Amaranth Club' has one virtue which it shares with all its predecessors from the same gifted pen, although it is a quality of which, despite its importance, reviewers seldom take note—it reads aloud well." J. L. Ford

FLETCHER, J. S.—Continued
+ — Outlook 142:144 Ja 27 '26 1250w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Cartwright Gardens murder. 272p $2 Knopf [7s 6d Collins]
26-12243

Albert Jennison, a lodger in Cartwright Gardens thrust his head out of his window at midnight to cool his brow. He saw a man walk jauntily along under his window at that minute, and the next, fall dead in the gutter. Jennison had always longed for adventure and he marked this as his own, throwing himself and his wits into what proved to be a most involved murder mystery.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Jl 18 '26 320w

"As usual, Mr. Fletcher has a good story to tell and tells it well. His characters are never overdrawn, their actions are those of acceptable people who are not 'super' in any way. They blunder just the same as ordinary human beings, and when it is all over you wonder why you did not think at once of the solution of the mystery." C: P. Sawyer
+ Lit R p8 Je 26 '26 100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:230 Jl '26

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Daniel Quayne. 304p $2 Doran
26-20139

Daniel Quayne met Rosanna Lovesome on the way to the Scaister hiring fair whither both young people were bound in search of new positions. To the Yorkshireman's delight he and Rosanna found good places on the same farm. That the quiet self-possessed girl was not as innocent of life as he never entered Daniel's head, and the time of waiting and saving till he could marry her passed pleasantly enough. Meanwhile Rosanna was discreet, secure in Daniel's trust. His awakening was sudden and terrible as his revenge.

"As a straightforward story of Rosanna Lovesome's temperament the novel has merit; as an example of artistic simplicity in expression it has merit also. But as a tragedy in the manner of Hardy, 'Daniel Quayne' is an obvious failure. However, there are many redeeming features in the story. It is pleasant to the eye, as a combined painting of Millais and Frans Hals would be pleasant. Its atmosphere is as peaceful as a tiled kitchen filled with firelight and shining pewter; it exhales contentment and a feeling of quiet pastures."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 D 26 '26 370w

"This novel must rank as the best which Mr. Fletcher has written for dramatic power. Its strength lies in its simplicity."

+ Ind 117:563 N 13 '26 100w

N Y Times p11 O 10 '26 480w

N Y World p9m O 24 '26 80w

"Mr. Fletcher tells the story without sentimentality and without recourse to melodrama or to forced situations. It follows that 'Daniel Quayne' is an admirable novel, written with power and distinction."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:177 O 9 '26 250w

"Daniel Quayne is a striking creation, and his experiences and reaction to impulse are impressively related but with restraint and absence of melodramatic coloring."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f O 24 '26 350w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Great Brighton mystery. 310p $2 Knopf
26-14347

A well-dressed man is found dead at the foot of a cliff. The first assumption is that he has fallen from the narrow path above, but examination reveals the mark of a blow on his temple. It is not accident then, but murder. In straightforward fashion Detective Credling follows this mystery to its not very exciting solution.

Booklist 23:80 N '26

+ N Y Times p16 Ag 8 '26 380w

Reviewed by H. T. Pringle

N Y World p4m Ag 8 '26 150w

Wis Lib Bul 22:333 D '26

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Green ink. 339p $2 Small [7s 6d H. Jenkins]
26-11489

"Short sketches of mystery and adventure. The two most amusing stories are 'Mr. Leggatt Leaves his Card' and 'A Collar Stud,' in which the principal characters are respectively a clergyman with a great sense of humor and a valet who is a smug and hypocritical rascal." —Spec

"Quiet humor, unflinching invention and a feeling for character rare in these days of hectic and utterly incredible detective yarns distinguish the volume."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 22 '26 140w

"Every last one of the fifteen is worth printing, and while the type is the same—mystery—they vary materially in detail." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p8 Je 26 '26 120w

"'Green Ink' is capital light reading and will kill many odd minutes for any one who likes an O. Henry type of story with the elements of mystery and suspense and an unexpected ending."

+ N Y Times p8 My 30 '26 600w

"Readers who like their stories short and strong will be well entertained by this volume."

Spec 136:496 Mr 13 '26 220w

"Mr. Fletcher again ventures successfully into the realm of the short story in this volume and supplies his readers with a series of nice abrupt little tales with an effective tang of the unexpected about them."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p101 F 11 '26 180w

Wis Lib Bul 22:276 O '26

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Marchester Royal. 314p $2 Doran

The absence of any discernible motive for the murder of the popular young Lord Marchester and some peculiarly baffling elements in the case, combine to make an excellent mystery. Chance, with the able assistance of Inspector Skarratt of Scotland Yard, is the instrument of its solution.

Reviewed by Alan Rinehart

Bookm 63:xiii Ag '26 50w

"Mr. Fletcher has a genuine power of creating atmosphere, of giving that somber tinge to his most exciting pages which Poe taught Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Description in a Fletcher novel is always engaging." H. T. Baker

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 25 '26 550w

Lit R p6 Jl 24 '26 150w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 8 '26 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p342 My 20 '26 150w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Root of all evil. 317p $2 Doran
[24-27972]

"It is virtually the life history of a woman, a shrewd, handsome, strong-willed woman, to whom the gaining of 'brass' becomes an obsession, 'brass' being a British colloquialism for money. She gradually becomes so dominated by greed that all her finer instincts are crushed." —Lit R

"This story of Jecholiah Farnish, a keen, determined and courageous young woman who wins pecuniary success against great odds, is a welcome proof of the author's narrative skill in a non-mysterious vein."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 My 23 '26 180w

"Mr. Fletcher's characterization is excellent. One follows through, intent on every turn of the plot." J: J. McLaughlin

+ Lit R p4 My 1 '26 320w

Pratt p34 summer '26

"Mr Fletcher gains, rather than loses, prestige in venturing again outside his more familiar field; here he demonstrates his ability to delineate character and the baser passions of greed and revenge and is not content merely to conceive and develop a thrilling mystery plot."

+ Spring'd Republican p7f My 16 '26 350w

FLICK, LAWRENCE FRANCIS. Development of our knowledge of tuberculosis. 783p $7.50
The author, 738 Pine st., Philadelphia

616.246 Tuberculosis 25-20526

Thruout the centuries knowledge of tuberculosis has been gained for us thru the research of individuals, the result of whose observation and experiment has been recorded in writing. Quoting extensively from these successive findings which as the years pass substantiate or disprove one another, the author presents in this large volume a survey of medical knowledge and treatment of tuberculosis and the means by which it has been obtained.

"Historically, the book should prove interesting to the professional tuberculosis worker. It is of less importance to the untrained reader." H. R. Edwards

Am J Pub Health 16:61 Ja '26 250w

"He has written a reference or source book of real value to physicians, a book of disciplinary merit to those who would claim originality of idea upon this disease which has belabored the entire history of man."

+ Survey 56:549 Ag 15 '26 200w

FOAKES-JACKSON, FREDERICK JOHN. Life of Saint Paul, the man and the apostle. 293p $3.50 Boni & Liveright

225.9 Paul, Saint 26-8838

The object of this sketch as stated in the preface is to present Saint Paul in the light of the known facts and circumstances of his age, in order to estimate the extent of his labours and the significance of his teaching. With this idea in mind the author has taken his Epistles and the Acts of the Apostles as they stand, as the only historical evidences available and has endeavored to interpret the mind of the age in which Saint Paul lived and worked.

Booklist 23:76 N '26

Bookm 63:xvi Ag '26 130w

"A sound, scholarly study of Saint Paul's life."

+ Ind 117:169 Ag 7 '26 100w

J Religion 6:657 N '26

Reviewed by G: A. Barton
Lit R p14 S 18 '26 100w

"It will prove very satisfactory for a reader who has never been troubled by the question of how far Paul's Christianity was influenced through contact with other religions, such as the mysteries, popular in the gentile environment within which the apostle carried on his missionary labors. One whose curiosity has been awakened by this comparatively new but very important aspect of Pauline study will find no answer to his problems in the work of Professor Foakes-Jackson." S. J. Case

Nation 123:179 Ag 25 '26 150w

"This story of Paul's life is charmingly written. Avoiding as far as possible digressions into the arena of learned debate on disputed matters, the author would portray for the unprofessional reader a vivid picture of Paul and his companions in action. Little or no effort is made to reconstruct the milieu within which the ancient actors moved. This omission is the book's chief defect." S. J. Case

+ — New Repub 48:279 O 27 '26 280w

"Dr. Jackson fails, somehow, to give a complete synthetic estimate of Paul. Certainly a great, a very great man; not so great as Jesus, he declared in answer to a curious but age-old question; and in the sense that it could have been accomplished without him, not the irreplaceable founder of Christianity. But Dr. Jackson rather retreats from formulating his idea of Paul's precise significance."

N Y World p7m My 9 '26 700w

"Excellently done. It is a common-sense biography of the Apostle, impressing the reader with its reliability as to the known events—a book of fact and knowledge rather than of power, yet not without its deeper notes." Laurence Hayward

+ Outlook 143:111 My 19 '26 60w

Wis Lib Bul 22:292 N '26

FOOTE, JOHN TAINTOR. Number one boy. 237p $1.75 Appleton

26-26734

From the time when he was seven Jimmy Lee had dreamed of the girl, so when he found her taking refuge in a Buddhist temple during the Boxer uprising he was not surprised. But the girl, Elizabeth Darrow, was very much so, especially as she was to marry her guardian on the next day. And then Chang Foo Low, China's greatest prophet, told Jimmy, "This is written on the wheel: In the blackest hour your lives shall ever know, you will be together." And they were.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 Ap 26 '26 160w

"The action throughout is dramatic as one as used to writing plays as this author is would make it. The story will carry strong appeal to all interested in occultism and any manifestation of it." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 8 '26 480w

"The atmosphere of the mystic and occult is naturally and happily treated and the action of the tale is swift, vivid and continuous." F. H. M.

+ Lit R p6 Jl 24 '26 120w

"Mr. Foote has produced an entertaining yarn that should find many readers."

+ N Y Times p9 My 23 '26 400w

"In vain we look for genuine character, although the Chinese wonder-worker, in spite of his conventionality, could have been made a figure of power by a capable story-teller. The plot is generally weak; its amiable superficiality, coupled with a certain ease in Mr. Foote's manner, may, nevertheless, soothe the resentment of the mildly critical. Discriminating readers will find that the novel has little, if anything, to offer them."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:844 Je 5 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p513 Jl 29 '26 200w

FOOTNER, HULBERT. Antennae. 350p $2.50 Doran

26-17246

In this psychological study of youth and sex the author follows the development of two New York boys, contrasts and antagonists from their first meeting. Wilfred Pell is of West Eleventh street, respectable, timid, yet secretly longing to be bad. Joe Kaplan is a typical child of the slums, dirty and vicious, and armed with a mean hardness that carries him everywhere and renders him proof against knocks. It is on the cards that he will succeed at Wilfred's expense, taking the other boy's job, and when the time comes, winning his girl. As the youths mature, their every contact rouses in Wilfred the old loathing and fascination, and in Joe contempt and jeers for the other's ineptitude. In their final encounter Joe is rich and powerful and Wilfred is still a struggling writer, yet somehow it is not Wilfred who comes off second best.

FOOTNER, HULBERT—Continued

"His book is a genuine story, and it is a triumph of verisimilitude. It is crowded with observation and insight. These lads, growing and suffering, are real. Their contrasted reactions to experience, their hungers and curiosities, their sensitiveness and limitations, are all characteristic and illuminating. . . . It is exceptional work." Frank Swinnerton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 O 24 '26 580w

"'Antennae' is a unique book. Its superiority to other novels of the year may damage its commercial success, but it will none the less remain a triumph for Mr. Footner." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p6 O 16 '26 300w

"There is a certain grim power in Mr. Footner's work. But it is power harnessed to trite and sorry machinery that is already showing signs of wear and tear."

+ — N Y Times p11 O 10 '26 820w

Springf'd Republican p7f O 3 '26 150w

FOOTNER, HULBERT. Madame Storey. 341p
$2. Doran [7s 6d Collins]

26-18504

Four exciting episodes from the career of that unerring detective, Madame Storey. Contents: The Ashcomb Poor case; The scrap of lace; The smoke bandit; In the round room.

Nation and Ath 40:458 D 24 '26 150w

"While not traveling far from the beaten track, Mr. Footner's stories are thoughtfully and ingeniously constructed; they succeed in mystifying, hence in arousing the interest; and that interest they maintain until the end, meanwhile producing an atmosphere of somewhat stricter reality than one is accustomed to find in tales of the type."

+ N Y Times p37 D 21 '26 360w

Spec 137:1162 D 25 '26 50w

FOOTNER, HULBERT. Shanty sled. 294p $2
Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

26-6735

The Old Woman was cook for the little settlement of Bear Coulee in northwest Canada. She was bound hand and foot in debt to Maccubbin the storekeeper, and from him each year she wrested enough money to keep her daughter Selina, who was ignorant of her mother's position, at her art studies in New York. The men in Bear Coulee knew all about the Old Woman's daughter. They had been familiar with her pictures for years, and Hugh Bell had early fallen in love with the girl they represented. When Selina made an unexpected visit to her mother, traveling on a shanty sled built for her by Hugh, the jealousy roused at the outset of the journey did not end with the arrival at the settlement, for there the venomous Maccubbin was added to the list.

"A pleasing feature of this virile yarn is a map showing the position of rivers, muskegs and everything, not to mention a very wild animal leaping over a range of mountains and a dotted line enabling one to keep track of the shanty sled on its exciting travels."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 My 30 '26 220w

"The story is brisk and ingenious, even if its conflicts are not new to readers of the yarns of the great north-western fur country."

Lit R p8 My 15 '26 100w

"Everything in this story gives way to plot suspense and melodramatic incidents. If the reader can make liberal allowances for that discrepancy, he will enjoy the book."

— + N Y Times p9 Je 13 '26 360w

"A story whose merits, if any, from the point of view of adventure, are marred by an excessive sentimentality."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p758 N 12 '25 130w

FORBES, ESTHER. O genteel lady! 297p $2
Houghton

26-9023

After mother ran away from Amherst with one of father's students, Lanice refused Augustus sweetly but finally and left home too. In brown velvet, hoops, and a mink pelisse, she proceeded to Boston and the life intellectual. Her contributions to Hearth and Home were immediately accepted, and in other quarters her beauty and wit made instant conquest. With Professor Ripley's stately advances Lanice was on familiar ground—they were to be repulsed or encouraged according to code. But Captain Jones' love-making was another thing—a tempestuous process that swept aside coy artifice and left the crinoline lady shaken and hurt. A year of travel abroad and the society of the elect—Tennyson, George Eliot and Browning—helped to solace the hurt, and Lanice turned home to domesticity, with gaiety a thought subdued, but with charm un eclipsed.

Booklist 23:80 N '26

"The book is original and uninfluenced, although some, on reading of crinolines and 'Mamma,' may murmur, 'May Sinclair.' But in spite of the general impression Laurence Stallings did not invent the war, A. A. Milne did not invent children and May Sinclair did not invent mammas and crinoline." Anne Parrish

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 My 9 '26 720w

"Miss Forbes, who possesses an unusual gift of style, has taken what in other hands would have remained a faded daguerreotype and with her own originality and skill has rewarded her readers with a clear portrait of a fascinating heroine." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 21 '26 600w

Dial 81:352 O '26 120w

"A distinguished first novel, written with ease and a mastery of technique unusual in a young writer."

+ Ind 116:533 My 1 '26 80w

"There are one or two scenes—notably the meeting with her former sweetheart, Augustus Trainer, and the scene between Lanice, Anthony Jones and the earrings—in which the dramatic emotional content is so high as to suffuse the entire book with a passionate warmth. 'O Genteel Lady' should take its place with 'The Perennial Bachelor' as serious literature deserving perennial popularity." Mildred Wasson

+ Int Bk R p520 Jl '26 450w

"Miss Forbes manipulates Lanice as she might a charming doll. Lanice is as perfect as loving prose can make her. This studied excellence gives the tale a demure artificiality that is much in vogue now, and there can be no doubt but that 'O Genteel Lady' will find hundreds of enchanted readers. No one can help being delighted with the lacquer of sophistication on a costumed doll. And how deliciously poignant for the doll to have a broken heart!" Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p3 My 8 '26 560w

New Repub 47:208 Jl 7 '26 100w

"Here is a novel at once gay, fresh and captivating."

+ N Y Times p16 Ap 25 '26 800w

"Miss Forbes gives graphic sketches of Dr. Holmes and Mrs. Stowe and Louisa Alcott and Tennyson and George Eliot and other celebrities of those days. It is all turned with a light, deft touch, and it makes very pleasant reading." J: W. Crawford

+ N Y World p7m Ap 25 '26 460w

Outlook 143:257 Je 16 '26 80w

"'O Genteel Lady!' has as much literary distinction as any of this year's crop of novels. It might easily, in less skillful hands, have become a pretty, sentimental story relying on its picturesque background and the author's grace of style for a perfectly legitimate interest and popularity. Instead of this it has a robustness of theme and of characterization which would give it importance quite apart from Miss Forbes's ingratiating presentation."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:823 My 29 '26 300w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ja 2 '27 320w

"Very well written and worthy of more than passing interest."

+ Wis Lib Bul 22:198 Je '26

FORBES, GEORGE. Wonder and the glory of the stars. 221p il $2.50 Dodd [8s 6d Benn]

523 Stars 26-27710

This latest book of the stars is based upon lectures delivered at the Royal Technical college, Glasgow, in which the lecturer "looked upon himself as a tourist-guide in a series of excursions over various parts of the heavens." There is included an interesting account of the author's own theory regarding the origin and formation of the moon, and a description of the experiments he conducted to support it.

Booklist 23:157 Ja '27

Reviewed by C. H. Payne

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 D 26 '26 400w

"This is an admirable book for anyone who wants to begin to study astronomy. Professor Forbes has the faculty of making even difficult modern theories intelligible, and also of making rather dull facts, which occur in astronomy, interesting."

+ Nation and Ath 39:564 Ag 14 '26 120w

Nature 118:512 O 9 '26 280w

"Fresh and interesting presentation and extensive first-hand knowledge give this new volume on the heavens distinction and value and set it rather apart from the general run of books on astronomy for popular use."

+ N Y Times p24 O 10 '26 400w

Sat R 142:104 Jl 24 '26 50w

"In spite of its rather flamboyant title, and of a publisher's note which leads us to fear the worst, this is a good book for the layman who feels drawn towards astronomy. And whether he does or not, he undoubtedly will before he has finished. Professor Forbes combines a deep knowledge of his subject with a quiet but virulently infectious enthusiasm."

+ Sat R 142:209 Ag 21 '26 120w

Reviewed by R: Church

Spec 137:351 S 4 '26 850w

Springf'd Republican p6 O 23 '26 250w

FORD, COREY. Gazelle's ears. 306p il $2 Doran 817 26-18425

These hilarious bits of satire or sheer nonsense have appeared in Vanity Fair, Life, The New Yorker and elsewhere.

"'The Gazelle's Ears' is much better than 'Three Rousing Cheers for the Rollo Boys,' the weakness of which was an all but fatal sameness resulting from stretching a none too robust idea farther than it would go. The new volume brings welcome variety."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 14 '26 450w

"A gay collection with now and then a passage you can't resist reading aloud."

+ Ind 117:743 D 25 '26 110w

"It has human nature for its foundation. It is without malice, and not self-conscious. It has about it a certain utter gravity and an unsmiling simplicity that make it more than just absurd. Perhaps—with no offense to Mr. Ford intended—perhaps this nonsense has in it the mysterious element of Art." J. M. M.

Lit R p6 N 27 '26 320w

"Mr. Ford displays a more robust gayety than in his former volume. He has some gift for broad characterization, a gusto, a true merriment. His parodies are unusually good. But what he doesn't know about feminism would fill his book." Edwin Clark

+ — N Y Times p18 D 12 '26 150w

FORD, COREY. Three rousing cheers for the Rollo boys. 267p il $2 Doran

817

25-23716

The up-to-date adventures of the Rollo boys, at school, in the wide world and among the best sellers, featuring the return of Elsie Dinsmore and Nettie and Dottie, the dear little Dimples, and how they grew! The illustrations are by Gluyas Williams.

"Technically Mr. Ford is a highly promising welterweight who deserves a hand and should go far with or without it." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ja 17 '26 250w

"Mr. Corey Ford in 'Three Rousing Cheers' is plainly, and indeed unaffectedly and joyously, following in the recent footsteps of Donald Ogden Stewart. It is superficial enough, but amusing." T: L. Masson

+ — Int Bk R p165 F '26 1200w

"He writes nonsense in a delightfully amusing fashion. Unfortunately for him his first book is too lengthy and there is nothing quite so fatal as a reader's consciousness of tediousness in a book purporting to be funny." J: Ferris

+ — Lit R p8 Ja 9 '26 150w

"Mr. Ford has attempted to make a full-length book out of what is, after all, merely a clever parody notion for an article or two." H. J. Mankiewicz

— N Y Times p21 D 27 '25 100w

Reviewed by W: R. Benét

Sat R of Lit 2:459 Ja 2 '26 220w

FORD, FORD MADOX. A man could stand up. 347p $2.50 A. & C. Boni [7s 6d Duckworth]

26-18167

This is the third book in Mr Ford's war series. The first two were "No more parades" and "Some do not." "'A Man Could Stand Up' opens with a telephone call for Valentine Wannop exactly at the moment of the wild and furious armistice celebration. The telephone call brings to Valentine information that Christopher is back from the war. With war over, and some assurance that Mrs. Tietjens has left her husband for good—not divorcing him, and, of course, reserving for herself the grace of innocence of any blame for the rupture between herself and her husband, and with the promise, somehow, that life will not permit Christopher and Valentine, too, to stand up, Valentine goes to him for what happiness the still threatening future may hold for them." (Lit R)

"This is one of those rare novels which becomes a part of the reader's personal experience." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 O 17 '26 1800w

"The chaotic style which totally disregards chronology—the thoughts of the characters going backwards and forwards—is often confusing. Not until the end of the novel is reached can the reader piece together the varied impressions and frequently blurred pictures to make of them a united whole. But the author shows keen observation of types and manners." C. N.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 D 8 '26 420w

FORD, FORD MADOX—Continued

"The fatigue, the malaise, the mental and spiritual fog of the war's later phases may and probably did produce individuals minded like the texture and feel of this book, but surely galaxies and cohorts of such foggy, frantic fellows never met and lived and died together as Mr. Ford has made them. It is an affectation and a falseness in the picture one objects to rather than the elaborate artificiality of the manner. There is genuine passion in the last chapter—before that it all seems decidedly unreal."

— + Ind 117:536 N 6 '26 230w

"The penultimate volume suffers not at all in comparison with the two preceding ones. Indeed, it has the increased advantage of simplicity and emotional poignancy in the tale told; and its physical position in the series lends it something of the gratifying emphasis of conclusion in the variable careers of Christopher, Sylvia and Valentine Wannop." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 N 6 '26 600w

"It is a terrible book, and the picture is an indictment of war dire and compelling."

Living Age 331:560 D 15 '26 200w

"The thoroughness of Mr. Ford's craftsmanship cannot be disputed; he builds up his scenes conscientiously; there is a feeling of solidity in all his characters; one feels them almost physically. Yet one is not quite convinced that they are flesh and blood; they are strangely official, as if their uniforms, their vocations and the appurtenances of their existence, had become more real than they. For a character so vivid and so minutely drawn, Tietjens is curiously impersonal." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 40:116 O 23 '26 260w

"Mr. Ford has reached the point in his plan where it was necessary to show the War in the trenches. He does so brilliantly, sympathetically, and convincingly; but for the first time in his series the background has not been fused into the psychological development of his characters." L. S. Morris

+ — New Repub 49:143 D 22 '26 330w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 28:48 O 23 '26 300w

"It is all done with such simplicity and absence of exclamation that the full brunt of the thing is not felt until some time after the last page has been turned. 'A Man Could Stand Up,' like its predecessors, lives on, happily, in the reader's mind, when the printed page is no longer before the eye, and the materials of the novel incite endless associations and recreations and suppositions as if it actually were a block out of the reader's own life." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p7 O 24 '26 1450w

Reviewed by R. E. Lyman, Jr.

N Y World p1m O 31 '26 350w

"We are sorry to say good-bye to Tietjens, who, besides being a genuine creation, is a most likeable fellow. This third instalment of his history has magnificent moments, but none finer than the passage which gives the book its title." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 142:592 N 13 '26 600w

"Mr. Ford again reveals his superb sense of structure, his ability to write beautiful and subtle prose, his command of the resources of the narrator. There are those of us, and I am one, who believe that he has carried the traditional English novel to its greatest formal achievement." Lloyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 3:365 D 4 '26 520w

Sat R of Lit 3:445 D 18 '26 110w

"It is a marvellous piece of analysis of the mind, and is almost as painful to the reader as a night in the trenches."

Spec 137:652 O 16 '26 120w

"The picture of a day in the trenches, seen through the mind of an unusually capable and well-educated, but not at all normally reacting, man, is a brilliant piece of work, the second and third chapters particularly. The whole war is compressed into this mental picture, into this wonderfully blended mosaic of incidents, speeches, reflections, retrospects, fears and confidences. What Mr. Ford has seized with such incisive power is that even when fighting and in deadly danger a soldier is not left alone, but is still beset by the worries and complications of an outer world. But this book will be written in vain; nobody who does not know will understand. Yet it would be hard to find a more notable instance of imagination applied to experience."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p694 O 14 '26 620w

FORD, FORD MADOX. Mirror to France. 290p $2.50 A. & C. Boni [8s 6d Duckworth]

914.4 France—Description and travel. France —Social life and customs. National characteristics, French 26-15145

"His thesis, briefly, is that 'our former civilisation of chivalries, learnings, arts, crafts, mysteries, abstract thought, frugalities and individualisms, came from the shores of the Counts of Toulouse'; and that all these things, which are the only things worth while, are today 'threatened by that Mass Production that is the one symbol of our two-branched Anglo-Saxon commonwealths.' Mr. Ford's France is not that of the tourists; it begins with the book-stalls on the Quai Malaquais and ends with Marseilles, and Provence is its symbol and centre, as well as the spiritual hub of the universe."—New Statesman

Booklist 23:126 D '26

Bookm 64:xxx O '26 130w

Reviewed by Blair Niles

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 5 '26 1600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p120 N '26

"People who really know France and like it, and people who think they do, will be equally pleased by Ford Madox Ford's 'A Mirror to France.' He knows France too well to be unaware of its defects as well as its virtues. What he praises is praiseworthy and authentic, and his book, as a whole, does convey a true impression of the country in various aspects. But when he comes to something that is obviously a nuisance and an absurdity, he passes it off with a joke, which is no consolation to those who have suffered from the conditions he describes." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 117:246 Ag 23 '26 980w

"A Mirror to France is emphatically a book to be commended and recommended for the brilliant way in which a master of letters plays upon a theme dear to his heart, and for the understanding and sympathy with which he portrays his France." W. N. C. Carlton

+ Lit R p14 O 9 '26 560

"Mr. Ford's enthusiasms, gracious, supply recorded, make the heart ache for a vanishing glory; and all his forensic vigor has but a summatory and historical value. To him it is a hymn of joy that he sings; but to those who know that the most tenaciously rooted trees are subject to blight and dry rot, it has the forlorn ring of a requiem." C. P. Fadiman

Nation 123:225 S 8 '26 350w

"Hidden away in this rambling, flamboyant, and highly whimsical book are some glowing recollections of the 'real, quiet France of the broad farmhouses and the little towns.' We may not always agree with Mr. Ford, or even be too sure at times of what he is saying. But he carries us along by the sheer force of his vivacity." Gilbert Thomas

Nation and Ath 39:sup298 Je 12 '26 200w

New Repub 48:228 O 13 '26 200w

"This is a book to read—if you like the French, and if you like to read what an English author, who is more French than they are, has to say about them. If you do not satisfy these two conditions Mr. Ford's latest book is better left severely alone, for even to those who can tolerate Francophilism laid on with a trowel his enthusiasm is apt to be a little trying."

New Statesman 27:274 Je 19 '26 370w

"That the book is propagandist is almost beside the point. All books about countries written with enthusiasm are more or less propagandist. What counts is that here is one of the best books on France we have ever read. Whether recent or remote, this is, or gives the impression of being, a true vision of France, and in that we are always interested." H: J. Forman

+ N Y Times p3 Ag 29 '26 1250w

"Very readable book. I recognize—nearly enough at least—all that he sets down in his portrait of France. It is a portrait and no photograph, and hence has in it as much of the personality of the painter as of the subject. He leaves out a good deal that seems interesting to me, and occasionally sets in the middle of his foreground elements which seem rather odd to me in that position. But this is only another way of saying again that it is his book and not mine." D. C. Fisher

Sat R of Lit 3:83 S 4 '26 1700w

"Mr. Ford is that rare thing, an Englishman who really knows both England and France, also, he is at moments a writer. But as a general rule he thinks that to sit down and let your pen run is writing. France should have taught him better. However, there is much instructive contrasting of English and French ways in this book and it is well worth reading, even if it annoys by the sense that it could have easily been so much better."

+ Spec 137:283 Ag 21 '26 100w

Spring'd Republican p8 S 22 '26 300w

"This is one of the best books on France that has appeared of late years. It differs in method, in manner, in outlook from that of Mr. Sisley Huddleston, recently reviewed in these columns, and far surpasses it in imaginative quality. But the Englishman, using the latter as a check, where necessary, on the former and for that mass of hard facts which Mr. Huddleston piles up and Mr. Ford mentions only in passing, will be as well equipped with knowledge of his neighbours as books can make him."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p333 My 20 '26 950w

Reviewed by C: Cestre

Yale R n s 16:396 Ja '27 400w

FORD, FORD MADOX. No more parades. 309p $2.50 A. & C. Boni [7s 6d Duckworth]

25-23372

"No More Parades is a sequel to 'Some Do Not.' Readers of his former brilliant and disconcerting novel will here find his strange and long-suffering hero, Christopher Tietjens, in command of a draft-finding battalion in a base camp in France. He had left England, after a farewell to the girl, Valentine Wannop, whom he loved, imagining that his abominable wife Sylvia had definitely separated from him. The action of the present book occupies only two or three days, into which, with very great skill, Mr. Ford has packed an amazing impression of war as reflected in an English base camp: of ceaseless worry, infinity of detail, multiplicity of duties, universal suspicion, dirt, toil, air-raids, and a kaleidoscope of human character sharply revealed in circumstances of unusual stress."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Reviewed by E: A. Weeks

Atlantic's Bookshelf My '26 650w

"The interior and exterior drama is tightly interlocked; in 300 pages there is not one superfluous sentence. In saying that it is far and away the finest novel of the year I do not wish to be understood as predicting that it will be the most popular. It won't be. But it is the finest novel of the year, just the same." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 N 22 '25 1800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p122 N '26

"His book is not so much a picture of conditions as the study of souls in a moment of dreadful crisis and exhaustion. As such, it is most brilliantly successful. The book is breathless with fatigue; it is insane with all the ordered insanity of war. The characters stand out with dreadful clarity. Undoubtedly, a novel of great distinction."

+ Ind 115:650 D 5 '25 250w

"'No More Parades' is an energetic piece of high sincerity. Never have we before this, found the late war in a book—never, before, the inglorious ineptitudes of pompous men, never before the dismal mud, and the uncharted movement of countless numbers that blunder somehow, in a maze and a tangle of order, counter-order, pain, lust, envy, ambition, ostentation, ineffectual and ignorant direction—that blunder somehow through!" Walter Yust

+ Lit R p4 D 5 '25 480w

"'No More Parades' is extremely interesting to the diagnostician of literary trends. It does not, perhaps, deserve on any other grounds the excessive praise that has been heaped upon it. Its war pictures, while vivid and useful as propaganda are essentially in the Barbusse-Latzko tradition; the use of interior monologue and subconscious conversation is skilful, but not, like that of Joyce, electrical; and while its purely epithetical vigor is often magnificent, the language as a whole is swollen. The book has moments of intensity; but they are, after all, and noticeably, moments." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 122:260 Mr 10 '26 600w

"'No More Parades' is admirable as a piece of technique; but it is also something more, for Mr. Ford has genuinely felt his theme, and his imagination has accordingly been hard at work." Edwin Muir

Nation and Ath 38:186 O 31 '25 450w

"He gives an amazingly impressive picture of the muddle, danger, strain and worry of a draft-forwarding camp in France during the war; but, not content to do what few living writers could do with anything like his brilliance, he wanders on into endlessly complicated emotional relationships among infinitely boring, because infinitely unreal, people. And yet all the time one feels that the hand which makes such a hash of emotion is the same hand that deals so masterfully with atmosphere, and that if he did not do the former, he could not do the latter. The weakness is the strength." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:727 O 10 '25 180w

"It is, to put it mildly, a breath-taking, Herculean project, to which Mr. Ford thus far has done complete justice. There is vitality enough for a dozen inter-related novels. Whether Mr. Ford writes only these two, or continues with Christopher to the end, it is already an achievement of the order of Marcel Proust's 'Remembrance of Things Past'; a summation of the close of an epoch, the death of a tradition. It is a fitting fulfillment of Mr. Ford's long and honorable career in literature." J: W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p9 N 8 '25 1200w

"As a work of art in fiction, 'No More Parades' is easily the most distinguished novel of the period under review." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 200w

"It is too early to know how far Mr. Ford is going. On the basis of two fine novels it is possible to discern that the thing has the vitality and the dimensions of an epic. It will probably develop that Mr. Ford has had the ultimate word on the decay of that landed Tory aristocracy of Britain, with its sturdy philosophy and almost stoical self-sufficiency and individualism, which was erected upon the ruin of the Stuarts; much as Marcel Proust has recorded the decline of French royalism." Gilbert Sevier

+ N Y World p7m N 22 '25 650w

"The book misses greatness by a hair-breadth. Had Sylvia but remained in the menacing background of Tietjens's life, and Mr. Ford been enabled to write the whole of the book on the level of the first hundred pages, we should have had a very astonishing masterpiece. But let us be grateful for what we have. For those first hundred pages easily surpass in truth, brilliance and subtlety everything else that has yet been written in English about the physical circumstances and moral atmosphere of the war."

FORD, FORD MADOX—Continued

+ — Sat R 140:410 O 10 '25 1250w

Spring'd Republican p7a Mr 28 '26 100w

"One cannot help asking why Mr. Ford insists so strongly upon mixing up extremely unpleasant private affairs with his picture of war, especially Tietjens's affairs. In Sylvia Tietjens he gives us an entirely loathsome woman, whose one preoccupation is to ruin her husband. . . . The very unpleasant amours of Sylvia and Tietjens's quixotic shielding of her have no artistic or historical importance, and the constant intermingling of them with thoughts and actions of a whole command, cleverly though it is done, seems to spoil the effect of Mr. Ford's arresting study."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p636 O 1 '25 480w

FORD, HENRY, and CROWTHER, SAMUEL. Today and tomorrow. 281p $3.50 Doubleday [12s 6d Heinemann]

629.2 Ford motor company, Detroit 26-13282

Thru his collaborator Mr Crowther, Mr Ford explains the meaning of the Ford achievement, the policy behind it, and its bearing upon the economic and industrial problems of the present and the future.

Reviewed by V. S. Clark
Atlantic's Bookshelf O '26 620w
Booklist 23:65 N '26

Reviewed by G: Soule
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 24 '26 1300w

"He is quotable all right. The book abounds in short, vivid observations which will tone you up like a run in the fresh air."

+ Educ R 72:77 S '26 1350w

"To-day and To-morrow" is a book as inspiring as it is enthralling. But when Mr. Ford poses as the leader who will conduct the children of industrial darkness into the promised land of perpetual prosperity (if only they will follow him!) one's consent is less willing." P. A. Hutchison

+ — Int Bk R p553 Ag '26 2400w

"It would be utterly wrong to assert that this book is merely a glorified descriptive circular or advertising propaganda applied either to Mr. Ford himself or his vast plant. As a psychology it has no equal. As an inspiration book, it puts to shame all others." T: L. Masson

Lit R pl J1 10 '26 2050w

Nation and Ath 39:774 O 2 '26 450w

"In the main, Mr. Crowther is a faithful interpreter. In detail, of course, the book sounds like the voice of Henry Ford in but a few places. Mr. Crowther has ironed out Ford's characteristic abruptness, prejudice, inspiration, snap-judgment and intolerance into easily flowing chapters. Once in a while he is just a little too careful, so that to the edited Master's Voice are joined the overtones of the amanuensis." Robert Littell

New Repub 47:342 Ag 11 '26 1550w

Reviewed by R. L. Duffus
N Y Times p3 Je 11 '26 2050w

"With all his limitations he is always deserving of attention; and Today and tomorrow, which he and Mr. Samuel Crowther have written together, contains, as even a preliminary examination shows, many passages on the opportunities and weaknesses of big business which are worthy of serious study."

+ Sat R 143:259 S 4 '26 70w

Sat R 142:314 S 18 '26 800w

Reviewed by R. G. Tugwell
Sat R of Lit 3:17 Ag 7 '26 3800w

"He no doubt considers his book very plain and practical; so it is, yet there are phrases that strike home. Each reader will find in it something to help his or her life. Young and old, rich and poor Mr. Ford has something very simple, yet strange, to say to us all."

Spec 137:384 S 11 '26 1350w

"The book is not an abstraction but a breath-taking tale of things done. It is not technical, but human." Leon Whipple

Survey 57:45 O 1 '26 800w

Times [London] Lit Sup p605 S 16 '26 480w

Wis Lib Bul 22:271 O '26

FORD, LOUIS R. Practical marine Diesel engineering. 512p il $7.50 Simmons-Boardman 621.434 Diesel engines, Marine. Marine engineering 26-2526

"Intended for operating engineers. Presents elementary principles; describes construction of the engine, considering parts common to all engines; describes the principal types at present in general use, and discusses operation and maintenance."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

N Y New Tech Bks 11:5 Ja '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:461 O '26

FOREMAN, GRANT. Pioneer days in the Southwest. 1td ed 349p il $6 Clark, A.H.

978 Southwest, Old—History. Frontier and pioneer life. Indians of North America. Houston, Samuel 26-4799

"Mr. Foreman's book is a study of source material concerning early days in Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri, Arkansas, New Mexico, Kansas, and Colorado. It covers a period to which comparatively little historical research has been given and which also needs study and preservation now before the myth envelops and permanently obscures reality."—Ind

"In other books are many snapshot pictures of the southwestern frontier. Mr. Foreman's achievement is the production of a series of pictures making a complete story of persons and events in that region for the period assigned." A. E. Sheldon

+ Am Hist R 32:146 O '26 720w

Booklist 22:412 J1 '26

Cath World 123:424 Je '26 250w

Ind 117:219 Ag 21 '26 200w

"The author has had to delve deeply into unpublished records for the greater part of his material. An admirable job is the result, for he has opened up to the general reader a neglected section of the frontier and an era full of stirring and colorful incident. There are slips here and there, as must needs be in a pioneer work."

+ — Outlook 143:69 My 12 '26 230w

FORREST, NOEL, pseud. Ways of escape. 427p $2 Little [7s 6d Constable]

26-14984

Stephen Heath never discovered that his wife had brains, for he saw her only as a beautiful portrait to be worthily framed in a setting of his own choosing. His children were not persons to him but puppets to be shaped and placed by his, the master hand. In unlimited pride and self-sufficiency this man looked upon life as he had arranged it for his family and found it good. The family found it disastrously otherwise. Each of the four children and the beautiful wife as well made for themselves ways of escape.

"'Ways of Escape' is a sad and chastening story. Its language too often is stilted, and a certain Victorian mustiness clings about its ideology. American readers may be mystified by an insistence on not very obvious social distinctions, but the novel is worth the slight perseverance it exacts from the reader, and there is one long chapter in which the turmoil and excitement of a contested election in a country town is quite wonderfully drawn." H: L. Stuart

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Ag 22 '26 1050w

Boston Transcript p4 S 8 '26 1250w

"The novel has power, and finish, and balance to a high degree. It is perhaps a bit too Greek in its emphasis on the Nemesis factor; the picture is a trifle overdrawn, for even deserved retribution is ordinarily not so complete and crushing as the author makes it here." F. J. M.

+ — Cath World 124:284 N '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p123 N '26

"Whatever influence went into its inspiration 'Ways of Escape' is a novel of such solid and fine achievement, such brilliant portrayal of character and such poignant and effective telling, that it ought to win for its author at the very beginning of his career a place well toward the front in the ranks of English-writing novelists." F. F. Kelly

+ Int Bk R p645 S '26 550w

"Taken by and large, 'Ways of Escape' is a most satisfying story. It is by far the most pleasing first novel we have read for some time — pleasing, because it offers a solid and nutritious meal." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p3 Ag 28 '26 760w

"'Ways of Escape' is a notable first novel by a member of the rapidly growing 'Galsworthy School.' Mr. Forrest has not yet achieved the facility of expression of his more famous model (his handling of dialogue is positively abominable; he knows what his characters would say, but has little idea how they would say it), but he knows his characters and their surroundings thoroughly and he succeeds in making them perfectly definite to the reader. He also makes his story continuously interesting."

+ — N Y Times p6 Ag 22 '26 900w

"The author has attempted something generally beyond the reach of the young novelist and carried out his central idea with astonishing virtuosity." H. S.

+ N Y World p4m Ag 29 '26 230w

Outlook 144:314 N 8 '26 260w

"Mr. Forrest has written a sound, and sometimes brilliant study. 'Ways of Escape,' though a little too long, is a thoughtful and interesting novel." L. F. Hartley

+ Sat R 142:264 S 4 '26 220w

"One reads this novel in the light of the publisher's puff with a growing sense of bewilderment. The tale begins promisingly enough. Unfortunately, as it proceeds, one realizes more and more clearly that an excellent theme with striking possibilities is being ruined in the telling. Where subtle analysis and delicate characterization were obviously demanded, only conventional and hackneyed conceptions have been supplied." Grace Frank

— Sat R of Lit 3:70 Ag 28 '26 400w

"It is presented unaffectedly, freshly and well. The hero's character is conceived with great breadth, his inhumanity is not laboured, and its effects strike the reader as inevitable, not as author's invention."

+ Spec 137:288 Ag 21 '26 220w

"The story is consistently worked out and perfectly logical, in which it departs from illogical and muddled life. Miss Forrest rouses and keeps our sympathy and interest, but none of the sympathy goes to Stephen, again, perhaps, a departure from life. His beaten and distressed figure could scarcely leave us unmoved had she not made him out of wood. To this extent she fails in her central character, but she has written an uncommon and able book."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p562 Ag 26 '26 320w

Wis Lib Bul 22:333 D '26

FORREST, WILLIAM MENTZEL. Do fundamentalists play fair? 125p $1 Macmillan

230 Modernism

26-3608

The book is a vigorous rebuttal of fundamentalist contentions and answers its title question with an emphatic "no."

"A vigorous challenge to fundamentalist methods of debate. The book will delight polemic modernists. Will fundamentalists really see the point of the arguments?"

J Religion 6:333 My '26 80w

"Professor Forrest proceeds through one lucid chapter after another showing the hopeless befuddlement and disastrous consequences to religion when it abuses the use of intelligence and fair-mindedness." H: N. Wieman

+ New Repub 46:378 My 12 '26 450w

"He undertakes to show that our Fundamentalists are characterized by ignorance, ferocity, and disingenuousness. He believes that their substitution of coercion for persuasion is treason to Christ and desperately prejudices the cause of true Christianity. We entirely agree with him and hope that this brave and honest book will have the wide circulation it deserves."

+ Outlook 143:260 Je 16 '26 120w

St Louis 24:235 S '26

FORTESCUE, SIR JOHN WILLIAM. Wellington. 314p $3 Dodd [10s 6d Williams & N.]

B or 92 Wellington, Arthur Wellesley, 1st duke of 25-25865

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:416 Jl '26

"By far the best short life we have of Wellington." A. L. Sachar

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 F 21 '26 650w

"The restraint, the candor, the careful balancing of facts and impressions which characterize this study are admirable. Although there are few new facts to present, it cannot be denied that the book gives in relatively small compass, a remarkably effective picture of the great soldier." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 27 '26 500w

Lit R p6 Je 26 '26 120w

N Y World p6m Ja 31 '26 180w

Reviewed by J: H. Sedgwick

No Am 223:182 Mr '26 850w

Outlook 142:570 Ap 14 '26 140w

"This is an admirable essay in military biography."

+ Sat R 141:270 F 27 '26 180w

"It is well balanced, scrupulously accurate and fair, and extremely readable."

+ Spec 136:181 Ja 30 '26 200w

FOSDICK, HARRY EMERSON. Adventurous religion, and other essays. 326p $2 Harper [6s S. C. M.]

230 Modernism. Christianity

26-18378

These essays which have appeared in Harper's Magazine, the Atlantic Monthly, or the Ladies' Home Journal, have a unifying background in the perplexing and challenging religious situation in America today. Tho the book probes for cause and effect of the modern religious movement it is not controversial in tone.

"That it will be widely and appreciatively read it is superfluous to say, that it will do much good I have no manner of doubt." F. J. F. Jackson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 26 '26 680w

"While liberal and progressive, he is not pugnacious and merely controversial in these sermons. It is adventurous religion with all the peril and attraction of a great adventure."

FOSDICK, HARRY EMERSON—Continued

The people who hurl anathemas at him would do well to read him and perchance catch his spirit even if they cannot agree with him." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 6 '26 280w

"Eloquent and charming essays on the principal subjects of belief."

+ Ind 117:743 D 25 '26 220w

"Although obviously spiritual, he does not insult the intelligence. His views seem to be most advanced; so advanced at times, in fact, that even among intellectuals they may produce a thrilling little shock." W. M. Brown

Sat R of Lit 3:360 D 4 '26 2350w

Springf'd Republican p10 N 23 '26 580w

FOSTER, MAXIMILIAN. I want to be a lady. 302p $2 Lippincott

Judy, untutored child of the plains, wants to be a lady. While she is busy absorbing culture from an occasional magazine a gently-born wastrel drifts into town. Judy undertakes to redeem him. With the aid of some cowboy friends she kidnaps the easterner, carries him off into the hills and leaves him there alone, to make his way to safety and manhood—and herself.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p31 O 3 '26 100w

"Well told by Maximilian Foster who knows just how to spin a tale of thrilling adventure filled with vivid detail and characters who live and breathe."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 27 '26 280w

"If you like melodrama, and are not very particular about the style in which your melodrama is meted out to you, you will enjoy this book."

Cath World 124:572 Ja '27 120w

"It's an interesting yarn."

+ Lit R p12 O 16 '26 100w

Sat R of Lit 3:140 S 25 '26 180w

Springf'd Republican p7f N 21 '26 180w

FOSTER, WILLIAM TRUFANT, and CATCHINGS, WADDILL. Profits. (Pollak foundation for economic research. Publications) 465p $4 Houghton; Pollak foundation [15s Pitman] 330.1 Profit 25-22510

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"The first half of the book is full of glow and go, there is a sense of keen enjoyment in exposition, a sense of realities of wide consequence. Now and then the statistics are rather thrown at one; but that may be better than a labored analysis. The writers turn with pleasure from phase to phase of their subject." O. Ingraham

+ Am Econ R 16:274 Je '26 1300w

"It is refreshing to find a volume which is so clearly and interestingly written. Whatever may be its defects, the authors have done us all a service by challenging accepted economic theory in a careful and well-reasoned attack." Jerome Davis

+ Am J Soc 31:826 My '26 860w

Am Pol Sci R 20:465 My '26 50w

Reviewed by Clair Wilcox

Ann Am Acad 124:204 Mr '26 420w

Booklist 22:233 Mr '26

Reviewed by K. W. Bigelow

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Ja 24 '26 1000w

Management and Adm 11:57 Ja '26 100w

Reviewed by H. R. Mussey

Nation 122:699 Je 23 '26 1300w

Reviewed by Evans Clark

N Y Times p1 Ja 17 '26 1500w

"It is a stimulating book, and in general readably written, though a shorter presentation of the main thesis would, in the review-

er's opinion, have been more effective." F. H. Knight

+ Pol Sci Q 41:468 S '26 1100w

"In this trenchantly written volume, the authors of Money attempt to solve the central paradox of our economic order. There is no more important problem in economics than to discover the causes for this periodical breakdown in production and the authors have shown a keen appreciation of relative values in attacking it." P. H. Douglas

+ Survey 55:510 Ja 15 '26 680w

FOURREAU, ARMAND. Berthe Morisot; tr. by H. Wellington. (Masters of modern art) 62, 40p il $1.75 Dodd

759.4 Morisot, Berthe

26-26280

The book contains a study of the life and work of this pupil of Corot's, and reproductions from forty of her paintings.

Booklist 22:319 My '26

Reviewed by T. Craven

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Je

20 '26 40w

Dial 81:174 Ag '26 80w

"It seems to be rather too eulogistic, though we will not go to the length of retorting on the author that Berthe Morisot simply painted as it became Manet's sister-in-law to paint. The reproductions, as was perhaps inevitable considering the characteristics of the originals, vary a good deal in merit."

Sat R 141:162 F 6 '26 80w

"M. Fourreau's introduction is extremely lucid and pertinent, and the translation has been well done. Our only quibble is that the proofs might have been more carefully read. In addition to many misprints, some of the references to plates are faulty."

+ Sat R 141:548 Ap 24 '26 100w

"Mr. Wellington's translation reads well, though here and there he seems to be following the original too faithfully in the construction of sentences."

Times [London] Lit Sup p206 Mr 18 '26 650w

FOWLER, HENRY WATSON. Dictionary of modern English usage. 742p $3 (7s 6d) Oxford 423 English language—Dictionaries

[26-15587]

"The purpose of the compiler has been to bring together instances of those moments in the life of the English language at which the cultivated speaker or writer may feel, or should feel, doubt or hesitation in the practical application of the language. He has not been concerned with outright illiteracies, with the crude errors of syntax, pronunciation, and vocabulary of the uneducated person."—Sat R of Lit

"A book which may well become a classic of the reference shelves."

+ Ind 117:164 Ag 7 '26 120w

"The amount of solid and useful information Mr. Fowler has packed into his book is remarkable. It will put before the public a good deal which has not hitherto reached it. We cherish a not very sanguine hope that various professional and complacent users of ink may also be sensible enough to profit by it. The comments with the sad and bad examples are often amusing and always worth notice." Vernon Rendall

+ Sat R 141:672 Je 5 '26 1100w

"This admirable book reveals on every page the evidences of long and patient reading, reflection, and collecting. It is the first serious effort of this kind to be published in English, serious in the sense of being thorough. But it is not a heavy or dull book, and though it is called a dictionary, it is so mainly in the respect that the materials in it are arranged in alphabetical dictionary order." G. P. Krapp

+ Sat R of Lit 2:933 J1 17 '26 1200w

"Such a compact and instructive volume has long been needed. This manual is indispensable to everyone who would make the best use, according to his powers, of the sharp and splendid sword of our language."

+ Spec 136:956 Je 5 '26 130w

"Mr Fowler has been solicitous to make the task of instruction cheerful, provocative and fascinating. There is hardly a paragraph of this voluminous book that is not phrased so as to invite and reward attention. A purist at heart, as all grammarians must be, yet no pedant, Mr Fowler is also a wit. Although the book is concerned with English usage, nearly all the material has relevance wherever English is written."

+ Springf'd Republican p20 Je 18 '26 1300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p390 Je 10 '26 460w

FOX, CHARLES. Educational psychology, its problems and methods. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 380p $3.75 Harcourt [10s 6d K. Paul]

150 Psychology, Educational

"The purpose of this volume is to consider the contribution made by experimental psychology to the study of educational problems. Such topics as mental discipline are reconsidered in the light of recent research and the accepted view is challenged. Psychoanalysis and the modern doctrine of instinct are dealt with critically. Certain novel theories are propounded, notably a new view of mental imagery and a new theory of mental fatigue."—Publisher's note

Reviewed by C. M. Smertenko

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 My 16 '26 400w

"More and more educators have been turning to the science of mind for aid, and this new volume in the International Library of Psychology, Philosophy and Scientific Research serves their interests well by summing up in luminous fashion the contributions which have been made by experimental psychology to educational problems during the past twenty-five years. An ample list of books, with brief summaries of their contents, brings this well-written and informing work to a close." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 20 '26 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p99 S '26

"The chief value of Mr. Fox's book is for the science of psychology."

Times [London] Lit Sup p848 D 10 '25 1200w

FOX, DAVID, pseud. See Ostrander, I. E.

FOX, DIXON RYAN. Caleb Heathcote, gentleman colonist; the story of a career in the province of New York, 1692-1721. 301p $3 Scribner

B or 92 Heathcote, Caleb 26-8875

In 1692 a young English merchant came to America. He quickly became identified with the provincial government of New York, acquired large holdings of land, becoming lord of the manor of Scarsdale, and rounded out his career in local administration by three years' service as mayor of New York. He was also a devoted churchman and one of the most useful layman in the history of the Anglican church in America. His biographer tells the whole story of his many-sided career.

"Mr. Fox has done his work with antiquarian thoroughness, and his book is a real enrichment of the historical literature of old New York."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 O 10 '26 480w

Reviewed by C. W. Heathcote
Lit R p12 S 11 '26 280w

"His various activities are meticulously detailed in a rather pompous and solemn-faced manner that does not belie the frontispiece of the hero. It is a valuable document for students of early colonial history, and the members of the Town Club of Scarsdale, to whom it is dedicated, ought to be proud of it."

+ Nation 123:43 J1 14 '26 90w

"Caleb Heathcote was a busy, useful and important factor in the life of Colonial New York, and to have his story authentically told helps to make clear and vital the manners and customs of that time. Mr. Fox is sometimes a little more verbose in the manner of its telling than seems desirable, but otherwise he has written an interesting narrative which he has evidently taken every care to make authentic."

+ — N Y Times p18 My 2 '26 420w

"An ideal subject for the biographer—and spoiled. Prof. Fox has done a lot of scholarly work; his pages upon pages of references attest his industry. But it is all in the worst manner of biography, written for the record perhaps, certainly not for the reader's entertainment."

+ — N Y World p6m Ap 4 '26 300w

Outlook 143:547 Ag 18 '26 30w

"His career, as related by Professor Fox, seems to have entitled him to a high place among the colonial administrators of his time."

R of Rs 73:669 Je '26 100w

"Throws many interesting sidelights on the colonial history of New York in the days when it numbered 4500 souls."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 22 '26 1000w

FRANCE, ANATOLE. Little sea dogs; and other tales of childhood; tr. by Alfred Allinson and J. Lewis May. 149p il $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

26-26041

"The stories of which this volume is made up are divided into two parts. The tales of 'Child Life in Town and Country' appear in the original French edition, under the title of 'Contes de Maman,' in the volume entitled Pierre Nozière; in the Library and Popular Editions of the authorized English translations, they are appended to The Merrie Tales of Jacques Tournebroke. The 'Tales of Pierre and Suzanne' have been selected from My Friend's Book, the first of the four autobiographical volumes composing what is generally known as the 'Pierre Nozière Series.'" —Introductory note

Booklist 22:213 F '26

"The form of the book leaves something to be desired by those who have always associated Fanchon, Catherine and little Jean, Marie and Jacqueline with Boutet de Monvel's pictures for them. Marcia Lane Foster's pictures in color suffer also from being poorly reproduced. But we may at least be grateful for a translation which brings vignettes and stories into one book and in a form that assures a wider reading among grown people as well as among children." A. C. Moore

+ — Bookm 63:207 Ap '26 280w

"The variety and beauty and story-telling genius contained in every episode and incident of the story itself make it a book of gemlike quality."

+ Int Bk R p321 Ap '26 420w

N Y World p7m D 13 '25 100w

Outlook 142:268 F 17 '26 160w

Pittsburgh Mo Bu 31:51 Ja '26

"Dress them as you will, they must always be authentic children of France—Fanchon, Marie, Jacqueline and her Miraut, Suzanne, Roger and the rest of them, though it is useless to deny that they have lost some of their initial charm in these pedestrian translated surroundings and become a little remote from the adorable beings whom M. Anatole France and M. de Monvel enclosed in that slim red volume nearly forty years ago."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p804 N 26 '25 500w

FRANCE, ANATOLE. Under the rose; arranged and annotated by Michel Corday; auth. tr. by J. Lewis May. (Works; in an English tr., ed. by Frederic Chapman and James Lewis May) 223p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

844

26-13161

The unfinished work of Anatole France, consisting of essays and dialogues and rough notes for future projects, is gathered here, arranged and annotated by Michel Corday.

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ag 8 '26 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 D '26

"To confess the plain truth, it is impossible to read this last book of the great exposé of human ideals without a sigh of disappointment." J: C. Powys

Dial 81:507 D '26 1100w

Reviewed by W. N. C. Carlton
Lit R p14 D 11 '26 180w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky
N Y Times p4 J1 18 '26 1800w

"The hitherto unpublished scraps from France's literary remains that Michel Corday has gathered together and annotated under the title 'Under the Rose' contain nothing of any interest except an inconsiderable item or two of some value to bibliographers and commentators. His own comments show that he is not properly acquainted with the work of the master whom he venerates so unintelligently, for he has included scraps which have appeared elsewhere in France's published work without noting that they have so appeared." Burton Rascoe

— N Y World p8s J1 4 '26 750w

Outlook 143:580 Ag 25 '26 150w

Spec 137:354 S 4 '26 70w

FRANCK, HARRY ALVERSON. East of Siam; ramblings in the five divisions of French Indo-China. 357p il $3.50 Century

915.9 Indo-China, French—Description and travel 26-16713

What the author has already done for North and South China he now does for French Indo-China. He writes a leisurely, friendly story of everywhere in Annam, illustrated with a photographic record of his wanderings.

Booklist 23:75 N '26

"Fascinating as were its predecessors, this last chapter of his Far East wanderings is perhaps the most so of all. In a way it holds even more novelty." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 23 '26 750w

"An entertaining, diverting tale of vagabond days in the Orient, constructed along the familiar lines." Dale Warren

Sat R of Lit 3:468 D 25 '26 170w

Wis Lib Bul 22:296 N '26

FRANK, WALDO DAVID. Virgin Spain; scenes from the spiritual drama of a great people. 301p $3 Boni & Liveright

914.6 Spain 26-7458

This is hardly a travel-book, tho it ranges from Spain's African "hinterland" to the Pyrenees. It is a book of impressionistic sketches, rather, word-pictures in which a lover of Spain calls up historical events, literature, art, manners and customs to interpret the soul of the country and its people.

Booklist 22:414 J1 '26

"Extraordinary on almost any count, perhaps chiefly for its sustained elevation of mood and style through the intricate windings of an impressionistic interpretation that depends now upon the emotions of an artist and philosopher, now upon the facts essential to a social observer."

+ Bookm 63:440 Je '26 180w

Reviewed by Kenneth Burke

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 My 9 '26 1150w

"He tells this story after the most intriguing of fashions, analyzing the various phases of Spain's complex character as if it had personality, playing its individual part on a stage of unique picturesqueness. Mr. Frank indeed asks his readers to regard his book wholly in this light—as a drama. To many, however, it will seem more like the rhapsodic outpouring of a lover writing of his mistress."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ap 17 '26 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p120 N '26

"It is a great pity that Mr Frank is not content to restrain himself. He would deepen and widen his talent and develop his powers, which are real. His admirers are doing this writer the worst disservice in bolstering him up to works of noisy bombast. No amount of shouting will bring fire down from heaven; but a beautiful household fire is within the reach of this writer of talent, if he cares to work for it." Sacheverell Sitwell

— + Dial 82:63 Ja '27 1150w

"Sympathetic, intensely vivid interpretations which present the impact of the strange unity called Spain on a sensitive, highly intelligent observer."

Ind 116:583 My 15 '26 180w

"A singularly poetic interpretation of a great people. 'Virgin Spain' is a spiritual poem. The land and the artist understood one another, and the land gave him of her best." Laura Benét

+ Int Bk R p395 My '26 520w

"'Virgin Spain' is scanty in descriptions, its author being too engrossed with interpreting the more transcendent meaning of people and stone. We find him at his best when he lets go of history and ethnology and abandons himself to his keen poetic intuition, that the spirit may understand what mere erudition is denied." Ernesto Montenegro

+ — Lit R p2 Mr 20 '26 1200w

Reviewed by A. B. Parsons

Nation 122:645 Je 9 '26 850w

"The book, considered formally, is definite, intricate, dense, jeweled, aspirant, gracious and mastered to a harmony that appears peculiarly fitting for Spain." G. B. Munson

New Repub 47:39 My 26 '26 1150w

"Where Mr. Frank might enchant he perfers to astound with willful flamboyance. It is a pity, for his gifts are great." Muna Lee

+ N Y Times p7 Ap 18 '26 1350w

"Most certainly 'Virgin Spain' appears to me to bear the marks of permanence. It is a complete organic whole. The parts fit together in a grand design as though foreordained. It is not about Spain. It is Spain. . . The author is a true artist-philosopher, a poet. He presents, with an air of irresistible authenticity, a marvelous conception of the soul of Spain." W: McFee

+ N Y World p6m Ap 11 '26 800w

"There are some excellent passages, as the study of Isabella and the chapter on the Escorial. These are the products of the author's lucid moments. Were the whole book like those passages, it would be a very good book."

+ Outlook 143:420 J1 21 '26 60w

"His considerable knowledge of the country and its history and people and his well-conceived scheme of presentation are worthy of the greatest respect. His fault is the intense artificiality of his style and its excessive choppi-ness. All his sentences are short and sharp, and this in a material which is an endlessly changing kaleidoscope of sense-impressions and ideas is at first extremely tiring and irritating."

+ — Sat R 142:773 D 18 '26 170w

"Despite certain repetitions, despite language that at times is overdrawn and over emphatic, and at times abstruse and almost incoherent,—or, perhaps, rather because of this vivid color in his words, his book is instinct with life, vivid, clean-cut, and at times as baffling as a modernistic picture." Ernest Peixotto

— Sat R of Lit 2:719 Ap 17 '26 850w

Spring'd Republican p10 N 9 '26 420w
Times [London] Lit Sup p911 D 9 '26 500w

Wis Lib Bul 22:171 My '26

FRANKAU, GILBERT. Masterson. 417p $2 Harper [7s 6d Hutchinson]

26-7012

At forty, John Masterson became the appalled heir to five million pounds and a vast estate. With difficulty he tore himself from his Abyssinian post and returned to England to face his responsibilities. His first altruistic act was to create jobs for Mary Millward, an old acquaintance, and for Irene Corslake's brother, for John had fallen tremulously in love with nineteen-year-old Irene. They married, and were happy for a year, till Irene tired of John's sober love and turned to his friend for a headier passion. It was cataclysm for good old John. He fled to Abyssinia, where, after the divorce and Irene's remarriage, old friends sought him out, taking Mary along for several reasons.

"'Masterson' is a novel that does its writer no credit." H: L. Stuart

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 My 23 '26 1250w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 21 '26 650w
Cleveland Open Shelf p78 Je '26

"Interesting plot, clever characterization, a sophisticated London background and graphic descriptions of horse racing and yachting combine to make this a thoroughly entertaining novel."

+ Ind 116:527 My 1 '26 100w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
Lit R p4 Ap 10 '26 650w

"A very curious mixture. The style is luscious, yet it is in praise of plain, blunt men; the denunciation is violent, yet it is directed against violence, and even change." Edwin Muir
Nation and Ath 38:620 Ja 30 '26 200w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy
— New Statesman 26:548 F 13 '26 1000w

"What gives the very long novel a certain novelty, a certain freshness, is the fact that it is written from a point of view rather unusual in present-day fiction. 'Masterson' is subtitled 'A Story of an English Gentleman,' and the subtitle expresses much of the book. The political part of the book, well and fervently written, is extremely interesting."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 4 '26 860w

"This is one of those novels with a Purpose. Novels with a Purpose are always being written and this is worse than most of them. It is clumsily written, exasperatingly wordy, cheap to the point of nastiness in spots and, on the whole, rather a bore."

— N Y World p7m Ap 4 '26 520w

"The lack of reticence which everywhere characterizes 'Masterson' is of a most irritating quality. It is not frankness, nor candour, nor callousness, nor crudity; it is unabashed sentimentality regarding its face in the glass and finding itself good. It is virtue always looking outside for its reward and never missing it. All the things which Masterson, the plain ordinary Englishman, would have blushed for Mr. Frankau intones over him, again and again." L. P. Hartley

— Sat R 141:67 Ja 16 '26 760w

"If Mr. Frankau had written this novel in cold blood, deliberately assuming a viewpoint that would make it a best-seller among the morons and last-ditch-Tories of the British Fascisti (to say nothing of their American cousins) he could not have surpassed his involuntary achievement." E: Davison

— Sat R of Lit 2:937 J1 17 '26 750w

"In Masterson, Mr. Frankau has plainly intended to draw such a picture of the present moral and political life of England as shall help to purge a sick world. His taste, his political morality too, is unfortunately of an order hardly more elevated than that of the sensational daily Press, and while his intentions are honourable his execution is much less than excellent."

— Spec 135:100 Ja 16 '26 300w

"The narrative is neither well conceived nor well written. The emphasis on sex is crude and the politics claptrap."

— Spring'd Republican p7f S 5 '26 300w

"There is nothing complex in the whole affair, and the book is a description—an adequate description—of a small and vulgar section of the community."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 21 '26 480w

FRANKEL, LEE KAUFER; ARMSTRONG, DONALD BUDD; and FOX, GENEVIEVE MAY. Popular encyclopedia of health. 366p il $3.50 A. & C. Boni

616 Medicine, Popular, Hygiene 26-13251

An up-to-date book which describes the symptoms and cure of common ailments and is intended to supersede the old fashioned doctor book in promoting the health of the household.

"The topics are well selected, the style clear and terse, and the advice sound and sensible." M. J. Rosenau

+ Am J Pub Health 16:932 S '26 400w

Booklist 23:116 D '26

"Written in simple English, without technicalities, the book draws fully on that mass of information which has been found valuable in reducing sickness and death rates among the millions of policy holders of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and has been gathered in co-operation with a large number of physicians and health authorities."

+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 31 '26 320w

J Home Econ 18:531 S '26 80w

N Y Times p12 J1 18 '26 260w

"In this well-printed and attractively arranged volume two officers of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company set forth authoritatively the best of professional advice on many points associated with the maintenance of health and the avoidance of disease."

+ Survey 56:550 Ag 15 '26 160w

FRANKENSTEIN, ALFRED V. Syncopating saxophones. 103p il $2 Ballou, R. O.

785 Orchestra and orchestral music. Jazz 26-26225

A clarinetist in the Chicago civic orchestra has written this little book on saxophones and syncopation and the possibilities of jazz.

Booklist 22:284 Ad '26

Reviewed by P: Bowdoin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 31 '26 450w

"Mr. Frankenstein is doubtless an expert musician, but his literary efforts never get beyond a sketchy stage. Mr. Frankenstein realizes this and lays no claim to profundity; his essays are readable and bright, although the matter is slight and although there is a too ready tendency to dismiss a point before it is developed."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '25 380w

FRASER, RONALD. Landscape with figures. 320p $2.50 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d F. Unwin]

26-8331

Lord Sombrewater, capitalist, with his wife and daughter Lynchis, and a party of business associates are cruising off the coast of

FRASER, DONALD—Continued

China in the Floating Leaf. Two of the other men have their wives with them and one has also brought his daughter Ruby, the devoted admirer and imitator of Lychnis. The Floating Leaf is grounded at the mouth of a river and the Chinese crew deserts. A few of the party, including the two girls, decide to explore. They step ashore, and into an atmosphere of fantasy. Lychnis insists that they have entered a landscape from a vase, a plate, or a silken tapestry. Ambrose, the unofficial secretary, preserves the record of their adventures on the rock-island in the Lotus lake and the philosophical love affair of Lychnis and Yuan Ch'ien.

"A wholly fascinating tale set on a deep blue sea and in a fantastic China that is certainly as real as is at all necessary."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ap 18 '26 300w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 20 '26 450w

"A first novel so finished and significant, both aesthetically and otherwise, that it appears all but unthinkable except against a background of long and serious endeavor." Edwin Bjorkman

+ Lit R p2 Mr 6 '26 750w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 46:310 Ap 23 '26 250w

"He writes beautifully, creating a haze of illusion, as casual and perfect as a dream." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:168 My 23 '25 180w

"'Landscape With Figures' is consistently amusing. It is a purely objective story, fascinating on its own account, with a hint of underlying allegory that heightens the enjoyment. It may possibly be vexatious to mystics, to scientists, to the bourgeois, to revolutionaries and to all serious-minded gentry. It will probably be baffling to the incurably frivolous. For the rest, those who relish nonsense with solid substance, those who are neither all jesting nor entirely solemn, the book must be pure joy, a treasure for jealous lending."

+ N Y Times p8 F 23 '26 650w

N Y World p7m Mr 14 '26 200w

"There is beauty in this book. One regrets that at times the narrative stoops from that beauty to mere piquancy or patent artifice." H. W. Boynton

+ Sat R of Lit 2:770 My 8 '26 600w

Spring'd Republican p7f Je 6 '26 500w

"Those who count in the story are made to appear, in spite of some laboured attempts at humour on the part of one or other of them, as fantastic and artificial as the imaginary country they are visiting. . . Mr. Fraser forgoes his opportunity of obtaining that clash between fundamentally different ideals and methods of thought, which alone could have provided the drama that was essential to relieve the monotony of his reiterated descriptions—admirable though many of them are—of this Chinese dream-world he has so vividly imagined."

Times [London] Lit Sup p385 Je 4 '25 330w

FRAZER, ELIZABETH. Woman and her money. 194p $1.50 Doran

332.6 Investments 26-4954

The principles of sound investment are presented in simple language, illustrated with many examples from personal experience, for the guidance of women.

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 3 '26 270w

Cleveland Open Shelf p64 My '26

"Miss Frazer has used with skill and good effect a striking method for making her book readable and giving to her material fresh, dramatic, personal interest. The author has accomplished a real feat making her subject so easily understandable and so interesting."

+ N Y Times p7 Mr 14 '26 450w

"Clearly and simply, in a form agreeably readable, with many illustrative incidents and experiences, Miss Fraser sets forth in this useful book 'what every woman ought to know' about investments."

+ Outlook 142:536 Ap 7 '26 200w

Pratt p15 autumn '26

"Not every woman who reads this book will learn from it all that she should know about investments but all who read are likely to gain respect for the difficult art of investment and to understand how much more satisfying is the joy of building an estate that will stand than of gambling either in good or bad securities."

Sat R of Lit 2:619 Mr 6 '26 230w

FRAZER, SIR JAMES GEORGE. Worship of nature. (Edinburgh univ. Gifford lectures, 1924-1925) v 1 672p $4 (25s) Macmillan

291 Nature-worship (26-7353)

In separate sections of the book the author of "The golden bough" makes an exhaustive study of worship of the sky, of the earth, and of the sun, among the peoples of the earth.

Booklist 23:6 O '26

Reviewed by C. H. Moore

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 23 '26 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p100 S '26

"A complex, picturesque and fantastic record." M. J.

Int J Ethics 37:107 O '26 430w

J Religion 6:440 Jl '26 70w

"A perfect treasure of folklore from all parts of the world." Martyn Hemphill

+ Lit R p5 Je 12 '26 480w

Reviewed by Alexander Goldenweiser

Nation 123:226 S 8 '26 400w

"The writer reveals himself as totally unaffected by the researches into the nature and origins of savage beliefs that have accumulated new evidence in this country during the last fifteen years." W. J. Perry

Nation and Ath 39:328 Je 19 '26 700w

"From the author of 'The Golden Bough' this is disappointing. Within the separate topics, the method is that adopted in 'The Belief in Immortality': to select the most trustworthy authority, and summarise the principal statements in more or less systematic order. The result is very readable, diverting in its frequent long episodes quoted verbatim, its eloquent verbal landscape-painting, and its sardonic and sometimes broad humor at the expense of the more ingenuous 'devices of the heathen'; but it does not advance learning greatly."

+ Nature 118:4 Jl 3 '26 1050w

"The subject is, of course, a vast one and only to be handled with any assurance by such an authority as the author of 'The Golden Bough'."

+ New Statesman 27:144 My 22 '26 1200w

Reviewed by C. de Kay

N Y Times p15 My 23 '26 1600w

"A profound and informing book."

+ Outlook 143:187 Je 2 '26 350w

"The 'Worship of Nature' obviously possesses those qualities which have made 'The Golden Bough' one of the greatest achievements of our time. Sir James Frazer here covers an immense field."

+ Sat R 141:339 Mr 13 '26 30w

"We can merely greet it with a cheer, looking forward to Vol II with that gratitude which is a lively sense of favours to come. As this journal said about an earlier volume, 'it is one of those rare literary undertakings that signify prestige for a country.' We must add that the brilliance and charm of the author's style show no signs of fading."

+ Sat R 142:204 Ag 21 '26 1050w

Spec 136:490 Mr 13 '26 40w

"One picks up this volume of expanded Gifford lectures with the exclamation, 'What a beautiful book!'; one lays it down in disappointment. If the worship of nature were merely a display of book-learning, a well-edited digest of our mythological libraries, it would be unsatisfactory enough; but when learning masquerades as wisdom it becomes worse."

— + Spec 136:sup996 Je 12 '26 560w

Springf'd Republican p10 J1 6 '26 900w
Times [London] Lit Sup p333 My 20 '26 1600w

FREDERICK, JUSTUS GEORGE. Book of business standards. 209p $2 Frank-Maurice 658 Business ethics [26-8611]

"Discusses moral standards in business and includes the existing codes of ethics of a number of business and manufacturing organizations."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"This book should have value in so far as standardized business ethics and practices are concerned." J. G.

+ Bookm 61:adv My '25 130w

Reviewed by Stuart Chase

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 10 '25 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:88 F '26

FREDERICK, JUSTUS GEORGE, ed. Masters of advertising copy; principles and practice of copy writing according to its leading practitioners. 392p $5 Maurice 659 Advertising 25-21508

Contents: Advertising copy and the writer, by F. I. Fletcher; The advertising writer who is bigger than his ad, by G. L. Dyer; Human appeals in copy, by Bruce Barton; The underlying principles of good copy, by T. F. MacManus; Emotion and style in advertising copy, by James Wallen; Some lessons I have learned in advertising, by C. C. Hopkins; Copy: good, bad and indifferent, by R. A. Foley; The research basis of copy, by J. G. Frederick; Axioms of advertising, by J. H. Appel; Copy first, by K. M. Goode; Making advertisements read, by F. R. Feland; Copy don't's, by J. K. Fraser; Wanted, by the dear public, by C. A. Parker; Advertising copy and the so-called 'average woman,' by Mrs Christine Frederick; Believable advertising, by O. A. Owen; Looking at copy and looking into it, by H. E. Cleland; The human side of it, by W. D. Nesbit; Copy that is and isn't, by Harry Tipper; The sales power of good copy as demonstrated in book advertising, by Helen Woodward; The copy writer's work bench, by J. S. Hewitt; The psychology of the printed work, by A. Holmes; Simplicity in advertising copy, by H. M. Bourne; What makes good retail copy, by Ruth Leigh; The art of visualizing good copy, by Ben Nash; Old and new days in advertising copy, by J. L. Mahin.

Management & Adm 10:392 N '25 70w

"For men and women whose aspirations are in the direction of advertising the book provides much valuable assimilative matter and if the writers who contribute their ideas to Mr. Frederick's collection are somewhat enthusiastic and take themselves a trifle too seriously they have done exceedingly well in impressing the neophyte publicity agent."

+ — N Y Times p16 Ja 10 '26 600w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:29 Ja '26

"Most of these essays have been published before in advertising trade papers, or delivered as addresses before picked advertising audiences, and the book suffers in unity and coherence on that account. . . The truth lies among them, and there is no advertising man, and certainly no advertiser, who will not learn something from this book." E. E. Calkins

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:407 D 12 '25 600w

FREEDMAN, DAVID. Mendel Marantz. 301p il $2 Harper

[26-3377]

"'Mendel Marantz' is the story of a character whose extraordinarily genial and philosophic mental equipment sustains him above all difficulties and beyond all dilemmas. The book is a novel, to be sure, yet it is more of a novel book than anything else. It is a series of incidents, troubles, business reverses, love makings and marital arrangements that revolve themselves around Mendel, his patient and long-suffering wife Zelde and the group of people with whom they come in contact."—Lit R

"His creator seems to encourage Mendel's addiction to his one and only type of jest—the comic question and definition—and the result is a novel almost completely inundated by this monotonous form. Aside from this disability the author succeeds, when Mendel is temporarily gagged, in presenting a series of not unappealing incidents centering around the Marantzes and their friends."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ap 4 '26 100w

"Mr. Freedman writes out of a thorough knowledge of his characters and the not too well hidden springs that motivate their actions. The book is entertaining, and you find yourself thinking about it afterward." J. W. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 3 '26 650w

"It is easily readable and one wanders along its chuckling and mirth producing way in a very happy frame of mind." M. G. Bonner

+ Lit R p2 F 6 '26 250w

"Mr. Freedman's talent is such that it should not be wasted in merely being clever, for occasionally he cuts below the surface of things with true insight. For all his irrelevancies of technique, his novel is pleasing to read; his realization of the commonplace has a compelling urge and his shrewd observation is happily married with pungent humor."

+ — N Y Times p8 Ja 31 '26 820w

"Mendel Marantz is shrewd, he is witty, he is wise even when he appears aggravatingly foolish. Assume that 'Mendel Marantz' has no justification in plot, that it lacks the conflict which makes drama, yet you will have to grant that it is justified as a character portrait."

+ — N Y World p7m Ja 17 '26 420w

"Mendel's comic and philosophic conundrums are funny and smart, but they do pall when they get up into the hundreds. Yet Mendel is a human and original chap."

+ Outlook 143:222 Je 9 '26 100w

"If one read a chapter or two of this book, one might find it passable. But reading it all, one can only inform Mr. Freedman that you cannot be a humorist through a single device, and an obvious one at that."

— Sat R of Lit 2:793 My 15 '26 230w

FREEMAN, JOHN. Herman Melville. (English men of letters; new ser.) 200p $1.25 Macmillan B or 92 Melville, Herman

First of the new series on English men of letters is this study of an American, Herman Melville. The author sets himself the interesting if sometimes perplexing task of piecing together the fragments of autobiographical record contained in Melville's early works. While the experiences of Melville's life serve as a basis for the later writings these yield little of authentic autobiography. In the study of Melville's works, 'Moby Dick,' his masterpiece, is considered apart from the others.

Booklist 22:416 J1 '26

"If his insight is seldom profound, he satisfies the reader by presenting a lucid, consistent, transparent story." Van Wyck Brooks

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 16 '26 1750w

FREEMAN, JOHN—Continued

"Much of Melville's own story may be read in his books, for he was distinctly an autobiographical writer. That story is a thrice told tale, and it has been admirably condensed and expounded by his biographer." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 15 '26 800w

"It is a study—that is, a mixture of criticism and biography; but the biography is ordinary and adds little to previous accounts, while the criticism, though unexceptionable, lacks the penetration which Melville's imaginative and emotional depths evidently require. It cannot be said to contribute a great deal to that distinguished tradition of critical biography."

— Dial 81:444 N '26 70w

"For those who want a short story of Melville's life, vividly and ably told this book is admirable."

+ Ind 117:108 J1 24 '26 200w

"Mr. Freeman has allowed himself to select characters, or incidents, from Melville's books, and to assume that they may be revelations, more or less veiled, of his actual personal experiences. . . . If literary criticism be justified in this, the sooner writers abolish their imaginations, the better for them." Julian Hawthorne

Int Bk R p561 Ag '26 260w

"John Freeman deserves credit for his terse, illuminating study. It is enthusiastic and yet critical; it is direct and simple; above all, it has a sense of order, which should help make Melville understood by all those who still regard him as a mystery. The author achieves his merit by co-ordinating biographical with literary facts—that is, the man with the work—and the result is an admirable harmony. It is, in the true sense of the word, a critical biography." J; Cournos

+ Lit R p1 My 8 '26 1500w

"Mr. Freeman's study readily grants Melville ample praise as 'the most powerful of all the great American writers.' From this critical dictum, one of Mr. Freeman's major conclusions, more than one reader is likely to dissent—without losing his interest, however, in a provocative and smoothly written account that ought to make friends for itself."

+ Living Age 330:216 J1 24 '26 150w

"As far as it goes, Mr. Freeman's study is admirable, but one feels, sometimes acutely, the limitations of his critical method." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 39:324 Je 19 '26 850w

Reviewed by L; Mumford

New Repub 48:sup166 S 29 '26 530w

Reviewed by E. E. Kellett

New Statesman 27:121 My 15 '26 1250w

"Mr. Freeman is sympathetic and understanding. He is thoroughly familiar with the traditions of English prose (and verse, too, as he shows in his discussion of Melville's poems), and knows how to orient his subject. Melville could have no happier introduction to those who have not yet made his acquaintance."

+ N Y Times p11 Je 13 '26 1700w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p4m My 16 '26 950w

"Surely he does the cause of Melville no service (and the word cause is irresistibly suggested by his pose of champion) by vaunting power, beauty, artistic merit, in his author where they least appear."

— Outlook 143:547 Ag 18 '26 470w

Sat R 141:542 Ap 24 '26 60w

"Using the old and some new materials, and applying to them an independent yet unrestrained imagination, Mr. Freeman presents a compact and discerning portrayal."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f My 2 '26 350w

"Most readers will be grateful to Mr. Freeman, notwithstanding his imposed limitations; for it is the excellency of a writer to leave things better than he found them, and undeniably Mr. Freeman has done this."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p337 My 20 '26 1900w

FREEMAN, KATHLEEN. Martin Hanner; a comedy. 328p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d J. Cape]

Martin Hanner is a professor of classics in an English provincial university. He has recovered from a recent violent love affair sufficiently to become interested in the eldest daughter of a delightful family in the college town. He applies for a better position in another university and on his way to confer about it calls on his recent fiancée. Presently Martin is torn between the old love and the new, and is at the same time harassed with uncertainty about the new position. This study of his dilemma and its solution presents college life from the professor's rather than the student's point of view.

Boston Transcript p7 N 17 '26 230w

"For all the tedious, pretentious first novels that come the way of the reviewer once in a blue moon the gods take pity on that troubled soul and let fall from their laps a volume that rouses the commentator from his depths of depression and sets him to quoting Browning. Leonard Cline's 'Godhead' was such a novel. So is 'Martin Hanner,' a remarkably keen and sympathetic study of a professor of classics in an English provincial university." Thurston Macauley

+ Lit R p2 N 13 '26 400w

"Delightful comedy in the Meredithian sense of that name, and is written in a manner of distinguished simplicity." E. B.

+ New Repub 49:202 Ja 5 '27 200w

"A first novel of really remarkable promise. There is nothing forced; everything is said and done as it would be. And the writing, always quiet, is always good." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 26:809 Ap 10 '26 100w

"A very competently written novel of university life in the North of England, by a new writer whom it will be interesting to watch. The milieu described for us is new and unfamiliar to Americans."

+ N Y Times p24 O 17 '26 800w

"'Martin Hanner' is an exceedingly intelligent account of life in a provincial university. It has plenty of insight and observation, but the story is much less convincing than the separate scenes."

+ Sat R 141:482 Ap 10 '26 100w

"A conscientious but rather tonelessly written story."

Spec 136:730 Ap 17 '26 30w

"A pleasant and well-written comedy."

Times [London] Lit Sup p248 Ap 1 '26 430w

FREEMAN, LEWIS RANSOME. By waterways² to Gotham. 444p 1l $3 Dodd

317.7 Great Lakes. Voyages and travels

The sub-title describes the book as the "account of a two thousand mile voyage by skiff and outboard motor from Milwaukee to New York, through the Great Lakes, Trent Canal, St Lawrence, Richelieu, Champlain and Hudson." Instead of the quiet-water voyage the author had dreamed of he found more rough work and almost as much rough water as had fallen to his lot in running the rapids of the Grand canyon of the Colorado the previous year. The adventures of the voyage are described and incidents and scenes of the various landings he made along the way. The Appendix gives technical information about the waterways he traversed—data about distances, weather, radio, locks, etc.

"Mr. Freeman's book is too detailed to be easy, leisurely reading; but as a compendium of navigation information on these waters it is invaluable."

Bookm 64:xxv Ja '27 180w

"He describes people and places on the way with humor and much writing skill."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 26 '26 140w

"Everywhere he could, Mr. Freeman came in touch with the French inhabitants, his own unaffected friendliness winning a friendly response from these generally shy reticent folk. A welcome guest in their homes, he learned as in no other way could have been done, the home-life of a primitive people living today much the same life as that of their pioneer French ancestors of three hundred years ago."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '26 320w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman
Outlook 144:575 D 29 '26 160w
R of Rs 74:668 D '26 100w

FREEMAN, RICHARD AUSTIN. D'Arblay mystery. 291p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Hodder & S.] 26-16198

"We find that the deceased met his death by wilful murder, committed by some person unknown." With these words the coroner's jury closed their investigation of the murder of Julius D'Arblay. But to young Dr Gray who found the murdered man and to D'Arblay's daughter this was not enough. They agreed between themselves to carry the investigation further. Called in to tend a man dying under curious circumstances Dr Gray was led to the first clue. He consulted Dr Thorndyke, a well known solver of riddles, and thru him the crime is eventually brought to light.

"Admirably conceived, cleverly written and filled with a suspense that steadily mounts to a crescendo of thrill chords, 'The D'Arblay Mystery' will give you an interesting and exciting evening. It is 'good to the last drop.'" Carty Rank

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 N 7 '26 100w

"The D'Arblay Mystery' baffles detective and readers in an equal degree. And its solution satisfies the demands of literary unity and of the more than average human intelligence."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 13 '26 150w

"A reader of ordinary perspicacity will make a shrewd guess as to the murderer before he has read much over one-sixth of it. This may or may not be considered a weakness in a mystery yarn; in this book it is not. For the second half of 'The D'Arblay Mystery' is far more exciting and piquant than the first." J. Hawk

+ Lit R p16 S 25 '26 300w
N Y Times p18 S 26 '26 410w

"Mr. Freeman keeps the pot of mystery so boiling hot and sends such cold shivers of nameless apprehension down our backs that we are wholly grateful to him."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p634 S 23 '26 130w

FREEMAN, RICHARD AUSTIN. Puzzle lock. 327p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Hodder & S.] 26-7269

There is no mystery too deep for Dr. Thorndyke. These nine stories contain fresh proof of his ability to track the criminal and explain the crime. Contents: The puzzle lock; The green check jacket; The seal of Nebuchadnezzar; Phyllis Annesley's peril; A sower of pestilence; Rex v. Burnaby; A mystery of the sand-hills; The apparition of Burling court; The mysterious visitor.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Je 6 '26 300w
Lit R p8 Je 5 '26 70w

"Mr. Freeman has produced a group of exceedingly clever mystery stories. It is only the similarity of treatment that invites a disadvantageous comparison with the Conan Doyle stories. Mr. Freeman would do well to make that similarity less obvious and to give his detective a distinct individuality."

+ — N Y Times p17 Ap 11 '26 550w

"In each tale the author has conscientiously divested his enigma of every non-essential until it stands as a firmly compact, direct narrative whose framework might easily have served as the plot for a full-length mystery novel. His prodigal generosity in using up so much fruitful embryonic material to fill a single volume, cannot be too highly lauded." E. C. Beckwith

+ N Y World p7m Ap 11 '26 180w

Wis Lib Bul 22:198 Je '26

FRENCH, JOSEPH LEWIS, ed. Book of the rogue; studies of famous scoundrels. 399p il $3 Boni & Liveright

923.4 Rogues and vagabonds 26-10860

Each of these famously infamous men has been fortunate in his biographer, for these sketches are all written by men of letters. Only two of the fifteen knaves presented are fictitious characters. Contents: François Villon, by R. L. Stevenson; The Borgias, by Alexandre Dumas; Gilderoy, by Charles Whibley; Sir Henry Morgan, by John Esquemeling; Jonathan Wild, by Camden Pelham; Doctor William Dodd, by Camden Pelham; Barry Lyndon, by W. M. Thackeray; Count Cagliostro, by Thomas Carlyle; Mary Young, alias Jenny Diver, from The Newgate Calendar; William Ireland; Griffiths Wainwright, by Oscar Wilde; Vautrin the terrible, by Honoré de Balzac; 'Sir Roger Tichborne' (Arthur Orton), by Bram Stoker; Charles Peacy, by Charles Whibley; Slade, by T. J. Dimmesdale.

Reviewed by E. W. Burgess
Am J Soc 32:308 S '26 130w
Booklist 23:35 O '26

Reviewed by Edmund Pearson
Bookm 63:488 Je '26 50w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Jl 25 '26 600w

Boston Transcript p5 My 8 '26 560w
Cleveland Open Shelf p102 S '26
Lit R p8 My 8 '26 280w

Reviewed by L. S. Morris
New Repub 47:233 Jl 14 '26 450w

"It is decidedly entertaining to go through these well-written pictures of the various degrees of high rascality and refresh one's memory of these murderers, thieves, pretenders, quacks and ruffians." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p5 My 9 '26 200w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
Sat R of Lit 2:889 Je 26 '26 120w
Wis Lib Bul 22:230 Jl '26

FRI, JAMES LLOYD. Retail merchandising, planning and control. (Retailing ser.) 371p il $4 Prentice-Hall

658.87 Retail trade 25-13663

"Studies based on coöperation of store executives and the New York university school of retailing. Purpose is to assist the reader in recognizing and understanding sound principles underlying the operation of retail stores."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"To the reviewer, the author seems to have accomplished his purpose. His analysis is straightforward, his presentation is clear, and the problems presented have the appearance of reality. The treatment is sketchy in places; but this is necessary in a volume which essays to cover the whole field of retailing." Horace Secrist

+ Am Econ R 16:313 Je '26 800w

Booklist 22:196 F '26

"He is clear, logical, practical, and his book should be read with the attention it unquestionably deserves."

+ N Y Times p5 S 20 '26 580w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:307 Je '26

FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS GODDARD. Naval history of the World war; v 3, The United States in the war, 1917-1918. 310p $3.75 Harvard univ. press

940.45 European war, 1914-1918—Naval operations (24-14384)

"The present volume, devoted primarily to the function and performance of American naval forces in the Great War, embraces the whole scope of the American problem in France. The military requisites, the naval strategy and tactics required both to defeat the submarine menace and to convey troops and material on a colossal scale to France, are here set forth in all the complexity of their queries and all the brilliant execution of their answers."—Ind

Reviewed by C. T. Davis

Boston Transcript p2 J1 10 '26 3750w

"It is hard not to wax over-enthusiastic both over the performance of our navy and the competence of its annalist. Captain Frothingham has rounded out a singularly difficult and confused task. He has done it with clarity, distinction, and good judgment. Emphasis is properly placed; technical considerations are adequately weighed; and in addition the style has the admirable virtues of dignity without pretension and effectiveness without mannerism or artifice."

+ Ind 117:276 S 4 '26 150w

"This third and last volume of Captain Frothingham's lucid naval history of the world war is confined primarily to America's part in bringing the war to a successful end. As in the previous volumes, the author has drawn freely on German, as well as on English, French and American sources, and has produced a well-balanced, simple and accurate story. The fact that it is at once comprehensive, sound and readable promises a long life for it." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p3 S 5 '26 2000w

"It is the work of an expert in naval strategy, and is a sober, although readable history of events. Those who wish a popular story, with picturesque details, will go to some other book. This is a painstaking work of reference."

+ Outlook 144:92 S 15 '26 60w

FRY, CHARLES LUTHER. American villagers; with an appendix on the social composition of the rural population of the United States, by Luther Sheeleigh Cressman. (Inst. of social and religious research. Am. village studies) 201p $2.50 Doran

630.1 Villages—United States. United States—Social conditions 26-12730

The purpose of this study of American villages has been to discover how many and what kind of people live in them, what the villagers do for a living, and what the village does for the country as a whole. Appendices and source tables complete the work.

Am Pol Sci R 20:921 N '26 70w

Booklist 23:15 O '26

"Highly capable volume." Arthur Pound

+ Ind 117:191 Ag 14 '26 1400w

Reviewed by N. A. Crawford

Int Bk R p676 O '26 180w

"Both the general findings and the detailed statistics and discussions should prove valuable to extension workers and others concerned with problems of rural life." S. L. S.

+ J Home Econ 18:531 S '26 200w

"His real contribution is in showing that 'village' and 'open country' are distinct categories, statistically and sociologically, and that the common practice of combining both under the label 'rural' is scientifically vicious. His book is a noteworthy challenge to the sociologist, the educator, the economist and the political scientist to study more intensively the hitherto neglected American village." R. G. Smith

+ Lit R p6 D 18 '26 1000w

Reviewed by Evans Clark

N Y Times p1 J1 13 '26 1400w

Survey 56:470 J1 15 '26 20w

Reviewed by C. F. Ansley

Survey 57:233 N 15 '26 260w

Times [London] Lit Sup p919 D 9 '26 300w

FULLER, JOHN FREDERICK CHARLES. Pegasus; or, Problems of transportation. (Today and to-morrow ser.) 87p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

656 Transportation. Railroads. Motor trucks 26-10990

Believing that movement in all its forms is the mainspring of man's evolution, Col Fuller in this little book discusses the importance of transportation in relation to population, unemployment, and other social problems. In particular he outlines possibilities that lie in the development of roadless vehicles, like caterpillar tractors, to be used for cross-country transportation independent of roads.

Booklist 23:8 O '26

Reviewed by H. S. Solow

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 My 30 '26 150w

Boston Transcript p1 Je 19 '26 420w

"Colonel Fuller has chosen an inviting subject and succeeded in making it very interesting. It would have been better, perhaps, if he had given us less history and more prophecy; but, after all, there is real delectation in pondering the absurdities of the past." T. S. Knowlson

+ Lit R p10 My 29 '26 180w

"Apparently Col. Fuller is quite serious about all this, though the reader may be misled at first by his somewhat facetious style and suppose that he is not. As regards Col. Fuller's general thesis we must confess ourselves to belong to the ranks of those whose 'protean ignorance' he so despises and deprecates."

New Statesman 26:556 F 13 '26 400w

"Colonel Fuller may in many ways seem whimsical, fantastic and almost visionary in his devotion to the purely intellectual and imaginary side of his subject. This, however, must not be allowed to hide the practical, timely and so very important reactions of his book." J. St. L. Strachey

+ N Y Times p6 Mr 7 '26 1500w

Reviewed by W. J. Ghent

N Y World p4m My 30 '26 126w

"Very interesting and convincing. Don't let yourself be repulsed by the style, which is weird."

+ Outlook 143:580 Ag 25 '26 180w

"Col Fuller imagines some kind of roadless vehicle which may aid commercial transportation in the future; but as a study or prognostication of developments in the science of transportation, the book has as little pertinence and plausibility as the majority of the series."

— Spring'd Republican p14 My 12 '26 550w

"Like others of the Today and tomorrow series, this little book is fresh, vigorous stimulating and beautifully written."

+ Survey 56:643 S 15 '26 70w

"The author's vigour of expression and his enthusiasm are attractive even though the reader may not be prepared to accept all his conclusions. But there are many errors which reveal carelessness."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p145 F 25 '26 220w

FURFEY, PAUL HANLY. Gang age; a study of the preadolescent boy and his recreational needs. 189p il $2 (8s 6d) Macmillan

136.77 Boys. Child study 26-5309

The book describes the general characteristics of the preadolescent period or gang age, and presents a psychoanalytic study of boys of different types who manifest in different ways

the characteristics of the period. It is particularly addressed to the recreational leader but will interest all who have to do with boys and their problems.

Booklist 22:394 J1 '26

"Mothers of boys will enjoy reading this book. Teachers will like the book because it tells its story briefly and pointedly. The suggestions are specific and the analysis of the situation clean-cut and convincing." Angelo Patri

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ap 18 '26 380w

"The book is sketchy in spots because it is more or less a pioneer work and has little more than 150 pages of text. But its use of the case method; its reduction to scientific clarity of the author's finding in any particular matter and its readiness to admit lack of complete results should commend it to any one interested in the future citizen." T. J. McK.

+ Cath World 123:715 Ag '26 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p90 J1 '26

Reviewed by H. Y. McCluskey
El School J 27:310 D '26 680w

"The book is a thoroughgoing study of the limited period with which it deals, made by scientific methods and in accordance with scientific principles, but it is put into non-technical language, and will doubtless be of much value to parents, teachers and social workers."

+ N Y Times p20 Ap 11 '26 450w

Pratt p7 autumn '26

Springf'd Republican p10 O 8 '26 620w
Survey 56:268 My 15 '26 50w

FURNISS, HARRY. Paradise in Piccadilly; the story of Albany. 229p il $4 Dodd [12s 6d Lane]

914.21 London—Historic houses, etc. 26-13235

Mr Furniss gives an account of the history and associations of the unique set of bachelor chambers in London's West End, known as Albany, and of the many eminent men who have lived and worked in this exclusive retreat in the center of Piccadilly. Byron, Bulwer Lytton, Lord Brougham, Gladstone, Macaulay, John Lane and many other well-known Englishmen have been tenants of Albany. A complete list of these is given in the appendix. The illustrations are from sketches by the author and from photographs.

"The book is badly planned, or rather planless; its anecdotes are generally frivolous and not always new; the writing is undistinguished in style and the illustrations what we should expect from Mr. Furniss's facile pencil. It is worth adding, however, to one's shelf of London books since it is the only book on its attractive theme." S: Chew

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 21 '26 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p86 J1 '26

Lit R p3 Ap 3 '26 200w

Nation and Ath 38:786 Mr 6 '26 300w

New Statesman 26:720 Mr 20 '26 320w

N Y Times p7 Mr 7 '26 2100w

St Louis 24:172 Je '26

Sat R 141:125 Ja 30 '26 100w

"This is so agreeable a book that only with reluctance do we bring ourselves to describe it as a piece of book-making. Yet that is what it is, and evidence of the casual way in which the late Mr. Furniss went about making the volume is supplied not only by repetitions and some irrelevancies but by the contrast between the two chapters in which he had assistance and the rest. When Mr. Hannay guides the pen of Mr. Harry Furniss, or takes it from him, the people come alive."

+ Sat R 141:264 F 27 '26 700w

"This is a careless, happy-go-lucky book, put together anyhow, with much that is of interest left out and some not very relevant stories put in. But Mr. Furniss has illustrated it with some lively portraits and caricatures."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p90 F 11 '26 950w

G

GADGIL, DHANANJAYA RAMACHANDRA. Industrial evolution of India in recent times. 242p $2.50 Oxford [7s 6d Milford]

330.954 India—Economic conditions. India—Industries. Agriculture—India [26-1481]

"This is a survey of the economic history of India from the middle of the nineteenth century to the beginning of the world-war, written as a Master's thesis at Cambridge. It presents a striking picture of the changes in the condition of the artisan classes and the steadily increasing pressure of population on the land. The influence of foreign exploitation is apparently not a very significant factor for the author."—J Religion

"Mr. Gadgil's work was written as a thesis for a literary degree. Like most works produced under these conditions, it is complete and careful, but uninspired." E. P. White

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 J1 27 '26 580w

J Religion 6:336 My '26 70w

"Whoever is interested in Indian industrial evolution will find this book a great help and will be able to revise his points of view, if he has formed any previously, toward making a truer estimate of things." Harendranath Maitra

Lit R p8 My 1 '26 150w

Nation 123:301 S 29 '26 210w

GALE, ROBERT JOSEPH. Elements of child training. 299p $2 Holt

136.7 Child study. Children—Management 26-15916

Briefly and simply, yet as comprehensively as may be within the prescribed limits, the author discusses the physical, mental, and moral education of the child up to preadolescence. A bibliography is appended, and throughout the text suggestions for more intensive reading are made. There is also an index.

"Those who need anything as elemental as this book are not apt to realize their need. It is more a text book than anything else and for whom the text book has been written we cannot decide. In the preface the author ventures the hope that the book 'will not be found too technical for the average parent.' Clearly it is not for a social worker for it is too vague and general. And there is little in it that the parent with an elementary education has not gleaned from his own experience and the proper interest and feeling of parental obligation."

— Boston Transcript p7 S 18 '26 320w

"Has one outstanding chapter, The Child and Honesty, written by a man who actually remembers how the grown-up world looks through the eyes of a boy; it is a convincing plea for tolerance toward the mistakes of little children." Beulah Amidon

Survey 57:100 O 15 '26 160w

GALE, ZONA. Preface to a life. 346p $2 Appleton

26-18625

Like "Miss Lulu Bett" this is a small-town story. Bernard Mead engages himself to Laura Hawes, whom his mother had selected for him to marry, on the same day that he promises his dying father to stay in Pauquette, Wisconsin, and carry on the lumber business, which he hated. The next day he meets the woman whom he instantly recognizes as the right one.

GALE, ZONA—Continued

but he stands by his promise to marry Laura. Bernard settles down to a humdrum, but not discontented existence in a houseful of women—his wife, his mother and two maiden aunts—resolved to give everything its place—love, lumber, family, responsibility, obligation. Zona Gale tells the story of his search for reality and of his discovery thru suffering, disillusionment and re-awakening that reality is all about us if we can only break thru to it. Thruout the story there is a strong undercurrent of mysticism.

"It displays a sharpening sense of character and a fine development of power in reconstructing scenes, places, and moods." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:627 Ja '27 150w

"When we grasp the inner significance of the title we touch the consummate irony which is Zona Gale's greatest gift. Here is the other side of Babbitt and it is a little terrifying to behold. Women novelists excel in the comedy of manners, for a woman's life is a chain of human relationships and she rarely exists vividly outside them. Zona Gale's pen possesses the bite of the etcher's needle. Her portraits may be mere outlines, but they are there for all time." D. L. Mann

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 N 7 '26 1100w

"What any reviewer will see in this new novel by Miss Gale is that she has splendid material of which she makes too little. Style is only permissible when it tells the story clearly. This is a narrative steeped in obscure phrases. Half the time we find it necessary to read over and over again a sentence written by Miss Gale. The material in this novel is interesting. Much of the character analysis is extremely effective. Yet the novel as a whole is inartistic, blurred by a kind of emotional inadequacy." D. F. Gilman

Boston Transcript p4 N 13 '26 1450w
Ind 118:52 Ja 8 '27 280w

"There is some rather careless writing in the book. But there is a good deal of that everyday talk Miss Gale reproduces with such exactness and some illuminating touches of comment. Bernard's mother, with her appalled conviction that there really isn't any 'above' for her to rise to when she dies, is often pathetic, and the long account of his father's funeral has an acid irony. It is, taken all in all, a decidedly curious novel, this 'Preface to a Life.'" L. M. Field

Lit R p3 N 6 '26 700w

"When Miss Gale brings to the making of a character humor, sympathy, and an external point of view, she creates; when she is on the inside of a character looking out her sympathy may be even greater, but her humor, her amused watchfulness, her gift of surprise desert her, she flounders, and the character simply goes to pieces. Chiefly, I think, because in Preface to a Life Miss Gale is more concerned with spiritual experience, as a separate experience, than with the spiritual experience of a particular person. It is a case of the cart before the horse." R. L.

New Repub 49:23 N 24 '26 530w

"If in the past it has been held that Miss Gale channeled deeply but within an essentially narrow passage, this can no longer be said of her. The intent and sweep of her latest novel encompass the meaning of life itself, and the metaphysical questionings of her protagonist, whatever may be thought of their clarity, probe even beyond the limits of human experience." Grace Frank

+ Sat R of Lit 3:364 D 4 '26 750w

Wis Lib Bul 22:332 D '26

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Plays, sixth series. 115; 112:97p $2 Scribner [7s 6d Duckworth]

822

26-26281

Contents: The forest; Old English; The show.

Booklist 22:322 My '26

"One of Galsworthy's chief faults as a playwright is his tendency toward thesis writing. This characteristic is again apparent in 'The Show,' though 'The Forest' and 'Old English' are typical rather of his unflagging interest in displaying the effects of English tradition and ideas upon individuals."

Ind 116:368 Mr 27 '26 180w

Lit R p8 Mr 6 '26 130w

"Sylvanus Heythorp of 'Old English' you might remember as some one you had met and talked with for an evening. But most of the characters are lean personalities. Mr. Galsworthy always has something to say in his plays. We should prefer that he had less to say and his mortal puppets more." Wells Root

+ — N Y World p6m Mr 14 '26 120w

Springf'd Republican p20 Ap 7 '26 320w
Times [London] Lit Sup p894 D 24 '25 650w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Silver spoon. 320p $2 Scribner [7s 6d Heinemann]

26-14107

The latest chapter in the "Forsyte saga" is a continuation of "The white monkey" and is concerned with the further development of Fleur Forsyte, now about three years married to Michael Mont and socially ambitious. Out of a scene in Fleur's drawing room in which Soames Forsyte challenges a rival of Fleur's for calling his daughter a snob and lion hunter evolves a disagreeable libel suit which furnishes the setting for a picture of English manners and morals in the year 1924.

Booklist 23:80 N '26

"His sheer dexterity is a joy to behold; he works with such light, sure strokes they seem like a succession of happy accidents. A phrase, or sometimes no more than a word, will suddenly illumine a paragraph like a rocket, giving the same feeling of sudden pleasure. His graphic gifts increase rather than diminish; the technical competence of this story is marvelous." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 J1 11 '26 1350w

"It is still with the old ones that Galsworthy's sympathies lie. That is why he paints Michael so well; for Michael would go back to them and be one of them. He has little sympathy with Fleur. But Marjorie Ferrar—she who is more of this age than all the rest—he cannot do justice to. She succeeds despite him, not because of him. And if this novel falls below the level of those that have gone before it, falls even to the level of 'The White Monkey,' is it not perhaps because it is too much of today?" K. Schriftgiesser

+ — Boston Transcript p4 J1 10 '26 2300w

"Failing to find in the present novel the strength and the assurance of the Saga itself, one concludes that a perhaps never altogether living organism is now incapable of sustaining further appendages."

— Dial 81:443 N '26 50w

Reviewed by L. M. Field

Int Bk R p550 Ag '26 1250w

"The Silver Spoon" will neither increase nor diminish Mr. Galsworthy's high reputation as a novelist. It is a chip from his workshop rather than a broadly planned, fully modeled creation. But it will be justly liked and appreciated by his thousands of readers who are always ready to take crumbs from the master's table if circumstances forbid his giving them a full loaf." W. N. C. Carlton

Lit R p3 J1 17 '26 900w

"The Silver Spoon is, in its way, quite a good story. It has a plot in the old-fashioned sense, and most people who began to read it would continue in order to know what happens. If you look at the book merely as a story, it will stand investigation and discussion; if you try to look at it in any sense as a work of art, it fades away. It is not merely that the writing is often slipshod, and nearly always undis-tinguished. It is impossible to get any glimpse of form, any 'whole', in Mr. Galsworthy's conception." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 39:674 S 11 '26 1100w

"Compared with Mr. Galsworthy's own best, The Silver Spoon is a failure. But in the sense that it is far more enjoyable to read than most novels, that it carries you on and makes you eager to know what is going to happen, it is a success." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 27:612 S 11 '26 720w

"In 'The Silver Spoon', John Galsworthy has not written a great novel when the narrative is compelled to stand alone. In 'The Man of Property' there are passages of sombre magnificence for which there is not even a ghost of a counterpart in this latest story. And there is not a ghost of a counterpart for the reason that the author is too honest with himself, to say nothing of his honesty toward his readers, to permit their insertion. Not that he could not write them! He has too often given proof that he can. But they would have no place. They would ring false." P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p1 J1 11 '26 2350w

"The story, if not one of Mr. Galsworthy's best, maintains a high level. To call it lacking in distinction would be unfair. Quality is a vague term. Mr. Galsworthy's work has admirable qualities, but it misses that power to rise above itself the possession of which transforms a first-class writer into a great one."

+ Sat R 142:236 Ag 28 '26 900w

"Mr. Galsworthy's new novel is a good typical specimen of his work, with most of his characteristic merits and limitations. It shows him, as usual, absorbed by social problems, and, like Nature, more interested in types than in individuals, yet managing to tell a good story and to create some memorable people."

H. E. Woodbridge

+ Sat R of Lit 3:22 Ag 7 '26 900w

"It is the saddest of all things to lose heart; and The Silver Spoon is throughout a novel of loss of heart, loss of purpose, loss of conviction—a world gone astray, with no hope of finding the right path." Iris Barry

— Spec 137:314 Ag 28 '26 1000w

"Taken as a single entity, read without knowledge of or reference to its predecessors, it presents an interesting survey of contemporary English manners with a plot which borders on the trivial, but with characters mostly strong enough to give it plausibility, and suggestive idealism enough to offset the pettiness of its main subject. For those who have already become acquainted with the various ramifications of the Forsyte family, 'The Silver Spoon' will take unto itself a deeper interest." E. M. J.

+ Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 8 '26 560w

"If it seems thin, if it seems a little empty and spun out, if it seems rather laboured and made up than vigorously created, that may be because the author's artistic purpose was to make it seem so. It may be; but we do not think it was. For one thing, the English of the book is sometimes a good deal below Mr. Galsworthy's proper level."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p562 Ag 26 '26 800w

Wis Lib Bul 22:274 O '26

GANN, THOMAS WILLIAM FRANCIS. Mystery cities. 252p il $5 Scribner [21s Duckworth]

917.282 British Honduras. Lubaantun, British Honduras. Mayas [26-8294]

"The author of this book is an authority on the prehistoric Mayans; their civilization, culture, and traditions. He has examined and re-examined their burial mounds, pyramids, and subterranean walls. But in this book he has avoided the duller phases of excavatory work, and given us, instead, a plenitude of its high adventures. Within two hundred and forty-eight well-illustrated pages he gives a bald account of life as he found it in British Honduras."—Sat R of Lit

"Apart from the fact that the book has real value as a contribution to our knowledge of an ancient civilization, it is genuinely readable, being packed with anecdote and personal observation."

+ Booklist 22:414 J1 '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p65 My '26

"Extremely interesting volume. One does not need to have any archaeological learning to enjoy and appreciate this book."

+ Ind 116:554 My 8 '26 180w

Reviewed by A. C. Bierce

Lit R p6 Ap 17 '26 300w

Reviewed by Hartley Alexander

Nation 123:42 J1 14 '26 60w

"This is an exceptionally good travel book. The account of his adventures is extremely interesting, and he tells his story well."

+ Nation and Ath 38:654 F 6 '26 120w

Nature 117:17 Ap 3 '26 200w

"He has an extraordinarily interesting story to tell; he is an explorer and a scientist and the leading authority on his subject; he writes lucidly and entertainingly, and his book is engrossing."

+ New Statesman 26:278 D 12 '25 200w

"The chapters in which he deals with excavation at Lubaantun and other ruins will probably be found pretty dull going by the lay reader. He has not yet succeeded in writing a very easily readable book, albeit he has come nearer the mark than he did in his last attempt, the volume called 'In an Unknown Land.'" Gregory Mason

— + N Y Times p10 My 23 '26 400w

N Y World p6m Mr 14 '26 1050w

Outlook 143:259 Je 16 '26 260w

Sat R of Lit 2:671 Mr 27 '26 250w

"Apart from its archaeological importance, the book is excellent reading even for the most uninstructed reader. Here is romance: an ancient city buried for centuries in thick jungle and a narrative embellished with a wealth of anecdote and imbued with the personality of the writer. If criticism were to be made it would be on the score of many misspellings, especially in Spanish words."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p90 F 11 '26 550w

GANPAT, pseud. See Gompertz, M. L.: A.

GARDINER, ALFRED GEORGE (ALPHA OF THE PLOUGH, pseud.). Portraits and portents. 306p il $3 Harper

920 Biography

26-20927

In these sketches of a journalist, for nearly twenty years editor of the London Daily News, are presented some contemporary personalities chosen as embodying various aspects and portents of the times. Contents: Preface; Mr Stanley Baldwin; President Coolidge; Dean Inge; Viscount Grey of Fallodon; Lord Beaverbrook; Mr Winston Churchill; Lady Oxford; The Prince of Wales; Lord Balfour; Mussolini; Mr Arnold Bennett; Sir Austen Chamberlain; Mr Ramsay MacDonald; Lord Birkenhead; Suzanne Lenglen; M. Briand; Henry Ford; Mr John Wheatley; "Father Hindenburg"; John Maynard Keynes; Chicherin; Lady Astor; Mr W. R. Morris; Jack Hobbs; Earl Haig; M. Caillaux; Charles Chaplin; Miss Maude Royston; Mr L. C. M. S. Amery; "Jim" Thomas; Bernard Shaw; Sybil Thorn-dike; "Jix"; Robert Smillie; Lord Rothermere; Sir James Barrie; Mr "Tim" Healey.

"I find myself usually agreeing with Mr. Gardiner's estimate of a character, but now and then, as in the case of Ramsay MacDonald, sharply dissenting from it. The series contains thirty-seven subjects, and I can hear the American inquiring after a few of the more

GARDINER, ALFRED G.—Continued
noticeable absentees—Bertrand Russell, for instance." S. K. Ratcliffe

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 D 19 '26 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 D 8 '26 270w

"There are some praiseworthy sketches, some amusing ones, some amazing ones and some failures. The one on Lady Oxford is of the latter. It must have been done when the author was tired or self-enfolded. The one on Lady Astor is also quite indifferent. Both the amplitude and the variations of her temperament elude him. On the other hand, the sketches of Miss Maude Royden, England's most popular woman preacher, and Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen are excellent." Joseph Collins

+ — Lit R p2 N 27 '26 1400w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p1 D 12 '26 1600w

"One emerges from these clear-sighted, vividly-written pages, with a feeling of active familiarity with the current world spectacle, and the conviction that Mr. Gardiner knows exactly what he is talking about. However hopelessly muddled one may have been rendered by newspaper despatches and editorials, one feels that the scene has been illuminated and made understandable—even credible—by the insight of this shrewd, tolerant, and always witty British editor." Vincent Starret

+ N Y World p1m N 28 '26 480w

GARDINER, ALICE CUSHING, and OSBORNE, NANCY CABOT. Father's gone a-whaling. 198p il $2 Doubleday

26-14232

A story of old Nantucket for boys and girls. Peter's father was captain of a whaling ship, and from the time that Peter, then a nine-year-old boy, watched from a wind-swept beach a shipwreck and the thrilling rescue of the crew, he too longed to go to sea. The book tells of his adventures in the old shipping town until the day two years later when his father promised that Peter's wish should soon come true.

Booklist 23:41 O '26

"In characterizing the book I shall call it the chronicle of a sea-faring man's home. . . Erick Berry's pictures play a very definite part in creating this impression. There is a rigor and an imaginative quality in them which is lacking in the text. Good as the essential content of the book is, however, there is a primeness in the style and a lack of skill in handling the characters." S. St J. Power

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Ag 15 '26 950w

"A decidedly fascinating book for children about ten years of age and older, containing atmosphere and color of locality which cannot fail to be both educational and stimulating."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 4 '26 240w

Cleveland Open Shelf p114 N '26

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p705 O '26 60w

"It's very delightfully carried out and, no doubt, if read aloud by a sympathetic older person can be made quite interesting to children, but it isn't the book a child would choose by himself." J. N. Leonard

+ — Lit R p4 J1 24 '26 300w

"A clever little tale. . . The authors have collected their material from Nantucket people who could tell them yarns of life on the island many years ago, from old files of newspapers, from authentic accounts of whaling trips and wrecks and other incidents."

+ N Y Times p14 J1 11 '26 300w

"There is real color and freshness in this tale, as well as a most lifelike picture of early days on Nantucket Island; a story of unusual quality and interest." M. W. Bianco

+ Sat R of Lit 3:277 N 6 '26 100w

"This book will be a treasure for any boy or girl from seven to twelve; the most sophisticated youngster will appreciate the beautiful ship picture printed on the end pages."

+ Springfield Republican p7f O 10 '26 400w

GARDINER, EDWARD NORMAN. Olympia; its history and remains. 316p il $16.75 Oxford [50s Milford]

913.38 Olympia. Olympic games. Art, Greek [26-1836]

"After a short sketch on 'The Destruction and Recovery of Olympia,' and another on the 'Geography of the North-West Peloponnese,' [the author] presents a series of chapters on the history of Olympia from prehistoric times down to the late Roman Empire. . . The second part of the book is devoted to a careful description of the ruins of Olympia and to an excellent analysis of the treasures of art which were found at Olympia and which were so closely connected with the buildings."—Sat R of Lit

"Almost as fascinating as the tale of the discovery of Homer's Troy is this story of the excavation of Olympia and the reconstruction of the life of this great center of Greek religion." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 30 '26 1000w

"The best short but substantial summary which I have ever read." M. Rostovtzeff

Sat R of Lit 3:174 O 9 '26 400w

"Though well equipped on one side by his special researches in the field of Greek athletics, which make his chapters on the Olympian festival and its history pleasant reading, he seems to lack a sufficiently wide knowledge of archaeology to do full justice to his subject. We miss, too, the imae labor of finished scholarship."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p134 F 25 '26 680w

GARDNER, HELEN. Art through the ages; an introduction to its history and significance. 506p il $4 Harcourt

709 Art—History

26-11559

A world survey of the history of art—architecture, painting, sculpture, and the minor arts—from earliest times to the present. The volume is amply illustrated, and an appendix contains bibliography, source of illustrations, glossary and index.

Booklist 23:19 O '26

"For what it is, there is, humanly speaking, no fault to be found with it, in writing or manufacture or price: a comely guidebook and felicitous volume of reference for general civilized use. An especial point is its extensive citation of works of art in our own museums, now becoming so creditable." R. C. Holliday

+ Bookm 64:95 S '26 150w

"It is inevitably subject to certain shortcomings. It must generalize too rapidly; the illustrations lack size and space. But the book is sound enough to weather such criticism." W. R. Agard

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 J1 27 '26 1250w

Boston Transcript p7 S 18 '26 150w

"Her history is unimpressive—it possesses the conventional virtues of thoroughness, diligence, and wide knowledge of sources, but in piercing insight into the plastic monuments of the world—a quality peculiar to the historian who is something of the artist as well—and in narrative charm, it is singularly sterile. . . As a critic Miss Gardner is not to be trusted; as an historian she has assembled an abundance of carefully documented information." T: Craven

+ Dial 81:435 N '26 650w

"Primarily a book for students, this volume is valuable for its references and bibliography, and it may be read with interest for the justice and sanity of its comment."

+ Ind 117:136 J1 31 '26 150w

"An invaluable book of reference." C: de Kay
+ Int Bk R p760 N '26 150w

"Most textbooks on the history of art are unbelievably dull, repetitive, and prejudiced. By contrast with these, Art through the ages is full of solid substance, scholarly in background, and liberal in point of view. It has a concrete basis of freshly chosen photographs in rich variety, many unfamiliar enough to surprise a connoisseur, yet typical enough to distinguish hundreds of major and minor traditions in a score of fine and applied arts. The primitive, exotic, and modernistic are given a share of representation among them that is rare in textbooks, if still somewhat slighter than could be wished for. By its illustrations alone the book is enough to tempt the reader to closer acquaintance with the originals." T: Munro

+ Nation 123:326 O 6 '26 900w

"For all that a descriptive guide book can properly do, Miss Gardner's survey is excellent; and he who asks more from it, does not know the essential limitations of books." L: Mumford

+ New Repub 47:236 JI 14 '26 180w

"While the book has been written primarily for use in educational institutions, it will be invaluable for the general reader who wants something that will give him a fundamental understanding of the development and the historical significance of art."

+ N Y Times p14 Ag 8 '26 800w

"Her pictures are chosen with a good deal of taste and her facts are important. But it smells of the classroom. It is written in the language of a bright student's examination paper."

+ Outlook 143:353 JI 7 '26 300w

"It lacks the evolutionary march of the 'Apollo' and also the warmth and color of Faure, but it has compensating merits of its own. It is clear, accurate, and admirably illustrated, and, though bulky, surprisingly light in the hand."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:907 JI 3 '26 220w

Spring'd Republican p10 N 18 '26 140w

Wis Lib Bul 22:272 O '26

GARLAND, HAMLIN. Trail-makers of the middle border. 426p il $2.50 Macmillan

26-18423

In "A son of the middle border" Hamlin Garland related the story of his own boyhood in the middle West; in "A daughter of the middle border" the story of the girl who became his wife is told. In his latest book, which appears to be part biography and part fiction, he tells the story of his father, Richard Garland, from his boyhood days on a stony Maine farm, thru his pioneer days in Wisconsin until he returned from the Civil war.

Booklist 23:176 Ja '27

"Mr. Garland's treatment of the Civil War is masterly. Here is a book of great importance to men and boys, and for their wives and sisters and mothers, too. Hamlin Garland can show aces to any of the youngsters of the day. It's a great book!" J. F.

+ Bookm 64:349 N '26 400w

"The men, who are all strong and noble, and the women, who are all virtuous and fair, move like wooden figures about the set, making speeches devoid of individuality. Hamlin Garland, who put himself so clearly on the pages of 'A Son of the Middle Border,' shows here his inability to 'get inside' the people of another generation, to 'become what he sings.'" Garreta Busey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 O 24 '26 850w

"Trail makers' is fiction, but fiction marvelously true to life, informed with verity, most interesting in its vital details of the period." J. E. C.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 13 '26 940w

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 D '26

"Perhaps the present novel is no better than its predecessor, 'A Son of the Middle Border,' which established Mr. Garland as a figure on the literary scene. But it is every bit as fine. A splendid piece of historical writing and a fascinating story in the bargain."

+ Ind 117:681 D 11 '26 240w

"There are times when the reader forgets that it is fiction; wonders whether it is fiction at all. The narrative moves with directness and simplicity. Little use is made of the stock contrivances of fiction. As in real life certain persons appear for a brief moment to play their little parts in the scheme, then to disappear forever, like ships passing in the night."

Lit R p3 N 6 '26 800w

"It possesses a certain sturdy narrative integrity—sometimes plodding and sometimes poetic—and it earnestly seeks to recapture the flavor of life by honest—rather than melodramatic—devices."

+ Nation 123:696 D 29 '26 50w

R of Rs 74:670 D '26

"The story lacks the pulse and color of Mr. Garland's own autobiography. He has not taken advantage of the license of his romance form to inject purely imaginative materials, and in filling in the outlines of his family chronicle—in retelling the fireside tales of his parents—he lacks the vitalizing aid of personal experience. The book is the least vivid and forcible of [his] three," Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 3:270 N 6 '26 900w

Wis Lib Bul 22:298 N '26

GARNETT, MRS LOUISE (AYRES). Eve walks in her garden. 133p $2 Macmillan

26-19170

Delicate lyrics and singing ballads, and a longer dramatic poem, Resurgam, which is a moving hymn of faith, make up the poems in this volume.

"This book of flawlessly simple poetry has a direction and a maturity that make of it a beautifully whole thing. It is richly diversified and yet in one flowing piece, various in its emotions yet single in soul." L. G. Marshall

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 D 26 '26 290w

"If you like pretty verse, you will probably think the poems in 'Eve Walks in Her Garden' quite fine. I do not mean to slur them—even though I don't happen to like pretty verse; it has a place when it is well done, and beyond all doubt, Louise Garnett's is that," J. M. M.

Lit R p12 D 11 '26 80w

"A volume of utterly simple poetry, which for all its delicacy covers deep ranges of emotion."

+ Nation 123:sup619 D 1 '26 170w

GARNETT, RICHARD. Twilight of the gods, [and other tales]; introd. by T. E. Lawrence. (Blue jade lib.) 300p $3 Knopf

26-26513

"Stories which satirize inoffensively various religions and philosophies. Appearing originally in 1888, they appealed to a discerning few, among whom were Swinburne and Oscar Wilde. They are now republished in the Blue Jade Library. Richard Garnett was the librarian of the British Museum reading room, and the grandfather of David Garnett, author of those fantastic tales Lady into fox and The sailor's return."—Cleveland Open Shelf

"Graceful, polished and subtle stories."

+ Cleveland Open Shelf p96 JI '26

"For all their elegance, they lack, no doubt, something of lightness and verve; at times they are actually heavy. . . But the keenness of Dr. Garnett's observations, the charm and wit of his individual phrases, the fragile irony of his approach, are sufficient preservative to keep his book fresh for some time to come." L: Kronenberger

+ Int Bk R p585 Ag '26 520w

GARNETT, RICHARD—Continued

"The tales are packed with real humor—humor of the nature that will appeal to bookish men. There is gentle irony poked at the bombastic irony of the didactic philosopher; mild but none the less stinging and penetrating sarcasm for the hypocritical ecclesiastic; sympathy for ordinary and therefore gullible and failing folk." W. S. Stuart

+ Lit R p6 Ag 14 '26 300w

"The prose is a correct prose and Richard Garnett knew well enough how to make use of beautiful old English words, like the word 'sooth,' but as was the case with Kinglake and many another Victorian writer his very best periods seem curiously the product of an official armchair. The fact is the book is dull. One wearies of the particular species of veiled facetiousness that it offers. The irony is all right, but it is such a very mild variety of irony." Llewelyn Powys

— + Nation 122:648 Je 9 '26 720w

"Each story is studied with brilliant dialectic, witty turns of phrase, bits of mordant satire, which are recognized with a quiet smile and which tempt the reader to return again and again. The collection of tales is the sort of book that is apt to stay out of the library shelves and to be enjoyed in rereading at odd moments." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p9 My 30 '26 820w

GARRETT, GARET. Ouroboros; or, The mechanical extension of mankind. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 101p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

333.4 Machinery in industry. Machinery 26-2004

Using as his analogy the fabulous snake Ouroboros, the encircling serpent that swallowed his own tail, the author draws a picture of the modern monster, machinery, which man has created to be his tool, but which now threatens to turn and devour him.

Reviewed by F. T. Carlton

Am Econ R 16:462 S '26 300w

"The economists may be able to show that Mr. Garrett's analysis of the process of exchange is a rather superficial one; his little book is none the less a very stimulating one to read, and suggests an avenue of approach to the further study of the problem." F. N. House

+ — Am J Soc 31:826 My '26 150w

Am Pol Sci R 20:466 My '26 30w

Booklist 22:233 Mr '26

Reviewed by Stuart Chase

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Mr 21 '26 720w

Boston Transcript p1 Mr 6 '26 320w

"Another excellent book in a most excellent series; a series unflinchingly stimulating."

+ Lit R p8 Ap 17 '26 380w

Nation 122:615 Je 2 '26 50w

"In a style which, by its very rhythm, generates an atmosphere of portent, Mr. Garrett sketches the outlines of his picture with Olympian strokes. The final result is vastly disturbing to the complacent: perspectives seldom revealed stand out stark and forbidding, others fondly accepted are all but completely obliterated. Its effect is like that of a modernist painting upon the more conventionally minded; one gets the impression that reality has been lost sight of at times in the interest of an inner, subjective pattern; but the impact is authentic. It is difficult to see the world in quite the same simple way again." Evans Clark

+ N Y Times p1 F 21 '26 2450w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

N Y World p6m Ja 24 '26 500w

Pratt p11 autumn '26

R of Rs 73:447 Ap '26 70w

"A lively and penetrating little book. His argument, which is exceedingly well stated, shows no apparent flaws, granted the correctness of his premises, most of which are only too obvious by now." E. M. Nicholson

+ Sat R 142:63 Jl 17 '26 1150w

"Mr. Garrett unhappily disbelieves in logic; this, no doubt, accounts for the fact that he can in the same essay ascribe superhuman power to machines and affirm his belief in a law of human progress. It also explains his frequent use of mixed metaphors. But this book should be read, especially by the owners and controllers of machines. It may not cure their disease but it will at least frighten them with a bold array of symptoms. And they need to be frightened." E. C. Lindeman

Sat R of Lit 2:590 F 27 '26 400w

Spec 137:20 Jl 3 '26 550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p439 Jl 1 '26 800w

GARRETT, WILLIAM A. Treasure royal; being the romance of a modern hunt for treasure and an adventure of James Drew, detective. 283p $2 Appleton

26-8008

Whether the death of Marion Freeland's uncle was a case of suicide or murder it was obvious that his closely guarded secret did not die with him but that others shared his knowledge of the lost treasure of King James and were ready to fight for the clue to its hiding place. Guy Fenton stumbled into the affair by accident. But having met Marion it was no accident that he decided to help her fight her uncle's enemies and at any cost to recover the royal treasure.

"Frankly, this book left me unstirred. Here is an ancient and honorable company of platitudes, unknissed by imagination, and the ending is like one of those saccharine movie fade-outs." Carty Ranck

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 My 23 '26 60w

Boston Transcript p5 D 4 '26 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p129 S '26

"'Treasure Royal' is a readable yarn which follows faithfully the proprietary formula for compounding murder, mystery and adventure. The result is a negligible tale whose artificiality is painfully transparent." E. C. R.

— + Int Bk R p526 Jl '26 260w

"It is an ingenious story, pleasingly devised." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p6 Ag 14 '26 80w

"The reader of mystery and adventure books will be familiar with the situations in this book. To those who like tense, melodramatic action, 'Treasure Royal' will be a royal treasure, indeed."

N Y Times p19 Je 27 '26 450w

GARRISON, CHARLOTTE GANO. Permanent play materials for young children. (Series on childhood education) 122p il $1.25 Scribner

372.2 Kindergarten. Play. Toys 26-9009

This small illustrated handbook for the kindergarten and the primary teacher gives suggestions for the selection of play materials for nursery schools, kindergartens and primary grades, and states the principles which underlie the selecting. Parents as well as teachers may find the book helpful.

J Home Econ 18:648 N '26 80w

Wis Lib Bul 22:225 Jl '26

GARROD, HEATHCOTE WILLIAM. Keats. 158p $2 Oxford [5s Milford]

B or 92 Keats, John

"Professor Garrod, writing of Keats with a scholar's fineness and the all but creative attention of a practised and passionate reader, is disposed to bring us back to the more conventional image and bid us think of Keats as primarily a romantic, a romantic who fretted against the limits of his romanticism, not seeing that they became limits through this very fretfulness—a romantic plagued, in short, with inappropriate and unrealisable ambitions."—

Times [London] Lit Sup

"It is true that Professor Garrod's supple wit is to be found on a much higher level in his 'Wordsworth,' to which, indeed, this 'Keats' is in no way equal. But here wit is always pleasantly in evidence, and at least invariably serves the purposes of the author." F. K. Brown

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 O 31
'26 600w

Boston Transcript p5 O 27 '26 800w

"Since he is a critic of rich and fine equipment, the result is an essay hardly to be matched in English criticism for accuracy of analysis or completeness of comprehension."
Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 123:326 O 6 '26 380w

"With sound and careful scholarship go qualities almost equally rare, and this little volume—to use deliberately a phrase often flung about recklessly—is indispensable for the student of Keats. If it is heavy, it is weighty; and those who bestow on it the trouble it demands will reap their reward. It is eminently distinguished, we think, by sanity of judgment." E. E. K.

+ New Statesman 27:556 Ag 28 '26 1150w

"It is impossible to read Mr. Garrod's judgment of the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn' without some grief, because the delicacy and vitality of his critical apparatus make him much more than the scholastic critic and surround his judgments with the kind of authority which appears only when the poet meets in his critic a mind like his own. But Mr. Garrod is nowhere at his happiest with Keats."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p517 Ag 5 '26
3050w

GARSTIN, CROSBIE. West wind. 345p $2
Stokes [7s 6d Heinemann]

26-15575

The reckless, rascally hero of "Owl's house" and "High noon" reappears in the final chapter of his bold career, first as privateersman preying on French and Spanish ships. He is caught, and for an interlude held captive by slender Spanish hands. He then escapes to become a smuggler, awakening old fears in hearts that love him, and cornered at last by his enemies, the king's men, makes a last brave and gentlemanly gesture for his son's sake.

Booklist 23:133 D '26

"The portrait is complete, astonishingly so; it is done in the round. And there is a lavish abundance of incident, of humor and color, a communicated sense of enjoyment which is rare in modern fiction. Mr. Garstin has achieved the amplitude as well as the length of the old three volume novel; he packs his hold with a rich cargo and carries a deckload into the bargain." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 10
'26 850w

"The book is a good mirror of its predatory epoch and correctly appraises the merits and demerits of the age which it holds up to view."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 20 '26 170w

"Never was there hero to whom one's heart goes out more completely, with his chivalrous generosity, his bigness of soul to overbalance his picaresque rascality. Ortho Penhale is no figure in or out of a book—he is real, he draws the very breath of life in each of the author's pages. The least little figures on the crowded canvas of this sweeping epic trilogy leap to life when they speak, and every individual portrait is an etching in color." F. H. Martens

+ Lit R p4 S 18 '26 880w

"The book is fascinating. This novel does not need to be convincing; it is enough that it is entertaining, and it is that—in excelsis." M. E. U.

New Repub 48:306 N 3 '26 160w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 27:740 O 9 '26 140w

"Swift in action, rich in color and atmosphere, the story at times presents the baffling qualities of a sequel in which the author has taken too much for granted the reader's acquaintance with some of the episodes and characters of the preceding books. Add to this a curious indirectness of narrative, an over-elaboration of minor personages, pawns who merely serve for the move of the moment, a too generous cataloguing of the old songs of Cornwall, and a style that at times dangerously approaches stiltedness—there you have the flaws of 'The West Wind.'"

+ N Y Times p8 S 12 '26 480w

"Mr. Crosbie Garstin contrives to get a truly romantic atmosphere into his new novel."

+ Spec 137:544 O 2 '26 80w

"Three volumes of flamboyant, breathless adventure, sudden quixotic generousities, equally sudden brutalities, a series of beau geste—courage with 'a fine polish on it'—Ortho Penhale himself could scarcely be dissatisfied with the record of his life as it stands written by Mr. Crosbie Garstin in 'The Owl's House,' 'High Noon,' and this last of the trilogy, 'The West Wind.'"

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p694 O 14 '26
400w

Wis Lib Bul 22:276 O '26

GARVIE, ALFRED ERNEST. Christian doctrine of the Godhead; or, The apostolic benediction as the Christian creed. 496p $4 Doran
[16s Hodder & S.]

231 God

26-3305

A history and an exposition of Christian theology centering upon the doctrine of the Trinity—Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Times [London] Lit Sup p228 Mr 25 '26
1400w

GEISTER, EDNA, and HINMAN, MARY WOOD. Getting together; fun for parties of any size. 144p $1.35 Doran

793 Games

26-3168

Fun-making and ice-breaking suggestions for large or small groups. There is a chapter of grand marches and one of games especially adapted to the small group.

Booklist 22:319 My '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p50 Ap '26

Pratt p23 summer '26

GENTLEMAN WITH A DUSTER, pseud. See Begbie, H.

GEOFFREY, THEODATE, pseud. Immigrant in Japan. 284p il $3 Houghton [12s 6d T. W. Laurie]

915.2 Japan—Description and travel. Japan—
Social life and customs 26-7690

The writer is an American woman who lived in Japan for several years, first in the foreign colony of Yokohama and then in a small village five miles from town. She learned the language and lived as the Japanese lived. From such a viewpoint she describes Japanese life and character and her everyday experiences among the people.

Booklist 22:370 Je '26

Bookm 63:xxiii Je '26 60w

Reviewed by Miriam Beard

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Mr 28
'26 650w

"Some of the book ran as a three-part serial in the Saturday Evening Post last summer, but enough new—and much of it even more interesting material—has been added to it. The illustrations, thirty in all, are made from snapshots and photographs taken, for the most part, by the author. Japan will be something more than a name to you after you have read this book."

GEOFFREY, THEODATE, pseud.—Continued
J. W. Maury

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 13 '26 1700w
Cleveland Open Shelf p86 J1 '26

"This volume would naturally be classed with travel books, but it is so different, so far superior to even the best of travel books on Japan, that it should have a classification to itself."

+ Nation 123:200 S 1 '26 120w

Reviewed by Gilbert Thomas
Nation and Ath 40:196 N 6 '26 80w

Reviewed by Nathaniel Peffer
New Repub 47:345 Ag 11 '26 250w

"The author writes about her experiences and observations with a clever pen and a keen, shrewd, but sympathetic mind. She has a sense of humor of the kind that does not put itself on display but is much in evidence in viewpoint and in appreciation of the amusing in character and situation."

+ N Y Times p20 Mr 28 '26 400w

Pratt p28 summer '26

St Louis 24:252 S '26

"It is well illustrated and gives entertainingly its information. Further, the book is trustworthy because its author learned the language, adopted the customs, then lived intimately with these much maligned people. It is a good book for those who know nothing of that country, and pleasant reading for those who have seen Japan."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:671 Mr 27 '26 70w

"A sparkling gayly informing account of one woman's observations and should go far toward promoting a better understanding of our neighbors on that island."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f J1 11 '26 820w
Wis Lib Bul 22:193 Je '26

GEOFFREY, THEODATE, pseud. Powdered ashes; a story of modern Japan. 301p $2
Houghton

26-17282

Travelling with her father and husband in Japan, Paula Payne, very young, not yet in love with her husband, meets a suave Japanese aristocrat. His attentions please her until, frightened by his increasing ardor, she repulses him. Tsurumi then abducts and imprisons her, hoping to utilize her money and position to further his political schemes. A resourceful journalist discovers Paula's whereabouts and, marshalling the girl's father and husband, plans a raid to free her. Tsurumi for his sins meets justice at the hands of his own grandfather.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 N 14
'26 140w

"The characters of 'Powered Ashes' are all true enough. It is the way they are put together and work against each other that makes one's spirit of disbelief rise up. The author of this absorbing and hectic warm-blooded romance has inevitably seen something of the world and roamed along a sophisticated coast, yet all her characters are exceedingly abrupt. Her situations are all hand made, natural enough in their general plan, but without the slightest suggestion of persuasive detail. Character and even action are submerged beneath plot."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 27 '26 260w

N Y Times p17 Ja 2 '27 460w

Sat R of Lit 3:322 N 20 '26 70w

"The author's knowledge of Japan and her sprightly style are assets which the heavy villainy of the plot does not obscure. Her portrayal of Japanese character and life is more convincing than her story."

+ Springf'd Republican p7f O 31 '26 450w

GEORGE, WALTER LIONEL. Gifts of Sheba.
347p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Chapman & Hall]
26-3793

The story of Isabel Eden and her three husbands embodies Mr George's theories of women and marriage. Isabel is a modern young woman, self-reliant and somewhat domineering, a firm believer in the equality of the sexes. In her first husband, Hugh Brodrick, she encounters a will as strong as her own. Each resents the other's domination and divorce quickly results. Isabel's next venture with the lovable and weak-willed Peter Keith is equally unfortunate. His inefficiency forfeits her respect and the situation is not improved when a crippling accident throws him upon her mercy and protection. Peter's death cuts an impossible relation and Isabel turns to Angus Hallam, the cynic of the story, who offers her marriage with freedom, but without love. As he takes her Hallam observes: "the only men who can live with modern women are those who don't care a damn for them."

"There is something decidedly unAnglo-Saxon about Mr. George's opinions. A system of life without pity is hideous and inhuman. It repels. To believe him wholly we must look upon him as a monster rather than as a brave man daring to look upon life as it is." D. L. Mann

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 7
'26 550w

Ind 116:611 My 22 '26 130w

Reviewed by L. M. Field
Int Bk R p246 Mr '26 650w

Reviewed by Ellnor Hillyer
Lit R p6 Mr 27 '26 400w

Living Age 328:697 Mr 27 '26 250w

Reviewed by Edwin Muir
Nation and Ath 38:816 Mr 13 '26 180w

"In those who demand of a book more than sheer brilliance of writing and observation, the overwhelming sensual cynicism of Gifts of Sheba will give rise to amusement darkening into faint disgust." M. M.

+ New Repub 46:54 Mr 3 '26 250w

"It will not rank with W. L. George's best novels. It is too formal. It appears to be written to a thesis. None of the characters comes alive." P. C. Kennedy

— New Statesman 26:649 Mr 6 '26 80w

"The novel narrows down to a piece of argumentation. The argument produces the characters according to its needs; the characters do not give rise to the argument. Most unfortunate of all, the theorizing is flagrantly trite, almost passé. Mr. George got himself known as an authority on feminism, but at a cost; for the student in him ruined the novelist."

— N Y Times p8 F 28 '26 620w

"Much ado about worse than nothing; it is not the morals of the book I am finding fault with, but its elaborate dullness." H. W. Boynton

— Outlook 142:463 Mr 24 '26 180w

"It is an exceedingly clever book, but it lacks mystery and in place of the imagination that illuminates there is a chilly scientific perceptiveness that gives a high degree of visibility but little more. Throughout the book, with all its wit, its incisiveness, its deftness and its serious concern for the problem of human relationships, there sounds a note of discontent, not exactly divine, but too insistent and penetrating to be muffled by Hallam's ingenious sophistries. The book's vitality springs from this inarticulate querulousness, and not from Mr. George's efforts to explain it away." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 141:268 F 27 '26 450w

"The book is an argument, thinly clothed and thinly humanized, aired as fiction. It has, to be sure, some fairly readable incident, some fairly clever conversation; it proves that Mr. George could present the opposite sex with greater clarity than he could his own. But a good novel 'Gifts of Sheba' is not."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:618 Mr 6 '26 420w

"The novel seems as fruitless as, in Mr George's view, is the 'modern woman.' Nemo and the white mice are the only characters in it; all the rest are names, and nothing more."

— Springf'd Republican p5a F 14 '26 380w

"Cleverness and occasional wit do something to redeem this sad book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p96 F 11 '26 480w

GERBAULT, ALAIN. Fight of the "Firecrest;" the record of a lone-hand cruise from East to West, across the Atlantic. 169p il $1.50 Appleton [8s 6d Witherby]

910 Voyages and travels 26-15235

This is the record of an exciting cruise across the Atlantic from Cannes via Gibraltar to New York, made by the writer single-handed in a small sailboat.

"His story is told with the verve of the Frenchman, but it squares with the best ideals of the seaman anywhere." D. R.

+ Ind 117:275 S 4 '26 360w

"Strangely written naive little book. Obvious, as a good deal of it may be, one cannot but be impressed by the author's sincerity and quite extraordinary love of the sea. The book is full of hints for owners of small craft, and there is an appendix explaining the exact rig and other equipment of the 'Firecrest.'"

New Statesman 27:60 Ap 24 '26 260w

Times [London] Lit Sup p234 Mr 25 '26 570w

GERHARD, ALBERT F. Handbook for bakers. (Century vocational ser.) 484p il $5 Century 664.6 Baking 25-24247

"Written by a practical baker, presenting underlying theory as well as practical information. Covers most of the aspects of the baker's work, dealing with raw materials, equipment, management, technology of bread making, cake ornamenting and decorating, and sweet goods manufacture."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:357 Je '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:379 JI '26

GERWIG, GEORGE WILLIAM. Declaration of independence for young Americans. 122p $1.25 Doran

973.3 United States. Declaration of independence 26-9182

This little book for young people sketches the history and background of the Declaration of independence, discusses the ideal of freedom which forms its basis and the struggle for that ideal thru the ages, and explains the meaning of the Declaration, phrase by phrase.

Booklist 23:41 O '26

Boston Transcript p2 Je 26 '26 150w

"This volume is typical of a class of books whose content is a hodgepodge of truth, lofty idealism and mythological jargon."

— Hist Outlook 17:348 N '26 100w

"Fortunately the author does not produce a series of homilies. He states his view of citizenship positively and constructively. He stresses obedience to recognized and definitely constituted authority, justice, loyalty, patriotism, service, co-operation and vision." C. W. H.

+ Lit R p13 S 4 '26 170w

St Louis 24:324 N '26

"It is not criticism to say that the book deals with a practical subject in an extremely idealistic manner. Perhaps a greater amount of definite historical data could have been used. The interest drags somewhat in places on account of the sameness in style and technique. However, if used as a supplementary work with a more informational treatment of the Declaration of Independence and its backgrounds, the text should prove a valuable aid in stirring the youthful imagination and in making fact more fascinating. The junior high school boy and girl should read the book with enthusiasm and thus gain in historical background and appreciation." R. B. Weaver

+ School R 34:637 O '26 450w

Wis Lib Bul 22:334 D '26

GERWIG, HENRIETTA. Fifty famous painters. 416p il $3.50 Crowell

759 Painters

26-17147

With no attempt at critical appraisal of their work, the author writes very interesting short sketches of the lives of fifty famous painters, ranging in country from Italy to America and in time from Giotto of the fourteenth century to Sargent of our own. At least one example of the work of each master is given, and many of these illustrations are in color.

Booklist 23:161 Ja '27

"Miss Gerwig has succeeded in making these fifty famous painters live again in the pages of her delightful book. She has made a real contribution to the literature of art."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 24 '26 140w

"Her book is one of fact, not fancy, but the embroidery of real literary taste is wrought about it."

+ N Y Times p20 D 26 '26 130w

Wis Lib Bul 22:330 D '26

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. John Wanamaker. 2v 398;497p il $10 Harper

B or 92 Wanamaker, John

26-18311

Mr Gibbons tells in full detail the story of an extraordinary career, a long, adventurous and apparently happy life, filled with the most varied activities and interests.

Reviewed by M. R. Werner

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 N 14 '26 1750w

"Within these five covers is gathered an immense amount of detailed information, in the midst of which the reader wanders about, beguiled largely, if at all, by the author's presentation. Effective and occasionally brilliant as the latter is, there are various barren moments; the first half of the second volume 'sags' badly. After the first four hundred pages, author and reader alike begin to tire. Brevity is the spice of biography, no less than of other things." W: R. Brewster

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '26 2000w

"Professor Gibbons, it seems to me, has done a remarkable piece of work. He has produced a biography of a great American without in any sense slopping over, without concealment, a plain tale without any attempt at fine writing. His two volumes are truly an absorbing account, and they touch upon American life in its fundamental aspects at so many points that, in such a wealth of material, it is difficult to discriminate." T: L. Masson

+ Lit R p4 N 20 '26 1200w

"While this is assuredly the definitive and official life of Wanamaker, one still wonders—is it the life?" R. F. Dibble

Nation 123:sup616 D 1 '26 440w

"Mr. Gibbons's life of John Wanamaker is not a critical biography. It is the kind of record which the subject would wish to have written, and which people who like him will wish to read. It is nevertheless a work of good faith. Mr. Gibbons has honestly achieved the point of view of the man of whom he writes, and he never loses it." R. M. Lovett

New Repub 48:275 O 27 '26 1650w

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS—Continued.

"The reader of Dr. Gibbons's book is carried along on a swirling stream of narrative at an almost breathless pace. There is very little pause for contemplation. Occasionally the author peers into the flow of Mr. Wanamaker's inexhaustible activity to see the personality below. But the glimpses are far too fleeting for real intimacy. One gets a definite impression of certain obvious traits, but they are left unexplained, their roots undisturbed by the author's light and swiftly moving touch." Evans Clark

+ — N Y Times p3 N 14 '26 1750w

"It could not have been an easy task to write this biography, for its data were chiefly letters and memoranda that offered reflections rather than the facts themselves. That the product is comment rather than narrative may well have been inevitable under the circumstances, and that the background across which the central figure moves is all too shadowy. But the tale is full of romance and adventure and engaging qualities for all the shortcomings of its telling." W. P. Bezell

+ — N Y World p10m O 31 '26 450w

GIBBS, ANTHONY. Elder brother. 351p $2 Dial press

26-16147

"An elder brother deliberately sacrifices his own career for the sake of his junior, a brilliant young man of whom great things are expected. When the younger brother becomes involved in a scandal which will ruin his chances in life, he allows his older brother to take the blame for it—and there the book breaks down." —Ind

"A gay, insouciant objectivity punctuates this second novel by the son of Sir Philip Gibbs, but that species of talent indicated by the words 'light touch' is nowhere evident. This novel of two brothers who incarnate two attitudes achieves ironically emphatic statement, is cynically probing, deftly important. Effecting the sudden demise of a character, Anthony Gibbs writes, 'She was perfectly dead.' It is in that way that the author views his world—a little superlatively, a little puzzled, irreverent and amused." H. B. Armitage

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 O 31 '26 650w

"It was ill-considered charity to label the book outstanding, but there is enough difference between it and its predecessor to call it a pronounced step forward." C. B. P.

Boston Transcript p4 O 9 '26 550w

"Up to a certain point this novel is easy, vivacious, and real. . . The last part of the book is unconvincing sentimentality and bathos."

+ — Ind 117:424 O 9 '26 130w

"From the story itself I derived a measure of real enjoyment; but I think it would have stood a greater chance of winning a large public if the author's mannerisms (one of them is the too frequent use of 'damnable') could have been expunged or at least curbed." W. K. Bradely

+ — Int Bk R p776 N '26 270w

"In spots the work inclines to over-writing, excess of irrelevant detail and vagueness of characterization, but on the whole it is a distinctly creditable and interesting performance." E. C. Beckwith

+ — Lit R p6 O 2 '26 250w

"Viewed from the level of his first novel, this second one by Mr. Gibbs is a distinct step up. The author has put aside some of his Christmas-tree ornaments of style; he no longer turns verbal handspings in front of his characters. The London and Oxford backgrounds are skillfully managed, and the narrative moves at a good clip."

+ Nation 123:487 N 10 '26 80w

"Mr. Gibbs has written a book which he does not entirely make his own. It is a mixture of mannerisms imperfectly fused by an overhasty artistry. But the central theme of 'The Elder Brother' and many of its passages where he does not feel constrained to play to the gallery reveal him as a writer of originality, distinction and unusual force, and his book should command a very numerous public."

+ — N Y Times p10 S 26 '26 520w

Springf'd Republican p7f O 24 '26 280w

GIBBS, ARTHUR HAMILTON. Labels. 295p $2 Little [7s 6d Hutchins]

26-15605

"The domestic circle of Sir Thomas Wickens, K.B.E., otherwise a well-meaning but trite and fatuous London stock jobber, knighted for financial patriotism and general impeccability, becomes under the glass of the author a microcosm, considerably magnified, of an upper middle-class English home, after the armistice. To this fireside, which still glows with all the fervor of official propaganda, comfort, and 'the triumph of the holy cause,' return from the front the children of the House of Wickens, to wit; Madge, who has been nursing amid the rear shambles, Captain Dick of a fighting artillery regiment, and Thomas, the eldest, who has been nearly starved to death in a prison camp for conscientiously objecting. The education in readjustment of both the parents and young folk now begins, and from this potential a current of considerable voltage electrifies the rest of the story."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"Labels is a fine courageous book worthy of every friendly and thoughtful mind. The reader may find attitudes in it with which he may violently disagree. I think he will agree with the reviewer, however, that the book makes a dramatic and moving story, and that its bold attack on the stupidity, the hypocrisy, the cruelty and the vile lying which are the corner stones of bloodshed is one we all ought to appreciate and aid." H: Boston

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '26 300w

Booklist 23:133 D '26

Bookm 64:223 O '26 100w

"Labels' is a real novel with a genuine plot about several interesting people instead of social theories about automatons spouting propaganda. The book possesses an undeniable virtue,—a well sustained narrative interest. Whatever one may think of this or that character, the lure of what is conjured out of the situation takes one to the happy, if not too ecstatic end." Hervey Allen

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 S 12 '26 880w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p2 S 18 '26 1500w

"The whole novel is full of declarations about changes and new ideas, the changes and ideas being left almost if not entirely undefined." L. M. Field

Int Bk R p709 O '26 500w

"Labels' is a war story, or, rather, a post-war story, and an exceedingly good one, too. It bears the marks of having been written at white heat. The author evidently has had the story bottled up in his system awaiting a favorable opportunity to write it. Any story written under such circumstances is bound to be alive, vital and interesting." W. O. Tewson

+ Lit R p3 S 11 '26 1000w

Nation 123:646 D 15 '26 100w

"The fact that Mr. Gibbs's morals are good, and that he is on the side of the angels in this argument, will not keep his book from being a best seller, nor save it from its abject and pervasive mediocrity." Robert Wolf

— New Repub 48:279 O 27 '26 80w

"Assembling twice-told materials with considerable skill and verve, Mr. Gibbs gives us a very readable and entertaining story indeed."

+ N Y Times p16 S 5 '26 1100w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

N Y World p10m N 7 '26 250w

"It is neat, readable, to some extent thought-provoking, this novel, but it is not alive or impressive. We like its dexterity, its rapidity, and its spirit, but it is not a book which moves us by its truth to human nature or its vision of the forces with which it professes to deal."

Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 3:100 S 11 '26 800w

"A trenchant and useful study of post-war psychology." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 57:46 O 1 '26 800w

Wis Lib Bul 22:275 O '26

World Tomorrow 10:36 Ja '27 160w

GIBBS, GEORGE FORT. Flame of courage. 326p $2 Appleton

26-15786

Because her beauty claimed the royal attention, Héloïse Guéret, an actress of Rouen, was banished to Canada by the king's mistress, Madame de Pompadour. Thus at one stroke the wily Madame removed a rival and gained an emissary to spy on the machinery of government in New France. Jacques Davol accompanied the party, ostensibly to write the official report of its findings and to protect Héloïse who was known to him under an assumed name and rôle. The element of mystery about this dour man deepened after Canada was reached. Héloïse was alternately drawn and repelled by him but melted at his sudden passionate avowal and admitted to herself her love for him. Thereafter the dangers they shared in a closing net of jealousy and intrigue fanned the flame of courage into a beacon of safety for their love.

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 D 12 '26 240w

"It must not be assumed that history interferes with the plot of the story in any marked degree. It is always in the background, without taking liberties of fact, Mr. Gibbs has joined it with romance in a very happy proportion." H: T. Murdock

Lit R p18 O 23 '26 250w

"Most of the characters and their adventures, as is common to this old-fashioned species of romance, are beyond the pale of human reason, but the vividness and dash with which the tale is told exclude it from all trace of tedium."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:216 O 16 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p937 D 16 '26 150w

Wis Lib Bul 22:333 D '26

GIBBS, JEANNETTE (PHILLIPS). (MRS ARTHUR HAMILTON GIBBS). Portia marries. 296p $2 Little

26-14917

Jane Thorndike is a young and successful lawyer, already junior member in the firm of Dwight and Thorndike, when Tommy Kent, friend of her childhood, returns from South America, an engineer with a growing reputation. He sweeps her into marriage. The story tells how without sacrificing her career she becomes a successful wife and mother.

Booklist 23:176 Ja '27

"The novel is saved from mediocrity by a nice sense of character drawing and a real theme. Her style is spare and too undecorated for my taste, but her story is excellent and provocative." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:350 N '26 400w

"In Mrs. Gibbs's handling there is chiefly heat and little light. From the point of view of fiction, if not of law, it seems hardly fair to stack the cards so that all the intelligence, self-control and maturity appear on the feminist's hand, to be countered only by mediocrity and childishness." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 O 3 '26 450w

"Mrs. Gibbs has plenty of talent for novel writing. She knows enough to have a few characters in her story, and make them effective. She has humor and a gift for dialogue. The very fact that the heroine has such an unpleasant effect on the reviewer is proof that the story is worth reading." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 25 '26 760w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 D '26

"The problem is one much discussed at present: can a woman successfully retain her own job after marriage and make a success of both careers. Mrs. Gibbs answers the question in the affirmative, and in a way that all, whether of her opinion or not, can enjoy. She has no need to be ashamed of the immaturity of her work, for it gives definite promise of better things to come."

+ Ind 117:276 S 4 '26 90w

"'Portia Marries' is a first novel. It is a vehemently feminist story, written with compelling force and sincerity, and in the latter half gives promise of far greater work by the author." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p2 Ag 21 '26 460w

"The subject deserves larger treatment. It is too brief and conventional in its style and plot. But it pretends to be nothing more than a light, amusing story about a girl who had brains and vitality enough to engage in two professions at the same time."

N Y World p4m S 5 '26 240w

Outlook 144:155 S 29 '26 280w

"For narrative purposes her book is readable enough, but it cannot be said, even in an isolated case, to settle the problem very thoroughly."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:178 O 9 '26 420w

Spec 137:1162 D 25 '26 90w

Wis Lib Bul 22:298 N '26

GIBBS, SIR PHILIP HAMILTON. Unchanging quest. 327p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

26-2545

"'Unchanging Quest' begins in the early nineties and comes down straight through the great war and the Russian Revolution and the occupation of Germany. The plot, as such, is slight, for it embraces the first thirty years of half a dozen young people, their reactions to one another, and their more or less subduing by the uncompromising time spirit. Holding these various personalities together is the individuality of the narrator and his life-long passion for Katherine, who marries a radical Russian Prince and so shifts part of the action to Moscow during those years when the ancient regime was being smashed to pieces."

-N Y World

Booklist 22:330 My '26

Bookm 63:202 Ap '26 20w

"Mr. Gibbs's version of the war is not startlingly new. Still, so many new things have been said about the war that it is a relief to find the conventional version, an old familiar vehicle, so well greased and so modest that it passes almost unheeded along the avenues of one's brain."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ja 24 '26 750w

"Once in a while a human chronicle is written which knocks down crumbling walls and opens vistas on far horizons. Such a one today appears from London, Sir Philip Gibbs's cry of a world out marching following a perilous gleam." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 9 '26 1900w

Cath World 123:428 Je '26 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p54 Ap '26

Dial 81:171 Ag '26 120w

"A stimulating novel, not entertaining or humorous, but deeply significant."

+ Ind 116:278 Mr 6 '26 120w

"While the book on the whole does not show the hand of a master in the manipulation of its material, there are many individual pas-

GIBBS, PHILIP HAMILTON—Continued
sages that are strong and striking, and that in themselves justify the author. The chief merit of the novel consists in the flaming hatred which Sir Philip manifests against war and all that war breeds. This vein of protest against warfare is forceful enough to make one desire a wide reading of the book." S. A. Coblenz

+ — Int Bk R p456 Je '26 350w

"It is the impression that 'Unchanging Quest' is truth come too late that is somehow depressing. We read the book in two or three sittings and finished it late one night. It left us wide awake and sleep crept to us slowly and painfully. It gave us back years of tortured life and, it is true, not much hope for the future. It is realism in that brand we can most feelingly recognize." Walter Yust

Lit R p2 Ja 23 '26 1000w

"His pictures of the war, of pre- and post-revolutionary Russia, and of a well-intentioned but deplorably confused intellectual activity, are as brilliant as ever. None of his characters, however, has any vitality."

+ — Living Age 327:692 D 26 '25 130w (Reprinted from Outlook)

Nation and Ath 38:154 O 24 '25 430w

New Repub 46:80 Mr 10 '26 180w

"The merit of the book lies in its description of episodes: Sir Philip can make a scene come alive, but it is a pity he cannot—or at any rate does not—do the same for his characters." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 25:727 O 10 '25 70w

"If Mr. Gibbs would allow those people who are quite as disgusted with war as he is to the privacy of their own emotions, and turn his hand to a period novel of pre-Boer England, one feels that his success would be distinctive enough to justify the experiment. As it is, like any flag-flapping politician, his writings are so entwined with sure-fire appeals to the world's lacerated heart that the 'message' obscures the small measure of art which he has achieved in his successive novels."

— N Y Times p9 Ja 24 '26 800w

N Y World p7m Ja 17 '26 70w

"With all its flaws—and they are many enough—there is a certain urge about the book, a note of sincerity, something that holds together what would otherwise be a handful of scattered motives. . . . It is true that the author must scurry at an undignified rate of speed across certain stretches of years that do not enter intimately enough into his scheme of action; but even so, 'Unchanging Quest' holds together." H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y World p6m Ja 31 '26 700w

"One of our innumerable modern novels of lonely seeking; but it happens to be also an excellent story about some most interesting people, a true human interpretation—and therefore contains as many morals as you like to look for, instead of being built around a single moral, like a funeral cross on a wire frame." H. W. Boynton

+ Outlook 142:462 Mr 24 '26 130w

Sat R 140:449 O 17 '25 140w

Sat R of Lit 2:792 My 15 '26 360w

"A very thoughtful and absorbing piece of work, but it is not so much a novel as a 'History of Our Own Times' in the guise of fiction."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p593 S 17 '25 380w

GIBSON, CHARLES ROBERT. Scientific amusements & experiments; interesting & amusing experiments, illusions & clever conjuring tricks easily performed, with directions for making inexpensively the necessary apparatus when it is required. (Scientific amusement ser.) 216p il $2.50 Lippincott [5s Seeley, Service]

793 Scientific amusements. Tricks 26-1104

These card tricks, parlor stunts and experiments with light, heat, and sound will provide the amateur entertainer with ample material for mystifying and amusing his audience.

Boston Transcript p1 N 28 '25 100w

"The chapters on 'Experiments with Light' and 'Optical Illusion' are singularly good. Give this book to a boy you like a great deal." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p260 Mr '26 60w

"The descriptions and instructions are simply written and are eminently intelligible, and Mr. Gibson is to be congratulated on his collection of entertaining experiments which require but little apparatus. No boy reading this book will fail to try some of these at once."

+ Sat R 141:100 Ja 23 '26 200w

"It presents a series of experiments in light, heat and sound, designed to instruct as well as to entertain; and if some of them are rather slight, they have the merit of requiring very simple apparatus for their execution."

Times [London] Lit Sup p807 N 26 '25 80w

GIBSON, WILFRID WILSON. I heard a sailor. 133p $2 Macmillan

821

[26-26138]

"Some of these poems, as the title indicates, have a decidedly salty air; but it is not a gay, rollicking, maritime atmosphere, rather it is a melancholy expression of the fascination of the sea. Other poems deal with weird or fantastic aspects of love, life, and death in the English countryside."—Booklist

Booklist 22:242 Mr '26

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 20 '26 100w

Living Age 328:387 F 13 '26 100w

"Good, clean work, smacking of soil, sea, cinders. He is various and accurate in his descriptive pieces. The North Country is justly proud of him. But he is a deductive rather than an inductive poet." Robert Graves

+ — Nation and Ath 38:442 D 19 '25 80w

"Messrs. Gibson and Palmer—they are both genuine poets, though of no great calibre—are on the side of Langland—Anglo-Saxon rather than Norman-French, popular rather than aristocratic. Mr. Gibson is the more fastidious and the more polite. His sympathy with human life (especially the humble life of farms and roadways), with all animate and even inanimate things, gives his verses their special charm."

+ New Statesman 26:488 Ja 30 '26 500w

"Wilfred Gibson has clearly felt the influence of A. E. Housman, as is especially attested by his economy and finality of expression, perhaps above all others Housman's distinguishing traits. Yet if there is something of the author of 'A Shropshire Lad' here, there is not Housman's power to catch and imprison in the particular something that is universal. To do this is the unique power of Housman, and it raises him out of the minor rank to which Gibson, with everything else granted, still belongs." P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p8 N 29 '25 500w

"Mr. Gibson's new poems are very unsatisfactory. In nearly every respect they fall short of his old poetic level. The strains are forced, the notes are few. . . . It would be idle to pretend that 'I Heard a Sailor' is not much superior to the bulk of contemporary verse. But it is not good enough to reach us under the name of Mr. Gibson." E. Davison

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:631 Mr 13 '26 550w

Reviewed by C. H. Warren

Spec 136:92 Ja 16 '26 150w

"He lacks the impulse for lyric flights, as also an adequate foundation in himself from which to launch them. Yet when he leans upon folk tradition and its metrical conventions, as in such tragi-comic ballads as 'Walty Lee and Young Dic,' he can combine a buoyant rhythm which captures the ear with a simple subtlety of sentiment that is wholly convincing."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p896 D 24 '25
800w

GIDE, ANDRE PAUL GUILLAUME. Vatican swindle (Les caves du Vatican); tr. from the French by Dorothy Bussy. 278p $2.50 Knopf 25-22755

"The Vatican Swindle" is Gallic in the most diverting sense of the word. It recalls Anatole France at his slyest. It is plot, and it is implied commentary; it is a mystery story centering around an unmotivated crime and the story of a gigantic confidence game; it is satire and irony, and it is action; the persons in it are piquant individualities and vehicles for the movement of Gide's plot. . . The swindle consists in the mulcting of pious Catholics—the action takes place in 1890, during the pontificate of Leo XIII—by bogus priests who tell a specious yarn to the effect that the Pope has been imprisoned by the Free Masons, that a usurper reigns in his place, and that a huge bribe must be placed in the hands of the jailer to free the Pope. Without irreverence, M. Gide squeezes the situation dry."—Int Bk R

"The style is full of gusto, as if the author enjoyed his work. The imagination works freely and the plot marches boldly ahead, galloping through the most preposterous situations without breaking its neck. Reading 'The Vatican Swindle,' one has the impression of standing at the threshold of a new romantic era." Malcolm Cowley

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ja 17 '26 1800w

"A rapid and fascinating, in many respects a great novel; its significance goes far beyond the theme."

+ Dial 80:427 My '26 120w

"All coheres, it is a charming unit, a fluent synthesis of many fictional forms—the detective story, the thriller, the picaresque yarn, the satire. 'The Vatican Swindle' might have been a potpourri, but it is a master chef's dish, fit to set before a king."

+ Int Bk R p267 Mr '26 500w

"The Vatican Swindle" is a ditty-bag of the rarer odds and ends of melodrama, gathered by a man of discrimination, of cultivated personality; a man of exciting social convictions." Merton Winship

+ Lit R p4 D 5 '25 350w

"Beyond question a joy to read. It is beautifully articulated and superbly written. It is filled with delicious, quiet mischief of submerged laughter. It has clarity of vision, precision of performance, and magic and mystery and suspense. It is a glorious and satisfying 'thriller,' which actually thrills, a sly, almost inadvertent, satire, an ironic vision of life."

+ N Y Times p8 N 22 '25 620w

"M. Gide has written a hugely entertaining novel." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y World p7m N 22 '25 700w

Reviewed by E. S. Bates

Sat R of Lit 2:539 F 6 '26 750w

"Except for the fact that one gets hopelessly involved in the maze of too many characters, this is a most entertaining book to read, and a complete change from the ordinary mystery story."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 D 25 '25 250w

GIELGUD, L. E. Red soil. 307p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Heinemann]

[26-11035]

The novel gives a powerful picture of the disaffection of the Russian army during the Bolshevik uprising in 1917. Mutiny breaks out in a regiment quartered in a small village. A handful of officers under the command of a weakling prince are held at the mercy of the mutinous troops. With them are an aged nobleman and his daughter who have come to them for protection. The beleaguered group is betrayed by one of their number to save his skin.

The traitor's brother, an officer whose integrity and courage have captured the heart of the nobleman's daughter, rides for help. He returns with reinforcements and in a bloody clash the revolutionists are wiped out.

"Red Soil" is worth reading for its picturesque milieu and its unusual characters rather than for its somewhat naive plot."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ag 15 '26 100w

Boston Transcript p4 S 8 '26 250w

Reviewed by C. F. Greeves-Carpenter
Lit R p4 Je 19 '26 200w

"It is written with an admirable directness for one thing; and, for another, Mr. Gielgud has not forgotten that, for a story to be really exciting, the protagonists must have some interest in themselves. Peter Abramovitch, the 'Red' leader, is excellent, and Henryk, Stanislas's brother, is much more the kind of person one would expect to meet in life than in adventure stories."

+ Living Age 328:651 Mr 20 '26 250w (Reprinted from Observer)

"The story is quietly told, but it is full of fine observation and genuine power. Mr. Gielgud neither exploits nor glosses over the horrors of his theme." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:782 Mr 6 '26 160w

"It astonishes me how lightly people take this business of writing. Here is Mr. Gielgud, for instance, setting out to tell a story: a quite good story, whose hackneyed incidents still have power to hold the attention. Stevenson, if I remember right, said of a certain passage in Walter Scott that it was not only bad writing but abominably bad narrative besides. Mr. Gielgud incurs the same condemnation." P. C. Kennedy

— New Statesman 26:648 Mr 6 '26 1050w

N Y Times p20 D 19 '26 220w

"It is a feather in Mr. Gielgud's cap that he can refresh melodrama with touches of genuine psychological insight. 'Red Soil' is not a story for the squeamish; but there is a great deal in it besides coincidence and sensation. The fickle murderous crowds are particularly well described." L. P. Hartley

Sat R 141:166 F 6 '26 200w

"Red Soil" will arouse the most torpid reader. But as story goes, this one wherever it treats of the principals involved, is little if at all better than stagey and ill-manipulated melodrama, offering a dénouement opposed to the very facts it reveals, and far too concessive toward a romantic tradition of storytelling to harmonize with its background."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:903 Jl 3 '26 300w

"Characters and appearance, of officers, heroine and revolutionary leaders alike are perfectly definite; the combat of wits and the more sanguinary fighting are given with an arresting sureness of pen and, the book closed, one exhales a breath of satisfaction at a piece of writing, of no great literary merit perhaps, but for sheer entertainment extremely well carried through."

+ Spec 136:233 F 6 '26 200w

"Red Soil," presumably a first novel, is burdened by both the necessity for historical accuracy and the ghastliness of its theme, but its clever characterization and the general distinction of its writing are of undoubted promise."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p60 Ja 28 '26 420w

GILBERT, OSCAR PAUL. Men in women's guise; some historical instances of female impersonation; tr. by Robert B. Douglas. 299p il $3.50 Brentano's [12s 6d Lane]

920 Biography

The persons discussed are the Abbé d'Entraques, Abbé de Choisy, the Chevalier d'Eon, Philippe d'Orléans, and Jenny de Savalette de Lange.

Bookm 64:640 Ja '27 140w

GILBERT, OSCAR PAUL—Continued

"Nothing is more commonplace than an enervate bohemianism and 'Men in Women's Guise' is too frequently permeated with a mild putrescence to provide stimulating reading."

J: W. Gassner

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 N 7 '26 340w

Boston Transcript p5 D 8 '26 170w

"This is rather an inept book on an obscure but not very interesting subject."

— New Statesman 27:123 My 15 '26 160w

N Y Times p26 D 19 '26 160w

Sat R of Lit 3:219 O 16 '26 40w

"The reviewer, having been himself disguised as a woman for several weeks during the War, picked up this book with a not unnatural interest. Let me say at once that there is nothing morbid in these pages. Disguises are always interesting to read about. This is an unusual and amusing book." F. Y.-B.

+ Spec 136:sup999 Je 12 '26 290w

"There is no evidence that the people of whom he writes are not to be classed as feeble-minded. They have no historical importance and little historical interest."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p357 My 27 '26 160w

GILBERT, RODNEY YONKERS. What's wrong with China. 315p $4 Stokes [10s 6d Murray] 915.1 National characteristics, Chinese. China. China—Foreign relations [26-14980]

The first and larger part of the book is given almost entirely to a discussion of Chinese shortcomings and an analysis of the inherent faults and foibles which have retarded China's progress and brought about her present chaotic condition. The author, an Englishman, disclaims any spirit of prejudice in dealing with Chinese character and ways and protests, rather, a warm liking for the Chinese. It is his hope and belief, he says, that such plain speaking is for Chinese good. The latter part of the book, which is in the nature of an appendix, is a sketchy history of foreign influence in China.

Booklist 23:72 N '26

Reviewed by H: K. Norton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 1 '26 1700w

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 14 '26 300w

"A well written and interesting study." F. H. M.

+ Lit R p6 Jl 31 '26 100w

"The book is well worth reading, but should by no means be used as a textbook. There are too many generalizations and exaggerations for it to claim authority, and while the author is obviously sincere in his quest for the medicine which will cure all China's ills, he has failed to avoid many of the traps which lie in the path of the most wary writer on things Chinese."

— + Nation and Ath 39:48 Ap 10 '26 650w

"The first chapter of Mr. Gilbert's book, entitled 'Illusions,' is one of the most searching analyses of the incompatibility of Eastern and Western ideas published since Meredith Townsend's 'Asia and Europe.' Three other chapters in particular deserve careful attention; the second, called 'Social Traditions,' the fifth on 'Standards of Manhood,' and the last on 'Chaos and Foreign Relations.'" N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p10 Jl 11 '26 1350w

"Much that Mr. Gilbert has set down in his rôle of the candid friend provides food for serious reflection; but, on the whole, his book is disappointing in that it is made up of devastating criticism unrelieved by constructive thought."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p272 Ap 15 '26 460w

GILBREATH, OLIVE. If today have no tomorrow. 369p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Murray]

26-8617

Tho the Acars have lived in Russia for two centuries the English characteristics still remain in the blood, and mingled in Michael's veins with the Russian fatalism is the Anglo-Saxon sense of honor. With the coming of the revolution the Acars are stripped of everything but their home. Moscow society is overturned. During that period of chaos and terror all sense of values is destroyed. Separated from Adrienne, his fiancée, who cannot enter Russia, Michael is drawn by the fatalism the title suggests into voluptuous intrigue. He is lured into marriage with an unloved woman, but remains faithful until betrayed by her. Gradually the English blood reasserts itself. Michael goes to meet Adrienne who can restore to him his heritage. In finding her he finds himself, but even so there is tragedy in their meeting.

Booklist 23:80 N '26

"It is a truly splendid picture of a chaos which is not even yet understood, and which had its beginning in the national character itself. The author knows her people well, and her picture of Moscow in the early years of the war is no superficial thing, but a well realized study. As a novel the book is a trifle inert. There are too many people and too much repetition, and some of the characters are mere puppets without life or reality."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 Ap 18 '26 420w

Boston Transcript p6 My 22 '26 360w

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 D '26

"Miss Gilbreath has painted a strong, vivid canvas, but she has also shown a definite tragic sense. The closing chapters of the book are genuinely and profoundly tragic. This is an achievement in a time which has known too much tragedy to take it altogether seriously."

+ Ind 116:503 Ap 24 '26 100w

"The contrasts throughout the book are vivid, and both the discussions and the disclosures of Russian life and character are exceedingly interesting. There is, too, a rare charm in the pictures of the Russian country, pictures full of the color and fragrance of flowers, the rich depth of friendly forests, the comfortable dignity of ancient homesteads." Katherine Woods

+ Int Bk R p387 My '26 580w

"It is a sensitive, thoughtfully written novel, in the same sense that E. M. Forster's 'A Passage to India' is a sensitive and thoughtful book; indeed, it is by far the most eloquent novel dealing with Russia we have read in the past handful of years." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p5 Ap 17 '26 1050w

New Repub 47:121 Je 16 '26 150w

"Structurally the novel is not all that could be desired. Miss Gilbreath does not keep tight rein on the course of her narrative, and it is full of repetitions, loose ends, and climaxes too understated to achieve their full effect. But her pictures of the Russian aristocracy confused or imperturbable at the trend of events, brilliant, dissolute and sophisticated, are most convincingly authentic and sharp."

+ — N Y Times p8 Ap 25 '26 620w

N Y World p7m Ap 18 '26 220w

"The Bolshevik Revolution dominates the entire book, and it is in her depiction of the titanic upheaval that the author is at her best. She writes here with brilliant flashes of vividness and observation which seem to bear the seal of eye-witness contact, but beyond these passages her book is not of an equal impressiveness."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:875 Je 19 '26 200w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ap 25 '26 250w

Springf'd Republican p7f Je 20 '26 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p341 My 20 '26 150w

Wis Lib Bul 22:332 D '26

GILCHRIST, MARIE EMILIE. Wide pastures. 103p $1.25 Macmillan

811 26-9697

Nature poems, sonnets, and lyrics make up the contents of this little volume. "Many of her poems are pictures rather than songs. But her reproductions are lyrics not prose pictures." (N Y Times)

"As a poet, she is at most times not distinguished; her work, while pleasing, has no particular depth, intensity, or power, and little of the touch of individuality; but her evident love for the woods and fields, the sincerity of her interest in the outdoor world, and the accuracy of her observation have lent the book a value it might not otherwise possess."

— + Bookm 64:106 S '26 150w

"The poems combine sincerity, and fresh spontaneity of mood with astonishing poise and maturity of thought and expression."

+ Cleveland Open Shelf p73 Je '26

"This is a book for the out-of-doors, a book to take away on vacation, a book to quicken the eye and refresh the jaded mood." K. L. Bates

+ Lit R p7 Je 12 '26 700w

"Miss Gilchrist has an appreciation for the more fugitive aspects of nature. A reader's world is made sweeter by poems of the homely genuineness of many of the lyrics in 'Wide Pastures.'" —

+ N Y Times p6 My 9 '26 300w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman

Outlook 143:384 Jl 14 '26 20w

GILES, RAY. Breaking through competition. 179p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

658.87 Marketing. Retail trade. Competition 26-3592

Hints for the manufacturer and dealer on how to capture and extend a market for their product in the face of competition. The author tells how this has been done by several well-known concerns and in other chapters talks about local idiosyncrasies of the buying public in different sections of the country.

Management and Adm 11:295 Ap '26 100w

GILKEY, CHARLES WHITNEY. Jesus and our generation. 183p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [10s Cambridge univ. press]

232 Jesus Christ 25-28066

The aim of the six Barrows lectures delivered at various student centers in India, 1924-1925, is to set forth Jesus as our generation sees him, "the source and sum of what is most central and vital in the Christian religion." Contents: Jesus and our generation; Jesus' way of life; Jesus' life with God; Jesus and the mysteries of life and death; The lordship of Jesus; Jesus and the future; Index.

Bookm 63:xxvi My '26 100w

Reviewed by A. W. Vernon

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 F 28 '26 260w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 12 '26 250w

J Religion 6:219 Mr '26 30w

"The Christian faith in the deity of Jesus is expounded with many apt illustrations and carefully stated arguments."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p67 Ja 28 '26 120w

GILKEY, JAMES GORDON. Faith for the new generation. 159p $1.75 Macmillan

230 Christianity 26-15642

The book is an attempt to answer questions on religious problems which have arisen out of the author's contact with college students, and to formulate for young people a clear and definite statement of the essentials of Christianity.

Boston Transcript p4 N 13 '26 260w

"Dr Gilkey does not mistake the temper of his audience. And it will be found that while he asks young people to accept only what is intellectually and ethically valid, he has a message of large positiveness and constructiveness to present."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 S 28 '26 420w

GILLETT, JAMES B. Six years with the Texas rangers, 1875 to 1881; ed. with an intro. by M. M. Quaife. 259p il $4 Yale univ. press [18s Milford]

976.4 Texas rangers. Frontier and pioneer life 25-19577

An interesting account of a stirring period in American history. This is the story of the Texas rangers in action during the six years that the author was one of them. The organization has remained thru the years, tho the duties of the rangers of today are very different from those of the earlier, harder times described in this book. First published in 1921, the book in its present edition has been carefully revised by Mr Quaife and considerable additional information has been supplied by Captain Gillett.

"I am glad that it has fallen to me, who met and knew and once or twice rode with J. B. G., to praise this book, an admirable performance." C. J. Finger

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 17 '26 750w

"This is a new and revised edition of the book to which Captain Gillett has added an appreciable amount of fresh material. It is not merely a history but it is a story full of excitement and adventure, a story which is as likely to appeal to boys as to grown ups, for the life of the Ranger fifty years ago was very exciting."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 30 '25 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p65 My '26

Ind 117:219 Ag 21 '26 500w

"He is an honest, painstaking writer, with that lack of humor and imagination by which nature protects those who take human life in large quantities, and the picture he gives of the frontier rings supremely true."

+ Outlook 142:266 F 17 '26 360w

"Written with all the charm and sincerity of naïveté (since he is unskilled in literary composition), combines all the excitement of a Western yellowback with the genuineness of a first-hand historical document."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:380 D 5 '25 160w

"The author's narrative is unpretentious, sometimes marred by over attention to trivial detail, and often arranged without regard to chronology; but it presents an interesting and convincing picture of life and manners in what has appropriately been described as the Middle Ages in the history of the United States."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p75 F 4 '26 780w

"The book is written in a style that is always simple and direct and often vivid." J. B. Hubbell

+ Yale R n s 15:801 Jl '26 200w

GILLIAT-SMITH, ERNEST. Saint Anthony of Padua according to his contemporaries. 223p $2.50 Dutton [6s Dent]

B or 92 Anthony of Padua, Saint

The life of the great Franciscan saint is told from contemporary chronicles and biographies and legends that have come down from his own day.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 S 5 '26 130w

Cath World 124:132 O '26 70w

"The author is to be congratulated on the care with which he has sifted his evidence, and succeeded in making his picture of the great Franciscan Saint convincing. It is a pity so many originals are quoted in the text. They are usually translated, it is true, but are often not essential, and even when necessary, would be far better in a footnote or appendix. Their presence in the narrative is irritating."

GILLIAT-SMITH, ERNEST—Continued

+ — New Statesman 27:396 JI 17 '26 250w

"The author of this story of the life and ministry of St. Anthony writes with deep piety and religious conviction. But this has not interfered with his appreciation of the interest to moderns of the picturesque medieval temperament with its naïve credulity and its dramatic fervors. His book makes some interesting pictures of the time."

+ N Y Times p20 Je 27 '26 650w

Sat R 142:101 JI 24 '26 120w

"Mr. Gilliat-Smith's story of the Saint's life is told in a straightforward style. Amongst English books on the subject his is bound to be for a long time the chief and surest source of information. But he makes no attempt to build up the character of Anthony, the man, out of the facts, and the consequence is a notable lack of personal interest."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p462 JI 8 '26 850w

GILLIN, JOHN LEWIS. Criminology and penology. (Century social science ser.) 873p $4.50 Century

364 Crime and criminals. Punishment. Prisons. Reformatories. Justice, Administration of 26-1767

The first half of the book studies the criminal, investigating those factors in his history, physical, mental, and social, which tend to foster crime. The second half studies penal institutions of various types in the United States, their origin and development, systems of management, and results.

"As a textbook, it is at once thorough, readable, and, best of all, realistic. It is orderly and simple in presentation; has a wealth of illustrative material, a clear, non-technical style, convenient summations of subject matter, provocative questions, and very carefully prepared bibliographical suggestions." Raymond Moley

+ Am J Soc 32:314 S '26 450w

"The book is objective, straightforward, and convincing."

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:457 My '26 120w

Booklist 23:8 O '26

Bookm 63:366 My '26 120w

Reviewed by W. D. Lane

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ag 29 '26 850w

"Professor Gillin here treats the subject with such command of the facts that his exposition of it is likely to remain the chief source-book in this field for a long time to come." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 20 '26 1300w

"The weakness of his method appears most clearly in the section of the book dealing with education, prison labor problems, discipline, medical treatment, and so-called self-government. The bibliography at the end of each chapter is very helpful, but it could be made more so if it were more comprehensive and less voluminous. In the section dealing with the history of crime and punishment the author is more successful. Some of his analyses are admirable. Perhaps at a later date Professor Gillin will give us a briefer and more factual text book which will more nearly fulfil his purpose and the more surely meet a very great need." B. G. Lewis

+ Sat R of Lit 2:631 Mr 13 '26 620w

Wis Lib Bul 22:195 Je '26

GILMER, MRS ELIZABETH MERIWETHER. See Dix, D., pseud.

GIST, ARTHUR STANLEY. Elementary school supervision. 308p il $1.80 Scribner

371.2 School management and organization 26-9614

The author analyzes the problems of the elementary school principal and offers practical aid in solving them. In separate chapters he discusses The technic of supervision, The supervision of specific subjects as reading, arithmetic, etc., Rating teaching-efficiency, Marking pupils, and The principal's self-analysis.

Educ R 72:253 D '26 540w

"As a convenient compilation of some useful data but more particularly as an expression of the opinion, and a description of the practice, of an experienced and successful principal who has had an unusually good opportunity to note the practices of other principals through his editorship of the yearbooks of the Department of Elementary School Principals of the National Education Association, this book can justify its existence. Until someone does a scientific job of analyzing the work of the principal and of evaluating his various functions, Gist's book will be found a practical and convenient supplement to Cubberley's The Principal and His School and Burton's Supervision and the Improvement of Teaching." C. W. Washburne

+ — El School J 27:150 O '26 380w

Sat R of Lit 3:429 D 11 '26 450w

"The book has some weaknesses which, it seems, might well have been explained by the author. Primary teachers will find little of value to them. The illustrations and treatment of schoolroom problems are without exception taken from levels above the third grade. No mention is made of the junior high school although the author freely includes the seventh and eighth grades. . . . Despite the objections mentioned, the book marks a milestone in the development of a professionalized elementary-school principalship that will function in educational leadership rather than merely exist as an administrative necessity. It is heartily recommended for consideration by elementary-school principals and teachers, both incumbent and prospective." P. L. Palmer

+ — School R 34:711 N '26 450w

GIZYCKA, ELEANOR M. (PATTERSON) countess. Glass houses. 284p $2 Minton, Balch & co. [7s 6d Hutchinson]

26-8015

A story of high society in Washington, D.C. and points west. André, count de Servaise, of the French embassy, decides to marry Constance Sturgess. But he falls in love with Mary Moore who lives alone in a fine old house and serves perfect dinners for two. André and Mary meet constantly in the social life of the capital, and tho the Frenchman is more deeply smitten with each contact, Mary eludes him. She seems unduly interested in Senator Millar. André follows her to her ranch in Wyoming and there discovers the truth of her relations to the senator. The blow drives him straight to Constance, who, however, repulses him. Millar conveniently disappears in Wyoming, and back in Washington again André's long and patient love is rewarded.

"The author has given us much more than a series of trenchant pictures of life as she sees it. She has given us a dispassionate—perhaps a disillusioned—story of the lives of two people whose characters were rightly placed in the environment of the capital, because in America only in that environment could they have been produced. In that respect it is the first story of Washington life of recent years which was more than an episode." Anne Hard

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Mr 14 '26 1350w

"It is not a book of great power nor of deep and vibrant passions but, after all, it is cold and calm in its appraisal." S. L. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Mr 10 '26 920w
Cleveland Open Shelf p53 Ap '26

Reviewed by L. M. Field
Int Bk R p315 Ap '26 360w

"As it stands, the story is both trivial and tawdry, and the externalities of the Washington scene are not sufficient to lift the book from the class of back-stairs romance. Those who like to palpitate with Madame Elinor Glyn will find here an occasion for lesser, though doubtless enjoyable, further palpitations." Lorine Pruette

— Lit R p7 Mr 20 '26 400w

"She has a keen, ironic eye, and an accurate ear, but a facility in translating what they report to her which dilutes the natural acid that might etch a sharper plate. As novels go, it is readable, but as one reads on one wonders why one is doing so, one wonders why such a brisk talent is not being better employed, one wonders a little why the novel was written at all."

+ — New Repub 46:80 Mr 10 '26 200w

"Glass Houses" goes considerably beyond a merely satirical comedy of Washingtonian manners. Shot through and through with mischievous wit, the first portion of the book merely sets the stage for what, in the event, is a wise and clear-eyed human comedy."

+ N Y Times p8 F 21 '26 980w

"When the Countess talks of the Government at Washington in the manner of one describing a three-ring circus in a small village she is interesting; when she shifts to fiction and plot she appeals chiefly to minds of little intelligence—and does it amateurishly."

+ — N Y World p7m F 28 '26 500w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Outlook 142:462 Mr 24 '26 200w

"More sophisticated than penetrating. The irregular twists of her tale show an unsentimental fashion of looking at life, but never an important capacity for understanding it."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:635 Mr 13 '26 250w

GLANVILLE, ERNEST. The hunter; a story of bushman life. 320p il $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d J. Cape]

26-15274

This is the story of the bushman "squat, on short legs, asking permission of none, ready to defend their title against any odds, but always full of life, curiosity, humor, intelligence, and independence." The hero is a young bushman who encounters every adventure known to the African veldt and comes through alive and happy.

"In spite of so much talent for some reason his work is not altogether sound. Perhaps, as was the case with his 'Claw and Fang' a certain boyish love of adventure for adventure's sake interferes with his art, hindering him from reaching that sheer insight into the ways of nature that we associate for example with the literary tact and clear vision of Liam O'Flaherty." Llewelyn Powys

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 S 26 '26 820w

Boston Transcript p4 S 22 '26 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p138 D '26

"Since Mr. Glanville knows his jungle bestiary, his new book makes good reading for all who enjoy an authentic breath of primitivism. It is the well-told story of a running fight, with a black Basutoland 'Family Kabbo' for its heroes and heroines, and has all the swift, breathless interest of a good action movie." F. H. M.

+ Lit R p12 S 11 '26 310w

Nation 123:511 N 17 '26 80w

"A vigorous and beautiful tale, unique and full of surprise." C. B.

+ New Repub 48:360 N 10 '26 100w

"Mr. Glanville has written a fresh book, an honest book, and a book in which 'movement' never strands in the shallows of tedious writing."

+ N Y Times p28 S 26 '26 350w

Outlook 144:381 N 17 '26 30w

Spring'd Republican p10 S 24 '26 380w

"An unusual and fascinating book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p701 O 14 '26 100w

GLANVILLE, ERNEST. Yellow-maned lion. 210p il $2 Harcourt [3s 6d J. Cape]

26-10234

"The story of Ngonyama, the lion, first appeared in the author's volume Claw and Fang, which was published two years ago."—New Statesman

Reviewed by J. Woodburn

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 F 28 '26 900w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 10 '26 200w

"Told absorbingly and with authority." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p8 F 6 '26 200w

"Mr. Glanville is well acquainted with the denizens of the African veldt and jungle, and in The Yellow-Maned Lion he has provided his readers with an enthralling narrative, which is not the less enthralling for being founded upon fact."

+ New Statesman 26:492 Ja 30 '26 80w

"Mr. Glanville gives us more than excitement; he makes us actually see and smell and hear, through the lion's own senses, the sights and scents and sounds of the veldt, and incidentally introduces many little pictures of native life and customs. Mr. Glanville's style is as polished as his matter is interesting, and he has a delightfully dry sense of humour. His volume should be immensely popular as a gift for boys. But it is also emphatically a book for adult reading."

+ Spec 136:941 N 21 '25 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p798 N 26 '25 720w

Wis Lib Bul 22:109 Mr '26

GLASGOW, ELLEN ANDERSON GHOLSON. Romantic comedians. 346p $2.50 Doubleday

26-16199

A widower at sixty-five after thirty-six years of a marriage generally regarded as perfect, but in which he had been allowed no life of his own, Judge Honeywell had reached the romantic and dangerous age when elderly ladies depressed him. The love of his youth, who had broken her engagement to him after a lovers' quarrel, had remained faithful to him through the years and public opinion was now pushing them firmly but delicately together, but the roving fancy of this aristocratic Virginia gentleman turned to younger beauties and settled upon pretty little Annabel Upchurch. She was just recovering from an unfortunate love affair and apathetically accepted his devotion, agreeing to marry him for the sake of the comfort and luxury his wealth would bring her. The story shows how illusive was the judge's belief in his ability to hold the affections of a high-spirited girl of twenty-three.

"Miss Glasgow never fails to be interesting and suggestive, as she is here; but her earlier novels showed a kindlier feeling toward our common humanity." Ellen Duval

+ — Atlantic's Bookshelf D '26 320w

Booklist 23:80 N '26

"One of the most difficult of stories to write: the love of a man over sixty for a girl slightly over twenty. Yet the gentle satire, the pungent wit, the amazing facility of this great artist, make it plausible and never disagreeable, unless, indeed, Miss Glasgow wishes it to be so." J. F.

+ Bookm 64:223 O '26 130w

GLASGOW, ELLEN A. G.—Continued

"It will be with keen delight, I fancy, that Miss Glasgow's earlier admirers, and many new ones, will peruse the finely wrought pages of her latest book, so reasonably entitled 'The Romantic Comedians.' If, indeed, Miss Glasgow continues to create these clarifying pictures of the characteristics of her native state, it will not be long before Virginians may be regarded as human beings. I daresay that Virginians will welcome this new light that is being thrown on their human aspects by a lady who loves Virginia sufficiently to have always made it her home. As for the outside world, it should, I think, be delighted by this witty, wise and delicious novel." Carl Van Vechten

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 S 12 '26 920w

"Miss Glasgow knows perfectly well that her subject may only be treated exactly as she has treated it, with a certain cynical tenderness, with an understanding of youth, and an equal understanding of age. Her touch is light, temperate and penetrating." D. F. Gilman

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 18 '26 1900w

"Her theme is the old one of December and May in wedlock, but it is so embellished with a keen understanding of character and with a sly debunking of the conventional sentimentality toward Southern customs that it establishes its author even more surely as an authentic realist. Miss Glasgow does not depend upon any such crudities as the usual realist affects, but her very subtlety makes transparent the curtain of Southern conceits."

+ Ind 117:681 D 11 '26 150w

"'The Romantic Comedians' is an excellent work of analysis and implied criticism; furthermore, it is definitely and strictly contemporary. Thus do persons act and talk in our time." W. L. Phelps

+ Int Bk R p749 N '26 600w

"It is all very light and amusing and extremely well written. But after 'Barren Ground' it seems like a literary holiday. There is something completely unreal in the atmosphere of today as represented by the girl and the things she does. She is so much an anachronism that it is impossible to believe that the World War ever took place, and consequently it is equally impossible to convince oneself that the older group is still alive. Furthermore, it weakens immeasurably the point as to both generations being fundamentally the same. Those aspects of the book are, however, secondary. The primary feature is the drawing of the Judge and it is for that that Miss Glasgow deserves praise." A. H. Gibbs

+ Lit R p4 S 11 '26 670w

"It is almost impossible to resist quoting from the smooth and sparkling pages in which Miss Glasgow turns her kind, amused gaze on one after another of the squirming romantics. Both dialogue and analysis are full of sentences that seem too good to be true, and yet are so truly a part of the fabric of the book—no mere wise-cracks—that they can hardly be torn from their setting. A wise and witty book." Mary Ross

+ Nation 123:456 N 3 '26 600w

Reviewed by Robert Herrick

New Repub 49:sup91 D 8 '26 450w

"She has developed a theme rarely attacked by the novelist, and she has done it with such keen understanding and comprehensive psychology that her characters, acting without false gesture, follow logically their inevitable destiny and behave as real people would were they in similar predicaments and situations. The result is a fine story which leaves a taste of reality, of sincerity, of substantiality." Joseph Collins

+ N Y Times p5 S 12 '26 1550w

N Y Times p5 D 5 '26 80w

"Miss Glasgow is a competent novelist—one of the best—but it is as a witty satirical commentator that she achieves supremacy." C. B. Chase

+ N Y World p9m O 10 '26 360w

"'Barren Ground' was not scattering satire like this new story, but a fine study of courage and womanliness. For that reason it is the stronger and more wholesome book. On the other hand, we find here glitter of epigram and cleverness." R. D. Townsend

Outlook 144:252 O 20 '26 360w

"The Romantic Comedians is not a philosophical novel: outwardly it is as much a study of contemporary society in its narrower sense as one of Mrs. Wharton's. In execution, control, lucidity it is much like, almost too much like, Mrs. Wharton, although Miss Glasgow has not that final touch upon manners which distinguishes the other woman novelist. But inwardly there is an extraordinary depth and poignancy which is better than philosophy because it is ad hominem." H. S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 3:133 S 25 '26 1050w

Wis Lib Bul 22:333 D '26

GLASGOW, GEORGE. From Dawes to Locarno; being a critical record of an important achievement in European diplomacy, 1924-1925; with a foreword by J. Ramsay MacDonald. 186p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Benn]

341 Locarno treaties, 1925. International law and relations 26-6720

The author, who is editor of the Foreign affairs section of the Contemporary Review, thus describes the purpose and scope of the present volume: "The object of this book is two-fold: in the first place to record the stages in the diplomacy which led to Locarno, and in the second place to throw a strong light on the pedestal [of Locarno itself], so that the grateful peoples can see to it that their governments do not climb down."

Booklist 22:315 My '26

Bookm 63:362 My '26 130w

Reviewed by J. Bakeless

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Je 13

'26 140w

Reviewed by C. M. Morrison

Lit R p2 Ap 17 '26 250w

Living Age 329:77 Ap 3 '26 150w

N Y Times p12 Mr 14 '26 320w

"Mr. Glasgow's account of the work of Chamberlain preparatory to Locarno is an admirable piece of writing. His task was no easy one. The diplomatic tangle is always somewhat incomprehensible to the layman. He has not only disentangled it but also made his story almost thrilling, so imbued is he with the greatness of his theme."

+ N Y World p6m F 14 '26 380w

Pratt p10 autumn '26

Sat R 140:663 D 5 '25 520w

"This is a likable book. It is not only a book that Americans and Englishmen can like, but a book that Frenchmen, Germans, Italians, and Czechs can like. It is as near a book that Poles can like as any which deals objectively with European politics is likely to be. To produce such a book is no mean accomplishment."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:596 F 27 '26 300w

Spec 136:22 Ja 2 '26 250w

"The picture Mr. Glasgow has drawn is a welcome addition to our understanding of contemporary events. His book is doubly useful since it includes the relevant documents relating to the conference."

+ Springfd Republican p14 F 24 '26 580w

Wis Lib Bul 22:195 Je '26

GLEAVES, ALBERT. Life and letters of Stephen B. Luce, founder of the Naval war college. 381p il $5 (18s) Putnam

B or $2 Luce, Stephen Bleeker 25-28180

"This is a seaman's story of the life of another seaman. Rear-Admiral Luce entered the Navy as a midshipman before the days of the Naval Academy, when hard knocks and rough living were the chief factors in educating officers. Despite this he became the chief advocate of scientific training, and the War College at Newport is his monument. The chapters of the book that will interest most are those of the early days of cruising on the North Carolina, Columbus, and Congress."—Outlook

"It must have been a delightful task to write the life of a man like Luce, and Admiral Gleaves has turned out an uncommonly readable and illuminating book." E. Breck
+ Am Hist R 32:137 O '26 1200w

"Traces his career carefully and sympathetically and contains many interesting letters." W: L. McPherson
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 O 10 '26 820w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 10 '26 850w
Cleveland Open Shelf p84 Jl '26
Ind 116:366 Mr 27 '26 200w
Outlook 143:33 My 5 '26 130w
Pratt p32 summer '26

Reviewed by F. T. Bowles
Spring'd Republican p7f My 23 '26 1500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p285 Ap 15 '26 150w

GLENN, ISA. Heat. 317p $2.50 Knopf 26-7444

"The author takes a personable if somewhat starchy West Pointer, turns upon him the relentless sun that beats down over Manila, and chronicles his sad decline from the day he lands with the glory of his first commission upon him, until he very completely and disgustingly 'goes native' and fades out of the picture. Not content with doing this she does more. She presents a criticism of America's occupation of the Philippines. She succeeds in getting home a series of acute and penetrating thrusts at the methods of American 'imperialism.'"—N Y Times

"A well-written story. An intellectual, rather than an emotional handling and an almost satirical tone throughout." Booklist 22:421 Jl '26

"The women are all more strongly constructed than the men, at once stronger and sharper and more durable. They are not, however, better drawn; Miss Glenn is one of the few women I know of who can build a recognizable masculine entity from words." Joseph Hergeshelmer

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 My 9 '26 1250w

"She is never bitter, and she writes exceedingly well, with an extraordinary gift for creating atmosphere by phrases. She has one curious trick of style which is irritating. She affirms and denies her own statements in the same sentence. But after reading a dozen chapters of Miss Glenn's novel we see that she has such an interesting story to tell that her self-conscious mannerisms do not matter." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 31 '26 750w
Ind 116:498 Ap 24 '26 80w

"Any reader whose stomach is strong enough to tackle facts, and who only asks of an author that he should write of the world as it is, not as it ought to have been, will find 'Heat' an honest, interesting, and distinguished novel." E. C. Richards

+ Int Bk R p585 Ag '26 320w

"Miss Glenn, in her oppressively powerful story of Manila during the early years of American occupation, has seriously impaired the high merits and consistency of her book by conceiving a chief character similar in mold to Conrad's 'Jim' and with illogical deliberate-

ness casting him to destruction." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p4 Jl 31 '26 480w

New Repub 48:78 S 8 '26 80w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 28:176 N 20 '26 70w

"Its actual story content can hardly boast novelty, and in any case the narrative's progress finds its pace impeded by the author's choice of an over-wordy and self-conscious prose style. . . 'Heat' succeeds chiefly in its indication of the atmosphere—mental, physical, political—of the islands."

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 11 '26 780w

"The book quivers and palpitates with an aura of intense heat. Being so rich in color-values—and this is mainly because of the author's ability to write description in a richly impressionistic manner—the story assaults the senses of the reader. . . There have been novels before of a man turning 'native' but this is the first one so closely interwoven with Americanism." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y World p7m Ap 11 '26 680w

Outlook 143:186 Je 2 '26 50w

"It is a bitter, complicated, painful story, hard to read but well worth reading."

Sat R 142:237 Ag 28 '26 150w

"Her style is clear and forcible, though often startling in the amount of profanity and near-obscenity. We shiver at the reality of her tropical downpours and gasp through her sultry nights, but we seriously question whether this climate is really one unbroken succession of unpleasant phases, as she would have us believe." P. M. Wheeler

+ Sat R of Lit 2:839 Je 5 '26 550w

"An unusually convincing novel."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p612 S 16 '26 400w

GLOTZ, GUSTAVE. Aegean civilization; [tr. by M. R. Dobie and E. M. Riley]. (History of civilization) 422p il $6 Knopf [16s K. Paul] 913.38 Civilization, Mycenaean. Crete—Antiquities [25-22886]

"The present volume is devoted entirely to the civilization revealed by Evans in excavations in Crete dating from 1900 and by earlier excavations dating from 1876 on the mainland of Greece and in Asia Minor." (Foreword) Discusses the material, social, religious, and intellectual life of Minoan civilization. Contains many illustrations and three maps."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"No better qualified person could have been selected for the rather difficult task of welding into one complete picture the diverse and scattered results of the last twenty years of exploration in Crete. Not only was a detailed knowledge of the data necessary, but a vision for reconstruction tempered by sanity and poise. All this Professor Glotz possesses, and that is why his work is unquestionably the most striking that has yet appeared in that extremely unequal series that Mr. Henri Berr is editing." Paul Radin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 F 28 '26 1050w

Boston Transcript p3 D 26 '25 400w

"The story is exceedingly well told, with characteristic French clarity and warmth." R. W. Rogers

+ Nation 123:61 Jl 21 '26 350w

Reviewed by V. G. Child

Nature 117:716 My 22 '26 320w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:155 Mr '26

Pratt p29 autumn '26

Sat R 140:479 D 24 '25 30w

"The author knows the subject well, and presents a very vivid picture of this marvellous civilization, which had reached a relatively high state of development."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p200 Mr 18 '26 1100w

GLOTZ, GUSTAVE. Ancient Greece at work; an economic history of Greece from the Homeric period to the Roman conquest; [tr. by M. R. Dobie]. (History of civilization) 402p il $5 Knopf [16s K. Paul]

330.938 Greece—Economic conditions. Labor and laboring classes—Greece. Slavery in Greece 26-9606

"It is not easy to write an economic history of Greece, for the sources are meagre. But Professor Glotz has got all he could out of them, and has given us not only an admirable outline of a period—or rather four periods, the Homeric, the Archaic, the Athenian and the Hellenistic—covering a thousand years or so, but a great deal of interesting and important detail relating to wages, prices, currencies, industry and commerce."—New Statesman

"A very fine though somewhat special analysis of industry of all kinds in ancient Greece."

+ Booklist 22:398 J1 '26

"Painstaking and able study." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 My 8 '26 650w

"The manner in which he extracts his material from incidental references and allusions in the Iliad and Odyssey commands our sincere admiration."

+ Nature 118:79 J1 17 '26 300w

"His book is both lively and learned, and it is also well translated."

+ New Statesman 27:446 J1 31 '26 680w

"This is a learned but thoroughly interesting description of farming, industry and business in general in ancient Greece, and should interest the student of economics as well as the classical scholar, since it shows practices developing from their simplest form to something like modern business institutions. Besides giving hard economic facts, the author makes interesting remarks on the Greek attitude to slaves, to foreigners, and to labour, and on the bearing of trade conditions and technical processes on the arts."

+ Spec 136:sup996 Je 12 '26 230w

GLOVER, JAMES MACKAY (AFFABLE
HAWK, pseud.). Hims ancient and modern; being the third book of Jimmy Glover. 256p $3.50 Doran [10s Unwin]

914.21 London—Amusements

To his nephew Tommy, about to arrive in London town, Affable Hawk writes all manner of advice as to lodgings, night clubs, dining out and flirtations of the more and less serious sort, and intersperses comment on the London scene of his own heyday.

"There are many authors infinitely sillier and few with so large and spontaneous a fund of pertinent gossip." R. H. A.

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 24 '26 450w

"What Mr. Glover has to tell on such topics as the origin of Christy Minstrels, the history of opera at Covent Garden, the Old Mogul Music Hall, the enterprises of the Gattis, and the restaurants and restaurateurs of London's lost Bohemia is more entertaining than the rest of his book, and contains a good many witty anecdotes."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p618 S 16 '26 170w

GLUCK, SINCLAIR. Four Winds. 310p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Mills & B.]

26-11488

It was plainly hinted at the gilded gambling hall that an inquisitive youth like Jimmy was de trop. But Jimmy had an instinct for trouble and in spite of hints he stayed. Presently he found a girl to rescue, rescued her, and followed her home to Far Rockaway to be met at the door by a smashing blow that sent him down and temporarily out. When he came to, the girl's Scotch uncle ordered him to clear out and stay there. The first time Jimmy obeyed; the second time he went back to the house of mystery with a detective and stayed to unearth the secret of the enterprising Scotchman and to win the girl.

"Fast, fairly furious and frantic enough to stimulate all but stubborn mystery addicts. It is well written, too."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Je 20 '26 150w

Boston Transcript p6 Je 12 '26 380w

"It is a well told tale full of thrills, suspense and complex situations." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p6 Ag 7 '26 120w

"This is too flimsy a story, more than a little mediocre for its kind, and sacrificing everything to a certain crude speed of action. Better yarns of this type take some lesson from the fable of the hare and the tortoise, and do not pin all their faith to the formula that requires a new act of violence on every page."

— N Y Times p22 Je 20 '26 530w

GLYNN-WARD, H., pseud. See Howard, H.

GOBINEAU, JOSEPH ARTHUR, comte de. Dancing girl of Shamakha, and other Asiatic tales; auth. tr. by Helen Morgenthau Fox. 340p il $2.50 Harcourt

26-7657

In these five stories of the Near East, the author's aim was not "to show exclusively the more or less conscious immorality of the Asiatics and their strong tendency to lie. I showed this too, but that was not enough. I wanted to describe the bravery of some, the romantic ideas of others, the innate goodness of these, the deep-seated integrity of those; how all are incomparably indolent and are absolute slaves of their impulses, whether these are good or evil." Contents: The dancing girl of Shamakha; The lovers of Kandahar; The war of the Turkomans; The illustrious magician; The story of Gamber-Ali.

Bookm 64:106 S '26 100w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 23 '26 700w

Boston Transcript p4 My 22 '26 500w

"All the yarns have one fault in common—one not often encountered in a Frenchman's work—heavy padding." H. C. Burr

— Int Bk R p524 J1 '26 320w

Reviewed by Helen Goodspeed

New Repub 47:372 Ag 18 '26 150w

"His beautiful dancers, magicians, princes, thieving soldiers, and beggars are delightful; for the rest, the stories are realistic in detail, for the Count had a clear eye and a long memory, humorous, and exciting."

+ Outlook 143:449 J1 28 '26 150w

"The oriental roguery, the deliberate and mutually understood hypocrisies of these servants of Islam and Shah, and the unlikely backgrounds, are very charmingly done. Few writers, whether of fiction or travel books, have excelled, in any language, Gobineau's mastery of substance and style in these bright little pictures." Theodore Purdy, jr.

+ Sat R of Lit 2:587 F 27 '26 560w

"These five tales carry the mystery, the adventure and the charming unreality of the East; and in Mrs. Fox's translation from de Gobineau's French the stories have melted out of the original language into the English without losing any of their mystery or charm." J. K. Hart

+ Survey 56:267 My 15 '26 250w

"The work of translation has been done well. The version is accurate and lively, and has obviously been made for pleasure."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p769 N 4 '26 420w

GOBINEAU, JOSEPH ARTHUR, comte de. Lucky prisoner; tr. by F. M. Atkinson. 289p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Heinemann]

26-15718

"The period is that of the religious wars, before the massacre of Saint Bartholomew. Various famous persons are put upon the stage. There is the Catholic partisan and writer Montluc; Brantôme as a young captain who has never put pen to paper, greatly concerned with his own advancement; Poltrot de Méré, the murderer of Duke Francis of Guise. But the personage most lovingly drawn is Diane de Poitiers, godmother of the hero, in her magnificent retirement at the Château of Anet. This hero is a lively spark, who has more fortune in love than—the twentieth century, most feminist of ages, would say—he deserves."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"One fancies that the translator has well caught the author's various moods, whether of waggish solemnity, sentiment spiced with fun, or—in the clinches—just sentiment. Here is none of your brummagem romance, but the real thing in the grand manner."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 29 '26 170w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 11 '26 330w

"If for nothing more than the character of Barbillon, the rascally and inventive servant of the hero, this romantic story of the French religious wars deserves to be read. . . His young master, Jean de la Tour-Miracle, possesses, in addition to the necessary graces of the hero of romance, many human and endearing qualities of his own, and his marvelous progress from danger to danger and from escape to escape makes very entertaining reading."

+ Nation and Ath 39:108 Ap 24 '26 160w

"As rapidly moving and as interesting a historical adventure tale as one is likely to find in the season's output."

+ N Y Times p14 Je 6 '26 380w

"The Lucky Prisoner' is a product of the author's researches, and is complicated in plot, filled with accessory historical personages, and written in a cramped prose which seems at first delightfully suitable to a sixteenth century subject. Through three hundred pages it becomes a burden and an affection, and only the attractions of Diane de Poitiers and the incredible escapes of the hero are compensation."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:907 Jl 3 '26 400w

"Not only are the minor details and trap-pings correct, but as might be expected from a student of the Renaissance, the sixteenth century atmosphere is likewise convincing. . . Gobineau sets a prodigious pace and keeps it up from start to finish."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p234 Mr 25 '26 320w

GODDARD, E. H., and GIBBONS, P. A. Civilization or civilisations; an essay on the Spenglerian philosophy of history; with an introd. by F. C. S. Schiller. 245p $2.50 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d Constable]

901 Civilization. History—Philosophy. Spengler, Oswald 26-24506

Believing that the law of civilization propounded by Oswald Spengler in his book, "The decline of the West," stands in need of a simpler exposition for the general reader, Messrs Goddard and Gibbons offer this concise interpretation of his philosophy of history.

Reviewed by F. S. Barr

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 9 '27 1000w

"One is almost tempted to believe that this must be a parody of Spengler; there is so much that is uproariously funny in the crudity and ignorance, the error and doctrinaire drivel of this book. But no, as the blurb promises, it is 'the essence of Spengler.' Then it becomes sad to realize what a gigantic intellectual travesty can be played upon the childish cliché that history repeats itself." M. J. Adler

— Lit R p6 D 4 '26 1450w

"On the whole I should advise the student first to make a fairly extensive perusal of 'The Decline of the West,' then to use this book as an aid to the ordering of such ideas as he may have thence derived. For they do seem to lay far too much emphasis on the importance of Spengler's theory as objective truth and far too little on its value as providing the historian with a new framework and a new means of approach. Moreover, they stress too much its possibilities as a means of foretelling the future. Both these things are done by Dr. Spengler himself, although he surrounds his assertions so richly with argument and illustration as to rob them of their worst effects. But such claims, put forward too baldly, tend to discredit the theory and to discourage serious examination of it." E: Shanks

Sat R 142:382 O 2 '26 920w

Spec 137:540 O 2 '26 260w

GODDARD, GLORIA. Backyard. 213p $2 McBride

26-19680

"The author in a series of impressionistic scenes relates exactly what an observer would see in the backyards of the decaying rich on the hill and the genteel poor across the alley. Romance is revealed through a laundry. A pair of silk stockings betokens an illicit affair of the heart. An unhappy marriage out of caste is symbolized by the gradual wearing out of the silk underwear of the rich Martin girl. As an ironic foil to these tragedies there is the happy flowering love between Martha and Dan Connell, of course. Martha hangs on her clothes line fresh, brightly colored gingham. 'Backyard' is a carefully delineated social study of contrasting groups."—Lit R

Reviewed by B. R. Redman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 N 14 '26 880w

"Its main charm lies in its descriptions, characterizations and clever similes. Undoubtedly there is an ability to write here, but the manner of presentation is yet to be developed and perfected. It is hoped that the author will develop her talent for character drawing, which is her best asset."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 O 27 '26 160w

"Her descriptions are accurate, clear-cut, sharp in outline. But she is so addicted to similes that the constant repetition of these figures of speech become tiresome. She is also very fond of that austere and almost obsolete word, 'erstwhile.' And yet Miss Goddard has so much sincerity, so much restraint, so fine a sense of contrast that we should like to see her not negatively successful in an experiment, but positively successful in a novel dealing directly with the lives of people." Starr Lawrence

— + Lit R p4 O 16 '26 300w

"'Backyard' is a novel and unusual tour de force. The construction of the book is too pat in its quick reversals of situations and too 'arty' in the method of narrative. It is quite different from the ubiquitous psychological novel. Its objectivity and fresh imagery are delightful. It seems, though, that there is much of life in this block of people that can't be expressed in terms of the backyard. Unfortunately, Miss Goddard isn't deft with dialogue, for her characters in conversation are less alive than her background. It is indeed a curious book."

— + N Y Times p10 S 26 '26 700w

"Miss Goddard has sacrificed too much to her back yard idea. Her book is forced, and its atmosphere is increased by the language she uses, which is erudite to the point of being terrifying."

— N Y World p11m N 21 '26 140w

GODDARD, GLORIA—Continued

"Once the backyards get under way on their business of life irritations pass, and the author emerges from her mannerisms into the reality of neighborhood life. But, alas, the story, itself! When of late years has virtue been so rewarded and vice so punished in literature?"

— + Sat R of Lit 3:261 O 30 '26 320w

"'Backyard' is like a motion picture without music and with the captions limited to about a dozen sentences. The description of inanimate objects is good. The reader can always guess but never know what is going on in the character's mind. Probably the average reader will become tired of so much laundry. Approximately half the descriptions—and descriptions compose most of the book—are of the clotheslines and the garments which they bear. 'Backyard' is a curiosity. It is not quite a novel or a collection of sketches."

Springf'd Republican p7f O 17 '26 280w

GODFREY, ELIZABETH, pseud. (JESSIE BEDFORD). Home life under the Stuarts, 1603-1649. 312p il $4 Stokes [12s 6d S. Paul]

914.2 England—Social life and customs

This very entertaining study of home life and family relationships in the seventeenth century is drawn from the copious letters and diaries of the times. The children, their games and their education; the young people, their methods in courtship and marriage; domestic joys and cares; the intellectual and social pursuits of the fashionable; all of these appear at first hand in the lively accounts of the letter writers and diarists quoted.

"The study holds many deliciously quaint excerpts from letters and diaries. The pages are shot through and through with romance, as the love stories of various English men and women, some famous, others unknown save for these letters and diaries, emerge from the crabbed lines and equally untrammelled spelling, through which they speak to us across three hundred years."

F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p3 O 23 '26 700w

New Statesman 27:49 Ap 24 '26 1350w

"The authoress lacks the charm of style which makes Trevelyan's chapters on the same subject the most fascinating part of a fascinating book. She makes amends, however, by making very liberal quotations from contemporary letters and journals, and these give the work a permanent value. Apart from their intrinsic interest, the details of daily life, from samplers to gardens, help us to preserve a sense of perspective in history, and a scholarly and unpretending work like the one before us deserves and should receive a welcome."

+ Sat R 141:262 F 27 '26 1350w

GOGOL, NIKOLAI VASILIEVICH. Evenings on a farm near Dikanka; tr. by Constance Garnett. (Collected works) 306p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

26-14495

"'Evenings on a Farm Near Dikanka' is a collection of short stories. Published in 1831, when Gogol was only twenty-two, they were first accepted by the public as tales told by a village sacristan and written down by a bee-keeper, Rudy Panko. The characters who live in these pages are Ukrainian types; Cossacks, gypsies, red-cheeked maidens, old wives, priests and last, but not least, the devil himself, who is a sort of practical joker; not to speak of his sister, the witch, a vile mermaid with a thirst for young blood."

—Lit R

Booklist 23:80 N '26

"The robust peasantry through whom the plots are worked out, their salty speech and their vitality, have the unmistakable imprint of the genius that created the first great prose literature of modern Russia."

+ Bookm 64:240 O '26 120w

"The whole collection is highly diverting and while somewhat uneven has sufficient high lights in the way of lively incident, home-spun humor and vivid atmosphere to give it a place beside the three previously published volumes in the series of Gogol's collected works translated by Mrs. Garnett. As usual, her rendering felicitously smooths away the English reader's sense of strangeness."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 O 10 '26 850w

Boston Transcript p8 Ag 21 '26 120w
Cleveland Open Shelf p107 S '26

"Marvelous prose, full of music and rich cadence, and beyond the power of a translator to convey in another tongue." J: Cournos

+ Int Bk p689 O '26 320w

"The genius of the author is shown in that to this day [the stories] retain their verve, freshness, lyrical quality. An ebullient spontaneity is their chief charm. There has been nothing like them in Russian literature, either before or since." J: Cournos

+ Lit R p4 Ag 21 '26 360w

Nation and Ath 39:184 My 22 '26 180w

"Seldom have we had such a wholly delightful book from Russia, seldom such a boisterous, mischievous one as this. And of Mrs. Garnett's translation can one say more than that one never thinks of it as a translation at all?"

+ New Statesman 27:532 Ag 21 '26 580w

"It must be admitted that other volumes of Gogol will probably prove of more general interest than the present one. But these first tales of Russia's great humorist in a manner indicate the pedigree and origin of the genius that later produced the greater works. It is richly worth reading for those interested in Russian literature." H: J. Forman

+ N Y Times p5 Ag 15 '26 980w

"We have a lighter Gogol in Evenings on a Farm, a Gogol whose internal stresses were not yet so sharp. In the main the stories are folk-tales, made concrete and bright and spectacular with all Gogol's knowledge of the peasant and his life. Occasionally there is too easy a lyricism in the setting; pastorals and rusticities seem very apt to induce artificial transports. But motion and gaiety is certainly present, and the most particular and happy insight into human types. And though many of the tales allow us a peep at the Prince of Evil, he is a gentlemanlike and fantastic devil, not morbid in the least. There is no need by now to discuss the even, smooth, clarity of Mrs. Garnett's translations."

+ Spec 136:871 My 22 '26 500w

"The stories in this volume are by no means Gogol's best work. But the reader who knows only the stupid, shiftless, vicious, cunning creatures of his more mature art will welcome their spontaneous charm."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p349 My 27 '26 700w

GOGUEL, MAURICE. Jesus the Nazarene, myth or history? tr. by Frederick Stephens. 320p $3 Appleton

232 Jesus Christ

26-11726

A French scholar examines the evidence presented by the New Testament and other sources for and against the historicity of the life and death of the Nazarene.

"This is a highly technical treatise, erudite in the extreme, but brilliant, lucid, and fascinating in its handling." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 64:xiv S '26 140w

Reviewed by Paul Radin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 26 '26 260w

"Delightfully readable and illuminating book. He knows of a certainty, and will make any open-minded reader know, too, that the historical existence of Jesus the Man is proved. The problem is indeed one of fact. Dr. Goguel modestly says that he attempts the solution of the problem by the historical method. It is a most successful attempt." M. C. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 24 '26 880w

"The present volume is a masterly presentation of its author's position and will seem entirely convincing to readers accustomed to pursue the lines of critical literary study of the New Testament writings." S. J. Case

+ — Nation 123:179 Ag 25 '26 580w

"The book is written with the lucidity, the brilliance, the searching keenness and the dispassionate judicial quality which the world long ago learned to expect from the trained French mind. It is not, however, a work to be taken up for the beguilement of an idle hour but one which will demand alert faculties and close attention for the following of its arguments and the testing of its conclusions."

+ N Y Times p20 S 5 '26 400w

"French Biblical criticism is not often honored with an English translation. The publishers are to be congratulated in having selected such an admirable representative of the sanest liberal French criticism. The English translation gives an adequate idea of the main lines of the original work, but in details it is unfortunately far from satisfactory. The scholar would find the bibliographical materials in the original footnotes of considerable value, since they call attention often to unfamiliar sources." H: J. Cadbury

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:41 Ag 14 '26 530w

Times [London] Lit Sup p292 Ap 22 '26 1650w

GOLDBERG, ISAAC. Havelock Ellis; a biographical and critical survey; with a supplementary chapter on Mrs Edith Ellis. 359p il $4 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Ellis, Havelock. Ellis, Edith Mary Oldham (Lees) (Mrs Havelock Ellis) 26-9698

"The book is based on a pamphlet, originally prepared for the Haldeman-Julius Company, to which the author has added the contents of several magazine articles, including a study of the late Edith Lees Ellis, and a miscellany of Havelock Ellis's early writings, hitherto unpublished."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 23:35 O '26

Bookm 63:719 Ag '26 160w

"Mr. Goldberg's book will answer its purpose but it is somewhat too casual to stand as more than a piece of superior journalism, for it is loosely constructed and nowhere very definitely focussed. Many interesting and valuable facts are presented but they seem chosen almost at random, or rather they give the impression of constituting a collection of the most easily available material made by a man who did not care to put forth the labor necessary for completeness." J. W. Krutch

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ap 26 '26 1150w

"Havelock Ellis is a man whose biography would be hard for anyone to write. He has given Dr. Goldberg but a little of himself, but Dr. Goldberg has not minded this and has gone on writing a beautiful tribute to a man whom he ardently admires, but whom he does not entirely grasp. After all, it is doubtful if, under the circumstances, anyone could have come off better than has Dr. Goldberg." K: Schriftgiesser

+ — Boston Transcript p2 My 8 '26 1700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p84 Jl '26

"The author has been first in the field and it is a pity that he has not carried it off better. His failure to produce an interesting book may be partly due to temperamental incompetence; it may be also chargeable to the fact that the lives of great and good men like Ellis are not as a rule exciting in the biographic sense."

— Dial 81:354 O '26 130w

"It has all the paraphernalia of a good biography, and yet, somehow, it is not a good biography. Perhaps if Mr. Goldberg were to take just twice the time which he actually dedicated to this work, he would improve it many fold."

+ — Ind 116:722 Je 19 '26 200w

"I have found Dr. Goldberg's study extremely interesting and some of the new matter, especially the excerpts from early MSS., are distinctly illuminating." T. S. Knowlson

+ Lit R p4 Ag 14 '26 630w

"We are more than ready for a study of this great Englishman who so faithfully combines the passion of the mystic and the patience of the laboratory scientist. But Mr. Goldberg is not the man to make such a study. He has given facts here which are of the first importance, and he prints a number of poems and notes by Ellis which were nowhere else to be seen. But he is slapdash and slipshod wherever he should have been subtle and illuminating. The story of a truly religious life remains to be told."

— + Nation 122:651 Je 9 '26 100w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 40:271 N 20 '26 40w

"Mr. Goldberg's is the first biography of Havelock Ellis to appear either here or in England. It is an extraordinarily uneven piece of work. Paragraphs of real insight and beauty of expression jostle others marred by almost unpardonable crudities. That Mr. Goldberg is an ardent disciple rather than an even-handed critic is obvious. His devotion leads him into extravagances of thought and expression that often take the power from thrusts that would otherwise be far more penetrating." Evans Clark

— + N Y Times p5 Ap 18 '26 1600w

"All that can be said for the book is that it presents badly some information nowhere else accessible, and may therefore, on the ground that a poor study of a great man is better than none at all, have its place until a good study appears." J. D. Ferguson

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:804 My 22 '26 550w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 56:433 Jl 1 '26 700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p795 N 11 '26 540w

GOLDBERG, ISAAC. The man Mencken; a biographical and critical survey. 388p $4 Simon & Schuster [18s Constable]

814 Mencken, Henry Louis 25-23719

A study of the American critic, H. L. Mencken. Includes a short section containing some of Mencken's verse, short stories, and satirical sketches.

Booklist 22:373 Je '26

"The surprising thing about 'The Man Mencken' is that it is the most unfortunately titled book that has come across my path for many a day. No great man, provided you think Mr. Mencken fills the shoes of that adjective, was ever so belittled by a book intended to raise to pinnacles. Dr. Goldberg's heavy volume is exactly the third rate sort of biography which appears about a third rate journalist."

J. F. — Bookm 62:601 Ja '26 400w

"Judgments will differ as to the usefulness of the longish chapters on the Mencken genealogy, and most judgments will agree that Mr. Goldberg's critical analyses are less interesting than his biographical materials. Half of the book is twice as good as the whole of it. But that half, actually devoted to the man Mencken, is indispensable to any one who wants to know about the America of the present age." Carl Van Doren

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Mr 7 '26 450w

"It is a most interesting book. It is scholarly, minute in detail, clever, good enough to have been written about a John Donne, or a Henry James, or a Longfellow or anyone else who has been dead a long enough time to be the subject for an analytical discussion by a university professor." K. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 D 12 '25 1300w

"One is a little disturbed by the doctor of philosophy's rather kittenish moods. But as the book progresses—and it does progress—Isaac Goldberg, Ph.D., sheds his Menckenesque and sophomoric moods and becomes interested in research. One finds him stripping Mr. Mencken of his bluster, his willfulness, his deliberated, careful heresies. It must be said that Mr. Mencken weathers the stripping. He is at bottom a more admirable figure than his theatric motley makes him seem." Walter Yust

GOLDBERG, ISAAC—Continued

— + Lit R p5 Ja 9 '26 330w

"The author has worked with a scholar's love for facts and an artist's eye for their composition. Though the book runs to nearly 400 pages it is interesting from end to end, and—bar—ring a few paragraphs of facetiousness and a few that approach the ecstatic—it is an excellent performance." G: Genzmer
+ Nation 121:665 D 9 '25 400w

"I can think of few more painstaking and exhaustive essays in contemporary literature. It stands as far as might be away from our American happy-go-lucky, hit-and-miss literary methods, and ranks well with the characteristic work of the German Gelehrten. To the appraisal of Mr. Mencken at the age of 45 Dr. Goldberg has devoted a volume nearly 400 pages long, provided, as is proper, with preface and subject index, and richly illustrated." Simeon Strunsky
N Y Times p4 N 29 '25 2100w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:149 Mr '26.

"Dr Goldberg's study is methodical, well organized, written with some verve and sprightliness. While slightly erratic and even turgid at times, and pretending to no finality of judgment, it should interest the average student of American life and letters as well as the Mencken cult."
+ — Springf'd Republican p8 N 30 '25 750w

GOLDING, LOUIS. Sicilian noon. 228p $2.50
Knopf [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

914.58 Sicily—Description and travel 26-7936
"Louis Golding has again blended the forms of essay, journal and novel narrative, in 'Sicilian Noon,' and produced an account of his adventuring abroad. He has wandered through Sicily on foot, straying from the general traffic, where his arrested observation has found colorful life and exotic traces and objects of old vanished civilizations. The influences of the Greeks and Arabs still brood and subtly dominate their ancient colonies. His own curiosity and daring sense of beauty find in this medley of old and new civilization the elements of eternal drama."—N Y Times

Booklist 23:31 O '26

Reviewed by A. S. Pease

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 30 '26 406w

"Louis Golding has an ironically polite sense of humor and often appears to stress the naughty angle. But neither is offensive. Some of the towns checked off on his itinerary have a fine resonant Italian cadence. Yet Golding is more concerned with the man who lives in the city than with the city itself. This gives 'Sicilian Noon' a human quality." H. C. Burr

Int Bk R p590 Ag '26 300w

"Whether he is describing extortionate Palermo cabmen, or a marionette show, or music inns, or carnival gayeries, or grim landscapes, there is a pristine, a vital originality in the pages which makes one feel that neither Sicily nor any other part of the earth has been written of like this before." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p5 Jl 31 '26 200w

"If you would travel abroad without stirring from your sitting-room you can have no better modern guide than Mr. Louis Golding. He has no conventions, and tumbles out his thoughts and feelings in a tumult regulated only by his artistry. Mr. Golding showed us in his novel, Day of Atonement, how fine his descriptions could be. Sicilian Noon is its equal in the use of fine imagery, quick phrases like the crossing of rapiers, and a poet's sensibility to the color and vigor of life, coarse though it may often be."

+ Living Age 328:123 Ja 9 '26 230w (Reprinted from Morning Post)

"A first-rate book of travel impressions. The amazing accounts of the Palermo marionette performances and the pagan Easter celebrations in that city should be missed by no lover of the humorous or the vitally carnal in literature."

+ Nation 123:277 S 22 '26 120w

"This is a pleasant, sparkling little book. It gains much from the discipline which, in the writing of it, Mr. Golding seems to have imposed upon his style. At times, however, he is still somewhat flamboyant and artificial."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:330 N 28 '25 580w

"In Sicilian Noon he has written a book full of the qualities, partly individual and partly racial, which make his novels remarkable. He has humour, which is a requisite for this sort of book. He loads his pallet with the brightest colours. Sometimes, indeed, in aiming at the picturesque he attains the merely flamboyant, but very often his landscapes are of a vivid beauty and his figure-pieces full of life."

+ — New Statesman 26:366 Ja 2 '26 400w

"'Sicilian Noon' is full of fascinating characters, episodes of human interest, the peculiarities of race met in traveling and a wide acquaintance with classical antiquity."

+ N Y Times p6 Je 13 '26 680w

"Louis Golding can write travel impressions that are translated through his temperament to studies in glamour. 'Sicilian Noon' is such a book."

+ N Y World p4m Je 13 '26 120w

"Mr. Golding is a lively and delightful companion, and when he is feeling especially thrilled he bursts, as should all good travellers, into verse. But he must not so often draw our eyes from the sky-line by a remark about the colour of the orange peel in the gutter. . . Like many of our younger writers, he is in some danger of becoming a captive to the arresting phrase. His writing is becoming brittle and just a little garish."

+ — Sat R 140:665 D 5 '25 550w

"When he is content to be himself and express in plain English, of which he has an admirable command, the enchantment of his surroundings, he is well worth listening to. But far too often he seems only intent upon searching for some startling ugliness, or some tortured phrase, for the astonishment of the plain person."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p820 D 3 '25 360w

GOLDRING, DOUGLAS. Cuckoo; a comedy of adjustments. 265p $2 McBride [7s 6d Chapman & Hall]

26-7647

The lives and promiscuous loves of a small group of people on the Riviera are the subject matter of this clever, sophisticated novel. There is Morwenna, an intellectual beauty, and her far more natural and attractive little sister Veronica. There are Nina and Bill, sent off on holiday together by a too complacent husband. There is Giles Denham, at loose ends for a bit, and later there is George. Morwenna takes a purely academic interest in love until her unofficial honeymoon with Giles, the result of which is to waken passion for George. There follows a second honeymoon on the continent also unofficial. Meanwhile Nina and Bill have separated, Nina to return to her husband and children. The book closes with a final shuffle and re-deal that brings at least temporary satisfaction all around.

Reviewed by Mary Ross

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ap 18 '26 850w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 21 '26 360w

"He writes with humor and insight, and his novel is never dull."

+ Ind 116:588 My 15 '26 70w

"'Cuckoo' is amusing, perhaps shocking to those who are readily shocked. Its outspoken phrases are saved from salaciousness by a light and delicate touch. It hovers on the verge of the erotic, but is saved by the dexterity with which its material is handled. The dialog is couched in a note of railery and badinage. Epigrammatic aphorisms, provocative by their unusual or unexpected viewpoint, are frequently introduced. Its sentences are balanced and apposite. Its style is suave and fluent. The book is one of the type that should appeal to the sophisticated reader." W. R. L.

+ Int Bk R p520 J1 '26 400w

"Like all novels dealing with life in Mediterranean resorts, there is in 'Cuckoo' a great deal of stimulating conversation concerning love and marriage. Unlike the others, however, Mr. Goldring achieves smartness without attempting at all to be irresistible. He balances malice with understanding and the result is a book that is at once witty and profound."

Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p4 My 15 '26 450w

Nation 123:18 J1 '26 20w

"Morwenna is an unconvincing character. She is at least the most human member of a drearily, amorous group the telling of whose emotional warfare, competently as it is achieved, cannot have cost Mr. Goldring much trouble."

+ Nation and Ath 38:160 O 24 '25 160w

"It is all clever enough; Morwenna, however, is out of the picture. She alone, in a world drawn with deliberate flippancy and superficiality, has flesh and blood and brains; and her existence makes more objectionable the perfunctory winding up and polishing off of relationships at the end, when the characters return to England." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 26:49 O 24 '25 280w

"'Cuckoo' is a clever, urbane and charming comedy of manners. Its cynicism is witty and skin-deep; its characterizations are amusing and endearing; it starts valiantly out for nowhere, and gets there in the most direct and workmanlike manner. It is a novel of no significance and will be enjoyed for itself alone."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 4 '26 850w

"Mr. Douglas Goldring has a maliciously observant eye, much vivacity, considerable comic resource; but he is a victim of the delusion that manner can be developed without reference to the matter in hand. His manner here would have well suited a sentimental comedy, in which such characters as he has invented were involved in cross-flirtations. But for this defect, which, however, is felt in every chapter, Mr. Goldring has done well."

+ Sat R 140:484 O 24 '25 220w

"'Cuckoo' makes literate and satisfying Spring reading for those who do not take their modernity over seriously."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:709 Ap 10 '26 600w

"It is on grounds of good taste and credibility that the novel fails, rather than on those of morality."

+ Spec 135:1156 D 19 '25 60w

"His Gallic freedom with the subjects of 'l'amour' and the human body and the purely British freedom of the conversation in which his modern young women indulge will disconcert some readers and will delight others; but the essential of the book is a perfectly legitimate and well-told light comedy."

Times [London] Lit Sup p672 O 15 '25 350w

GOLDRING, DOUGLAS. Northern lights and southern shade. 220p il $5 Houghton [12s 6d Chapman & Hall]

914.85 Sweden—Description and travel. Brittany—Description and travel [26-27493]

The author of Gone abroad spent a year in Sweden lecturing at the University of Gottenburg, with side trips to Norway and Denmark. His account of impressions and experiences gained during that year is seasoned with humor and spiced with the piquant flavor of personal likes and dislikes.

Booklist 23:75 N '26

"The concluding portion of the volume, wherein Mr. Goldring describes his holidays in Brittany and Southend-on-Sea, is rich in amusing anecdotes, keen observations, and mordant reflections."

+ Bookm 64:xiv S '26 80w

Reviewed by Blair Niles

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 N 21 '26 420w

Boston Transcript p8 S 4 '26 680w

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 D '26

"Goldring writes mostly of Sweden, and a little of spots in France and Italy, where he feels more at home. Sweden he found cold, hard, hospitable, commercial, sanitary and dull. And so he writes dully about Sweden. The Latin countries, especially hidden nooks along seashores, interest him most, and of these he writes best." F. O'Brien

Lit R p1 S 4 '26 2150w

"Mr. Goldring is by temperament a Southerner, and the fate which at present condemns him to spend one half of the year in Scandinavia is very plainly not to his liking. The result is that his Northern Lights are pedestrian stuff enough, with rather more than a legitimate amount of padding."

+ New Statesman 27:210 Je 5 '26 300w

"Mr. Goldring is a competent writer and his book is readable. But despite his wide faring he is not free from unreasoning insular prejudices." H. J. Forman

+ N Y Times p17 D 26 '26 900w

"The chapters are of very uneven quality, but the book is readable and not commonplace."

+ Outlook 143:514 Ag 11 '26 120w

Sat R 141:509 Ap 17 '26 30w

Sat R 141:763 Je 19 '26 480w

"Capital reading." Dale Warren

+ Sat R of Lit 3:156 O 2 '26 270w

"Mr. Goldring is rather stiff-jointed when he writes of the people. He has lived among them, but he has little more to record than the first general impression of a difference in manners which the most hurried traveler will notice. He has found nothing more intimate to say. And by the time he reaches Brittany and Italy he is himself again, interested in people and things, and able to write of them with sharp cleverness. His book should certainly have been 'Northern Shade and Southern Lights.'"

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p459 J1 8 '26 480w

GOLDSTEIN, HARRIET IRENE, and GOLDSTEIN, VETTA. Art in every day life. 465p il $3.50 Macmillan

740 Art. House decoration. Clothing and dress 25-19543

"In the first part of the book the general principles of art are explained, with illustrations drawn from the fields of fine arts, exterior and interior design, costume design and business. There are also sections on dress design and house decoration. The book is planned to serve as a text-book for students of art, of home economics and of salesmanship. The authors are (1925) members of the division of home economics in the University of Minnesota."

—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 22:198 F '26

"This is obviously intended as a text for students studying dress design and interior decoration. It is an excellent book for that purpose and also will be of interest to women

GOLDSTEIN, H. I. and V.—Continued who wish to create a pleasing effect both in their dress and in their homes."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 D 20 '25 70w

"The close interrelation of the practical with the æsthetic in this work should serve to increase the reader's enjoyment of simplified art while demonstrating that individuality and charm in one's surroundings do not depend solely upon the cost of one's belongings."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 16 '26 360w

"Art in Every Day Life is outstanding in that it explains the principles of art and their practical application in such a clear, simple, and effective way that the average person, without art training or native ability, can understand and apply them to any problems." M. E. Clark

+ J Home Econ 18:43 Ja '26 720w

"This is a contribution to the comfort of all home-makers, business people, and artists, as it explains in a delightful way the science of good design and good decoration in practical life. Its value is increased by the illustrations."

+ Outlook 142:298 F 24 '26 200w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:144 Mr '26

Pratt p21 summer '26

St Louis 24:56 Mr '26

"The text is written in an interesting, easily understood style and is full of worthwhile information and suggestions."

+ School Arts M 25:640 Je '26 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p396 Je 10 '26 250w

GOLLOMB, JOSEPH. Master man hunters (Eng title Scotland yard). 315p $2.50 Macaulay

352.2 Detectives 26-15825

"His facts cover the police systems of France, Germany, and Austria as well as merely England. His comparisons are just and luminous. The plodding teamwork of Scotland Yard is rightly praised, as against the brilliant dash and imagination of the French detective, who works alone, relying often upon a sudden intuition; while the remorseless terror of Berlin's mechanical man-hunting machine emerges in interesting contrast with the intelligent wisdom of Vienna, whose police use the scientist more than any other country. Each system of detecting crime is a product of the nation's psychology. True and thrilling instances are given by way of proof."—Int Bk R

Reviewed by Algernon Blackwood
Int Bk R p679 O '26 1300w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 39:530 Ag 7 '26 200w

"A very amusing book. One regrets only that Mr. Gollomb should have failed to say anything about the detective service of his own country and to compare it with the rest, because his comparisons of the various European services are most interesting, and the American detective service must surely have characteristics of its own which the English reader would like to understand."

+ New Statesman 27:447 Jl 31 '26 800w

Outlook 144:345 N 10 '26 50w

"It would have been well if the Inspector, or Mr. Gollomb, or somebody, had refreshed his memory by looking at such a simple and obvious authority as the record of the trial in the Notable Trials Series. It would have saved him from a dozen small blunders. After all, these books are read for the good stories they contain, and perhaps it is only the fussy writer of reviews who cares whether they include minor errors or not."

Sat R of Lit 3:241 O 23 '26 230w

Spec 137:214 Ag 7 '26 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p844 N 25 '26 440w

Times [London] Lit Sup p567 Ag 26 '26 250w

GOMPERTZ, MARTIN LOUIS ALAN (GANPAT, pseud.). Road to Lamaland; impressions of a journey to Western Thibet. 246p il $5 Doran [208 Hodder & S.]

915.46 Ladak—Description and travel. Kashmir—Description and travel 26-27590

An officer in the Indian service describes an expedition thru the Himalayas into Ladak, a dependency of the Kashmir State. The journey was adventurous and offered ample opportunity for observation of a strange country and people.

Booklist 23:126 D '26

"Although 'The Road to Lamaland' does not quite live up to its subtitle of an adventurous journey into western Thibet, it is a sufficiently satisfying account to one who has never visited that portion of the earth. At times the author's tendency to include a mass of irrelevant detail annoys the reader, but on practically every occasion of this sort the reader is either won over by Mr. Gompertz's bland obliviousness of time, or beguiled by the extreme impishness of the 'yeh log,' the fox terrier puppies who made the journey in a wicker basket on one of the mules."

+ Bookm 64:xxxv O '26 150w

"Few of us are apt to duplicate the adventurous journey into western Tibet described in 'The Road to Lamaland,' but it is, nevertheless, a capital volume for the bedside table or the shelf by the study fire. The fact that one is not interested in Lamaland is beside the point." Dale Warren

+ Sat R of Lit 3:340 N 27 '26 220w

"We find many flippant libels on the East in general and Lamaism in particular. We resent such generalizations from an author like 'Ganpat,' whose stories often show real insight." — Spec 137:64 Jl 10 '26 80w

GOOD, EDWARD (OYVED, MOYSHEH, pseud.). Visions and jewels; an autobiography. 163p $2 Holt

B or 92

The title well describes this unusual little book, the autobiography of a Polish Jew who ran away to London in his youth and, after some knocking about, set up a little shop known as Cameo Corner which has been much sought out by lovers of beautiful and curious things. Here among his cameos and jades and other curios his imagination had play, and his visions take on the color of his jewels. Into the pattern of his story are woven talks with his friends and recollections of the customers who have strayed into his shop.

"It is in no wise to be confused with the numerous autobiographies of immigrants whose success casts reflected glory upon the countries of their adoption. It is no straightforward narrative of a rise from obscure beginnings to place and power. It offers no analysis of the problems which confront the Jews. It is a broken, fragmentary thing, a gem without a setting, nor precisely cut, but cherishing a deep inward fire. It is a piece of life. It is a man." Babette Deutsch

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 N 14 '26 600w

"Frequently charming autobiography of a beautiful soul." J: W. Gassner

+ Nation 123:646 D 15 '26 100w

"Because of its curiously individual quality, odd knowledge and glimpses into an inner life, this little autobiography might be left safely to the booklover, who lingers in byways of literature, to discover for himself."

+ New Statesman 26:622 F 27 '26 160w

"The book is made worth while in the first place by the author's striking literary gift, a gift comprising such qualities of recognition of values and of expression as would enable him to write interestingly about any ordinary thing, and in the second by the real achievements which it chronicles. The frontispiece is from a sculptured head of the author by Jacob Epstein.

+ N Y Times p18 O 3 '26 200w

"It is accomplished in so gentle a style that it deceives one as to its consummate art. It is doubtful if the little volume, flower enclosed, with its frontispiece by Jacob Epstein will appeal to the many, but it will bring a very real joy to the few, and that, one guesses, is exactly what the author would most desire."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:319 N 20 '26 270w

GOODMAN, KENNETH SAWYER, and HECHT, BEN. Wonder hat, and other one-act plays; prefatory note by Thomas Wood Stevens. 188p $1.75 (6s) Appleton.

812 25-14485

Five short plays written in collaboration by two leaders of the Little theater movement. Contents: The wonder hat; The two lamps; An idyll of the shops; The hand of Siva; The hero of Santa Maria.

Booklist 22:150 Ja '26

"All the plays are actable and should prove successful additions to Little Theatre literature."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:349 N 28 '25 180w

Wis Lib Bul 21:307 D '25

GOODMAN, THEODORE. Narrative structure and style; a series of graded exercises with instructions in technique. 221p $1.75 Appleton.

808 Narration (rhetoric) 26-12386

The technique of writing fiction is the author's theme, and while these chapters, effectively summed up in the title, are primarily intended as a text for college courses they may be used with profit for home study and exercise.

"Pending actual results, one may say that the book, consisting of a series of graded exercises with instructions in technique, contains simple and measurably novel hints and helps toward creative effort based upon some years of teaching experience."

Bookm 64:241 O '26 120w

"Mr. Goodman begins his instruction with the very first steps and offers specific suggestions throughout as to exercises and outlines. It seems as if one who followed them conscientiously could not help but produce creditable results. The advice is lightened throughout with a sympathetic understanding of the mental processes of the would-be author."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 31 '26 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p105 S '26

Times [London] Lit Sup p634 S 23 '26 150w

GOODRICH, CARTER LYMAN. Miner's freedom, a study of the working life in a changing industry. (Amherst bks., 2nd ser.) 189p il $2 Marshall Jones

331.8 Coal miners 25-21511

"The primary concern of 'The Miner's Freedom' is the quality of the working life; its incidental concern coal and the miner. The question which engages Mr. Goodrich's attention is the clash in the modern industrial system between efficiency in production and richness in the working life. Its focus is the sacrifice 'of a creative life on the job itself,' to 'the possibility of fuller and more varied living outside working hours.' The method of procedure is the detailed presentation of a single case rather than the abstract consideration of the issue. The case selected for study and for record is the transformation of the working life of the coal-miner by the introduction of the factory system."—Sat R of Lit

"A distinct contribution to the development of effective standardization." G: M. Janes

+ Am Econ R 16:335 Je '26 100w

"If the reader of this review has not yet considered of importance the social results that come to the workers because of the shift from manual to machine production, I advise the reading of The Miner's Freedom. He will have acquired a new slant on the labor problem."

C: Reiteil

+ Ann Am Acad 125:281 My '26 200w

Booklist 22:278 Ap '26

Cleveland Open Shelf p64 My '26

"Brilliantly written little book... The author's analysis is exceedingly well made. His emphasis upon the 'quality of the working life' is well taken. Perhaps as important as anything, he brings the reader into close touch with the miner as a thinking and feeling and reacting fellow." H. A. Mills

+ J Pol Econ 34:396 Je '26 360w

Reviewed by G: Soule

New Repub 45:68 D 2 '25 120w

"Earnest, thoughtful study by an extraordinarily human economist." E: A. Wiecek

+ New Repub 46:176 Mr 31 '26 500w

"The account is full of incident and event; it abounds in interesting and colorful detail. It contains pertinent and varied materials gathered by Mr. Goodrich during many months in the mines." W. H. Hamilton

+ Sat R of Lit 2:824 My 29 '26 280w

"This book raises more questions than it answers; but it is informing. It will be useful to all who wish to understand future relationships between employer and employed in the coal industry." J: A. Fitch

Survey 55:245 N 15 '25 130w

GOODWIN, JOHN. The avenger. 418p $2 Putnam

26-15959

Duped by a secret combine, Robert Masterton is found guilty of a serious charge and railroaded to jail. At one stroke he loses his proud position and the love of Cynthia Knollys. But his grandfather, dying while Robert is still in prison, leaves him a fortune. The death bed confession of one of the combine sets Robert free, with the names of his enemies known only to himself. Deliberately he plans vengeance upon them. With the help of his fortune and Sadie Hicks, he puts one after another out of the way—no one ever discovers where or how they go—until only his arch enemy is left, Mulholland, now Cynthia's husband. The struggle for mastery between these two strong men makes a mystery story with a punch.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 26 '26 90w

"The book is well written and will appeal to those who like a well constructed mystery tale in which the detectives are more or less like human beings, and the wronged hero is neither a puppet nor a superhero."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 13 '26 180w

"Each publishing season, among the mediocre mass of 'shockers,' there appear a scanty few of which a reviewer feels justified in defying the reader to lay them aside before they are finished. 'The Avenger' is one of these."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:218 O 16 '26 200w

GOOLD, MARSHALL N. Heather heretics. 291p $2 Houghton

26-6147

In this story of dissension in the Ardoroch free kirk, and of the minister's romance with the daughter of the man who leads the opposition, characters and situations alike are drawn with persuasive humor against the background of strong religious feeling inseparable from the Scotch.

Booklist 23:39 O '26

GOOLD, MARSHALL—Continued

"It is a tale to warm the cockles of a Scotchman's heart, and if there's a deal of texts and Bible sayings thrown in, they are not too much to spoil a charming genre painting of simple folk in a Scotch mountain village."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ap 4 '26 250w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence
Boston Transcript p5 Ap 24 '26 1400w

"This reviewer wishes that more space had been devoted to the minister's romance and less to his theology, although his clear analysis of religious problems will help many another doubter."

Ind 116:362 Mr 27 '26 130w

"A well-written, dreary bore." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p4 Je 5 '26 200w

N Y Times p17 Ap 4 '26 650w

"There is a charming love story intertwined simply and naturally with the spiritual and material adventures of the young minister; but it is kept properly subordinated. And the book, though often highly amusing, is none the less permeated by genuine, serious, and fine religious feeling."

+ Outlook 142:534 Ap 7 '26 380w

Wis Lib Bul 22:198 Je '26

GORDON, ARMISTEAD CHURCHILL. Allegra; the story of Byron and Miss Clairmont. 266p $2.50 Minton, Balch & co.

B or 92 Byron, George Gordon Noë1 Byron, 6th baron. Clairmont, Clara Mary Jane 26-16252

In this latest addition to the rapidly expanding literature of the Byron-Shelley-Godwin group there is little about Clare Clairmont, or about Byron's daughter Allegra whose mother she was. The book is really a biography of Byron, starting even before his birth with an account of his inheritance from the wild Gordons of Gight, his mother's people, and following thru the tangled affairs of his life to the end.

Booklist 23:171 Ja '27

"Mr. Gordon's 'Allegra,' in spite of the fact that it fails to concentrate on the announced objects of the author's research, is an excellent running biography. It will be a question in many minds, nevertheless, whether the field of Byronic biography is not becoming a trifle crowded."

N Y Times p4 S 12 '26 1350w

"'Allegra' is not a great biography; it is not good fiction, but it is a useful book, most useful for the clarity with which the author interrelates the lives of the Byrons, the Shelleys and the Godwins, not to mention a dozen other great figures of the day. It is the product of wide, digested reading."

+ N Y World p4m S 19 '26 250w

"One of the many recent biographies which take their form and color from the novel. It is among the most interesting of them. Byron's life is particularly rich in material, and the author has carefully followed facts."

+ Outlook 144:314 N 3 '26 400w

GORDON, HOMER KING. Code of men. 341p $2 Crowell

26-12835

In accordance with his promise, Smiling Jim sent east for the dead man's little daughter. When Patricia arrived she was hardly the child the rancher expected to see, but he was cordial to the young lady she had grown to be, and kept his own counsel about her father's penury. This was a mistake. An eastern sharper tried to trick Jim out of his property, and easily turned Pat against the rancher. There ensued a bloody feud. As the result of it the trickster was routed and exposed, Pat changed her mind, and Jim recovered his smile.

"A mildly interesting tale along the usual lines of most of the stories of the West." C. P. S.
Lit R p12 S 11 '26 180w

"A typical tale of a western ranch, 'Code of Men' will be read with enjoyment by those who like stories of rapid action and exciting incident. As such stories go, it is a good novel, its complicated incident true to its background, its cow-punchers and its young rancher faithful to their type, its narrative vivid and its interest kept at high pitch."

+ N Y Times p18 Ag 1 '26 360w

"Although the action is sustained at a whirlwind pace throughout, due to the excellence of the author's style and craftsmanship, the tale adheres to a plausibility usually missing from this type of fiction. Jim's love affair is, to be sure, a trifle far-fetched, but this was to be expected and its development is of subordinate importance to the main theme of the story."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:27 Ag 7 '26 100w

GORDON, JAN, and GORDON, CORA JOSEPHINE (MRS JAN GORDON). Two vagabonds in a French village; a portrait group in prose (Eng title Two vagabonds in Languedoc). 242p il $5 McBride [12s 6d Lane]

914.48 Languedoc, France—Description and travel. Janac, France 26-26226

For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

Booklist 22:290 Ap '26

"All the charm and vitality of genre study are here, depicted with quiet humor and meticulous observation."

+ Bookm 63:xxix My '26 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p42 Ap '26

"Its veracity is unmistakable. The authors write pleasantly, but rather badly, and treat their subject with good humor and understanding. The illustrations are very amusing."

+ Ind 116:194 F 13 '26 80w

"As the Gordons observed and fraternized with and sketched the simple folk of Janac they caught and pieced together a human document of real interest." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p4 My 22 '26 280w

"To learn a little about Janac, in this pleasant way, is at least to begin to understand the diversity of France."

+ N Y Times p6 F 14 '26 1350w

"It is an unusually able contribution to the literature of travel as contrasted with the accounts of tourists. I imagine this book will persist while many other high-priced travel books will disappear. As a study of peasant psychology by an observer of shrewd sense and tolerant sly humor, I have seen nothing lately to compare with it." W. McFee

+ N Y World p6m Ja 31 '26 250w

St Louis 24:83 Ap '26

"There is considerable literary charm to these pages and the illustrations, which are likewise the work of the authors, are alone worth the price of the volume, yet the book has a further value. It shows the prospective traveller that the end of all travel is not movement and that one does not have to cover the length and breadth of France to get some idea of the country and the people."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:622 Mr 6 '26 260w

"It is a delightful book, full of fun and philosophy and of sympathetic understanding. It is full also, of quaint odds and ends of knowledge."

+ Spec 136:95 Ja 16 '26 130w

GORDON, JAN, and GORDON, CORA JOSEPHINE (MRS JAN GORDON). Two vagabonds in Sweden and Lapland. 323p il $5 Dodd [12s 6d Lane]

914.85 Sweden—Description and travel. Lapland—Description and travel [26-17861]

With pen and brush the authors make a vivid reminder of their wanderings in Sweden and Lapland and of their sympathetic approach to the people of both countries.

"Another delightful travel book by the authors of 'Modern French Painters,' 'Poor Folk in Spain,' 'Two Vagabonds in the Balkans,' etc. No lover of good writing can deny the appeal of these volumes. They are so different from the customary travel tales that one wonders at the constant mood of inspiration, to say nothing about the real information extracted from well-beaten paths."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 27 '26 180w

"Their gift for achieving a complete artistic unity in wandering, in observing and sketching, in studying music and playing it, on the one hand, and in making the reader an enraptured sharer in these experiences on the other hand, reaches its highest perfection in their latest book."

+ New Statesman 27:501 Ag 14 '26 950w

"We may praise them for providing a great deal of entertainment in their books of unconventional travel. 'Two Vagabonds in Sweden and Lapland' looks as if it were a worthy addition to their earlier books. As usual, there are spirited drawings."

+ Sat R 141:683 Je 5 '26 60w

"The little illustrations are, as usual, a prominent feature in the amusement our artist-vagabond friends afford us, and a special note of interest is given by the reproductions of the 'Bonaden,' Sweden cottage paintings in oil on canvas, used for the decoration of peasant houses through the eighteenth century up to 1840 or thereabouts."

+ Sat R 142:45 Ji 10 '26 320w

Sat R of Lit 3:441 D 11 '26 320w

Times [London] Lit Sup p459 Ji 8 '26 400w

GORDON-BARRETT, RICHARD REGIS. Motoring in France. 206p il $3 Brentano's [6s Methuen]

914.4 France—Description and travel. Automobiles—Touring 26-8184

"This small book on France will convince the most apathetic motorist that the way to see the French country is to hire a car. The book is far more than a mere eulogy of automobile travel. Facts are skillfully woven together with fancies, and routes, itineraries, distances, costs, equipment, technicalities, and the climate and physical aspects of France are all discussed in detail, in the introductory section. The volume contains a good map (although not a road map), charts and diagrams, excellent photographs, and a complete index. The body of the book is given up to the various French provinces which best lend themselves to an automobile tour. The Riviera section is fully covered and there are further chapters on Brittany, the Rhône valley, Provence, Savoie, the Basque country, châteaux land and the Loire."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:370 Je '26

"A manual of the highest utility. His descriptions are concise and piquant, his knowledge of the country is remarkably intimate, and he offers his facts and suggestions with so much friendliness and good sense that 'Motoring in France' cannot help increasing one's enjoyment and lessening one's worries."

+ Bookm 63:xlvi Ap '26 120w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 F 28 '26 120w

Boston Transcript p2 F 6 '26 600w

St Louis 24:171 Je '26

"The one serious fault of the book is its failure to include a section on Normandy, the point of departure for most American tourists. 'Motoring in France' is not a volume to be read before sailing in an eleventh hour attempt to secure local color. It is rather a book to take on the trip and consult daily, even if the author's advice is disregarded and we fall back on the chemin de fer."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:534 Ja 30 '26 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p888 D 17 '25 70w

GORE, CHARLES. Can we then believe? (White lectures) 231p $2 Scribner [6s Murray] 239 Christianity [26-27549]

The book contains a restatement of the conclusions already reached in previous volumes on "Reconstruction of belief," and a reply to criticisms brought forth by these earlier discussions.

Booklist 23:109 D '26

Bookm 64:xxviii O '26 160w

Reviewed by F. J. F. Jackson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 S 19 '26 260w

Boston Transcript p4 O 6 '26 480w

Reviewed by A. C. Dieffenbach

Ind 117:562 N 13 '26 550w

"It is the best of the whole series and is certain of wide circulation and great usefulness. The author is at his best in the kind of argument he has developed here, with astonishing restraint and controlled power. To praise thus a book of this kind would be fulsome; but not the least of the services rendered by Bishop Gore to Christianity is the rugged sincerity of his thought and writing."

+ Sat R 142:232 Ag 28 '26 920w

"He analyzes with beautiful clarity the essentials of the problem Christianity faces today in the process of revaluation; he sympathetically appreciates both the findings of science and the tactical errors of dogmatists; and he argues nobly for the unchanging essentials of Christian belief as aided rather than hurt by fullest testing and reverent research. In no essentials, and in many a detail, he budges no single inch from the traditional affirmations."

Sat R of Lit 3:244 O 23 '26 230w

"He has a case to plead, and to a certain extent—the ambit of the minds of his hearers—he pleads it exceedingly well. There is just a little of the over-emphasis in his statement which the Bishop, courteously acknowledging some criticism that has reached him, deprecates in his former books. But it exactly meets the needs of people who have known doubts now and again, but have never encountered Doubt, an atmosphere of mind as real as Faith."

+ Spec 137:216 Ag 7 '26 980w

Times [London] Lit Sup p520 Ag 5 '26 1150w

GORE-BROWNE, ROBERT. Crater. 306p $2 Doran [7s 6d Collins]

26-10843

The scene for this triangle story is set in Central Africa. Lady Norah came on Archie Sinclair during the war under circumstances which idealized each to the other. They fell passionately in love and during their first leave were married. So long as the war lasted, with its excitements and separations, their love lasted too. But when the time came to settle down Norah could not settle. She urged her sound-thinking but slow-moving Archie to try cattle ranching in Africa. They had been in Africa two years when during one of Archie's rare absences Dick Ward came to the ranch, and with his coming a new passion superseded the old in Norah's life. The story tells of the elemental clash of the three in the heart of the jungle.

"In spite of the stock situations and characters the author has managed to create a certain amount of suspense, and as long as it attends to the business in hand the book is, in spite of its obvious shortcomings, a readable and interesting adventure romance after its kind."

+ — N Y Times p22 My 23 '26 450w

GORE-BROWNE ROBERT—Continued

"The story is well constructed and exciting; at times, however, the tone of the narrative is so manly as to make the reader feel uncomfortably effeminate. The best thing in the book is the character of Dick. Mr. Gore-Browne describes tropical conditions so well that he makes us forget how often they have been described before." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 140:710 D 12 '25 170w

"Mr. Gore-Browne has the story-teller's instinct and a wealth of natural philosophy about him that makes him entertaining and by no means insignificant."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:58 Ag 21 '26 230w

"The very sophisticated book-devourer may shake his head dubiously over the opening pages of The Crater on finding it has an African setting and concerns a triangular situation. But the tale is ingenious enough, and the psychology and characters of the three protagonists are so deftly worked in that prejudice against the particular local colour is gently dispelled."

+ — Spec 136:59 Ja 9 '26 360w

Springf'd Republican p7f Je 20 '26 300w

"A first novel of great merit and still greater promise."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p885 D 17 '25 280w

GORMAN, HERBERT S. Two virginities. 314p $2 Macaulay

26-17609

The heroine expresses the thesis of the book when she says: "Good and evil are relative matters. Sometimes they do not really exist for the spirit that rises above things. They are but soiled upon a garment of flesh that changes every day." The hero, too, who has tasted deeply of life, is firmly convinced of an essential virginity of the soul and of the heart which the sins of the flesh cannot touch. So these two, Lalage Trent and John Gaul, in spite of their sins of the past, disclose to each other the secret, untouched recesses of their hearts and together make a fresh attempt at living.

"This is a curiously uneven book. It has some fine qualities. It has some surprising defects. It is by turns absorbing, tiresome, shocking, showing a tinsel glitter, and then baring authentic power and beauty."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 O 10 '26 460w

"Blake's idea, and Mr. Gorman's redaction of it is quite true enough, but he emphasizes his point too often. At any event, he makes his meaning clear." M. G. Bonner

+ — Lit R p3 O 9 '26 380w

N Y Times p11 S 26 '26 600w

"Mr. Gorman has done some extraordinarily skilful work in this story. It is an absorbing story told with a limpid clarity, illuminated by a sharp penetration and touched, in style and conception, with rare beauty." J. E. Mount

+ N Y World p9m O 3 '26 250w

Springf'd Republican p7f O 10 '26 150w

GORMAN, HERBERT S. Victorian American: Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. 363p $5 Doran B or 92 Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth

26-18424

"Mr. Gorman poses Longfellow against the background of his world and time. The poet faces you; a decorous, cultivated, urbane gentleman whose serenity is untroubled by the various agitations convulsing that world to which his back is turned. He is the flower of American gentility. He has a wide experience of society and almost no knowledge of life. He is smug, complacent and excessively sentimental. He is didactic, like many of his contemporaries; but the ideas which have affected them so profoundly have never even touched him. He has erudition, but not intelligence. He has facility, but not originality. He has no passions, no ideas, no vices other than his tedious virtues.

For forty years he is the idol of America."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"Herbert Gorman's biography of Longfellow is an exceptionally felicitous achievement in portraiture and an entertaining book. The book is a biography, and Mr. Gorman has very wisely refrained from burdening it with detailed criticism of Longfellow's work. The criticism is implicit, however, and it is sound." Lloyd Morris

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 N 21 '26 900w

"There are two irritating elements throughout this book. Mr. Gorman continually refers to his subject as 'Henry' in much the manner in which he might patronize a small boy. Consciously or unconsciously, the note of patronage is present in this use of Longfellow's first name. It has the effect of belittling the poet. . . Even more noticeable as the story proceeds is the fact that it is journalistic in its language and construction." D. L. M.

— Boston Transcript p2 D 8 '26 1350w

"Upsetting the pedestals of immortals may be good fun for the perpetrator, especially if he does it adroitly, but it is frequently painful for the one who looks on and distressing to him who comes later to the scene of the iconoclast's activities. Is it what is called a good picture? I do not know, but I hope not. Is Mr. Gorman's work well done? Very. It is skilfully constructed, artistically finished and suavely presented. In conception, design and display it testifies the profound influence of le maitre, Mr. Lytton Strachey." J. C.

+ — Lit R p2 D 18 '26 1000w

Reviewed by Mark Van Doren

Nation 123:693 D 29 '26 620w

"By far the most pleasing aspect of Mr. Gorman's biography is the degree to which Longfellow is made visible before the reader. The book can scarcely be called dramatic, for the writer did not have a dramatic person to write about. It gives the impression, rather, of a scenario. There is too much of the book written in the present tense—a device, Mr. Gorman should understand—that weakens rather than strengthens when overworked. Also, the designation of the subject of the book by his first name throughout the several hundred pages becomes increasingly annoying."

+ — N Y Times p5 O 24 '26 1700w

"'An American Victorian' is neither depreciation nor appreciation. It is an honest and honorable estimate. It is Henry Wadsworth Longfellow as Herbert S. Gorman sees him. Gorman strove to understand, and succeeded. 'A Victorian American' is the story, not of a great poet but of a happy, successful man who was in tune with his generation." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p9m O 24 '26 1050w

Outlook 144:571 D 29 '26 90w

"In this biography of one of the most bulky figures in American letters, Mr. Herbert Gorman definitely comes into his own. Abandoning the somewhat esoteric matters which have occasionally heretofore engaged his facile pen, he shows himself for the most part amply able to deal in a catholic and tolerant manner with a huge mass of much misunderstood material, and to draw from it some sound conclusions about the age and the figure with which he deals." Harvey Allen

+ Sat R of Lit 3:361 D 4 '26 1500w

Springf'd Republican p10 D 17 '26 760w

Wis Lib Bul 22:332 D '26

GOSLING, CECIL. Travel and adventure in many lands. 403p il $3.50 Dutton [10s 6d Methuen]

B or 92

26-17594

Born in Stockholm while his father was in the diplomatic service there, and educated on the continent, the author at seventeen moved to Central America where he spent some time. He then served in Africa with the Border police, and later was posted as minister to Bolivia. These very varied experiences were the source of the observations and adventures contained in the present book.

"The context is interesting, if long drawn out; the style ponderous, involved and tiresome. We can, however, recommend the book to big-game hunters, would-be jungle explorers and those who wonder why the Englishman makes such a splendid trader, colonizer and ruler of backward peoples."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 N 7 '26 160w

"Mr. Gosling, in his exceptionally wide wanderings, has had an eye for little things as well as big, and his gifts of humour and reflection add charm to what is no mere work of 'travel' but a delightful autobiography." Gilbert Thomas

+ Nation and Ath 40:194 N 6 '26 130w

New Statesman 27:supxiv O 9 '26 260w

Reviewed by Gregory Mason

N Y Times p10 N 2 '26 60w

Outlook 144:379 N 17 '26 70w

"This is a good book of its kind, simply because it tells more and better stories than any recent rival. Mr. Gosling, one imagines, must be a great raconteur. When he leaves the path of anecdote, he ceases to be impressive."

+ — Sat R 142:477 O 23 '26 500w

Reviewed by Dale Warren

Sat R of Lit 3:468 D 25 '26 110w

Springf'd Republican p6 N 8 '26 700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p736 O 28 '26 850w

GOSSELIN, LOUIS LEON THEODORE (G. LENOTRE, pseud.). Paris in the revolution; tr. by H. Noel Williams. 319p il $4.50 Brentano's

944.04 Paris—History—Revolution, 1789-1799. France—History—Revolution

[25-13552]

"With extraordinary patience and a passion for detail, he makes his way into the political clubs of the Jacobins and the Cordeliers, into the gloomy cells of the Conciergerie and the Abbey of Saint-Germain-des-Prés, into the assembly hall of the National Convention, into the bedroom of Robespierre and the dining room of Danton, into the Salon of Madame Roland and the Riding School of the Tuilleries—and from them all gleams a rich harvest of illuminating minutiae which formal historians have disdained."—Lit R

"A morsel edifying to the palates of those who like their history well seasoned with the salt of satire and the spice of speculation."

+ Bookm 63:367 My '26 200w

"M. Lenotre did not desire to again write a history so often written. He has, however, accomplished a far more difficult feat." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 20 '26 1300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 S '26

"Decidedly the vivacious M. Lenotre proves that topography has limitless possibilities of romance. Whatever history of the French Revolution one may select for reading, this book should be kept open beside it for additional illumination and capture of the human interest element." W. N. C. Carlton

+ Lit R p2 Mr 27 '26 720w

"Despite the fact that there are some historical data in this volume that are not readily to be found elsewhere, on the whole it is a bit of sentimentalism. In general it may be said of it that exceptis exceptendis whatever in it is important is untrue and whatever is true is unimportant. In extenuation it might be pointed out that the original French edition was written some years ago and that the author—a historian of reputation—is himself sometimes painfully apologetic."

— Nation 122:703 Je 23 '26 300w

"His book is too prolix, and too freely padded with gruesome and sensational matter, to attract the serious student of Revolution topography."

— Nation and Ath 36:820 Mr 14 '25 350w

New Statesman 25:supxiv My 23 '25 150w

"M. Lenotre's volume is delightful for the casual reader. It may be especially commended to readers who have in mind a general outline of facts and wish to fill in that outline with detailed homely information. But it must not be surmised from the statement that its author is so meticulously careful and detailed that the work is even for a moment dull. M. Lenotre neither tilts at accepted theories nor sets up new ones. His work possesses a novel and entertaining interest." Howard Devree

+ N Y Times p5 Je 20 '26 450w

"The book is full even to overflowing with the intimate personal details which have been the fruit of an insatiable curiosity, an infinite patience, a lively imagination, and a genius for discovery which makes the great historical detective, and a style which makes the great detective story writer."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:157 O 2 '26 330w

Times [London] Lit Sup p270 Ap 16 '25 300w

GOWEN, HERBERT HENRY. Asia; a short history from the earliest times to the present day. 436p il $3.50 Little

950 Asia—History

26-12360

The history told in broad outline, compresses the long and intricate story of a continent into a single volume. Within this compass it has been possible to treat only the broader influences affecting historical development and to show the roots from which the forces determining the course of history have sprung. Fully a third of the book is given to the war and its aftermath in Asia—the interests of Europe and the United States in Asia today, domestic problems of China and Japan, the political relations of Occident and Orient and the educational and religious efforts put forth by the West in the East.

Reviewed by G. H. Blakeslee

Atlantic's Bookshelf S '26 530w

Booklist 23:72 N '26

"The book is well done. Dr. Gowen has a sense of the picturesque in phrase and description, despite his enforced laconicism."

+ Bookm 64:236 O '26 200w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 O 3 '26 560w

"Dr. Gowen's knowledge of his complicated subject is so genuine, so thorough his understanding of the causes of the action and interaction of those multitudinous events which make the history of nations, and so sympathetic although naturally occidental his point of view, that no confusion of detail blurs the immense amount of data presented. Clearly, tersely, tolerantly, he recounts events, their causes, and the human agencies which met and conquered them or were conquered by them."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 19 '26 600w

"Professor Gowen has done well in his efforts. He has given us as comprehensive, coherent, and unified history of the Mother of Continents as it is possible to do within the limits of his book. He has managed, too, to avoid the dullness and confusion which such special histories often fall into." Chi-Chen Wang

+ Int Bk R p699 O '26 1000w

Reviewed by Nathaniel Pepper

New Repub 49:adv N 24 '26 250w

"The summarization is sometimes masterly, almost always well above the average in that species of composition."

+ Outlook 144:217 O 13 '26 80w

GOWEN, HERBERT HENRY. Universal faith; comparative religion from the Christian standpoint. (Biblical and oriental ser.) 210p $1.50 Morehouse

290 Christianity and other religions. Religion 26-8104

In this analysis of comparative religion from the Christian standpoint it is the author's intention to show "the uniqueness of the Christian faith and its essential and vital relationship with all earlier religions," and that Christianity offers in Christ the answer to problems unsolved by other religions.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 5 '26 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p419 Je 17 '26 130w

GOWEN, HERBERT HENRY, and HALL, JOSEF WASHINGTON. Outline history of China. 542p $4 (15s) Appleton

951 China—History 26-14820

The authors have compressed into about 500 pages the complex record of Chinese history from its mythological beginning to the year 1926. Nearly half the book is given to the republican era, which is interpreted in its historical perspective. A students' bibliography is included providing collateral reading in an elementary course in Chinese history. There is a useful chronology, also an excellent map.

"Two specialists in the same field have joined forces to produce what may perhaps be called the best Everyman's story of China to be found."

+ Bookm 64:367 N '26 120w

"The excellent chapters upon the years of the modern republic will be received with thanks by students unfamiliar with the issues and opposing factions which have made of this vast land in late years a veritable Chinese puzzle."

+ Ind 117:366 S 25 '26 100w

"The authors have been at great pains to assist the reader with a very carefully compiled bibliography, with critical notes, a comprehensive index, key to pronunciation of all Chinese names, a brief digest of eras and reigns and an excellent map of China. The book is intended to use as well as to read, and should attain a recognized place as a practical introductory treatise and textbook on the background, as well as on the dramatic foreground, of the cultural and political life of the Chinese people." Gardner Harding

+ N Y Times p4 S 12 '26 1000w

"This volume is comprehensive, clear, well written and best of all has its mind in China instead of the agitated fringe where the west has touched it."

+ N Y World p8m O 3 '26 160w

"An almost impossible task has been achieved by the authors in making really interesting the dim chronicles of ancient China, as well as the exciting story of the last few years. This has been accomplished by the skillful selection of the important and striking events. The periods from the early ages down to the fall of the Manchus have been covered by Dr. Gowen, who has an established reputation for accuracy and impartiality. It is to be regretted that the same impartiality has not been adopted by Mr. Hall in his account of modern times." C: C. Batchelder

+ — Sat R of Lit 3:251 O 30 '26 650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p807 N 18 '26 340w

GRAHAM, ABBIE. Grace H. Dodge; merchant of dreams. 329p $2 Womans press

B or 92 Dodge, Grace Hoadley 26-10346

"Grace Dodge lived to be almost 60 years old and filled forty years of that time with hard work and splendid achievement. Possibly the most interesting and significant phase of Miss Graham's biography is her account of how the young Grace Dodge tackled the problem of finding work that would be of some consequence, in which she could feel herself to be doing something worth while and giving herself fully to the task, and how she grew as the tasks developed or she found new ones. She dreamed through to fulfillment Teachers College of Columbia University, which owes its existence more to her than to any one else; the working girls' clubs that became an important factor of American industry a generation or more ago and were the forerunner of the organized movement of women in industry, and other important matters."—N Y Times

Booklist 23:77 N '26

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Je 20 '26 180w

"Miss Graham, who, by the way, won the 1926 prize at Columbia University for the most notable piece of work done by her class in the School of Journalism during the year, the 'piece of work' being the first chapter of this book, has written a very interesting biography of a notable woman."

+ N Y Times p14 Ag 1 '26 450w

"A rather amateurish life of Grace Dodge." Nation 123:110 Ag 4 '26 50w

GRAHAM, DOROTHY (MRS JAMES W. BENNETT). Through the moon door; the experiences of an American resident in Peking. 341p il $5 Sears

915.1 China—Social life and customs. China—Description and travel 26-11586

"Dorothy Graham has looked through the moon door of her little house in Peking, and with the eye of a colorist has painted China in terms that glow again and again. The book is a rambling description of pleasant months spent in and around the Celestial City."—Outlook.

Reviewed by T: Steep

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 13 '26 780w

"A cleverly written and remarkably vivid account."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 19 '26 580w

"The manner is very attractive, combining philosophic humor under weird household conditions with deep appreciation of the color and romance of the surroundings. Beyond vivacious entertainment, the book has a more substantial interest; for, whatever may be the subject in hand, the author points it with bits of history, of tradition, or of folklore." M. T. S.

+ Cath World 124:133 O '26 300w

"Through the Moon Door" is not just another travel book. It is the sprightly story of a woman who used her eyes and ears wherever she went in China, and who fully entered in the spirit of adventure, romance and mystery which overlies the land of the Mings and Manchus." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p4 Je 26 '26 300w

Reviewed by Gregory Mason

N Y Times p15 Jl 4 '26 800w

"If the many pulchritudinous palaces and sunsets grow a trifle monotonous, the story of her adventures in house-hunting, where one must pay the landlord four months' rent in advance, are amusing; her comments on servants, shopping, and the various strange customs of the country are shrewd and humorous."

+ Outlook 143:450 Jl 28 '26 200w

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. Gentle art of tramping. 271p il $2.50 Appleton

796 Walking 26-16042

These pages on the gentle art of tramping are written by a veteran who seeks to instruct the amateur on how to get ready and where to go, and to inform him with the true tramping's spirit.

Booklist 23:161 Ja '27

"As Mr. Graham walks, so he writes, easily, gently and without fixed objective. Perhaps by the next time we are in London we shall have forgotten his book and we shall not set out to follow the trail he has blazed. Perhaps even next week we shall motor about the country instead of indulging in the gentle art of tramping, but for the moment Mr. Graham is supreme. Our one desire is to leave everything and follow him." C. B. Chase

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 N 7 '26 230w

"Stephen Graham has written the ideal open road manual in 'The Gentle Art of Tramping.'" J. B. Atkinson

+ N Y Times p2 O 17 '26 1300w

"Contains much for the lover of rich human episodes and of nature—much that one does not always find in novels of intense emotion." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p8m O 3 '26 720w

R of Rs 74:669 D '26 120w

"His is more than a road-book. For whether Mr. Graham tramps because he is a mystic or is a mystic because he tramps, he cannot write a book about walking that will not turn out to be in some measure a book about life." M. L. Becker

+ Sat R of Lit 3:232 O 23 '26 170w

Wis Lib Bul 22:294 N '26

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. London nights; a series of studies and sketches of London at night. 278p il $4 Doran [12s 6d Hurst & B.]

914.21 London—Description. London—Poor [26-4906]

"'London Nights' is different from any other London book that I have read, and I must have read a hundred. The night life of London is so different from that of any other great city that no other great city will admit that London is more than half-conscious after dark. Here are the night workers: the little worlds of Smithfield, of Fleet Street, of Billingsgate, and the unbelievable beauty of Covent Garden. Here are the coffee-stalls 'patronized by royalty' and the café bars, the night clubs and the night shelters. You may see the crypt of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields with the houseless asleep in God's house, and hear the bell that rings out of Wandsworth Gaol the relatives of the man who will hang at dawn. You may live through the election night of fog when Labor came in, and the New Year's Eve carnival when 1924 went out, and reach at last the moment when lights go out on London Bridge, and in the darkness that is official dawn the great wave of workers moves on London to begin the day."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 23:168 Ja '27

Reviewed by C. B. Chase

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 N 7 '26 230w

Boston Transcript p4 O 13 '26 500w

"It is surprising that such a faithful picture of such a gloomy scene should not be more depressing than it is. Mr. Graham's sympathy and his unusual gifts as a reporter of the very highest type lift this book into something close to literature."

+ Living Age 331:186 O 15 '26 250w

"Whether he is describing the night clubs of Soho, a doss-house at West India Docks, or the inside of Pentonville Prison, he gives you a singularly vivid picture. A very entertaining book."

+ Nation and Ath 38:592 Ja 23 '26 100w

"As he sets down his kindly, patient and often vivid record of London by night, he gets close to the heart of it; he sounds depths by tapping surfaces; he communicates the life of the city by picturing the life and habits of its people." L: Kronenberger

+ New Repub 49:229 Ja 12 '27 590w

"Mr. Graham's book is good journalism and therefore good reading, containing much vivid description and many racy fragments of dialogue; but it is nothing more than good journalism. The writer of the book which we want should have lived the life, and his book should be an afterthought. Mr. Graham too obviously had a book in his mind before he went after the material for it."

+ New Statesman 26:622 F 27 '26 380w

"A volume of essays that consider scenes often considered before, describe places that have been much better described, and draw implications that have been drawn before and with more weight and dignity. In other words, the only new thing in Mr. Graham's book is Mr. Graham himself, and Mr. Graham is a writer who is somewhat limited. Yet, in spite of this seeming cavil, 'London Nights' should be secured by the lover of London and relished in a manner in which much better books on the foggy giant beside the Thames cannot be relished. The reason for this is the personality of the writer, his heightened journalistic powers of observation, his sense of color and character and mystery." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p8 O 24 '26 1800w

"His approach is kindly; you have the impression that each of London's unhappy and miserable creatures, battered about by the winds of chance, may speak to him in perfect confidence and get understanding and sympathy." Harry Hansen

N Y World p8m O 3 '26 350w

"It is a strangely moving book; it will bring news to some Londoners and magic to some Americans." M. L. Becker

+ Sat R of Lit 3:232 O 23 '26 320w

Spec 136:285 F 13 '26 50w

"Excellent as Mr. Graham writes of the crowds of London, he is at his best when he has escaped from the crowds and sees London for a moment deserted by men and women—in his eerie description of the empty Thames tunnels at night, or in his beautiful little essay 'A Vision of Kensal Green.'"

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p36 Ja 21 '26 470w

GRAHAM, WILLIAM ALEXANDER. Story of the Little Big Horn; Custer's last fight. 174p il $2.50 Century

970.1 Little Big Horn, Battle of the, 1876. Custer, George Armstrong. Indians of North America—Wars 26-12473

Complete account drawn from all available records of Custer's last fight, the crushing defeat by the Sioux at Little Big Horn in 1876, which wiped out his entire command.

Booklist 23:125 D '26

"Lieutenant Colonel W. A. Graham, Judge Advocate, United States Army, looked into the matter clear-eyed, dispassionately, basing much on a careful study of documents, weighing all in the scale of military knowledge; and here is his report, very convincing, because marked by justice, conscientiousness and industry." C: J. Finger

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Jl 11 '26 720w

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 21 '26 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p102 S '26

N Y Times p11 Jl 25 '26 1250w

Outlook 143:480 Ag 4 '26 250w

Springf'd Republican p7f Je 27 '26 180w

Wis Lib Bul 22:273 O '26

GRAHAM-MULHALL, SARA. See Mulhall, S. G.

GRANGER, MARY. Widow of Ephesus. 270p 2 $2 Putnam

26-18506

The love of Stephanie and John, strengthened and deepened by the birth of their little son, grew more perfect and more complete with each passing year of their young married life.

GRANGER, MARY—Continued

Those are the years of the first book, called Ecstasy. Then suddenly John died. Stephanie drew away from the world, wrapped herself up in care of her son and lived only in him and in memories of her dead love. But the time came when life again called to her thru Henry Chilton, and being young, she was forced to give answer. In style, this modern story of a widow's remarriage keeps to the tone set by the Biblical phraseology of the title.

"She writes of her heroine's two marriages with great dignity of mood, in a suitably parabolic prose which lends itself to restrained irony. A truly powerful first novel marred in spots by too great stressing of the Scriptural style."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 2 '26 70w

"It is a pathetic, ironical and powerful rendering of the eternal story of the Widow of Ephesus."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 31 '26 350w

"To some readers such a work will prove ambrosia, and to others apple sauce."
Ind 117:624 N 27 '26 70w

"Something like 190 pages of almost unrelieved narrative description of the anguish of a woman who is no more than a name become distinctly wearisome. Yet the novel has a certain sincerity, making a praiseworthy attempt to get away from the beaten track and to deal with a spiritual theme and spiritual conflict."

+ N Y Times p33 N 28 '26 260w

GRAVES, CHARLES LARCOM. Hubert Parry, his life and works. 2v 404;416p $12.50 (80s) Macmillan

B or 92 Parry, Sir Charles Hubert Hastings
26-14499

"Sir C. Hubert H. Parry, head of the Royal College of Music (London), professor of music at Oxford, composer of much music for orchestra and chorus in the larger musical forms, baronet and country gentleman, is described by the author of this biography."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p3 J1 31 '26 320w

Reviewed by D. G. Mason
Nation 124:44 Ja 12 '27 900w

"Of Parry the man Mr. Graves succeeds in giving a realistic external picture. Unfortunately Mr. Graves is so persistently verbose that these two volumes could have been compressed into one with great advantage and no loss, had the biographer been a less facetiously fluent writer. Mr. Graves explains the opinions and feelings of his subject with tiresome garb."—

+ New Statesman 27:173 My 29 '26 1250w

"The material Mr. Graves has taken with both hands, and with an elaboration of detail that is sometimes hardly justified by its interest and importance. And yet such detail, much of it entertaining and suggestive, fills in and vivifies the portrait of a man whose life was lived fully and intensely as few lives are. To maintain such a variety of interests is not given to many." R: Aldrich

+ N Y Times p10 S 5 '26 1400w

"Outwardly not very attractive, and its writer seems rather to have overdone the quotation at length of contemporary opinions on Parry's work. But he has an extraordinarily interesting subject, for Parry, it need hardly be recalled, was many-sided and lived a full life outside music."

+ Sat R 141:406 Mr 27 '26 80w

"The debt which we owe to Parry is not generally realized, and Mr. Charles L. Graves has done a good service to the memory of his friend by stressing this side of his work. Like nearly all 'official' biographies, this one errs on the side of fullness and very naturally emphasizes all the good points in its subject. But, in the present instance, the latter can hardly be called a fault, since Parry's good qualities were immense and his failings mostly negative."

+ Sat R 141:473 Ap 10 '26 1050w

"Mr. Graves has achieved a singularly noteworthy biography." E: B. Hill

+ Sat R of Lit 3:313 N 20 '26 700w

"Mr. Graves is certainly not writing for those in a hurry, and some readers may feel he has overloaded his book with such an exuberant wealth of detail that there is a real danger of his hero being crushed by irrelevancies or at least of his never emerging from his surroundings. For my own part, I believe Mr. Graves took this risk deliberately and that (knowing his subject) he was right to do so. Something noble, something beautiful went out of English life when Hubert Parry died, and Mr. Graves is to be thanked for keeping his memory alive in these two admirable volumes." E. S. A.
+ Spec 136:sup710 Ap 17 '26 860w

"This is a long-expected and welcome book on a fine theme."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p261 Ap 8 '26 1950w

GRAY, CHARLES WRIGHT, ed. Real dogs; an anthology of short stories. 352p $2.50 Holt
Dogs—Legends and stories 26-17475

The success of the author's "Dawgs" has led to this second excellent compilation of dog stories by well-known writers. Contents: Allegheny, by J. T. Foote; Billy, the dog that made good, by E. T. Seton; The coming of Lochinvar Bobby, by A. F. Terhune; Damsel, by W. L. Comfort; A dark-brown dog, by Stephen Crane; Dog wanted: male, by E. P. Butler; Don, by Zane Grey; The hound of Ireland, by Donn Byrne; Kazan, by J. O. Curwood; Poodle, by Hugh Walpole; Rusty Roustabout, by H. R. Sass; Tell it to the dog, by Gouverneur Morris; A very shy gentleman, by P. G. Wodehouse; When the prince came home, by George Marsh; Prayer for a pup, by W. A. Dyer.

"All the stories [are] well written and engrossing reading."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 8 '26 200w
Wis Lib Bul 22:298 N '26

"GREAT American Ass"; an autobiography. 316p $3.50 Brentano's

B or 92 26-16399

"The self-story of a brilliant youth cursed somewhat by his misfortunes, but cursed much more, it seems, by his own temperament—driven into an attitude of scorn of all things, himself included. The publishers of the book compare it as a self-revelation with 'The Education of Henry Adams.' It is like that book in no other respect than that it ends in a disappointment."—Boston Transcript

"Under his fictitious anonymity Roy Bradley has prettified and denigrated, whitened himself and blackened his enemies, until the value of the book as a human document is indeterminable. The author had his opportunity to write a significant book. But no significant book can be written under the inspiration of hatred, and hatred of his father and his father's kin is the author's impelling motive." Alvin Johnson
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 O 10 '26 1000w

"From beginning to end a pitiful record." J. E. C.

Boston Transcript p3 O 2 '26 920w

"A hard, bitter story throughout, lit up only by a few streaks of acrid humor."
Ind 117:624 N 27 '26 180w

"There are suggestions in his book of Theodore Dreiser's 'Book About Myself' and Algon Blackwood's 'Episodes Before Thirty,' but nowhere does he come up to the level of those books." T: L. Masson

Lit R p2 S 25 '26 2000w
Nation 123:sup619 D 1 '26 110w
N Y Times p5 D 12 '26 430w

"A story without patience for form, raw-mannered, blatant, rising, sometimes, to the heights which bitterness can attain." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p8m O 3 '26 1150w
Outlook 144:378 N 17 '26 130w

Reviewed by M. R. Werner
Sat R of Lit 3:468 D 25 '26 520w

"What merit 'The Great American Ass' might have as a human document is canceled by the wilful brusqueness of the style, the immaturity of the comments and the exaggeration of the incidents."

— Springfd Republican p12 N 19 '26 470w

GREEN, FITZHUGH. Peary; the man who refused to fail. 404p il $6 Putnam

B or 92 Peary, Robert Edwin. Arctic regions 26-9385

"The story sketches briefly an average boyhood; briefly, and yet in enough detail to bring out strikingly the influence and the character-moulding effect of the boy's intimate contact with his mother. Left fatherless when not yet three, young Peary was all in all to his mother, and on him she concentrated all her affection as well as all her hopes and ambitions. Steadily and unceasingly, she gave him the best she had to give, with the result that all the world has seen. Through the earlier years at college; with the Coast and Geodetic Survey in Washington; and, later, in the Navy, the story moves swiftly on to the two most important events of Peary's life—his definite discovery that his life-work was in the North, and his engagement and marriage. And then follows the period of depression. And then, the Pole itself, the Ultima Thule of the bravest and most adventurous spirits of every country of the globe, for hundreds of years!"—Int Bk R

Booklist 23:35 O '26

"There is no doubt but that the book is worth reading. Stylistically, however, it is a hodge-podge of sentimental slush."

+ Bookm 63:606 J1 '26 100w

"Fitzhugh Green has performed a service; and it is peculiarly appropriate that the book should appear at this particular moment."

Blair Niles

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ap 18 '26 1600w

Cleveland Open Shelf p103 S '26

"The literary form of the book before us is unworthy of its subject. The very sub-title might perhaps be taken as an example of the method by which Commander Green cheapens, in the accredited popular-magazine manner, the stubborn story of this brave explorer. And yet with all its lapses, all its literary solecisms, all its clichés and claptrap, the author, himself an explorer of no mean parts, has given us a volume charged with imaginative implication." Llewelyn Powys

+ Dial 81:345 O '26 750w

"This particular biography could scarcely be dull, but it is remarkable that the error should not have been on the other side. Long before they ever met, Commander Green had an admiration for Admiral Peary which practically bordered on worship. This, while it seemed the qualification for a successful biographer... nevertheless might easily have proved the Waterloo of a less able and balanced writer... Those nearest the Admiral are content to let Commander Green's book be the medium through which those of the present and the future will learn to know the Discoverer of the North Pole." M. A. P. Stafford

+ Int Bk R p376 My '26 2000w

"In this day, when men of many nations are forcing their way into the Northern ice it is good to have such a record of the life of one of America's greatest explorers." J. M. Thorington

+ Lit R p2 My 1 '26 550w

"This book is specially important, because it presents by a competent hand the story of Peary's early life—not before available—as well as an excellent, condensed record of his endeavors and successes in the field of exploration."

+ Nation 123:277 S 22 '26 70w

Nation and Ath 39:478 J1 24 '26 500w

"Painstaking and well-written book." H: E. Armstrong

+ N Y Times p1 Ap 25 '26 2250w

"Commander Fitzhugh Green is admirably fitted to tell the story of the discoverer of the North Pole." J. O. Swift

+ N Y World p6m Ap 18 '26 850w

"It is a fine record of an eventful and courageous life." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 143:448 J1 28 '26 420w

Pratt p37 autumn '26

"Commander Green has produced a readable and thrilling book, which is a worthy memorial of the indomitable explorer whose life it narrates."

+ Sat R 142:209 Ag 21 '26 190w

"Commander Green has admirably covered the important points in the life of Peary, the little sidelights that throw so much of understanding on the great unbending soul of the explorer. The book is highly recommended to all interested in the Arctic or in biography. A book well and faithfully done." Felix Riesenbergl

+ Sat R of Lit 2:787 My 15 '26 420w

Springfd Republican p7f Je 6 '26 1500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p426 Je 24 '26 450w

Wis Lib Bul 22:197 Je '26

GREEN, HENRY. Blindness. 286p $2 Dutton

26-18388

An English school boy of exceptional promise is suddenly blinded. His whole world has to be made over, and to help him in the bitter task of readjustment he has only a well-meaning but unintuitive step-mother, a loving old nurse, and later, the friendship of June, the vicar's daughter. Her affection, the casual and even less intelligent than that of the others, yet serves more than theirs to face him towards the future with a hope and a purpose. This study of the boy's orientation to a darkened world is very well done.

Boston Transcript p6 N 20 '26 220w

"There are stretches in Mr. Green's novel over which one passes as rapidly as possible; there is also much sound writing and evidence of rare imagination and sympathy in dealing with a difficult problem."

Ind 117:652 D 4 '26 140w

New Repub 49:174 D 29 '26 140w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 28:113 N 6 '26 90w

"It is reported to be the first novel of a very young man. In spite of certain defects of workmanship, of prolonged episodes, meandering dialogue and confusion of method, it does convey a sense of character under stress. It is a creditable performance."

+ N Y Times p10 N 14 '26 350w

"Great things may be expected of Mr. Green. 'Blindness' is a remarkably good novel; an amazingly good first novel. The author's method is to examine the characters in turn and tear the heart out of their mystery. He makes experience as raw and personal and authentic as he can; he makes us (a gift beyond the reach of most writers) aware of the very act of living." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 142:446 O 16 '26 300w

"An unusual and compelling book. His treatment of a psychological subject is often frankly reminiscent of the Russians."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:472 D 25 '26 330w

GREEN, HENRY—Continued

"The hopelessness of it all is effectively conveyed and the book has cleverness as well as pathos."

+ Spec 137:543 O 2 '26 70w

GREEN, PAUL. Lonesome road; six plays for the negro theatre; with an introd. by Barrett H. Clark. 217p $2 McBride

812

26-10665

Six short plays which graphically present the tragedies of Negro life as witnessed on a North Carolina plantation. In the introduction Barrett H. Clark writes of the author's work: "I am convinced that Mr. Green is doing for our drama what the writers of the spirituals have done for Negro music." Contents: In Abraham's bosom; White dresses; The hot iron; The prayer-meeting; The end of the row; Your fiery furnace.

Booklist 23:23 O '26

"Salient and compelling as are all these plays, 'In Abraham's Bosom' and 'The Hot Iron' mark a definite advance in the expression of Mr. Green's dramatic power. In them he loses all faintest suggestion of the amateur; he is a master, a god, and his characters are puppets, moving inevitably to his jerkings of the strings." Jessie Fauset

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 6 '26 820w

"In each play is a tragedy, unobtrusive but consummate. These cross-sections of negro farm life in North Carolina contain no heroics. Rather have they a devastating simplicity. The author has an excellent sense of the theater—perhaps one should say of the 'little theater.'" M. S. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 29 '26 520w

Cath World 123:854 S '26 450w

Lit R p6 J1 17 '26 40w

"'Lonesome Road' is a collection of small dramas as profound as one is likely to meet, anywhere or at any time, and of more than ordinary significance."

N Y Times p2 Ag 29 '26 1200w

"His work has imagination, harmony of mood, dramatic insight into situation and character. Moreover it has throughout the tang of the soil. Little Theatres everywhere who desire to do sincere things will inevitably include these plays in their repertory."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:75 Ag 28 '26 500w

"A unique book. It breathes the very breath of reality, the tang of the hot coastal plain soil of North Carolina, the poignant tragedy of the unhappy race that has borne the brunt of our brutal dirty work." E. M. Jewett

+ Springf'd Republican p10 J1 15 '26 360w

"These are indeed plays to challenge production, while waiting for what Mr. Barrett Clark, in his very interesting and complete introduction, promises in Mr. Green's full length play." Helen Redlig

+ Theatre Arts Mo 10:648 S '26 550w

GREER, GUY. Ruhr-Lorraine industrial problem; a study of the economic inter-dependence of the two regions and their relation to the reparation question; with the aid of the council and staff of the Institute of economics. (Inst. of economics. Investigations in international economic reconstruction) 328p $2.50 Macmillan [8s 6d Allen & U.]

330.943 European war, 1914-1918—Reparations. Europe—Economic conditions. Coal trade—Germany. Iron industry and trade —Germany. Ruhr valley 25-24360

The problem of the Ruhr-Lorraine is not simply the problem of France and Germany, but the problem of Europe and of all those countries that trade with Europe; that is to say, a world problem. The author who has had first hand contact with the situation, analyses this world problem and presents the suggestions for its solution that arise from the analysis.

Reviewed by J. F. Sinclair

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 14 '26 700w

"As an exposition to the ignorant the book is excellent. It contains no very remarkable contribution towards the solution of the problem with which it deals, but, after all, that is not its object."

+ Nation and Ath 38:868 Mr 20 '26 500w

R of Rs 73:221 F '26 120w

"The integration of the Ruhr-Lorraine interests before the War, their violent sundering by the treaty of so-called peace, the tremendous issues involved at the present time, the alternatives that present themselves as ways out—these and other important matters are ably discussed by Mr. Greer who was an expert on the ground during and after the peace negotiations."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:532 Ja 30 '26 200w

"Mr. Greer has made a useful contribution to an intelligent understanding of the problems of the peace settlement and their practical solutions. Not only is his book packed with up to date information on the industrial situation in western Europe, but he has made an informing interpretation of their significance in the light of world relations."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 28 '26

650w

Times [London] Lit Sup p164 Mr 4 '26 70w

GREGOR, ELMER RUSSELL. Mason and his 2 rangers. 244p $1.75 Appleton

26-16152

Jim Mason, nineteen-year-old captain of the rangers, is commissioned to clear out the French and Indian attacking parties from the neighborhood of the fort at Lake George, New York. In earlier stories of this same period (the French and Indian war against English settlers in the 1750's), Jim and his rangers have already shown what they can do, and the new commission pleases them. In thrilling fashion they carry it thru to the finish.

"Mr. Gregor has qualities that commend his books to boys and girls: a simplicity of narrative, a directness of plot, a sense of the dramatic, and a painstaking accuracy in conveying to them the spirit and customs of back-woodsmen and Indians."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:404 D 4 '26 150w

"The story of Mason's exploits with his rangers and friendly Indians makes good reading, full of exciting incidents."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p863 N 25 '26 150w

GREGORY, ALYSE (MRS LLEWELYN POWYS). She shall have music. 263p $2 Harcourt

26-15184

Sylvia is the daughter of wealthy middle class parents. To her mother, busy trying to do the correct thing, Sylvia's oddness is a source of chagrin, while her father has never pretended to understand her. Thus the child early learns that the best policy is not candor, but concealment of her precious ideas. She finds a real friend in Marcel, the gardener's boy next door, but as they grow older their friendship terminates in something like scandal. Marcel goes abroad, Sylvia to New York where she attempts to find out about herself and life, and what she is to do with both. Having learned, perhaps, she returns home and meeting Marcel who, to her parents' relief, is not the gardener's son after all, their love permanently revives.

"What might have been satire often descends to scolding, and the sudden swoops from the imaginative idyll of Sylvia to harsh and intolerant intellectualizations concerning her parents seem hardly to be the work of one author in one book. If this supercargo of suppressed emotion could have been scrapped and the irrelevant flourish of Marcel's parentage avoided, the reader would have had greater opportunity to appreciate the lovely qualities of the story's essential theme." Mary Ross

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 19 '26 520w

"On the whole, 'She shall have music' is bookish, pedantic, unreal and lifeless."

— Boston Transcript p4 S 22 '26 200w

"One can observe, through the fine finish of the narrative, the descriptive zeal and skill, the grace of movement, the quick pictoriality, the fresh store of images and figuring, a certain protective surveillance, perhaps essential to the undertaking. Sylvia Brown seems a heroine somewhat watched over and provided for." C. K. Trueblood

+ Dial 81:500 D '26 740w

"Woven upon a framework that is absurdly childish, its characters all feeble pasteboard puppets, and its diction, which with more constraint might have been distinguished, evolving into page after page of contorted verbal gyrations, this novel is a very trying and boring thing to read." Hamilton Basso

— Lit R p4 S 18 '26 420w

"It must be admitted, reluctantly, that Alyse Gregory's first novel is disappointing. The book has fine episodic moments and prolonged periods of extremely capable exposition; it is, for the most part, exquisitely written, delicate, yet ever terse and direct; it is rich, penetrating, flexible; its mood of thoughtful intensity is sustained; but it never achieves the comprehensive sweep of which it gives such constant promise."

— + N Y Times p7 S 5 '26 1050w

"Suave candor and an unobtrusiveness that masters certain familiar, melodramatic perils of fiction with delicate, flexible directness are the distinctions that make this book a thoughtful pleasure. The too obviously plotted ending, suspicion of which is at once aroused, is detrimental to the theme of spiritual biography." Eva Goldbeck

+ — N Y World p4m Ag 29 '26 300w

"Miss Gregory's novel, judged by a severe criterion, must be accounted more a failure than a success. There are fine subtle qualities to 'She shall have music' which give it a certain value and a certain distinction, but they are not the qualities to make it a valuable or distinctive novel." L. Kronenberger

— + Sat R of Lit 3:152 O 2 '26 550w

Spring'd Republican p7f S 19 '26 150w

GREGORY, JACKSON. Desert thoroughbred. 331p $2 Scribner

26-14220

Camilla Darrel rejoiced to learn that the couple she despised were not her parents. She ran away from the hated home at the edge of the desert to Mexicali across the border where old Papa-Pom befriended her and took her into his dance hall and dive. She remained ignorant of the true character of the place. When Lasalle saw her there he did not believe in her innocence, yet he did help her escape from the men who would have held her, adding her troubles to his own. An old murder charge hung over him. By the time the mystery concerning this was cleared up, Lasalle and Camilla had each discovered the nature of the other and their antagonism was forgotten.

Booklist 23:81 N '26

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 19 '26 100w

"All the characters, good men and villains, are well drawn, each has his own appeal. The story goes straight ahead, without rambling, but with all attendant local color, straight to its thrilling and dramatic conclusion. It is a book one wants to finish, without interruption."

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 8 '26 240w

"Of course, matters have to be made right in the end and Mr. Gregory has accomplished this in his best manner, which is saying a good deal." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p12 S 25 '26 150w

"Mr. Gregory has a deserved reputation for writing a bully Western tale, and this latest offering of his prolific pen lives up to all the demands of his enthusiastic readers. The story moves with its own momentum, action follows action in a series of dramatic crises which terminate in a strong dénouement which is both exciting and satisfactory."

+ N Y Times p18 Ag 1 '26 320w

Outlook 144:26 S 1 '26 100w

"The crucial final events, although sacrificing probability to supreme dramatic effectiveness, leave one breathless and spellbound, if wholly incredulous. Nevertheless, no one writes better romance of this type than Mr. Gregory, and in our opinion he has not yet written the superior of this."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:27 Ag 7 '26 160w

"Mr. Gregory makes a highly effective use of the machinery of mystery and surprise for the purpose of working up and sustaining excitement in this story of California and Mexican border."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p550 Ag 19 '26 130w

Wis Lib Bul 22:298 N '26

GREIG, NORMAN PROCTOR. Cromer Street chronicles. 254p $2.50 Dutton [6s Dent]

Simple stories of a London slum. The hero of the disconnected episodes is the likable Buggs Grayson, a boy of twelve or thereabouts, who lives in Cromer street with his hardworking mother and his little sister Emmy. Buggs enjoys his life, poor as it is, and at the book's close his fortunes are looking up.

"Insight born of sympathy, and humor born of a warm heart are evident on every page, and make the story a human document, yet without red tape and therefore easily opened and read."

Boston Transcript p7 N 17 '26 230w

"Although it is written with understanding and sympathy, it is a trifle too unimpassioned, too condescending, to grip the reader as it might."

— + N Y Times p13 Ja 2 '27 520w

"Mr. Greig makes pleasant work of it, and deserves a modest place with those who have successfully interpreted young England."

Sat R of Lit 3:344 N 27 '26 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p220 Mr 18 '26 130w

GRENIER, ALBERT. Roman spirit in religion, thought and art; [tr. by M. R. Dobie. (History of civilization)] 423p $6 Knopf [16s K. Paul]

913.37 Rome—Civilization. Rome—Religion. Latin literature—History and criticism. Art, Roman 26-19273

"Grenier's book, written for M. Berr's historical series called L'Evolution de l'Humanité, has been translated by M. R. Dobie to serve as one of the two hundred volumes of the great 'History of Civilization,' edited by C. K. Ogden. Grenier is a mature scholar, favorably known for several careful studies in the field of Roman archaeology and religion. The subject is here restricted to 'religion, thought, and art' because other books in the series treat of jurisprudence and of the political history. It is a sketch of Rome's religious journey from a primitive animism, through Etruscan and Greek anthropomorphism, to Oriental mysticism."—Nation

Booklist 23:127 D '26

GRENIER, ALBERT—Continued

"Naturally, a work covering so large a field must be usually superficial and seldom original, but as a synthesis of history, religion, art, and literature the reader may count upon this as being clear and well-proportioned." A. S. Pease
 + — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 D 12 '26 580w

"It is ably and thoroughly done, and will prove a real aid in understanding the history of civilization." F. W. C.
 + Boston Transcript p2 O 2 '26 530w

"Reliable and tellingly written, though not quite with the sympathetic vividness of Warde Fowler's inimitable book." Tenney Frank
 + — Nation 123:407 O 20 '26 430w

"M. Albert Grenier is evidently an accomplished scholar, with the native instinct for literature and the trained judgment that alone make criticism worth reading. He is familiar with the archaeology of Rome, and as an historian he does his own thinking. He has produced a book that I at least find original and full of stimulus." T. R. Glover
 + Nation and Ath 40:26 O '26 350w

Reviewed by E. Shanks

Sat R 142:383 O 2 '26 60w

Times [London] Lit Sup p834 N 25 '26 160w

GRETTON, MRS MARY STURGE. Writings and life of George Meredith; a centenary study. 250p $2.50 Harvard univ. press [6s Oxford univ. press]

B or 92 Meredith, George

"Following by a few months the brilliant critical study by Mr. Priestley in the 'English Men of Letters' series, comes Mrs. Gretton's scholarly 'Century Study' of Meredith. Mrs. Gretton seeks to set forth once more the truth and the beauty she finds in his work, to explain to the reader why she feels those qualities to be present, and, at times, to advance her own theory as to where in Meredith's life may be found the sources and inspirations for certain passages in his writings. In 1907 Mrs. Gretton (then Mrs. Henderson) published her 'George Meredith: Novelist, Poet, Reformer.' Since then she has not changed her attitude toward her hero and former friend by a single iota; it is merely that her appreciative analysis of his writings has matured in the mean time."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"To all but the most devoted Meredith enthusiasts the work, it is to be feared, will be quite overshadowed by [Priestley's George Meredith]. Mrs. Gretton wants to impress her readers with Meredith's genius, with his intellect, with the power of his imagination and the intensity of his ecstasy, but her success is questionable. Her detachment is not great enough for her to leave the reader with any very clear conception of Meredith's genius." C. B. Chase

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 O 17 '26 680w

"Her advantage of personal friendship with the author, while warming and mellowing her study, is never obtruded, and her writing has uniform, smooth excellence." Lucien Price
 + Nation 123:406 O 20 '26 80w

"We feel that Mrs. Gretton's book does not help us to appreciate the position which Meredith holds to-day amongst an irreverent generation. It teaches us much else, however, for in spite of its aristocratic gesture we feel in it a bright hero-worship; and that, surely, is the best medicine for us." R. Church
 + — Spec 136:1046 Je 19 '26 400w

"Mrs. Sturge Gretton's is the book of a life-long admirer of Meredith's work, a friend of Meredith in person, who looks back over the war and all else that has marked off our time from his and sees his light shining steadily above all the turmoil and the change. His genius, his thought, his imagination, his ecstasy, are what Mrs. Sturge Gretton wants her readers to think about much more than his artistry. That, we believe, explains the jejuneness and occasional weakness of her criticism of his poetry."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p429 Je 24 '26 900w

GREY, ZANE. Tales of the angler's Eldorado, New Zealand. 228p il $5 Harper [21s Hodder & S.]

799 Fishing—New Zealand 26-16667

Lavishly illustrated from photographs of the angler and his catch, and of the scenes of surpassing beauty wherein the catch was taken this enthusiastic record forms a companion volume to the previously published "Tales of fishing virgin seas."

Booklist 23:120 D '26

"It is markedly inferior to his previous volumes, perhaps because of the extreme subordination of travelogue and local color to the personal element." W. Beebe

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ja 2 '27 250w

"In every respect, especially for the angler, it is a singularly handsome and attractive volume." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p10 D 4 '26 490w

Reviewed by H. E. Armstrong

N Y Times p17 D 26 '26 1550w

N Y World p10m N 14 '26 50w

Sat R of Lit 3:432 D 11 '26 660w

Springf'd Republican p7f O 3 '26 950w

"Attractive and richly illustrated account of sea fishing in New Zealand waters."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p667 O 7 '26 850w

Wis Lib Bul 22:272 O '26

GREY, ZANE. Vanishing American. 308p il $2 Harper [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-24588

"The book is concerned with some of the problems of contact between Indian and white. Nophale is stolen as a boy from his tribe, is brought up in an American university and becomes a noted baseball player, in which rôle he captures the imagination (and the heart) of Marian Warner. When he returns to lead his tribe he asks Marian to come and help him in the Indian Reservation. She does so, and their love is renewed. Perpetual scheming and intrigue on the part of those who run the missionary organization, the love of an Indian girl for Nophale and her seduction by a white, and other exigencies of a busy and very long story, prevent the question whether Nophale and Marian dare risk marriage from coming to a head, and the final events save the author from coming to grips with his problem."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 22:252 Mr '26

Bookm 63:202 Ap '26 20w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 F 7 '26 320w

Cleveland Open Shelf p53 Ap '26

"There is material for a serious book here, but Mr. Grey rather neglects his opportunities—intentionally, probably, for he does not write of problems, but of action and a slight love affair and the smell and rustle of sage. He entertains his readers without worrying them with solemn thoughts, and his many admirers know how well he entertains." Harriet Henry
 + — Int Bk R p266 Mr '26 330w

"Mr. Grey is at his happiest when he is picturing this wild, grim, weird, beautiful country, and the story abounds with varied scenes as one or another of the characters journeys long days and nights to some still more isolated region."

+ N Y Times p22 Ja 31 '26 450w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:118 Mr '26

"Whatever the falsity of the narrative and the historical portrayal, this story is written with generous feeling and is largely free from the artificiality and forced sentimentality characterizing his previous tales of the southwestern country."

+ — Springf'd Republican p5a Mr 21 '26 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p101 F 11 '26 160w

Wis Lib Bul 22:110 Mr '26

GREY OF FALLODON, EDWARD GREY, 1st viscount. Falloodon papers. 169p il $2.50 Houghton [10s 6d Constable]

824 26-15745

All the papers in this book, with one exception, deal with matters of recreation or pleasure and most of them are written against the background of Lord Grey's life at Falloodon, his home in Northumberland. Contents: The pleasure of reading; Pleasure in outdoor nature; Recreation; Some thoughts on public life; Waterfowl at Falloodon; The Fly-fisherman; Wordsworth's "Prelude".

Booklist 23:123 D '26

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 O 24 '26 360w

Boston Transcript p5 N 10 '26 250w

"The intimate thoughts of an essentially simple man on the common things of life. As literature, they are negligible; but as a contribution to the understanding of the true character of an eminent statesman, they are invaluable."

Ind 117:396 O 2 '26 100w

Reviewed by J. W. Gassner

Nation 123:646 D 15 '26 70w

"What is the secret of the deep satisfaction which these earnest, tranquil, deliberately advisory discourses afford? Why is it so certain that Lord Grey knows what he is talking about? The answer seems to be that the contact between author and reader is unusually complete."

+ Nation and Ath 39:737 S 25 '26 850w

"There are chapters on nature, specifically on water fowl, thoughts on public life, and on Wordsworth's 'Prelude,' which is the most energetic and revealing chapter of all. The book is not stimulating, as the jacket affirms, but it is distinctly pleasing." M. G. Bonner

N Y Times p7 D 5 '26 260w

"The essays have a certain freshness, a conversational quality as rare as it is agreeable. One gathers that Lord Grey's tastes are both sporting and literary." Drake de Kay

+ Outlook 144:280 O 27 '26 300w

"The chapter on 'The Fly Fisherman,' Lord Grey's American admirers are likely to read for the sake of the light it throws on the angler's sport in Great Britain. The chapter entitled 'Recreation' is also of peculiar interest on this side of the water since in it Lord Grey gives an account of a holiday that he once passed with President Roosevelt, the major part of the day being given up to one of Colonel Roosevelt's famous 'bird walks.'"

+ R of Rs 74:444 O '26 70w

Sat R 142:259 S 4 '26 70w

Sat R 142:342 S 25 '26 500w

Reviewed by W. Beach-Thomas

Spec 137:381 S 11 '26 280w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 7 '27 780w

"The genial amplitude of his experience breathes through all. We hope that the edition before us is only a preliminary; for these addresses, both by their substance and by the graciousness with which it is presented, are the very food of which the great public has most need."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p593 S 9 '26 1300w

GRIERSON, FRANCIS D. Limping man. 317p $2 Clode

26-1824

"Who killed Roger Abbeymead, found in a certain London hotel, sitting at his living-room table, one arm bared, with the mark of a hyperdermic injection, and with one of the tumbler on the table beside him witnessing that morphine tablets had been crushed in it? Sergeant Sims is summoned from Scotland Yard, and once again he and Professor Wells are associated in an attempt to solve a criminal problem, in this case one which with each new clue discovered, proves more unsolvable."—Boston Transcript

"He has taken a single episode and tried to spin it out through 300 pages of drivel. Read 'The Limping Man' and you will find that life is just one yawn after another." Carty Ranck

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 14 '26 130w

"If we should be asked to suggest a good detective story, we would answer unreservedly 'The Limping Man.' Not for long have we read one where the evidence is so cleverly presented and the solution of the mystery so utterly unexpected."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 13 '26 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p109 S '26

"Cleverly handled and ingenious tale." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p361 My '26 100w

Lit R p8 Ap 24 '26 50w

GRIERSON, FRANCIS D. Lost pearl. 319p $2 Clode [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

26-12587

An old silver ring of Mexican workmanship is stolen from a London museum. Soon after the theft, the nephew and heir of the donor of the ring receives a series of threatening messages demanding return of the pearl that is missing from the ancient setting. Philip reports the messages to Scotland Yard and is visited by two beautiful Mexican women. Dona Raquel and her daughter Maya evidently have some connection with the ring and its mysterious significance. Not without danger to himself Philip, aided by Scotland Yard, finds out all about it and about Maya too.

"Little finesse, little artistry. Just ordinary film-work."

— Boston Transcript p6 Ag 4 '26 400w

"It is a well told tale by an author with a vast imagination." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p12 S 11 '26 130w

N Y Times p7 Jl 4 '26 600w

GRIFFIN, SOLOMON BULKLEY, W. Murray Crane, a man and brother; foreword (by President Coolidge. 202p il $2.50 Little B or 92 Crane, Winthrop Murray 26-2549

W. Murray Crane, 1853-1920, member of the firm of Crane and Company, makers of the paper on which government securities are printed, was for two terms governor of Massachusetts and United States senator from that state from 1904 to 1913. He exercised a powerful influence in his state, in the Republican party and in the lives of the many whom he befriended. Mr Griffin's book is an account of his career and a tribute to his character.

Am Pol Sci R 20:463 My '26 60w

Ann Am Acad 125:266 My '26 320w

Booklist 22:327 My '26

"Mr. Griffin pays a thoroughly deserved tribute to a sterling and admirable character and to the environment and traditions which accounted for it." W. L. McPherson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Mr 7 '26 1300w

"Mr. Griffin found in W. Murray Crane a man and a brother. He did not seek to write a formal biography of his friend but rather through a keen and loving depiction of his qualities to make us also know and love him.

GRIFFIN, SOLOMON BULKLEY—Continued.
Unwittingly he did more, he made a book out of his own heart and in so doing he pictured something of the lovingkindness of both subject and author." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 23 '26 2600w

Reviewed by A. C. Bierce

Lit R p7 F 27 '26 760w

"It admirably and most entertainingly abounds in descriptions of Mr. Crane's outward personal behavior. It does no psycho-analysis of Mr. Crane. It never strips one veil away from Mr. Crane's soul. That was Mr. Crane's affair. For this relief, Mr. Griffin, much thanks. But do write another book which, besides giving us Mr. Crane's personal endearing activities, will give us more largely Mr. Crane's national political times." W. Hard

Nation 122:290 Mr 17 '26 1000w

"The book does not pretend to be a biography. It is frankly a panegyric and should be received as such." Silas Bent

N Y Times p2 Mr 28 '26 1400w

"In the making of this book, Mr. Griffin has approached his task as a friend and admirer. It is a panegyric and without great merit otherwise." G. Authier

N Y World p6m F 21 '26 1150w

Outlook 143:150 My 26 '26 100w

Pratt p36 autumn '26

R of Rs 73:333 Mr '26 120w

"Mr. Griffin's work is an adequate, though not a vivid, presentation of a man who deserves to be remembered." Allan Nevins

Sat R of Lit 2:632 Mr 13 '26 550w

"To attach the description of 'an informal biography' to this tribute of friendship would seem peculiarly fitting, except for the fact that a certain school of present-day writers have adopted that description of their literary wares as a sort of license or commission to play fast and loose with fact and truth. In the better sense, however, of being a careful effort to portray a unique personality, rather than to present a detailed and chronological history of a career, the description of the book as 'an informal biography' is accurate."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 24 '26 2500w

GRIFFITH, GRACE KELLOGG. The house.
349p $2 Penn

26-7338

"In this story the passion of youth leads a young man who should have completed his education and practiced law to marry a sweet-tempered and pretty girl who should have completed her musical education and started at least, upon a career. The ranging, high-gear mind of the lawyer is forced by the necessity of money-getting to spend itself upon correcting themes in a secondary school. The outstanding ability of the pianist vanishes completely in the life of cook, sewing woman, scrubwoman, nurse and mother. As against these two characters the writer has set up two others—a man and woman professor who make a success of matrimony by union of mind and by waiting until both are equipped. These characters are pegs upon which to hang the argument for better training."—N Y Times

"Here is a novel written by, for, and about women, which very few men would understand, even if they read it—and they take good care not to read such novels, for fear of understanding too well. It states the most ancient grievance of women so calmly and plainly, presenting the problem without disguise of either sentimentality or melodrama, as an obvious and commonplace business, that it leaves no chance of evasion." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Mr 28 '26 600w

Boston Transcript p7 Mr 13 '26 1250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p67 My '26

"If the story is not quite successful as a work of convincing art, it is because the novel has, perhaps, a greater virtue. It is a gorgeous success as a polemic—a book that was written to stimulate thought, and succeeds completely."

+ — N Y Times p19 Ap 25 '26 550w

"The author of this tale can, with exceptions, write a readable, terse prose, which often shows a trace of real irony. But her subject is threadbare."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:635 Mr 13 '26 150w

GRIFFITH, GWILYM OSWALD. St Paul's life of Christ. 288p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

232 Jesus Christ

26-3630

Paul did not write a life of Christ, but through his writings there occur fragments of the biography he carried in his heart. The author draws together these scattered threads and weaves them into the complete pattern of that life as it was known and understood by the apostle.

Bookm 63:xxxv Mr '26 60w

J Religion 6:104 Ja '26 30w

"A striking presentation of some of the main themes of Paulinism."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p703 O 22 '25 150w

GRONDAL, MRS FLORENCE (ARMSTRONG).

Music of the spheres; a nature lover's astronomy. 334p il $5 Macmillan

523 Astronomy

26-11244

This is astronomy humanized by the manner of presenting the mythological stories of the constellations, with some resultant loss of scientific accuracy. The book has a handsome format with many exceptional illustrations from photographs taken at famous observatories.

Booklist 23:116 D '26

"In recent years there has been a fashion for the publication of works dealing with so-called popular astronomy, and a number of facile books have been written concerning the familiar constellations and their associated mythology. The addition of another volume to the list would be justified only by striking originality of treatment, or by the inclusion of more information than is usual for such books. Mrs. Grondal's book fulfills neither of these requirements and the information it contains is both inadequate and inaccurate."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 O 24 '26 160w

"It is, in very attractive form, a practical guide to the identification of the heavenly bodies—constellations, stars and planets. The indispensable diagrams are included in the text, in sketch form, while in addition there are twenty-four full-page plates. The author views the whole story of the stars as a romance, giving us all the myths connected with the constellations which helped to give them their names, adding poetical quotations that happen to be apt, and the like. But her desire to popularize the subject is carried out with a little too much enthusiasm."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Je 12 '26 200w

"There are many excellent uses, no doubt, to which this handy study may be put. But it can be recommended most emphatically as stimulating collateral reading for the parent whose children manifest an interest in the glories overhead."

+ Lit R p6 Ji 24 '26 150w

N Y New Tech Bks 11:21 Ap '26

"Made with unusual attention to the artistry and beauty of its appearance, written with scientific accuracy in a style that while popular is yet poetic and possesses literary quality, Mrs. Grondal's book ought to find its way quickly to the hands and hearts of all who are interested in or want to learn about 'the gorgeous pageant of the skies.'"

+ N Y Times p10 Je 13 '26 1050w

Outlook 144:254 O 20 '26 20w

St Louis 24:309 N '26

"The author brings to her task a genuine love of the subject and much enthusiasm, and she has a spritely style that makes her text easy reading; but her knowledge of the science is surprisingly deficient. So many and so serious are her misapprehensions that the book defeats its own purpose; the reader who goes on (as the author obviously hopes and expects him to do) to a second and more advanced work will have in his mind ample material for confusion and discouragement." Frank Schlesinger

— + Science 64:92 JI 23 '26 760w

GROSS, MILT. Nize baby. 207p 1l $2 Doran

817 Humor 26-8542

The "Gross exaggerations" of the Sunday World here gathered in one volume, illustrated by the author, are dialogs overheard thru a dumbwaiter anywhere in the East side or the Bronx and written down exactly as they were heard in the joyous distortion of English familiar to New York ears.

Booklist 22:409 JI '26

Reviewed by Frank Crowninshield

Bookm 63:357 My '26 650w

Reviewed by D. G. Van Doren

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ap 18 '26 520w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 2 '26 100w

"It certainly is funny—if you can read it." T: L. Masson

+ Int Bk R p667 O '26 230w

"It is difficult to suggest the flavor of these inimitable discourses. We can only say 'Read them!' They are as richly human and as broadly funny as anything we know." W. Y.

+ Lit R p9 My 8 '26 260w

"To anyone who knows and likes and listens to our New York his dialogue is acutely life-like, and those more profoundly versed in the East Side swear that all of the speeches he puts into his characters' mouths can be actually heard or could quite conceivably be uttered. Occasionally his word distortions strike us as slightly fabricated, but on the whole they are all the more ludicrous for being phonetically faithful." R. L.

+ New Repub 47:93 Je 9 '26 1000w

"His work, as it is now, is one of the most distinctive and promising contributions to American humor of recent years—but its elements are entirely too good to make it permissible for Mr. Gross to leave them dimmed by the easy tarnish he is giving them. The illustrations for 'Nize Baby,' also from Mr. Gross's pen, are altogether delightful. They catch completely the spirit of his prose, and—perhaps as a lesson to it—they are fresh, untraditional and easy." H. J. Mankiewicz

+ — N Y Times p7 Ap 11 '26 1150w

Reviewed by Robert Benchley

N Y World p6m Ap 4 '26 900w

St Louis 24:248 S '26

"The Jewish East Side of New York speaks through Milt Gross; his book is a masterpiece of correct dialect, of imagined conversations imagined so vividly down to the minutest detail that they seem almost to have been recorded. The old folk-lore characteristics of exaggeration, boasting, delight in quarrels, and quick repartee are all here." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:914 JI 10 '26 500w

GROVE, FREDERICK PHILIP. Settlers of the marsh. 341p $2 Doran

25-21065

The Canadian north country is the setting for this novel of pioneer life. Niels Lindstedt clears his land and builds his house buoyed by the secret hope that Ellen, the daughter of a Scandinavian neighbor, will one day share them with him. But Ellen, seeing marriage thru her mother's eyes as repulsive, disastrous, will not consent. For years Niels has been pursued by a woman of the town whose reputation is unknown to him. Worn out by his hopeless love for Ellen, he yields to the other woman and to her surprise insists on marriage. In spite of clumsy efforts at adjustment on the part of both, at first, the years drag by in sullen misery. One day the hated existence flares up in tragedy. A prison sentence for Niels. Then home again, and Ellen.

"As a study of pioneer wilderness life the novel is strongly convincing. As a story, however, it is much less so."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '25 420w

"Mr. Grove's knowledge is so thorough, his style so economical and effective, that his literary product becomes one of those inescapable things carrying with it an undeniable challenge to our attention. One is tempted to the statement that no pen at work in Canada suggests the capacity, not primarily to tell a story, but to interpret the actuality of Western prairie life in the making, as does the pen of Frederick Philip Grove. . . . With this book, Canada makes contribution to contemporary world fiction." A. L. Phelps

+ Sat R of Lit 2:529 Ja 30 '26 650w

GROVES, ERNEST RUTHERFORD. Drifting home. 217p $1.75 Houghton

173 Home. Family 26-17779

Mr Groves classifies American homes as good, bad and bewildered. It is this bewildered home, set adrift from its old moorings and unable to make swift adjustment to the changes of modern civilization that concerns the author. He considers some of these changes, the problems they have brought, ways of meeting them and building better homes and family life for the future.

Boston Transcript p7 D 11 '26 160w

Reviewed by L. A. Dickey

World Tomorrow 9:272 D '26 270w

GROVES, ERNEST RUTHERFORD. Social problems and education. 458p $2.75 (12s 6d) Longmans

304 Social problems. Education. United States—Social conditions 25-18777

The social problems here under consideration are those in which education is or should be vitally concerned. Each chapter deals with a separate problem, its nature, its history, and the value of education as a means toward its solution. Contents: Juvenile delinquency; Crime and penal reform; Mental disease and mental hygiene; Mental defect; Modern conditions influencing family life; Divorce and family responsibility; The unmarried mother; Settlements and the city neighborhood; Public health; Social hygiene; Immigration; Race friction; Rural life; Public opinion; Social unrest; Topics for discussion and report; References; Index.

"On the whole, this book can be highly commended for the purpose for which it is intended, that of a college textbook." F. N. House

+ Am J Soc 31:687 Mr '26 350w

Am Pol Sci R 20:230 F '26 120w

Booklist 22:144 Ja '26

"The difference between this book and similar texts on social problems lies almost entirely in its psychological foundations. One other distinction deserves mention: the treatment which Professor Groves gives to the theoretical phases of social problems is transfused with a species of delicate though candid liberalism which is seldom found in American textbook writers. The faults which textbook form imposes upon all writing of this sort are evident in Professor Groves's book." E. C. Lindeman

+ — New Repub 47:285 JI 28 '26 450w

Pratt p10 summer '26

"Concrete, up-to-date and well written."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:305 D '25

GUEDALLA, PHILIP. Fathers of the revolution. 302p il $3.50 Putnam

920 United States—History—Revolution—
Biography 26-11640

Contents: A short treatise on truth; Fathers of the revolution: H. M. King George III, H. M. King Louis XVI, The Right Hon. Lord North, K. G., The Right Hon. Earl of Chatham, The Right Hon. Edmund Burke, Lieutenant-General John Burgoyne, Lieutenant-General Earl Cornwallis, General Washington, Dr Franklin, Mr Samuel Adams, Mr Alexander Hamilton, M. de La Fayette; Footnote on greatness.

Am Pol Sci R 20:918 N '26 130w

Reviewed by Gamaliel Bradford
Atlantic's Bookshelf S '26 480w
Booklist 23:77 N '26

"Mr. Guedalla is often brilliant but never glib. He prefers to suggest rather than to propound that no one man is great enough to father a great age, to begin or to end a revolution. He offers us the symbolic number of twelve fathers, and he leaves us to our own deductions—as wise historians should." D. L. Mann

+ Bookm 63:707 Ag '26 950w

"Very good portraits they are, most of them, with little obvious indebtedness to others standing out in their clever workmanship." W: MacDonald

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 J1 25 '26 1500w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook
Boston Transcript p2 Je 12 '26 1600w
Cleveland Open Shelf p131 D '26

"At his best he is a master of biographical exhibition, a deft artist of gesture, habit, manners; he is gifted with a fine feeling for historic scene, and sometimes for the strange sad poetry of persons, and with a stealing irony well suited to pristine phrasing and shaded sentences. At his worst, one's chief objection is that his cleverness tempts him to be clever without penetration, to be obviously grasping, and to over-reach himself in wit."

+ — Dial 81:445 N '26 120w

"If dexterity of phrase and good humor, combined with lightly worn scholarship, are qualifications for such a task, Mr. Guedalla has made here an excellent beginning. He can make even George III a rather interesting and sympathetic figure. Mr. Guedalla has made his Eminent Americans as irresistible as Mr. Strachey's Eminent Victorians. There is no alternative. You must read the book." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 116:749 Je 26 '26 1200w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd
Ind 117:49 J1 10 '26 100w

"I have to praise him, for his book is one of the most brilliant and entertaining I have ever read. But Guedalla has more than wit; his prose at times is superbly beautiful and softly haunting. But he has more than wit and beautiful prose; he is a student of history and he knows his facts; and he knows, furthermore, how to correlate, and so to interpret, those facts." G. D. Eaton

+ Int Bk R p635 S '26 2200w

"This book is so well written that it makes one dizzy. You are under a ceaseless strain, either for fear you will miss something or for fear that you haven't enough wit to understand all that you don't miss. As an intelligence test it is 100 per cent." T: L. Masson

+ Lit R p1 Je 19 '26 1850w

"He handles history imaginatively—recreates incident and character, instead of merely preserving them in his pages as fossils are preserved in a museum, and adds to a picturesque narrative style piquant satirical and epigrammatic gifts and a skill in the use of antithesis that remind one of the caustic wit and irony of Junius. Now and then his satire and epigram are forced and mechanical and have no bite to their bark; but as a rule, to mix the metaphor, they have a lightning brilliance, and there is potency in the flash of them."

+ — Living Age 329:647 Je 19 '26 700w (Reprinted from Sunday Times)

"He cannot ask anyone to take seriously these twelve cameos of Revolutionary figures—English, French, and American. There is nothing new or startling here, either in the facts or in the conclusions deduced therefrom. The style only is novel, and has been seized upon by so many clever young men that it too will soon be as vieux jeu as the substance."

— Living Age 330:170 J1 17 '26 250w

"Mr. Guedalla is a professional litterateur, and he never lets you forget his vocation. His literary mechanism is always in evidence. Perhaps his straining for effect grows wearisome, but at times Mr. Guedalla is very happy in his descriptions." C. W. Alvord

+ — Nation 123:485 N 10 '26 260w

"Mr. Guedalla is a true child of this impish and ironical generation. He also is an artist. He does not knock statues from their pedestals and break them up with a hammer. And yet for the life of him, he cannot help seeing the joke—sometimes a bitter or pitiful joke—that grins behind every statue. His mood, therefore, is irony. But this new knowledge leads, not to denunciation, but to sympathy." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p1 Je 13 '26 1850w

"Inquisitive iconoclasts, who have lately plied their trade much more drastically than does Guedalla, may ask why certain conspicuously human traits of the great parent, such as one recently mentioned softly by Rupert Hughes, form no part in this chronicle. Perhaps the answer is that Guedalla loves to write about men in an even temper. His sketches move brilliantly forward with an even flow of word and thought, with no disturbing announcements, no disconcerting revelations. He is concerned most with the portrait of the sitter, and somehow the picture blends into the shadows behind the chair." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p4m Je 6 '26 1100w

Outlook 144:254 O 20 '26 170w

"The admirers of the style of the author of 'The Second Empire' will be delighted with the scintillating phrases and the epigrammatic smartness of his 'Fathers of the Revolution,' but the portraits presented suffer in fidelity from this very cleverness in expression, and the author's interpretation of the Revolution is far from convincing. In the light of this interpretation, the Revolution seems a foolish thing into which the contestants strayed a bit listlessly." C. G. Bowers

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:883 Je 26 '26 1000w

"Mr Guedalla has a nimble wit, a gift of facile phrase and a lively sense of irony. These qualities, unfortunately are not matched by profundity and a delicate sense of historical or literary responsibility. Consequently his wit sometimes flashes, if one may say so, rather flashily and his generalizations at times are little better than trifling, though polished, combinations of words."

+ — Spring'd Republican p7f Je 30 '26 650w

GUERARD, ALBERT LEON. Beyond hatred; the democratic ideal in France and America. 298p $3 Scribner [10s 6d Unwin]

323.1 Democracy. Race prejudice 25-21180
For descriptive note see Annual for 1925.

"The book is made interesting by a wealth of concrete examples, a freshness of style, wit, and originality of ideas."

+ Am Pol Sci R 20:456 My '26 160w

"A brilliant comparative study."

+ Booklist 23:8 O '26

"His conceptions of democratic realities, as they exist in the two great republics, are presented philosophically and with liberal erudition."

+ Bookm 63:105 Mr '26 140w

"In this book, which is as interesting as it is difficult to classify, the author takes his stand on very high ground, not merely beyond hatred, but above nationalism. As an uprooted Gaul who has lived in America, liking his new home, but never losing his French lucidity and critical amusement, he is the more able to do this. Instead of railing at our various attitudes to the negro question, he inspects our biases one by one, and dispassionately pokes holes in them."

+ Dial 80:524 Je '26 200w

"Mr. Guerard writes brilliantly. His pages sparkle with anecdotes, allusions, and shrewd characterizations often amusing, seldom trite, and always apt." W: MacDonald

+ Nation 122:89 Ja 27 '26 900w

Reviewed by Lyman Bryson

New Repub 45:274 Ja 27 '26 520w

Reviewed by W. F. Johnson

No Am 223:179 Mr '26 280w

"The authentic philosophic tone is lacking, and, worse yet, there is no unifying thread of argument. The author starts from nowhere and arrives nowhere. . . . On the other hand, there are several chapters of great merit and charm; in especial, the chapter on bourgeois ascendency in France, the historical sketch of the French Presidency, and the chapter on Voltaire."

+ Outlook 143:71 My 12 '26 230w

St Louis 24:50 Mr '26

Spec 136:426 Mr 6 '26 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p86 F 11 '26 600w

GUERBER, HELENE ADELINE. Story of our civilization. 407p il $1.20 Holt

909 History, Universal 26-11720

A short history of the world—less than 400 pages of text, further reduced by the plentiful use of illustrations—interestingly told for children of eleven to thirteen years. The purpose of the story is "to find out what men and nations owe to each other, and what our United States owes to other nations in the past." (Intro)

"It seems to me that the dreariest, dry-as-dust teacher of history would have to work hard to create a distaste of this volume. I fancy it will go a long way, when put into the hands of children, to awaken a love of history and to lead them to pursue the study further."

+ Educ R 72:187 N '26 370w

"The illustrations would excite interest in the child, but likewise convey false impressions. Granting all the difficulties of historical presentation for the young child, one still wonders whether it is wise to resurrect all the unhappy ghosts of historical falsehood—the year 1000 for instance—merely to stimulate interest in the young."

Hist Outlook 17:349 N '26 130w

GUIBERT DE NOGENT. Autobiography of Guibert, abbot of Nogent-Sous-Coucy; tr. by C. C. Swinton Bland, with an introd. by G. G. Coulton. (Broadway translations, medieval section) 224p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Church history—Middle ages 26-7605

Through all the good Abbot's little vanities and occasional prosings, through all his self-accusations before God and his invectives against political or ecclesiastical opponents, we get not only the psychological interest of a real life-portrait, but also a very true picture of a most interesting time and society."—Intro.

"Guibert rambles in his narrative to the point of absolute incoherence occasionally; he followed no sequence, neither logical nor chronological; his book is a hash of everything that lay to his hand, but it is meaty, amusing and singularly real even in its absurdities. It has life, and a living record of that period is rare indeed." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 F 28 '26 820w

"On the whole the book is a remarkably straightforward confession of faith and daily living by a member of the Roman Church, who although he lived many centuries ago, resembles the men of our own times in many ways."

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 3 '26 180w

Cath World 123:138 Ap '26 260w

Reviewed by Eileen Power

Nation and Ath 39:18 Ap 3 '26 900w

New Statesman 27:238 Je 12 '26 800w

St Louis 24:321 N '26

Sat R 141:64 Ja 16 '26 70w

"The Autobiography of Guibert, Abbot of Nogent-sous-Coucy, contemporary of St. Anselm and the First Crusade, is a treasure-house of information on eleventh century education, monastic life, and the beginnings of the great mediaeval towns. It is also delightful reading with its mingling of scholarship and superstition, its stories of necromancy and devils, its other-worldliness warring with human weakness."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:563 F 13 '26 150w

"Mr. Bland's translation reads extraordinarily well; one is at a loss to distinguish between the merit of Guibert's style and the translator's evident ability. This fact accounts in part for the attraction the book should have for the general reader. It is much more than a picture of monastic life and affairs in the twelfth century; it is also a portrait of deep human interest and literary distinction."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p78 F 4 '26 850w

GUILLAUME, PAUL, and MUNRO, THOMAS. Primitive negro sculpture. 134p, il $6 Harcourt [25s J. Cape]

730 Art, African. Sculpture, Primitive 26-13861

"M. Paul Guillaume is a great authority and a great enthusiast on the subject of Negro sculpture, and has himself a very fine collection. The present book, written in conjunction with Mr. Thomas Munro, deals with the subject in a general way, and is well illustrated from specimens in the Barnes Foundation collection at Meryon, Pennsylvania. This is the only public collection of Negro sculpture selected and arranged on purely artistic grounds."—Nation and Ath

Booklist 23:120 D '26

Reviewed by Raymond Weaver

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 N 14 '26 1100w

"Here at last is an art book which is easy for him who is not steeped in cubistic and futuristic terms to understand. It is important because it is readable." F. B. B.

Boston Transcript p7 S 25 '26 350w

"An intelligent and stimulating discussion of the strange powerful art of the African negro."

Ind 117:367 S 25 '26 220w

"Are we to accept as proof the array of grotesque carvings with conjectural dates and provenance here reproduced? If so, it would be a good guess that certain American innocents abroad have been persuaded by a Parisian knot of jokers, dealers, and attendant morons, that anything made by human hands, which distinctly is misshapen and unhuman, which is superlative in ugliness, must be Art. Somewhat of a mystery, how people get that way. It is a pity the authors never specify just the path to be trod in order to reach the point where disgust ends and admiration begins." C: de Kay

+ Int Bk R p759 N '26 620w

GUILLAUME, P., and MUNRO, T:—Continued
 "The authors are for the most part content to leave questions of evaluation aside; their chief purpose is merely to provide an introduction to an intelligent study of the object which they treat from the standpoint of nothing except their plastic characteristics. This purpose they accomplish with conspicuous success." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 123:370 O 13 '26 980w

"This book is a valuable work on a subject which has already outlived the fashionable craze which introduced it some years ago to public recognition." Angus Davidson

+ Nation and Ath 40:sup244 N 13 '26 150w

"This study of primitive negro sculpture is a concise and able contribution to the understanding of an art whose conventions were completely remote from our western consciousness, until by an effort of intuition a group of modern artists discovered their aesthetic value and their special relevance to our own day and art." L. Mumford

+ New Repub 49:49 D 1 '26 300w

Reviewed by Arthur Strawn

N Y Times p10 Je 6 '26 1750w

Outlook 144:344 N 10 '26 30w

Sat R 142:777 D 18 '26 200w

"The first adequate and thorough-going discussion of the important subject of African art we have had."

+ Sat R of Lit 3:391 D 4 '26 660w

"Educationally, 'Primitive Negro Sculpture' is important because it offers to its readers the combined resources of two exceptionally well trained minds brought to bear upon long and real experience in the observation of concrete works of art. The contents of the book are well worthy of the luxurious setting provided by the publishers." A. C. Barnes

+ Survey 57:172 N 1 '26 1050w

GUINEY, LOUISE IMOGEN. Letters of Louise Imogen Guiney; ed. by Grace Guiney; with a preface of Agnes Repplier. 2v 259; 270p il $5 Harper

B or 92

26-13955

Thruout her busy life Miss Guiney made time to pour out her heart in letters to her friends. This correspondence furnishes a vivacious autobiography of a delightful person.

Booklist 23:172 Ja '27

"Here is the best of talk about a vast variety of persons and subjects."

+ Bookm 64:364 N '26 200w

"The letters reveal a purely literary bias, first to last. They are tedious, with their load of personalities, for lack of a sense of anything but the printed page. Staccato style, literary coquetry, and a great deal of blithe, bright writing leaves them still insignificant, even for those who love Louise Guiney's work." Genevieve Taggard

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 S 26 '26 1450w

"Unquestionably these letters of hers take their place in the treasure house of literary personalities." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 31 '26 1900w

Cath World 124:128 O '26 780w

"A precious book, whose publishers, nevertheless, stand convicted of high crime and misdemeanor. These letters treat delightfully of many a subject—poetry, religion, life, weather and people in England versus life, weather and people in America; they touch on scores of significant figures from Roosevelt to the Laureate; from 'a prodigious lover of dogs' they abound in barking portraits of canine friends; but to find each reference one must read the two bulky volumes through. There is no index." K. L. Bates

+ — Lit R p1 Ag 28 '26 1750w

"She takes her place easily among the rare company of charming 'epistolists,' Howell, Madame de Sévigné, Cowper, Lamb, Stevenson, though she is not of course so important as they and has but a quiet secondary place in literature." J. Macy

+ Nation 123:377 O 13 '26 600w

"These letters reveal her as a very rare and attractive human being. One exasperating epistolary vice, however, she constantly indulged over which her correspondents must surely have winced; a 'cunning,' schoolgirlish habit of attempting humor by eccentric babytalk." R. Le Gallienne

N Y Times p2 Ag 8 '26 1800w

"Her life, published a few years ago, made one admire her without reserve. These letters do not seem, to us, to increase that admiration. They are breathless, nervous, consciously 'literary,' rather overcharged with Latin and French tags, and a bit too much stuffed with the bones of her saints and martyrs."

— Outlook 144:343 N 10 '26 80w

"All through these delightful letters are clear-est traces of the writer's charming and valiant spirit. R. L. S. himself had not a more courageous and gay demeanor in suffering the slings of outrageous fortune." Bliss Carman

+ Sat R of Lit 3:132 S 25 '26 720w

Reviewed by Lillian Whiting

Spring'd Republican p7f Ag 22 '26 2100w

Wis Lib Bul 22:273 O '26

GUITEAU, WILLIAM BACKUS, and WEBSTER, HANSON HART. Constitution of the United States; its origin, meaning and application. 216p 84c Houghton

342.73 United States—Constitution 26-10299

"After a short, clear chapter on fundamental American principles, [the book] takes up the Constitution, piece by piece, and comments upon it, just as the thorough and interesting old-fashioned preachers used to read the scripture lesson, verse by verse with immediate disquisitions on each in plain language conditioned to the circumstances of the audience."—Educ R

"It is practical. It is interesting. It leaves a clear conception of what the Constitution means to us today. In the hands of a teacher of ordinary intelligence it will render similar service to our children."

+ Educ R 72:189 N '26 260w

Hist Outlook 17:350 N '26 100w

GULLEY, ELSIE ELIZABETH. Joseph Chamberlain and English social politics. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) 340p $4.50 pa $3.50 Columbia univ. press [14s P. S. King]

B or 92 Chamberlain, Joseph. Great Britain —Politics and government 26-7831

"Joseph Chamberlain at the height of his fame was everywhere known as an imperialist and tariff reformer. In this monograph Miss Gulley reminds us of Chamberlain's earlier days when his ambitions lay in the direction of municipal and social reform." (R of Rs) "After a brief sketch of his political life, there are chapters on his connection with municipal reform, political reform, education, the Board of Trade, disestablishment, land reform, and labor legislation, and on Chamberlain the imperialist in relation to Chamberlain the social reformer." (Am Hist R)

"This doctoral thesis is a useful study of one phase of Joseph Chamberlain's long career." C. F. Brand

+ Am Hist R 31:828 Jl '26 380w

R of Rs 73:445 Ap '26 100w

"As a study of personality in politics his political activities deserved the careful analysis which Prof Gulley has given to them. Her approach to the study through social reform rather than through protection as a basis of his politics offers the best clew both to his own career and to the present strength of the Conservative party in English politics."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 My 31 '26 350w

GUNN, NEIL M. Grey coast. 285p $2 Little [7s 6d J. Cape]

26-15711

Maggie knows very well what her miserly uncle wants, tho few words have passed between them on the subject. She knows why Daun Tullach sends his men to help with her uncle's farming and why he himself comes often to her uncle's door. Maggie is young, desirable. Daun Tullach is forty, fleshy, sly. Ivor Cormack is a fisher boy of Maggie's own age. The intimacy between the two has reached a stage of painful yet ecstatic silence in each other's presence. They long for these queerly painful moments tho still unable to break by word or touch the spell that holds them. Inevitable as their repressed passion is the scheme of their elders to thwart it. The characters live in the grey atmosphere of the Scottish coast, and as the drama of their lives unfolds, the effect of their dour environment is apparent in their actions.

"The four characters are well drawn; the plot is almost negligible. Lack of interesting incidents makes the reading rather slow, while the descriptions, although sometimes overdone, are realistic and colorful as the gray hue will permit."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ja 2 '27 220w

"This is not a novel with which to while away an unthinking hour on a train, not a book to be read at a sitting, not probably one to go into the best-seller class; too good for that. One should read it slowly, tasting the flavor of its well-turned sentences even when used upon the most ordinary, every-day matters, and sensing to the full every changing emotion of these widely differing human souls." F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 20 '26 720w

"You cannot deny these people, and you may not be able to forget them. Maggie in particular is a figure of impressive substance; the whole book has substance in which, as in all fine creative work, it is hard to distinguish merits of matter and manner." H. W. Boynton

+ Sat R of Lit 3:450 D 18 '26 560w

"Mr. Gunn dodges in and out of his characters' minds and from one mind to another with a freedom that weakens the story and achieves no compensating artistic purpose. But such blemishes do not obscure the genuine promise of certain of the quieter passages of the book."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p465 JI 8 '26 150w

GUTHRIE, RAMON. Marcabrun. 260p $2.50 Doran

Marcabrun, 12th century 26-18502

"'Marcabrun' is a tale of one of the first of the troubadours, those charming rogues who journeyed from one feudal realm to another, singing their ribald, and sometimes beautiful, songs. Marcabrun himself attained immortal fame in the twelfth century by his very boldness, manuscripts of that period recording that 'he made catiff verses and wicked sirventes and spoke evil of women and of love.' Upon one occasion, which Guthrie describes with colorful charm, he went so far as to grossly insult the King of France, itself a feudal domain beginning its march to power. Marcabrun stands forth a living, adorable figure despite the dust of the ages between 1926 and 1126."—N Y World

"It is both the virtue and the surprise of this novel that it makes the days of the jongleurs real and comprehensible."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 4 '26 260w

"In 'Marcabrun' Ramon Guthrie has written a book that is different. The story Mr. Guthrie tells is Rabelaisian in form, with no attempt to gloss over strong words and phrases. The very coarseness of the text lends a picturesqueness to the situation that gentler handling would have failed to bring out. There is no intentional salacity, and there results a persistent feeling that artistic honesty underlies the literary structure. A colorful romance whose novelty of presentation makes it absorbing reading."

N Y Times p6 O 24 '26 580w

"Guthrie has captured the glamour and conceit of the middle ages. He writes impressively of stalwart men, delicate ladies and questionable deeds. And frequently the reader encounters passages of unusual beauty in which the constant, although impossible, love of Marcabrun for Eleanor of Aquitaine is disclosed."

+ N Y World p11m N 21 '26 230w

GWYNN, STEPHEN LUCIUS. Student's history of Ireland. 322p $2 Macmillan [5s Longmans]

941.5 Ireland—History

26-10129

A popular history based upon the author's "History of Ireland." (Book Review Digest, 1924) It tells the whole story from earliest times to the present day in less than half the space filled by the earlier volume.

"Except for a few chapters which run too much to names and places in the chaotic period between the Norman Conquest and Queen Elizabeth, it is as enthralling as a novel. We recommend its direct, adjectiveless, meaty sentences to writers of schoolbook histories everywhere." R. H. A.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 F 27 '26 580w

"It is a crowded volume and shows not a few effects of its abbreviation, but it is remarkable for its judicial treatment of a controversial story." Bartlett Brebner

+ — Hist Outlook 17:138 Mr '26 300w

Lit R p8 F 13 '26 80w

New Statesman 26:280 D 12 '25 380w

"Impartiality and interpretation are indispensable weapons, in the historian's armoury; and Mr. Gwynn shows in this book that he possesses and can wield them both."

+ Spec 136:285 F 13 '26 120w

"The chief danger among the new school of writers on Ireland is that they are rather too ready to accept as final the conclusions now come to by contemporary scholars without the necessary research to revise them. But Mr. Gwynn's balance of mind and free and interesting style of writing should appeal to the type of readers to whom the book is addressed, and it undoubtedly conveys a well-balanced and clear résumé of the theme with which he is dealing."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p885 D 17 '25 260w

H

H. D., pseud. See Aldington, H.

HACKETT, JAMES DOMINICK. Health maintenance in industry. 488p il $5; lea $6 Shaw, A.W.

331.822 Hygiene, Industrial 25-10359

"The author claims that he has undertaken to do what he believes has never been done before—treat the subject as a purely managerial problem. In this claim perhaps lies the merit as well as the limitations of the volume before us. . . Throughout the book he endeavors to convince his readers that it pays to take care of the workers in the factory. This materialistic conception of industrial health is, perhaps, logical in a book written for employment managers and factory foremen. . . Mr. Hackett treats extensively of industrial hygiene, industrial mortality and morbidity, medical service in industry, occupational diseases, dusts, mental hygiene, medical and surgical treatment, etc. The chapters on

HACKETT, JAMES D.—Continued
medical staffs, emergency hospitals, medical treatment and the organization of medical service, are full and thorough."—Survey

Reviewed by Wade Wright
Am Econ R 15:760 D '25 360w

"This book, by a lecturer in New York University, on labor and employment management is a masterpiece. The viewpoint is comprehensive, the argument of high order and the sources of information well selected, authentic and recent." E. R. Hayhurst
+ Am J Pub Health 15:1107 D '25 550w

"A volume which discusses this subject in a very compact and concise manner. It is intended primarily for the plant manager and technical medical terms are avoided accordingly. It is not academic; it is practical. Each chapter is sub-headed in a way which directs attention to the salient points, thus conserving the time of the busy executive seeking information." A. E. Shipley
+ Am Management R 14:370 N '25 400w

"An obviously humane motive underlies Mr. Hackett's book, yet he offers its well-written pages, packed with first-hand information, in the hope that by improvement in the health of our workers industry may benefit and production be greatly increased." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 18 '25 920w

"It seems that the chief value of this book lies in the emphasis placed upon the necessity of using preventive rather than curative measures in the field of industrial health maintenance. Practically all aspects of this subject are fully covered; old ideas are brought up to date, and many new thoughts of value to the industrial manager are also presented. Throughout the book the author has taken a very practical point of view."
+ Harvard Business R 4:247 Ja '26 800w
Int J Ethics 36:219 Ja '26 320w

"Is an excellent compilation of existing treatises and text books, is written in a simple, clear language, and a perusal of it will certainly be of great benefit to all those who have charge of factory welfare departments and to managers of industrial plants." G. M. Price, M.D.

+ Survey 55:511 Ja 15 '26 780w

"While possibly a little lengthy for a busy executive it gives the gist of industrial medicine in non-technical form. The viewpoint is impartial from the standpoint of employer and employed." W. E. Brown, M.D.
+ Taylor Soc Bul 11:43 F '26 720w

HADFIELD, SIR ROBERT ABBOTT, 1st bart.
Metallurgy and its influence on modern progress; with a survey of education and research. 404p $7.50 Van Nostrand [25s Chapman & Hall]

669 Metallurgy [26-13258]

"An interesting combination of the historical, scientific and economic aspects of ferrous metallurgy. The book is divided into the following constituent chapter headings: Part I, Historical: The Birth of Science; The Rise of Steam; The Twentieth Century; Part II, Metallurgy: The Importance and Antiquity of Iron; The Rise and Importance of Alloy Steels; Manganese Steel; Silicon Steel; Heat Treatment and Microstructure of Steel; Application of Special Steels; Part III, Fuel Economy; Part IV, The Rise of Education and Research; Educational Methods and Facilities; Scientific Societies."—Chem & Met Eng

Chem & Met Eng 33:558 S '26 160w

"This very interesting book might also have for a subtitle, 'Research Pays' as it deals largely with the author's own investigations, and particularly those relating to manganese and silicon steels and their industrial application by the firm of which Sir Robert Hadfield has long been the distinguished head. The book is also of great interest as a metallurgical autobiography by one who has long been recognized as outstanding in investigation." G. K. Burgess

+ Ind & Eng Chem 18:875 Ag '26 310w

"All who are interested in the future of industry should read this book, since the history of alloy steels is typical of modern progress in manufacture, and its lessons have a much wider application than might be supposed from its specialised character."

+ Nature 117:187 F 6 '26 1250w

"An interesting and complete survey, by one of England's prominent metallurgists."

+ N Y New Tech Bks 10:50 O '25

Times [London] Lit Sup p45 Ja 21 '26 100w

HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER. Days of my life; an autobiography; ed. by C. J. Longman. 2v 294;286p il $7.50 (28s) Longmans

B or 92

Twelve years before his death Sir Rider Haggard sent the completed manuscript of his autobiography to his publishers. One year later he added the "Note on religion," with which the second volume closes. This autobiography deals not only with Haggard's life in South Africa and with his literary career but also reveals his ardent preoccupation with rural problems in England and with agricultural improvements in general.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 64:629 Ja '27 150w

"Haggard's responsive audience will hold the volumes precious." C. J. Finger
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 N 14 '26 450w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett
Boston Transcript p3 O 23 '26 1900w

"His memoirs are full of good stories, letters from famous people, and the record of an interesting life." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 40:114 O 23 '26 100w

Reviewed by Howard Knott
N Y Times p11 Ja 2 '27 1850w

"His early adventures in Africa, his almost accidental career as a successful novelist, and his travels and public life are described, often vividly, but with occasional patches of dullness surprising in a romance." E. P.

+ Outlook 144:572 D 29 '26 90w

"Sir Rider Haggard's autobiography up to his fifty-fifth year is honest, well written, and thoroughly interesting, being full of odd adventure and sound reminiscence."

+ Sat R 142:555 N 6 '26 460w

Spec 137:120 D 18 '26 760w

Times [London] Lit Sup p665 O 7 '26 1000w

Wash Lib Bul 22:332 D '26

HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER. Treasure of the lake. 312p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Hutchinson]

26-12322

Once more Allan Quatermain and his Hottentot servant Hans adventure in Central Africa. Allan is hunting for ivory, when he meets a strange pale colored native named Kaneke, whose knowledge of future events arouses his curiosity. Allan is led by Kaneke to his home, a little known inland country. After a series of hair raising adventures Allan returns to the coast, a richer and a wiser man.

"Adventure and the occult are vividly blended in this story."

+ Booklist 23:39 O '26

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 Je 20 '26 250w

Reviewed by W. E. Harris
Boston Transcript p3 J1 17 '26 1100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p95 J1 '26

"Though it has dramatic moments, and impressive scenes, though there are times when the author displays much of his old-time imaginative power, his gift for making the incredible seem, at least while one is reading the book, altogether credible, there are more loose ends, fewer notable descriptions and less ingenuity manifested in this volume than in most of the others."

— + N Y Times p8 My 23 '26 650w

Sat R of Lit 3:43 Ag 14 '26 90w

HAIRE, FRANCES H. Folk costume book. 150p il $6 Barnes, A. S. & co. [25s Harrap]

391 Costume 26-5370

"Contains brief, but quite explicit, descriptions of the folk costumes of 22 European peoples, with four period costumes for the United States. Has twenty-one color plates by Gertrude Moser."—Wis Lib Bul

Booklist 22:354 Je '26

"A handsome and handy manual."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ap 4 '26 160w

"This is a very useful book for directors of pageants, little plays where elementary knowledge of foreign costuming is required, and for persons engaged in work of folk dance characters where costuming is to be used."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 20 '26 140w

"It enjoys simplicity and definiteness. There is a clarity of expression so skilfully revealing that tedious and laborious digging will be found unnecessary by all so fortunate as to use this excellent volume. To Frances H. Haire much praise should be given. Gertrude Moser's adequate and splendid illustrations are a stimulating guide in design, color and detail." Frederica Magnus

+ Lit R p8 Mr 20 '26 120w

Pratt p15 autumn '26

Wis Lib Bul 22:138 Ap '26

HALDANE, RICHARD BURDON HALDANE, 1st Viscount of Cloan. Human experience; a study of its structure. 233p $2 Dutton [6s Murray]

192 Experience. Philosophy 26-13509

A philosophical inquiry into the nature and meaning of experience and the relation of experience and knowledge.

Booklist 23:62 N '26

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 4 '26 250w

Reviewed by C. D. Burns

Int J Ethics 37:213 Ja '27 260w

"The college student of philosophy who has been pondering the problem of knowledge could profitably use this volume as a text for final revision before taking his examination." T. S. Knowlson

+ Lit R p2 Ag 21 '26 400w

"The general position is developed by Lord Haldane with great persuasiveness and lucidity. He utilizes recent scientific knowledge in an exceedingly interesting manner, but in general he avails himself of conceptions familiar enough in the history of idealistic systems, notably the doctrine of degrees of reality and of knowledge. It is doubtful whether he escapes the charge of subjectivism which has so often been made against idealists."

+ Nation and Ath 39:421 Jl 10 '26 850w

"He understands precisely what he means and he says it. In that sense, his exposition is as clear as Euclid. But a message, in itself lucid enough, may yet be expressed in code. A door is undoubtedly 'an introduction' to a house. But if the door be locked, you can only enter the house if you have the key. So with this book. If you know what is meant by Pragmatism—and not every philosopher can define the word in terms with which other philosophers would agree—you are among the initiated. Otherwise, you are listening to a discourse, delightful in manner yet in an unknown tongue." P. W. Wilson

No Am 223:534 S '26 3350w

"No sinecure for 'those interested but not trained in philosophical inquiry' in spite of Viscount Haldane's deceptively simple style and the careful introductory summaries of his chapters."

Outlook 144:59 S 8 '26 150w

"We fear this book is not as interesting as the author's The Reign of Relativity; nevertheless he may be trusted to provide salutary exercises in cerebration for those who enjoy grappling with abstractions."

Spec 136:871 My 22 '26 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p353 My 27 '26 800w

HALE, GEORGE ELLERY. Beyond the milky way. 105p il $1.50 Scribner

523 Astronomical instruments. Stars—Radiation. Nebulae 26-19362

The three chapters in this little book have recently appeared as articles in Scribner's magazine, in continuation of the series already represented in book form by "The new heavens" and "The depths of the universe." The first article describes the progress of observational astronomy and some of the early astronomical instruments before the invention of the telescope. Contents: The oriental ancestry of the telescope; Heat from the stars; Beyond the milky way.

"The small volume is essentially scientific and will be chiefly interesting to students of astronomy."

+ N Y Times p26 D 19 '26 140w

Reviewed by Leon Whipple

Survey 57:330 D 1 '26 40w

Times [London] Lit Sup p918 D 9 '26 250w

HALE, MRS LOUISE (CLOSSER). Home talent. 293p $2 Holt

26-5892

This is a novel of the stage written by a well known actress. Sharlie Flagg is a great favorite in amateur theatricals at the High Platte masonic temple. She would like to go to New York, and Ben Dorsey thinks she should. Circumstances and friends combine to make it possible. She meets a matinee idol and his gently managing wife, and is offered a part in his play. The stage folk are kind to her and help her to success, but much as she loves the theater she comes to love Ben more.

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 15 '26 380w

"This novel by Mrs. Hale deserves a great success. It is sincere, it gives a normal picture of a fascinating life, rather than a melodramatic picture. The dialogue is invariably excellent, the analysis subtle. Those of us who rarely are invited to enter the theater by the stage door will enjoy it immensely; but members of the profession will probably understand it with a more discerning appreciation." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 17 '26 700w

"Not even Mrs. Hale's sprightly and beguiling pen can disguise the artificiality and conventionality of the book as a whole." E. B. H.

New Repub 48:53 S 1 '26 180w

"A warmly human story of the theatre. So much sentimental twaddle concerning the stage and the aspirations of young genius for it has appeared in fiction form that the story lover is bound to welcome the note of authenticity which Mrs. Hale strikes."

+ N Y Times p24 Mr 21 '26 750w

HALE, LOUISE—Continued

"An excellent, plausible novel of theatrical life, free of the usual hokum, devoid of tinsel, and markedly rich in its delineation of player types."

+ N Y World p6m My 9 '26 160w

Outlook 143:417 J1 21 '26 50w

"Mrs. Hale's excellent novel pictures the life of the theatre with an intimate comprehension of its realities which frees its pages from all trace of the usual noxious, sentimental treatment common to the general run of footlight stories."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:709 Ap 10 '26 180w

"Revealing, perhaps authoritative and surely graceful."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 4 '26 420w

Wis Lib Bul 22:141 Ap '26

HALEVY, ELIE. History of the English people, 1815-1830; tr. from the French by E. I. Watkin. 2v v 2 318p $6 Harcourt [21s Unwin]

942 Great Britain—History—Nineteenth century

"M. Halévy's first volume was a masterly survey of England and of the English people in 1815. In this second volume he abandons the descriptive and speculative method and proceeds to a narrative of events from 1815 to 1830."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"The value of M. Halévy's book does not lie in his account of diplomatic developments. His object is really to give an account of the English people and of the evolution of the nation. With incomparable skill, in this volume as in the preceding one, he introduces us to the period and to the psychology of the time." W: L. Langer

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ag 8 '26 900w

"Halévy, as a French historian, has much in common with Trevelyan as an English one: he is profound as well as lucid. To all those who in history look beyond the merely picturesque, who discount flaunting banners, armies in battle array, the chit-chat of court gossip and the externals of effect this story of England during the nineteenth century must be commended." F: H. Martens

+ Lit R p5 J1 31 '26 200w

"M. Halévy has understood the characteristics of this revolutionary and conservative, pietistic and free thinking, humanitarian and slave-driving, creative and acquisitive century better than any English historian." Kingsley Martin

+ Nation and Ath 39:387 J1 3 '26 1250w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 47:369 Ag 18 '26 1650w

"M. Halévy gives one the feeling of having turned the British Museum and the Record Office inside out for his material. He adds to all his knowledge a detachment and a balance which perhaps only a foreigner could achieve. Although he knows us inside out, he can still see us from the outside. So he sees most clearly the things that we ourselves are most apt to take for granted."

+ New Statesman 27:297 Je 26 '26 780w

"M. Halévy freshens his treatment by the use of much contemporary material which is new to the reader and known, if at all, only to a few researchers. He has not quailed before the formidable task of searching the files of old newspapers, from which he draws, after a strictly modern fashion, much that is valuable both as to facts and color. His bibliographical footnotes are an admirable reinforcement to his text."

+ N Y Times p7 Je 20 '26 1700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p434 Je 24 '26 20w

HALIDAH ADIB, khānum (HALIDE EDİB). Memoirs. 472p il $4 Century [21s Murray]

B or 92 Turkey. Turkey—Social life and customs. Women in Turkey 26-14306

A Turkish feminist and author tells the interesting story of her life. There is a vivid picture of the Turkish home and its customs, particularly as these affect the women, a glimpse of Turkey during the war, and the modest story of one woman's influence in educational and political circles of the new Turkey.

"A new voice out of the East, speaking with restraint, culture, tolerance."

+ Booklist 23:35 O '26

"'Memoirs of Halidé Edib' easily stands as one of the most remarkable biographies of the day. The writer, although she has a background of disciplined activity as novelist, educator, soldier and statesman, writes with psychological simplicity. . . The book is very valuable historically. The second part treats of important political changes and their causes, as seen by one on the inside." M. M. Patrick

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 30 '26 1300w

Reviewed by Alice Lawton

Boston Transcript p4 My 22 '26 1800w

"A volume of reminiscences which for interest, dramatic power, and real value is outstanding."

+ Ind 117:424 O 9 '26 120w

Reviewed by Florence Billings

Lit R p2 Je 26 '26 750w

"Told with a packed style, now summary of events, now exquisite picture of a moment. The Memoirs of Halide Edib are a rare combination of moving revelation of human personality, and intimate chronicle of significant time." E. E.

+ New Repub 47:288 J1 28 '26 450w

"This book is a fine book, but incomplete. What we now want to know is whether there is as yet the new Turkey for which Halidé Edib has labored and suffered. The Armenians have been killed." P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p11 Je '26 2150w

"Extraordinarily interesting, as much for the personality of the woman, read between the lines, as for the vivid account of her life and her experiences from childhood to rich maturity."

+ N Y World p4m J1 11 '26 440w

"Halidé Edib has done and is doing more for the women of Turkey than any one person of her day, or possibly of any day, and her book is full of interesting side-lights on the customs of her country."

+ Outlook 143:449 J1 28 '26 200w

R of Rs 73:669 Je '26 150w

Reviewed by Helen McAfee

Sat R of Lit 2:886 Je 26 '26 1300w

"There is always a freshness of outlook about the way she regards her subject. Throughout she shows an eminently characteristic desire to see good where it might easily have escaped observation had she been at all influenced by the crowd-mentality or inclined to accept the ordinary current ideas of the day. For this reason her next volume will be eagerly awaited."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p955 D 30 '26 1200w

Wis Lib Bul 22:229 J1 '26

"It is not likely that these reminiscences will appeal to a very large public. They are elliptically put together, they are written in a style which is highly creditable to a foreigner but which is not in the greater English tradition, and they do little for the seeker after intimate revelations, whether personal or political. He has latterly formed a taste for more highly seasoned fare. Nevertheless, the book has merits of a very rare kind. Everything she says about Turkish life is interesting if only because it has never been said before by an insider who was also an artist." H. G. Dwight

+ — Yale R n s 16:382 Ja '27 660w

HALL, ALBERT NEELY. Outdoor boy craftsmen. 429p il $2.50 Lothrop
790 Handicraft. Amusements 25-24909

Here is year round occupation for the boy who is handy with tools; something to make for service or for sport at home, afield, in camp, or on the water, in every season of the year.

Booklist 22:213 F '26

"A book that is filled from cover to cover with ideas for outdoor handicraft. Over six hundred photographs and working diagrams add greatly to the worth of the book."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 16 '26 130w

"Will be of vast help to boys who plan to do real camping next summer, or to camp directors who are not above receiving suggestions and ideas. Not that it is written for camp directors; but they could learn so much about outdoor craftsmanship in this book. It is generous with its information." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p260 Mr '26 80w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:50 O '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:161 Mr '26

Pratt p26 spring '26

Wis Lib Bul 22:111 Mr '26

HALL, BOLTON, ed. Love letters of St John. 155p $1.50 Frank-Maurice

Disguised as an authentic correspondence long ago placed in the keeping of an old Tuscan priest and by him entrusted to the author to give to the world these letters tell the story of the love of the apostle St John for the Athenian hetaera Antione, a beautiful and accomplished woman of the type of Aspasia. On her side the letters are the passionate outpouring of the heart of a deeply loving woman, while St John's breathe a more spiritual and sublimated love to which he constantly strives to lift her.

Bookm 63:xxiv My '26 80w

"Indisputably, St John's influence was ennobling. Indeed, readers who have watched rather than taken part in life's emotional dramas, will find admirable his eminently logical letters, or rather notes, ringing the changes upon the unity of all life in love."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 10 '26 720w

"The epistles bear conflicting signs of authenticity and clever 'spoofing,' while their command of one's interest suffers from the saint's endlessly repeated doctrine of universal love as expounded by his Master."

N Y World p7m Mr 28 '26 180w

"No effort has been made to achieve an historical background, and the philosophy of John is limited to the exposition of 'the perfect love that casteth out fear.' Antione fails to live up to the intellectual level claimed for her class in the notes, showing nowhere any evidence of acquaintance with the Greek thought of her times."

Sat R of Lit 2:618 Mr 6 '26 270w

HALL, EVELYN BEATRICE (S. G. TALLENTYRE, pseud.). Women of the salons. 235p il $3.75 Putnam

920.7 Woman—Biography. France—Biography

New edition of a book first published in 1901. Contents: Madame du Deffand; Mademoiselle de Lespinasse; Madame Geoffrin; Madame d'Ep-inay; Madame Necker; Madame de Staël; Madame Récamier; Tronchin; a great doctor; The mother of Napoleon; Madame de Sévigné; Madame Vigée le Brun.

Bookm 63:605 Jl '26 250w

"A very readable and remarkably illuminating book." R. T. House

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 2 '26 860w

"The writer does not seek to go deeply into the springs that animated these various women, but does offer readable and often brilliant surface studies of them."

+ N Y Times p12 Ap 4 '26 250w

"The method of the author is delightful. Her studies are but little sketches in one key, pastels and vignettes, concerned more with love affairs and generalities than with the wider social and political consequences. But she makes up in a clarity and directness, with a readableness that leaves a more vivid impression of these women than greater erudition would have given us." S. G.

+ Springf'd Republican p7f My 30 '26 650w

HALL, JAMES NORMAN. On the stream of travel. 365p $3 Houghton

910 Voyages and travels 26-15234

These sketches were written wherever the traveler happened to be at the time—in Bavaria during the war, aboard ship, in a little town in Iowa, or in Iceland. The stream of travel has carried him to Tahiti as a permanent base, and from there he writes the closing sketch, a defense of the island as the blest abode.

Booklist 23:168 Ja '27

"On his chain of autobiographic reminiscence he strings pictures, fragments of remembered conversations, bits of recurrent thought; linking thus such widely removed localities as Iceland, Tahiti, Boston and the Middle West. His prose is smooth and facile, his love for beauty genuine." Blair Niles

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 S 19 '26 1050w

"Interesting and well written." J: Cournos

+ Lit R p6 O 16 '26 560w

"There is perhaps no other American writing 'travel stuff' today whose journalism as-says so high a percentage of literature as Mr. Hall's." Gregory Mason

+ N Y Times p10 N 21 '26 520w

Wis Lib Bul 22:296 N '26

HALL, MAY EMERY. Beckoning glory. 373p $2 Penn

26-14671

"The story of Coralie Short, a small-town, idealistic girl, who eventually meets and marries an embryo author. They confidently intend to conquer the world, and the disillusioning process is painful. Here the author definitely abandons optimistic idealism and innocence and launches her character upon a sea of sophistication. It was unfortunate that the author found it necessary to use such an unusual chain of coincidences and blame them all on the war."—Springf'd Republican

"This is a study (and upon the whole a clever one) of 'self-expression,' the 'development of the individual' and various other ideals of life held by the youth of today, all alike in one quality—a basic selfishness which is the cause of much of the feminine unrest and marital unhappiness of our day." F. B. Boston Transcript p3 Ag 7 '26 680w

"It is far from stimulating, but it does possess a certain sustained interest. It combines, in a manner calculated to interest a varied audience, an easy sophistication with the sentimental idealism so common in the movies."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 22 '26 620w

Springf'd Republican p7f Ag 29 '26 100w

HALL, RADCLYFFE. Adam's breed. 379p $2.50 Doubleday [7s 6d Cassell]

26-12239

Olga's secret died with her. Her little son was called Gian-Luca, and tho his grandmother Teresa cared for him dutifully she had no affection for him. Gian-Luca had starved for love all his life until at the restaurant where he worked he met Maddeleva, an Italian like himself. Maddeleva's love for Gian-Luca was absolute, being the love of a wife for her husband and of a mother for her son; but because, unknown to himself, Gian-Luca was the son of a poet and carried in his heart a poet's longings and strivings, his life as a waiter grew suddenly hateful to him and even Maddeleva's perfect love seemed insufficient for his needs. His quest for God had begun.

HALL, RADCLYFFE—Continued

Booklist 23:81 N '26

Reviewed by E. F. Hall

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Je 13 '26 520w

"There is a suggestion of hysteria throughout this entire novel. But there is much to commend in it, and it seems to us to have many of the ingredients of a remarkable novel." D. F. G.

— + Boston Transcript p4 Je 9 '26 920w

Reviewed by A. C. Bierce

Lit R p5 Ag 7 '26 320w

"A study in the disillusionment of a sensitive and compassionate soul, the sadness of which is tempered by art, for Radclyffe Hall, an English woman-novelist, new to America, is undeniably an artist."

+ Living Age 329:648 Je 19 '26 220w

"'Adam's Breed' is a very unusual story, exhibiting a definite talent, but compounded, too, of weakness, of artistic mismanagement, of sentimentality. Success is mixed with failure; for every virtue there is a defect, for every well-done page a poor one."

+ — N Y Times p9 My 23 '26 720w

Sat R of Lit 2:908 Jl 3 '26 150w

"At first, the characters are lifeless puppets, and the reader gets the impression that he is reading a protracted prelude. However, as the narrative progresses the same characters become more lifelike, though superficial, and the plot speeds up to normal."

— + Spring'd Republican p7f Je 6 '26 350w

"Miss Radclyffe Hall is observant and sympathetic, and if her characters are a trifle romantic, in the sense of having been met with before in fiction, they are presented in quite an interesting fashion. With Gian-Luca himself, the sensitive, distressed youth to whom the pain of life becomes unbearable, she is very successful."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p208 Mr 18 '26 480w

HALL, SAMUEL ROLAND. Theory and practice of advertising; a textbook covering the development and fundamental principles of advertising and methods of representative advertisers. 686p il $5 McGraw

659 Advertising 26-13363

"This is a well arranged and thoughtful text-book for the student of advertising, which covers fully the problems that beset the novice, (Advertising and selling)."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"A good reference book."

+ Booklist 23:117 D '26

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:562 N '26

HALLOCK, EDWARD F. Ford text book. 263p il $1 Am. automobile digest

629.2 Ford automobile 25-7800

"A complete encyclopedia on the principles of operation, construction, care, adjustment and repair of the Ford automobile."—Subtitle

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 31:191 Ap '26

HALMAN, DORIS F. Honk! a motor romance. 303p $2 Stokes

26-10310

The blond good looks of Professor Van Kleec (Economics A) impressed the gentler half of his students much more than his subject. He was particularly glad to escape from the round-eyed adoration of Little Proctor, and looked forward to a vacation motor tour of the continent with the unimpressible Raff and Riff with relief undiminished by the fact that they, too, were women. He was not so easily to be rid of Little Proctor. She joined the party in mid-career, to their discomfort and to the mild amusement of the reader.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 S 5 '26 160w

"It is 'clever' in the best sense of the word; Miss Halman keeps one, merely by her typographical piquetings, constantly on one's toes. She tells a tale of adventure and binds it in the more sedate and colorful cloth of the 'travel' book." W. E. H.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Je 2 '26 1200w

"Her character drawing is delicious and her fun infectious. Trifles light as air are her materials, but she is a master builder." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p8 Je 12 '26 320w

"This is a mad, wild tale of the American invasion. It is practically all told by dialogue. Taken in short doses, its slang and high spirits are infectious."

N Y Times p22 My 30 '26 650w

Sat R of Lit 2:939 Jl 17 '26 100w

"'Honk' provides entertaining and, in some degree, instructive reading of special seasonal interest for the many who have spent their summers in Europe and for the many others who sometime hope to do so. For that matter, it makes a restful vacation-time book for any type of reader."

+ Spring'd Republican p7f Je 27 '26 320w

Wis Lib Bul 22:199 Je '26

HAMBLY, WILFRID D. Origins of education among primitive peoples. 432p il $9 (25s) Macmillan

392 Society, Primitive. Education of children

"Mr. Hambly's purpose is assembling comprehensive data on the customs of primitive peoples in preparing their offspring for the duties of life, to help resolve some of the problems in the history of man's development and to aid administrators of the British Empire, missionaries and others who are brought into contact with such undeveloped peoples, to understand the customs and the psychology with which they must deal. The author studies the general education of both boys and girls to prepare them for tribal life, the training of each for their specialized functions, the various methods of giving moral training to primitive children and the general subject of child welfare in connection with the decline of primitive races."—N Y Times

"Worldwide research by scientific methods and scholarly collation, discussion and comparison of the immense amount of material brought together have gone into the making of this impressive volume."

+ N Y Times p24 D 19 '26 210w

"This is a fascinating book, and will prove, we predict, to be of far-reaching value."

+ Sat R 142:475 O 23 '26 400w

Spec 137:820 N 6 '26 70w

Times [London] Lit Sup p812 N 18 '26 530w

HAMILTON, COSMO. Confession. 304p $2 Doubleday

26-24557

The situation is not novel—the marriage between an American girl-heiress and a needy English lord, nor is the device for explaining it new, the undelivered letters of the bride to her husband. Each of the pair is a type: the Englishman tall, lean, fine, reticent about his love as about his work; the American girl spoiled, adoring, used to attention and hurt by the lack of it from her husband who, absorbed by work, often forgets the role of lover. The girl wife pours out her love and its grievances in these letters, recording at the same time the comings and goings of her husband's mother and sisters and her own observations on things British. When into the pages of this confession there creep the figures of the Other Woman and the Other Man, the climax is foreshadowed. Both the inarticulate husband and the wistful bride are real and likable.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 19 '26 120w

"It is a very readable book with clever lines and amusing interpolations about men and manners of the day. For the reader of casual fiction, there is sophistication here, piquancy, and a rather appealing style." W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 27 '26 500w

"The book remains a thing without life, a superficial report of superficial amenities, neither satire, sentiment nor good red melodrama." J. M. Cassidy

— Lit R p3 N 20 '26 350w

Sat R of Lit 3:300 N 13 '26 150w

HAMILTON, COSMO. His majesty the king. 160p il $2 Doubleday [6s Hurst & B.]

26-12321

With a tattered band of cavaliers, Charles the Second is in hiding in Belgium. The time is ripe for immediate return to England and the throne, yet despite the entreaties of his followers Charles rides to keep a love tryst. In a little inn near Bruges, the real king, a counterfeit king, the king's chief enemy, and the king's true love meet to share the adventures of a single night.

"His style is an exceedingly distressing example of archaism gone wrong and pretentiousness and sing-song gone worse."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Je 13 '26 150w

"Mr. Hamilton has a good story to tell, and he tells it in the excellent English of which he is master. Of his versatility there is no doubt, and it is shown again in this semi-historical sketch."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 12 '26 460w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 N '26

Ind 117:80 Jl 17 '26 40w

"It is a graceful little story, entertaining, and giving a vivid picture of the days when the man who was to become King of England was penniless and almost friendless." L. Moore

+ Int Bk R p548 Ag '26 250w

